at ſuch time as the Weſtern Chriſtians were poſſeſſed of this Countrey and the Holy Land: but being repaired and re-peopled became by reaſon of the commodious ſituation of it to be much frequented by Merchants from all parts of the world. Situate in the midſt betwixt Tripolis, Berytus and Alexandretta, the three prime Ports of Turkie, on the one ſide; and the Perſian territories on the other: it was made choyſe of for the Staple of the Eaſtern commodities, brought to Euphrates, and then boated to this Town by the River Siugas. A City of great trade at preſent, the Engliſh Merchants (amongſt others which frequent the ſame) having here three houſes for the Stowage and diſpoſing of their Commodities; and a chief Officer or Super-Intendent over the whole Factory, whom they call the Conſul of Aleppo. But greater was the trade hereof in the former times, before the Portugals found out a way by Sea to thoſe Eaſtern Countries, ſince followed by the Engliſh, Hollanders and other Nations. The building of it low, but of one Roof high, (as in moſt Towns of Syria) with a plain topp plaſtered to walk upon: and with Arches before their doors, or houſes, as well to paſs dry under them in time of rain, as to ſhew their wares. Pleaſantly ſeated amongſt Gardens, with the ſweet ſmels whereof very much refreſhed: the ordinary Reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa, ſafe rather in the remoteneſſe of it from any Enemie, than the ſtrength of the place, as being nothing leſs than well fortified. Neer one of the Gates they ſhew a Sepulchre, by them affirmed to be Saint Georges (whom of all the Chriſtian Saints they only worſhip) before which they maintain a lamp which burns continually. 8. Aman, in the way betwixt Tripoli and Aleppo, ſuppoſed by ſome to be that Hamath, mention whereof is made 2 Kings chap. 17, 12. A City of a large circuit, pleaſantly ſeated on two hills, which give it a fair proſpect over ſix of the neighbouring villages: a thing not to be boaſted of as the world now goeth, by many of the Syrian Cities. On a third hill once ſtood a Caſtle, now decayed and ruinous; beneath it a fair River which runs gently by it; environed round about with Orchards of Palm-trees and very good fruits. 9. Chalmodora, ſeated by Ptolomy on Euphrates, of which no ruins now remaining; unleſs the name be changed to 10. Byrrha, as perhaps it may be, that being made by Ptolomy the moſt Northern Town of Comagena; and this the utmoſt Town which the Ægyptian Mamalucks (then Lords of Syria) had upon this River, and the boundary betwixt them and the Sultans of Perſia. Memorable for an old ceremony here uſed by thoſe Mamalucks, who accounted not themſelves worthy of the name of a Sultan of Egypt, till in this place in ſolemn pomp in the ſight of their Army, they had forced their horſe into the River, and made him drink of the waters of of it: teſtifying by that ceremony aſwell the extent of their dominions, as their readineſs to defend the ſame againſt all Invaders. A ceremony performed with great State by Campſon Gaurus, in the war betwixt him and Selimus the firſt. But for all this he loſt the field, and his life to boot, in the fight neer Aleppo: and therewith did not only leave him Syria, as the fruits of his Victory; but opened him a fair way to the conqueſt of Egypt, which ſoone after followed. And hereto I refer the Cities of 11. Henu, and 12. Ivah, with their ſeverall Territories; mentioned together with the City of Sepharvaim, Eſay 37. v. 13. and 2 Kings 18. v. 34. it being probable that if Sepharvaim were the City now called Aleppo, as the Jews that dwell there ſay it was; that then the other two joined together with it, muſt be hereabouts, though we find no tract of them in the old Geographers.

And if they were (as it ſeems probable to me) we have then more Kings in this Province in the elder times than the King of Maacha; unleſſe perhaps it may be ſaid that the Kindome of Maacha (or of Aram-Maacha) being broke in pieces, theſe petit States aroſe from the ruins of it. Of little obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs, whether entire or ſubdivided into parcels: but that the King hereof (the King of Maacha) aided the Ammonites againſt David with 1000 men: no very great number I confeſs, (as one who lay more out of the danger than the reſt of the Syrian confederates did) but ſufficient to ingage them in the quarrel with them. Nor find we any thing after this touching their affairs, but that the Kings of Henu Ivah and Sepharvaim (who ſhared the greateſt part amongſt them) being ſwallowed up by the Aſſyrians, (as the forementioned Texts do expreſſely ſay) ſome Colonies of the people hereof, were ſent by Salmanaſſar the Aſſyrian Monarch, to plant the deſolate dwellings of the Tribes of Iſrael, as appeareth plainly in the 2. of Kings chap. 17. v. 24. A courſe in which the Conquerour dealt exceeding wiſely; weakning thereby the great Cities and mightier States of this Countrey, which otherwiſe might have been apt enough to revolt again; and ſtrengthning therewithall their conqueſts in the Land of Iſrael, which otherwiſe had lain open to the next Invader, and yielding little or no profit to the publick Treaſurie.

After this time it followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Syria, till Tigranes the laſt King hereof was ſubdued by the Romans. At what time all the reſt of Syria being reduced under the form of a Province, this part being then in the poſſeſſion of Antiochus, Sonne of that Antiochus ſurnamed Euſebes whom Tigranes had ſpoiled of his eſtates: was left unto him by the Conquerours with the title of King. Continuing in his line till the death of another Antiochus the laſt King hereof; when made a Province of the Empire by Tiberius Cæſar, as is ſaid by Tacitus; Qu. Servæus being ſent hither as the firſt Roman Prætor for the government of it: though Sueton doth refer it to the times of Veſpaſian.

4. PALMYRENE.

PALMYRENE is bounded on the Eaſt by the River Euphrates; on the Weſt, by Syria properly and eſpecially ſo called: on the North, with Comagena; and on the South with Mount Libanus (dividing it from the Province of Cœle-Syria, and part of Arabia Deſerta.

It took this name from Palmyra the Chief City of it. When conquered by the Romans, and made a diſtinct Province of it ſelf, it had the name of Syria Secunda, and Salutaris. Called Syria Secunda, to distinguish it from Syria specially so called, which by them was named Syria Prima, and Salutaris in regard of the medicinal waters springing in many places of it. But before it had any of these names, it was in the Scriptures called Aram-Sobah, whereof Adad-ezer was King in the time of David, as we reade 2 Sam. 8. 3. and 1 Chron. 18. 3.

to

The Countrey destitute of Rivers fit for Navigation, save that it bordereth on Euphrates; but liberally furnished with those hot springs, good for many diseases, which gave it the name of Salutaris. Of which thus writeth Marcellinus lib. 14. In his tractibus navigerum nusquam visitur flumen, at in locis plurimis aquæ suavitate naturæ calentes emergunt, ad usum aptæ multiplicium medelarum. So he. The sense whereof we had before.

Places of most observation, are 1. Palmyra, seated in a desart and sandy plain, one of the Cities built by Solomon in the Wilderness, mention of which is made 1 Kings chap. 9. v. 17, 18. this Palmyra being supposed to be that City which is there called Tadmer, or Tamer in the Vulgar Latine. The cause for long time of much contention betwixt the Parthians and the Romans, as situate in the borders of either Empire: not fully setled in the Romans, till that they had subdued Zenobia, then the Queen hereof. By Adrian the Emperour who repaired it, it was called Hadrianople, but it held not long, the old name in short time prevailing above the new. 2. Gezer, 3. Bethboron the upper, and 4. Bethboron the nether, said to be fenced Cities with Walls, Gates, and Barres, 2 Chron. 8. 4. and 5. Baalath, four of the other Towns here built by Solomon; but either quite worn out of knowledge, or called by new names in the time of Ptolomy, who saith nothing of them. 6. Adada, built, as the name doth intimate, by some of the Adads Kings of this Countrey or of Damascus, to which last made subject. 7. Sura more towards the River Euphrates, in the Notitia, called Flavia Firma Sura, which sheweth that it was either repaired or made a Colonie by the Emprour Vespatian, whose fore-name was Flavius: honoured with an Episcopal See also in the times next following, as appeareth by the Acts of the Council of Constantinople. 8. Alamatha, on the banks of the River Euphrates, which if it were lawful for me to criticize upon my Author, I should conceive to be that Hamath of the Scriptures, which is call'd Hamath Sobah, 2 Chro. 8. 3. against which Solomon prevailed: the mistake from Camatha to Alamatha being not uneasie in the Transcripts. And if it were the same as I think it was, confirmed herein by that passage in the second of Chron. chap. 18. ver. 3. where it is said, that David smote Hadad-ezer King of Sobah unto Hamath, as he went to stablish his dominion by the River Euphrates. By which it seemeth that Hamath stood upon that River as the Camatha or Alamatha of Ptolomy is said to do. I should conceive it to be the chief seat of those Kings, and the Principal City of this Kingdome: the word Sobah, being added to it, not onely for distinctions sake, but in way of eminency. 9. Resapha, a Town of note in the time of Ptolomy, but of greater in the holy Scripture, where it is represented to us by the name of Reseph, Esay 3. 12. Reseph Civitas Syria as St. Hierome hath it: and a Town of Syria, then most like this. 10. Betah, and 11. Berothai, two other Cities of this Kingdome, taken by David in his warre against Hadad-ezer, 2 Sam. 8. 8. the last supposed to be the Barathins of Ptolomy, though placed by him here some time, they are Towns of Arabia, the D*esart* by which it seems it was alotted in the change of time.

This part of Syria, as the rest, was once a distinct Kingdome of it self, by the name of the Kingdome of Sobah, or of Aram-Sobah. The first KING thereof, whose name occurs in holy Scripture, being Rehob, the Co-temperare of Saul King of Israel; by whom discomfited in battel, as is said 1 Sam. 14. 47. But Adad-ezor the Sonne of Rehob, a Prince of greater power and valour then his Father was, having brought all the neighbouring Kings under his command, (as is said 2 Sam. 10. 19. conceived himself a fit match for David, and thereupon opposed his passage, as he went to recover his border at the River Euphrates. In which action though he lost a thousand Charets, and twenty thousand Foot, and seven hundred Horse, yet would he not so end the warre, but first with the Syrians of Damascus, and after with the Ammonites and their confederates; and finally by the aid of the Mesopotamians, renewed the quarrell. But being discomfited also in this last enterprise with the loss of forty thousand and seven hundred men, and his life to boot, the Kingdome of Zobah was brought under by the Kings of Damascus. The Storie of this warre we have in the 2 of Sam. cap. 8. and 10. in the first of Chron. cap. 18. and 1 Kings 11. 23, 24. yet were not the Kings of Damascus so well setled in it, but that David had possessed himself of Betah and Berothia, and other peeces of importance: the Regal City of Hameth-Sobah being wonne by Solomon, and many of the best Towns of it built by him to assure his conquest. But the Kingdome Solomon being rent in pieces in the next Succession, the Kingdome of Zobah fell again unto those of Damascus; and so continued till Damascus it self was conquered by the Kings of Assyria: unless perhaps that Hamath which Jeroboam the second is said to have subdued (together with Damascus it self) to the Crown of Israel, 2 Kings 14. 28. were this Hamath Soba; as perhaps it was.

After this nothing memorable in the Affaires of this Countrey, till the time of Gallienus the Roman Emperour: during whose reign amongst the rest who cantonned that Empire betwixt themselves, (commonly called the Thirty Tyrants) Odenatus a man of great power and vertue assumed the Imperial habit, and took unto himself the command of these parts of Syria, together with Mesopotamia and some other Provinces, which he had conquered from Sapores the King of Persia; against whom he had so good an hand, that he discomfited him in battell, seized upon his Treasures, took many of his Nobles, and most of his Concubines. For which great Acts admitted partner in the Empire by Gallienus, he was not long after slain by Maonius his own Cousen German. Who by that murder hoped to obtain the Principality of Palmyreni (for by that name it was now called): but in that deceived. For after his death, Zenobia his unfortunate Widow, a most masculine Ladie, not onely preserved the principalitie of Palmirene for the use of her Children; but took upon her both the Purple habit, and the command of his Annie: which she managed with great wisdome and gallantry, the rest of the time of Gallienus, and all the reignes of Claudius and Quintilius his two next Successors. But vanquished and took Prisoner by Aurelianus (who had the happiness to unite the broken limbs of that Empire into as strong a body as ever formerly) she was led in Triumph thorow Rome. The terrour of her name, and the unusualness of the sight, so heightning the general expectation: ut ea specie nihil unquam esset pompabilius, saith Trebellius Pollio; That never any shew was esteemed so glorious. A Ladie of so strong a vertue, and of such command upon her self, that she is said never to have made use of her husbands company, when she perceived her self with child. After this nothing singular in the Story of Palmirene, but that when all the rest of Syria was subdued by the Christians of the West, this Province and the next onely were made good against them by the Turkish Sultans of Damascus.

5. COELE-SYRIA.

COELE-SYRIA is bounden on the East with part of Palmyrene, and Arabia Deserta; on the West, with Palestine; on the North, with Palmyrene, and some part of Syria Propria, from which divided by the Interposition of Mount Libanus; on the South, with Iturea, and Arabia Deserta also.

It was called by the Greeks Cœle-Syria, i.e. Syria Cava, because partly situate in the hollow vallies interjected betwixt Libanus and Anti-Libanus: and sometimes also Syro-Phœnicia, from the intermixture of those people; as the Phœnicians which went with Dido into Africk, were called Libo-Phœnices. By the Romans, when made a distinct Province of their Empire, it had the name of Phœnice Libani, or Phœnicia Libanensis, to difference it from the other Phœnicia, which they called Maritima: but before all this by the Hebrews named Aram-Damasek, Syria-Damascena in the Latine, from Damascus the chief City of it: unless perhaps we should rather say, that Aram-Damasek conteined only that which lay between the Mountaines of Libanus and Anti-Libanus; the rest being added by the Romans, out of the neighbouring parts of Palestine, and Arabia-Deserta, as perhaps it was.

Chief Rivers hereof are, 1. Abanah, and 2. Pharphar, the Rivers of Damascus, as the Scripture calleth them, 2 Kings chap. 5. The one of which is thought to be the River Adonis, spoken of already; the other that which Ptolomy calleth Chrysorrhoas, or the golden flood; which rising in the Hills of this Countrey, passeth by Damascus; and so together with the other into the Mediterranean Sea. Chief Mountaines of it, 1. Alsadamus, by the Phœnicians called Syrion, by the Amorites, Samir; a Ridge of Hills which beginning at the East point of Anti-Libanus, bend directly Southwards, shutting up on that side the land of Israel, whereof more in Palestine, 2. Hippus, a ledge of Mountains in the South parts of this Province, where it bordereth on Arabia Deserta.

Towns of most consideration in it, 1. Heliopolis, so called from an Image of the Sun there worshipped in time of Paganism; now Ballebec, or (as some say) Balbec. 2. Chalcis, more East-ward towards Damascus, which gave the title of a King to Ptolomy Mennæus, and his sonne Lysanias, the Kingdome then extending over the City of Abila, and the whole Province of Iturea in Palestine. But that Family being either expired, or grown out of favour, and Abila with Iturea otherwise disposed of, the title of the King of Chalcis with the Town and territory, was given to Herod brother of Agrippa the first, King of Jewrie. Erroneously supposed by some learned men to be that Chalcis, from which the Countrey called Chalcidice takes denomination: that Chalcis being placed by Ptolomy a degree and an half more East than Damascus, and two degrees more towards the North; whereas this Chalcis lieth on the West of that City, in the shades of Libanus, and in the very same degree of Northern Latitude. 3. Abila, seated at the foot of Libanus, betwixt Heliopolis and Chalcis, from whence the Countrey round about is called Abilene: given to Lysanias, the sonne of the former Lysanias King of Chalcis, with the title of Tetrach. Mentioned Luk. 3. 1. with those other Princes which shared Palestine amongst them: not that he was the sonne of Herod, as antiently Beda and Euthymius, and of late-times some very industrious men have been of opinion; but partly because the Cities of Chalcis and Abila of right belonged to those of the Tribe of Naphthalim (though never conquered or possessed by them) and so to be a part of Palestine; and partly because the Tetrarchy of Abilene, when Saint Luke wrote that Gospel, was possessed together with the rest by King Agrippa. Restored (as it seemeth) to the former Family, after his decease; for known it was by the name of Abila-Lysanie in the time of Ptolomy. 4 Adada, memorable for the victory which Aretas King of Arabia obtained neer unto it, against Alexander King of Jewrie: the Kingdome of Syria then lying open as a prey to the next Invaders. 5. Hippus, or Hippon, as Plinie calleth it, not far from the Mountain of that name. 6. Capitolias, now called Suente. 7. Gadara. 8. Scythopolis. 9. Gerasa, and 10. Philadelphia, reckoned by Ptolomy as Cities of Cœle-Syria, but of right belonging unto Palestine, where we mean to take more notice of them. 11. Damascus, situate in a large plain environed with hills, and watered with the River Chrysorrhoas, which with a great noise descendeth from the Mountains, and so abundantly serveth the City, that not only most of the houses have their Fountains of it, but their Orchards and gardens have some Rivulets conveyed into them. The Countrey round about abundantly enriched with plenty of most excellent wines (the vines hereof bearing grapes all the year long) and great store of wheat, as their Orchards with variety of most delicate fruits: our Damascens, (or Prunа Damascena as the Latines call them) coming first from hence; as also do our Damask Roses but infinite short of their naturall sweetness, by the transplantation. A place so surfeiting of delights, so girt about with odoriferous and curious gardens, that the vile Impostor Mahomet would never be perswaded to come into it: for fear (as himself was used to say) lest being ravished with the ineffable pleasures of it, he should ſhould forget the buſineſs he was ſent about, and make there his Paradice. But Muhavias, one of his Succeſſors, having no ſuch ſcruple, removed the Regal Seat unto it, where it continued (for the moſt part) till the building of Bagdat by Bugiafer the twentieth Caliph, about an hundred years after this Removall.

The chief buildings of it of late times, till deſtroyed by the Tartars, were a ſtrong Caſtle, in the opinion of thoſe times held to be impregnable; and not without great difficulty forced by Tamerlane, whom nothing was able to withſtand: and as Majeſticall a Church, gamiſhed with fourty ſumptuous porches, and no fewer then 9000 Lanterns of gold and Silver; which with 30000 people in it (who fled thither for Sanctuary) was by the ſaid Tamerlane moſt cruelly and unmercifully burnt and pulled down unto the ground. Repaired by the Mamalucks of Ægypt, when Lords of Syria, it hath ſince flouriſhed in Trade, the people being induſtrious, and celebrated for moſt excellent Artizans: the branching of Satins, and fine Linnen which we call by the name of Damasks, being amongſt many others, one of their inventions. Renowned in the Old Teſtament for the Kings hereof, and the birth of Eliezer, Abrahams Steward (ſo honourably antient was this City); and in the New, for the Converſion of Saint Paul, who firſt preached the Goſpell in this place, and here ſo narrowly eſcaped the ſnares of his enemies, that he was fain to be let down out of the houſe in which he was, by the help of Basket. 12. Eden, at the foot of Mount Libanus, now a Town of the Maronites, and antiently of ſuch eſteem, that the whole Countrey of Damaſcus was called Beth-Eden, Amos 1. 5.

But antient and honourable though this City was, we find nothing of the ſtory of it, till the time of David, the Kings thereof untill thoſe daies, being conceived to have been Homagers and Tributaries to the Kings of Zobah. The firſt exploit aſcribed unto them in the Holy Scripture, is their coming to the aid of Adad-ezer, upon his firſt defeat by David: in which action having loſt 22000 men, they were ſo broken, that they did not only ſuffer David to put Garriſons in the beſt Cities of Damaſcus. but patiently became his Servants, and brought preſents to him, 2 Sam. 8. 5, 6. The name of this unfortunate Prince not made known in Scripture, is by Joſephus affirmed out of Nicolas Damaſcenus, to have been Adad (a name much cheriſhed and aſſumed by the Kings his Suceeſſours): who keeping conſtant to the party of Adad-ezer in his following wars; was at laſt ſlain with him in that great diſcomfiture which David gave them, mentioned in the 2 of Sam. chap. 10. v. 18. In which Text the Scripture telleth us nothing of the death of thoſe Kings, that being ſupplyed to us by Joſephus out of their Records. Who alſo addeth, that Rezin one of the Chief Commanders of Adad-ezer, taking this advantage, not only uſurped his Maſters Kingdome, but made himſelf Maſter of the Kingdome of Damaſcus alſo. From this time forward the Seat-Royall of the Kings of Syria. Nor is this the tradition of Joſephus only, but founded plainly on the Scriptures; of which ſee 1 Kings 11. v. 23, 24. the Scriptures after this, taking no notice of any other Kings of Syria (by the name of Kings of Syria) but of thoſe that reigned in Damaſcus; who in ſhort time had ſwallowed up the petit Kingdomes of Geſſur, Iſh-tok, Rehob, beſides that of Sobah beforementioned.

The Kings of Syria or Damaſcus.

1. Adad, the Friend and Confederate of Adad-ezer King of Sobah; in whoſe quarrel he was vanquiſhed and ſlain by David.
2. Rezin, of whom the Scripture ſaith in the 2 of Chron. that when David ſlew them of Sobah, he fled from Adad-ezer his Lord, and gathered men unto him, and certain Captains over a Band, and went to Damaſcus and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damaſcus.
3. Adad II. an Idumæan, ſuppoſed to be of the family of Adad-ezer, but rather as I think of Adad, for fear of David fled to Ægypt, where he maried Taphnes, the Queens Siſter: and hearing that both David and Joab were dead, returned again into his Countrey, and as ſome write, expelled Rezin out of Damaſcus, and reigned there as King.
4. Hezion, Succeſſour unto Adad.
5. Tabrimon, the Sonne of Hezion, as is ſaid 1 Kings 15. 18.
6. Ben-hadad the Sonne of Tabrimon, hired by Aſa King of Judah, to aid him in his wars againſt Baaſha of Iſrael.
7. Ben-hadad II. Sonne of the former, twice invaded Iſrael in the reign of Achab, but both times notably repulſed; the firſt time by a ſally of 700 men at the ſiege of Samaria, the next at Aphec, where with the like number in effect he was taken priſoner, and his Army routed.
8. Hazael, Captain of the hoſt to Ben-hadad, annointed King of Syria by the Prophet Eliſha, whom God appointed ſo to do, that by his hands he might avenge himſelf on Ben-hadad, whom Hazael ſlew, but he proved as ill a neighbour to the Kings of Iſrael, as thoſe before him. He attempted upon Judah alſo in the time of Joas, but bribed with the Treaſures of the Temple, he withdrew his forces.
9. Ben-hadad III. Sonne of Hazael, diſcomfited in three ſet Battels by Joas King of Iſrael.
10. Ben-hadad IV. Sonne of Ben-hadad the third.
11. Ben-hadad V. Sonne of Ben-hadad the fourth.
12. Ben-hadad VI. Sonne of Ben-hadad the fifth, in the time of one of which three Kings, but which one we find not for a certain, Jeroboam the Sonne of Joas King of Iſrael, ſubdued both Chamath, and Damascus: of which see 2 Kings 14. v. 18.

13. Rezin II. Sonne of Ben-hadad the sixt, and the last King of Damascus, who joining with Pekah King of Israel, against Ahaz of Judah, enforced him to call unto his aid Teglat Phalasar, King of Assyria, by whom Rezin was taken, and beheaded, and the City of Damascus won: the Kingdome of Syria by that means united to the Assyrian Empire.

After this time the Syrians continued subject to the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs; and in the overthrow of that Empire by the Medes and Persians, became a part of their estate: remaining so till the first battel betwixt Alexander and Darius fought near Issus in Cilicia. The victory wherein falling to the Macedonian, gave him without more trouble than the seige of Tyre, the possession of Syria and Phoenicia. He dying not long after his conquest of Persia, this Countrey lay as it were at stake betwixt Ptolomy King of Egypt, and Antigonus the chief Lord of Asia: but the possession of it, together with the rest of the Persian Empire in both Asias, fell in conclusion to the share of Seleucus, for his many great and signal victories surnamed Nicanor; a man strangely preferred. For being at the first, Governour of Chaldea onely, he was forced to leave Babylon, and forsake his Province for fear of Antigonus, then dreadful to all the Macedonian Captaines; and to flie into Egypt, where he became Ptolomies Admiral. After which Ptolomie fighting a pitched field with Demetrius, son to Antigonus, took Seleucus with him; and having won the battel, gave him aid and license to recover his former government. Seleucus wel-beloved of the people, soon made himself Master, not of Chaldea onely, but of all the Persian Provinces beyond Euphrates: and not long after (being seconded by his good friend Ptolomy, Cassander, and Lysimachus) he encountred Antigonus at Ipsus in Ionia, where Antigonus himself was slain, and his whole army routed. This victory made Seleucus Lord of all Asia, from whence passing over into Europe, he vanquished and slew Lysimachus: seven moneths after which victory he was slain by Ptolomy Ceraunus, whose patron and protector he had formerly been; being yet the last survivor of all Alexanders Princes, and the onely possessour of all the dominions which his master had, by the way of conquest, Egypt excepted. His Successours, although they were Lords of all Asia, yet since in Syria they kept their residence, to the end that they might the better furnish themselves with Souldiers out of Greece, upon all occasions, as was said before; they were commonly called the Kings of Syria. But long they held not in that greatnes of estate and power which Seleucus left them: though being a full-bodied Tree, and of several Limbs, it endured the lopping off of many branches, and many a sad blow at the very root of it, before it fell. For in the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of this house, Arsaces a noble Parthian recovered from it all the Provinces of the Persian Empire, lying on that side of Euphrates, and erected the so much celebrated Parthian Kingdome, whereof more in Persia. And in the reign of Antiochus Magnus, so called for his victories in Egypt, Judea, and Babylonia, the Romans extorted from it all the Asian Provinces, on this side Mount Taurus; not wanting many provocations to incite them to it: for he not only had made warre against Ptolomy Philopater King of Egypt, whom the Romans had taken into their protection; but stirred up the Cities and States of Greece against them; invaded Lysimachia, and some other parts of Europe in defiance of them; and had received Annibal the Carthaginian, and Thoas the Ætolian, their most mortal enemies, into his dominions, governing his Counsels by the influences which they had upon him. Nor may we think but that ambition and avarice, to adde to their fame and Empire by the overthrow of so great a Prince, did perswade much with them. So that the point being brought to a ready issue, they pleaded it on both sides in the battel of Magnesia, a City of Lydia, to which Antiochus brought an Army of 300000. foot, and as many armed Chariots, besides store of Elephants, if the Roman writers be not over-lavish in their reports. But rejecting the advise of Annibal, and committing his affaires wholly to Evil Counsellers, he was vanquished by no more than four Legions of enemies, and for his peace, compelle to quit all his Asian Provin ces, on that side of Taurus, and to pay 15000. Talents in ready mony for the charge of the warre. The rest of his estates they were content he should enjoy for a longer time, Et libentius quod tam facile cessisset, (as Florus handsomly puts it on him) because he had so easily relinquished that. Afterwards in the civil broyles among themselves, about the succession of the Kingdome, Alexander, King of the Jews, took from them many of their best Towns in Palestine, as Joppa, Gaza, Anthedon, Azotus, Rhinocorura, almost all Samaria, and Gaulonitis, with Sythopolis, Gadara, and many other strong Towns in Cœle-Syria. Finally, when they had consumed almost all the Royal race, and changed their Kings no less than ten times in 40. years, (a sure sign of a falling and expiring Kingdome) they were fain to cast themselves upon Tigranes King of Armenia, a puissant and successful Prince, till ingaged in the quarrel of Mithridates against the Romans: by whom stripped of all his Estates on this side Euphrates, he was fain to content himself with his own Armenia, leaving Syria to the absolute disposal of Pompey, who presently reduced it to the form of a Province. This said, we have not much more to do with the house of Seleucus, but to lay down their names, and times of their several governments, till we draw towards the last end of

The Macedonian Kings of Syria.

A. M.

3654. 1. Seleucus Nicanor, the first King of this house. 31.

3685. 2. Antiochus, surnamed Soter, or the Saviour; memorable for nothing so much, as marying with Stratonice his Fathers wife, in his Fathers life-time.

3704. 3. Antiochus II. by his flattering Courtiers surnamed Theos, or the God: but being poisoned by his wife he proved a mortall.

3719. 4. Seleucus II. ſurnamed by the like flattery Callinicus, or fair Conquerour; becauſe ſhamefully beaten by the Parthians.

3739. 5. Seleucus III. called for the like reaſon Ceraunus, or the Thunderer; the eldeſt ſonne of Callinicus.

3742. 6. Antiochus III. ſurnamed Magnus, the younger ſonne of Callinicus, a Prince that imbraced many great actions, and was fortunate in his ſucceſſes beyond Euphrates: he plagued the Jews, but loſt all Aſia Minor unto the Romans.

3778. 7. Seleucus IV. called Philopator, the ſonne of Antiochus, who firſt began to caſt his eye upon the riches of the Temple at Hieruſalem.

3790. 8. Antiochus IV. ſurnamed Epiphanes, or the Illuſtrious, but more truly Epimanes, or the mad, the great ſcourge of the Jews; brother of Seleucus Philopator. With whom beginneth the ſtory of the firſt Book of the Maccabees.

3802. 9. Antiochus V. called by the name of Eupator, the ſonne of Epiphanes; who by Lyſias his Captain tyrannized over the poor Iudæans, for the litle time that he reigned; as did alſo

3819. 12. Demetrius II. ſurnamed Nicator, Sonne of Demetrius the firſt, recovered his Fathers Kingdome, a friend of the Maccabees, but ſo cruell to his own people, that he was driven out of his Kingdome by Tryphon Generall of his Armies.

3821. 13. Antiochus VI. ſurnamed Emhem, the Sonne of Alexander and Cleopatra, advanced unto the Throne by Tryphon, and after ſlain by him to make way for himſelf unto the Throne.

3824. 14. Tryphon, called alſo Diodorus, having driven out Demetrius, and ſlain Antiochus, made himſelf King.

3827. 15. Antiochus VII. ſurnamed Sedetes, brother of Demetrius, having overcome and ſlain Tryphon, ſucceeded him in the eſtate; for a while victorious againſt the Parthians, but afterwards overcome and ſlain by them. After whoſe death Demetrius Nicator (having lived in Parthia ſince the loſs of his Kingdome) was reſtored again unto the Throne; which having held about 4 years, he was again diſpoſſeſſed and ſlain by

3843. 16. Alexander II. ſurnamed Zebenna, an Ægyptian of mean birth, ſet up by Ptolomy Euergetes, and pretending himſelf to be the adopted Sonne of Antiochus; afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by 3845. 17. Antiochus VIII. from the croockedneſſe of his noſe ſurnamed Gryphus, Sonne of Demetrius, aided herein by the Ægyptian, with whom reconciled: having reigned about eight years in peace, embroiled himſelf in warre with his half-brother Antiochus ſurnamed Cyzicenus; which with variable ſucceſſes on both ſides, continued till the time of his death, having reigned 29 years in all.

3874. 18. Seleucus V. Sonne of Antiochus Gryphus, in the beginning of his reign overcame and ſlew his Uncle Cyzicenus; but being vanquiſhed by Antiochus ſurnamed Euſebes or Pius, one of the Sonnes of Cyzicenus, he fled into Cilicia, and was there burnt in his palace.

19. Antiochus IX. ſurnamed Euſebes, having firſt vanquiſhed Seleucus, and afterwards Antiochus, another of the Sonnes of Gryphus, was crowned King of Syria; but ſlain not long after in the Perſian wars.

20. Philip, and Demetrius III. ſurnamed Eucærus, younger Sonnes of Gryphus, jointly Kings of Syria, but reigning in their ſeverall parts. Of which Demetrius intending to diſſeize his brother, was himſelf vanquiſhed, and forced to fly into Parthia; leaving the whole Kingdome unto Philip. During which warres amongſt themſelves, Syria was invaded, and in part conquered, by Aretas King of the Arabians, and Alexander King of the Jews.

3884. 21. Tigranes King of Armenia, during theſe diſſentions was by the Syrians choſen King, that by his power they might be freed from the Jews and Arabians: the moſt puiſſant Prince that had reigned in Syria ſince the time of Antiochus the Great, as being King of Syria by election, of Armenia by ſucceſſion, of Media by conqueſt. But ingaging himſelf with Mithridates (whoſe daughter he had maryed) againſt the Romans, was vanquiſhed by Lucullus: who with the loſs of five Romans onely, and the wounds of an hundred, is reported to have ſlain of his Enemies above a 100000 men. Finally, being again broken and vanquiſhed by Lucullus, he yielded himſelf to Pompey (who being appointed Lucullus ſucceſſour, deprived him of the honour of ending that warre;) and retaining to himſelf Armenia only, he left all Syria to the Romans; having reigned eighteen years. And though Antiochus Comagenus, the Sonne of Euſebes, petitioned Pompey for a reſtitution to the Throne of his Anceſtours; yet it would not be granted: Pompey replying that he would not truſt the Countrey into ſuch weak weak hands as were not able to defend it againſt the Arabians, Parthians, and the like Invaders; and ſo reduced it preſently to the form of a Province. The government of this Countrey under theſe new Lords, was accompted to be one of the greateſt honours of the Empire: the Præfect hereof having almoſt regall juriſdiction over all the regions on this ſide Euphrates; with a ſuper-intendency over Egypt. Niger the concurrent of Severus, was Præfect here: and on the ſtrength hereof preſumed on that competition. So alſo was Caſſius Syrus, who being a Native of this Countrey, and well-beloved by reaſon of his moderate and plauſible demeanour, had almoſt tumbled M. Antoninus out of his Throne. On this occaſion it was enacted by the Senate, that no man hereafter ſhould have any militer or legall command in the Province where he was born: Leſt perhaps ſupported by the naturall propenſion of the people, to one of their own Nation; and heartned by the powerableneſs of his Friends, he might appropriate that to himſelf which was common to the Senate and people of Rome. But this was when it was entire, and paſſed but for one Province only, Phœnicia being alſo taken into the accompt, which made the Antiochians ſo proud and inſolent, that Adrian, in his time intended to ſubduct Phœnicia from it, ne tot civitatum Metropolis Antiochia diceretur, (ſaith Gallicanus) that Antioch might not be the chief of ſo many Cities. But what he lived not to accompliſh, was performed by Conſtantine. By whom Phœnicia was not only taken off, but Syria it ſelf divided into four diſtinct Provinces, as was ſhewed before; each of them having its Metropolis or Mother City: but all ſubordinate to the command of the Comes or Præfect of the Eaſt, as he to the command of the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis; the greateſt Officer of the Empire, of whom we have often ſpoke already.

For the defence hereof aſwell againſt all Forrein invaſions, as the inſurrections of the Natives, (a wavering and inconſtant People) the Romans kept here in continuall pay four Legions, with their Aids, and other Additaments. For ſo many Mutianus had here in the time of Galba; and by the ſtrength and reputation of thoſe Forces, was able to transfer the Empire upon Veſpaſian. And though the Conſtantinopolitan Emperours to whoſe ſhare it fell in the diviſion of the Empire, rather increaſed than diminiſhed any part of this ſtrength: yet when the fatall time was come, and that Empire was in the Declination, the Saracens, under the conduct of Haumar their third Caliph, an. 636. poſſeſſed themſelves of it, Heraclius then reigning in Conſtantinople. And it continued in their power, till Trangrolipix the Turk having conquered Perſia, and the Provinces on that ſide of Euphrates, paſſed over the River into Syria, and made himſelf Maſter of a great part of that alſo. A quarrell falling out betwixt him and his neereſt Kinſ-men, and thereby a great ſtop made in their further progreſs, was thus compoſed, by the mediation of the Caliph of Babylon in the time of Axan his Succeſſour. To Cutlu Muſes was aſſigned a convenient Army, to be by him employed againſt the Chriſtians, with Regal power over the Provinces by him gained, without relation or ſubordination to the Perſian Sultans: of whoſe ſucceſſes and affairs hath been ſpoke elſewhere. To Melech, and Ducat, two others of his diſcontented Kinſ-men, but all of the ſame Selzuccian family, he gave the fair Cities of Aleppo and Damaſcus, and thoſe parts of Syria, with whatſoever they could conquer from the Caliph of Ægypt, who then held all Phœnicia, and the Sea-coaſts of Paleſtine, to be held in fee and vaſſalage of the Crown of Perſia. To theſe two brethren then we are to refer the beginning of the Turkiſh Kingdome in Syria: who with their Succeſſors, by reaſon that here they held their reſidence, cauſed themſelves to be called

The Turkiſh Kings of Damaſcus.

1075. 1. Melech and Ducat, the firſt Turkiſh Kings of Damaſcus by the gift of Axan the ſecond Sultan of the Turks in Perſia, added to their dominions all the reſt of Syria, together with Cilicia and ſome neighbouring Provinces in the Leſſer Aſia.

2. ——— Sultan of Damaſcus, at ſuch time as the Chriſtians of the Weſt won the Holy Land: againſt whom he notably defended the City and Territories of Damaſcus; and in a ſet Battel diſcomfited and ſlew Roger the Norman, Prince of Antioch.

1146. 3. Noradine (the Sonne of Sanguin) Generall of the Armies, and Sonne-in-Law to the former King, ſucceeded him in the eſtate. A noble Prince, memorable amongſt other things for a gallant anſwer made to his Commanders, when they perſwaded him to take the advantage on the death of Baldwin the third, and to invade Hieruſalem whilſt the Chriſtians were buſie in ſolemnizing his Funerals. Not ſo, ſaith he, Compaſſion and regard is to be had of the juſt ſorrow of thoſe Chriſtians, who have loſt ſuch a King, as could not be equalled in the world.

1175. 4. Melechſala, Sonne of Noradine, contemned by reaſon of his youth, by his Nobles and Souldiery, who made choice of Saladine for their King, by whom diſpoſſeſſed firſt, and after vanquiſhed.

1176. 5. Saladine the Turkiſh Sultan of Egypt, having vanquiſhed the Perſians, or Parthians, coming under the conduct of Cacobed, Uncle to Melechſala, to reſtore that Prince to his Eſtate, remained King of Damaſcus: and by the puiſſance of his Armies recovered from the Chriſtians all Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hieruſalem.

1199. 6. Eladel, or El-Aphzal the eldeſt Sonne of Saladine, ſucceeded in the Realm of Damaſcus, which he exchanged for that of Egypt with his Brother Elaziz.

7. Elaziz, the ſecond Sonne of Saladine ſucceeded upon this Exchange in the Realm of Damaſcus, murdered not long after by his Uncle Saphradine.

8. Saphradine the Brother of Saladine, having barbariouſly murdered eight of the Sonnes of Saladine, (the youngeſt called Saphradine eſcaping onely, who was after Sultan of Aleppo) poſ-ſeſſed himſelf of the Kingdome of Damaſcus, left at his death to Corradine his Sonne or Nephew.

9. Corradine, Sonne or Nephew to the Tyrant Saphradine, was by him at his death left Sultan of Damaſcus, to which all Syria and Paleſtine were then ſtrife Provincials. But the treacheries and murders of Saphradine crying loud for vengeance, Haalon the Tartar in the year 1262. having taken the King of Damaſcus Priſoner (but whether Corradine or ſome other I am not able to ſay) brought him before the walls of the City, threatning to kill him in the ſight of his people, if they did not deliver it unto him. Which the Citizens refuſing to do, the wretched King was torn in peeces, and the City taken by aſſault: the Kingdome by the Conquerors conferred upon Agab the Sonne of Haalon. And ſo ended the Selzuccian family of the Kings of Damaſcus in the perſon of Corradine, or the Sonne of Corradine, moſt miſerably murdered by the Tartars; as it had done in Egypt 17. years before in the perſon of Melechſela and Elmutam the Sonne of Meledine, as villainouſly diſpoſed and murdered by the Mamalucks. So ſlippery is the foundation of thoſe Kingdomes which are laid in blood.

Nor did this Kingdome hold long in the hands of the Tartars, recovered from them in ſhort time by the Mamalucks then Kings of Egypt; from them once more regained by the furious Tamerlane, who in the year 1400. beſieged Damaſcus with an Army of 1200000. men (if the number be not miſtaken, and one Cypher added more than ſhould): in purſuite whereof he filled up the ditches with his Priſoners, put all the people, to the ſword, and with great art raiſed three Towers as a trophey of his victory, built with the heads of thoſe whom he had ſo ſlaughtered. A man ſo ſtrangely made up of vice and vertues, that it is hard to ſay which had the predominancie. But the violence of this tempeſt being overblown, the Mamalucks from whom he had alſo conquered the Kingdome of Egypt, recovered Syria by degrees, and repaired Damaſcus: continuing in their power till the year 1516. when Selimus the firſt diſcomfited Campſon Gaurus the Ægyptian Sultan in the fields of Aleppo. Upon the newes whereof the Citizens of Damaſcus, fearing the ſpoil of their rich City then of very great trading, ſet open their Gates unto the Victors; as did all the other Cities and Towns of Syria by their Example. By means whereof, without any more blows, the Turks became Lords of all this Country; as the next year of Egypt alſo by the vanquiſhment and death of Tonombeius who ſucceeded Campſon: ſo rooting out the name and government of the Mamalucks, and adding thoſe rich Kindomes to the Turkiſh Empire.

And ſo much for Syria

MOUNT HERMON.

IN our paſſage out of Cœle-Syria into Paleſtine, we muſt croſs Mount Hermon; a ledge of hills, which beginning at the Eaſt point of the Anti-Libanus, bend directly South: in different places, and by ſeveral Nations called by divers names. By Ptolomy called Alſadamus; by the Amorites, Samir; by the Phœnicians, Syrion; & by that name remembred in the book of Pſalmes. But Alſadamus they are called onely where they border upon Cœle-Syria. Where they begin to part the Region of Traconitis from Arabia-Deſerta, they are called by Moſes and the Scriptures Hermon; part of the Kingdome of Og, the King of Baſan, as is ſaid, Joſuah chap. 12. ver. 6. Syrion by the Sidonians, as is affirmed Deut. chap. 3. v. 9. Running farther after this unto the South, they are called Gilead or Galaad; by Strabo, Trachonita, after the name of the Region along which they paſs: and are conceived to be the higheſt part of all Mount Libanus, or rather of that long Ridge of Mountains which there take beginning. And ſo we are to underſtand the words of the Prophet Jeremie ſaying, Galaad tu mihi caput Libani, as the Vulgar readeth it. That is to ſay, that as the head is the higheſt part of a man; ſo theſe hills, or this part of them, was the higheſt of all the branches or ſpurres of Libanus. Called Galeed by Jacob, from that heap of ſtones which was there laid by Laban and Jacob, to be a witneſs of the Covenant which was made betwixt them, Gen. 31. ver. 27. the word ſignifying in the Original an heap of Witneſſes. And Laban ſaid, this heap is a Witneſs between me and thee this day; therefore was the name of it called Galeed, ver. 28. By theſe hills, and the main body of the Anti-Libanus lying on the North, and the Mountaines of Phœnicia and Idumæa on the Weſt, the land of Paleſtine is ſo ſhut up on every ſide, that no Foretreſs can be ſtronger by wit or Art, than that Countrey by Nature, the paſſages in ſome parts ſo narrow as hardly to afford paſſage for a ſingle perſon, Clauditur undiq; montibus, hinc abruptis rupibus, et profundis vallibus concurſu Torrentium, inde altis et implexis anfractibus ſic contractis, ut per anguſtos colles vix pateat tranſitus viatori, as my Author hath it. I forgot to adde, that that part of theſe hills, which commonly is known in Scripture by the name of Hermon, is in one place thereof called Sihon, as Deut 4. ver. 48. where it is ſaid that the Iſraelites poſſeſſed the Land from Aroer on the bank of the River Arnon, even to Mount Sion, which is Hermon: As alſo that one of the higheſt tops or Summits of it, had the name of Amana, alluded to by Solomon in the fourth of the Canticles, by ſome miſtaken for Amanus a branch of Taurus, which divides Syria from Cilicia in the Leſſer Aſia, with which Solomon had but ſmall or no acquaintance. And ſo having cleared our ſelves of ſo much of this Mountain as lay before us in our way, we paſſe over to Paleſtine: where we ſhall meet with it again, (or rather with the Weſtern parts and branches of it) under the names of Gilead and Trachonitis, as a part of that Country.

OF PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is bounden on the East, with the Hills last mentioned, by which parted from Cœlo-Syria, and Arabia-Deserta; on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea, and some part of Phœnicia; on the North, with the Anti-Libanus which divides it from Syria, and the rest of Phœnicia; and on the South, with some part of Arabia Petræa.

It was first called Palestine from the Philistims, the most potent Nation of those parts. A name first found in the History of Herodotus, but generally used in times succeeding by the Greeks & Romans. And this I look on as the proper and adæquate name of the whole Countrey, according to the bounds before laid down: the others, by which commonly called, being more restrained, and properly belonging to so much hereof as was in the possession of the Tribes of Israel. And of this sort are 1. Canaan, or the Land of Canaan, so called from Canaan the Sonne of Cham, by whom first peopled after the flood. 2. The Land of Promise, because by God promised to Abraham and his seed for an habitation. 3. Israel, from the Israelites or Sonnes of Jacob, whose surname was Israel. 4. Judæa, and by us Jewry, from the Jews, or people of the Tribe of Judah, the most prevalent of the Tribes of Israel. And 5. Terra Sancta or the Holy Land, because the subject of the greatest part of the Holy Scripture: and that the work of our Redemption was herein accomplished by our Lord and Saviour. Which notwithstanding we must know, that though these names do many times by a Synechdoche, express the whole Countrey of Palestine: yet neither the Canaanites or the Israelites were ever Masters of the whole: except onely in the times of David, and of some of the Maccabean Princes, as also in some part of the reign of Herod the Great; all which had the good fortune to command it totally.

But being the most considerable People of it were the Tribes of Israel; we will first look upon the Countrey People under that capacity. And for so much hereof as was held by them, it is situate between the third and fourth Climats: the longest day being fourteen hours and a quarter: the whole length but 200 miles, and not above 80 in the breadth, yet was of such a fruitful soil, that before the comming in of the Israelites, it had 30 Kings: and after the comming in of that people so extreamly populous, that David numbred on Million and 300000 fighting men, besides those of the Tribes of Levi and Benjamin. But of the fruitfulness hereof more shortly.

As for the People they were by composition of a midle stature, but strong of bodie: in their best times a murmuring and stiff-necked genneration, never well pleased either with God or man, with their Priests or Princes; seldome conform unto the Commandments of their God, nor very much constant to themselves. So crippled in their goings betwixt superstitions and Idolatry, that they knew not how to walk uprightly. Idolatrous above measure, and incorrigible in it, till their coming back from the Captivity of Babylon: and after that as superstitious and severe in the point of their Sabbath, as they had formerly been exorbitant in the worship of Idols. No Medium on either side, but extream in both. Divided antiently into these four ranks, that is to say, 1. Jews, 2. Hellenists, 3. Proselytes, and 4. Samaritans; all of them pretending a right unto this Countrey, though not all of them dwelling in it.

Of these the first called Jews, from Judah, the predominant Tribe; and Hebrews, from Heber the Sonne of Sela, grand-sonne of Sem, and one of the Ancestors of Abraham: were such as naturally descended of the Tribes of Israel, and lived for the most part in their own Countrey, adhering to the Law of Moses; and embracing the whole Canon of the Old Testament, from the book of Genesis to the book of the Prophet Malachi. Called also Israelites, because descended from the loins of their Father Jacob, to whom God gave the name of Israel, for his greater honour: but after the ten Tribes were carryed away by Salmanassar to an endlesse captivity; and the two tribes (with the remainder of the rest) returned from that temporary one, which they found in Babylon: the name of Israelites was laid by; and that of Jews assumed, as more proper to them. These read the Scriptures, and executed all Divine Offices in their natural Hebrew.

2. The Hellenists, were such as were Jews by parentage, but lived dispersed in most Provinces of the Roman Empire: called by that name (we may English it the Græcizing Jews) because they read the Scriptures in the Greek or Septuagints translation; and performed all publique offices in that language also. In other things as superstitious in their Sabbaths, as tenacious of their Circumcision, and others of the rites and ceremonies of the law of Moses, as the Jews of Palestine; and for that reason scorned and derided by the Gentiles amongst whom they lived; Credat Iudæus apella, saith one of their Poets; relating to their circumcising; Recutiæ Sabbata palles, saith another of them, with scorn enough unto their Sabbaths. Novi illic ritus & cæteris mortalibus contrarii, saith Tacitus a graver Author, of the whole body of their Rituals or Acts of worship.

3. The

3. The Proselytes were such, as not being Iews by birth, or discent of parentage, conformed themselves unto their customes, and desired to be admitted into their Religion. And these were also of two sorts, the one called Proselyti Portæ; and the other Proselyti fœderis. The first of these, admitted by the Iews to the worship of God, and instructed in the hopes of the life to come, were onely tied to those precepts which the Hebrew Doctors call the Precepts of the sonnes of Noah; but were neither circumcised, nor otherwise conform to the Law of Moses. Which Precepts of the Sonnes of Noah, so called because supposed to be given by Noah unto his Sonnes, when he came out of the Ark, were seven in number; that is to say, 1. That they dealt uprightly with every man. 2. That they blessed and magnified the name of God. 3. That they worshipped not any false Gods, but to abstain from Idolatry. 4. To refrain from all unlawful lusts and copulations. 5. To keep themselves from theft and robbery. 6. From shedding bloud. And 7. not to eat the flesh or member of any beast taken from it when it was alive, by which all cruelty was forbidden. These though they were admitted to the worship of God, and might repair unto the Temple, yet because of their Uncircumcision they were not suffered to converse with the Iews, nor to come into the same Court of the Temple with them: but were accounted as unclean, and had their Court apart assigned them in the worship of God, which was called Atriam Gentium, or Immundorum, and was the outermost of all. The other Proselytes which were called Proselyti fœderis, conformed in all things to the Iews; as in Circumcision, Sabbath-keeping, and all other Ceremonies: and were accounted of as adopted Iews, privileged as they were to worship in the Inner Court; bound as they were, from eating or drinking with a Gentile; and in a word, partakers with them in all things both divine and humane, and different in nothing from them but their race or parentage. These last in the New Testament called simply Proselytes, without any addition: the former by the name of Σεβόμενοι, or the worshipping Gentiles, of which see Acts 16. v. 14. & chap. 17. v. 4. 17. & chap. 18. v. 4. &c.

4. As for the Samaritans, they possessed a great part of this Countrey which the Proselytes did not, yet were not so much Iews as they. But of these more anon when we come to Samaria, the proper place of their abode.

As for the natural Jews themselves they are divided also into severall Sects, as viz. 1. Essæni, 2. the Sadduces, 3. the Scribes, 4. the Pharisees, 5. the Herodians, and 6. the Gaulonites or Gallileans. The Essenes or Essæni derive their name as some conceive from Asca, which signifieth facere, to doe, because they laboured with their hands; as others say from Asa, which signifieth θεραπεύειν, or to cure diseases, because they were much given to the study and practice of Phisick. Their beginning is not yet agreed on. The first time they were heard of was in the time of Jonathan the brother of Judas Maccabæus, about 150 years before Christ's nativity, then mentioned by Josephus, Antiqu. Judaic. l. 13. cap. 9. A Pithagorean kind of Jew, and not much differing in opinion from those old Philosophers, professing as they did. 1. Community of goods. 2. Abstaining even from lawfull pleasures. 3. Forbiding of Oaths. 4 Forbearing Wine, and drinking Water. 5. Ascribing the conduct of affairs to fate or destine. 6. Using onely inanimate or un bloody Sacrifices. Some other Dogmata they had, but these the principall: forbiding mariage not being common to the Sect, but onely to some few amongst them. And though we find no mention of them in the New Testament, the Sect in those times being small and inconsiderable; yet it is thought that Saint Paul alludeth to their Tenets: as where he adviseth Timothy to make use of Wine, and glanceth upon those who prohibited mariage, 1 Tim. 4. 3. or condemned others in the use of meat and drink, 2. Coloss. 16. As for the manner of their life, they lived together as it were in Manasteries or Colledges, and in every one had their συμνῶον, or Oratory: admitting none into their fellowship or society, unless he brought all he had into their common Treasury; and not then neither under a three years Probationership. More of them he that listeth to see, may satisfie himself in that tract of Philo, intituled De vita contemplativa, where he most copiously describeth their Institutes and course of life: mistakingly applied by Eusebius to the Primitive Christians, as if that Tract had purposely been composed of them by that learned Jew.

2. The Sadduces either derive their name from Sadoc, who lived about the time of Alexander the Great, and is thought to be the first founder of them; or from Sadok an Hebrew word, signifying Justice; the men pretending to be so exact and strict Justiciaries, as if they would justifie themselves before Gods Tribunall. The occasion of the Sect or heresie (for both it was) said to arise from a mistake of Antigonus a right learned man, who teaching that we ought not to serve God, as Servants doe their Masters, for the hope of reward; occasioned Sadoc and Baitus, two of his Auditors, to conceive that there was no reward nor recompence for a godly life, and consequently no Resurrection nor World to come, neither Angels nor Spirits. These were the most capital of their Errors, as appeareth Act. 23. 6. 8. Mat. 22. 3. Luke 20. 20. 27. &c. But other Dogmata they had not mentioned in the holy Scripture, ascribing nothing unto Fate, or Predestination, but all things altogether to a mans free-will. 2. Teaching the soul to be annihilated at the hour of death. 3. Rejecting all Traditions; and 4. Allowing no more Scripture than the five Books of Moses. In most of their opinions contrary to the Scribes and Pharisees, but joining with them both in opposing Christ, and though like Sampsons foxes they looked divers wayes and were tied together by their tails onely; yet in those tails they carried fire-brands to destroy Gods harvest; and had done it if they had been able.

3. But indeed the Pharisees were the men who were the Master-wits in the Arts of mischief. Homines robustioris impietatis in the Fathers words. Fellowes of such a perfect and concocted malice, that they were almost able to possess the devil. Their name they derive from Pharez, which is to separate. Separists we may rightly call them. For they were first ἀφορισμένοι εἰς τὸν νόμον, separated to the study of the Law of God, as Saul was brought up to that purpose at the feet of Gamaliel: and 2ly ἀφορισμένοι εἰς ἑ ἁγιωσύνῃ, ſeparated from the reſt of mankind, by a more ſtrict profeſſion of ſanctity; as the Phariſee boaſted of himſelf that he was not as other men, or as that Publican. And that they might ſo ſeem unto ſimple men, they did thirdly ſeparate themſelves from the ſociety and converſation of others not ſo pure as themſelves, whom they called populum terræ, or the Sonnes of the earth: upbraiding Chriſt that he kept company with Publicans and Sinners: and more then ſo, uſed a particular kind of habit, and had a garbe unto themſelves which no others had; uſing it for a by-word amongſt themſelves, that Veſtes populi terræ ſunt conculcatio Phariſæorum. To which end, as their Countenances were more clouded and ſevere than others; ſo did they wear their Phylacteries of a broder ſize than others did; which by the way, were ſcrols of Parchment bound about their heads and upon their hands, wherein were writ the Ten Commandments of God: fooliſhly ſo interpreting thoſe words of Deut. And they ſhall be as frontlets between thine eyes, &c. chap. 6. ver. 8. They began at the ſame time with the Sadduces; which was about 300 years before Chriſts nativity. As for their Dogmata, beſides thoſe ſpecified above, which were alſo practicable, they mentioned 1. a Pythagorean Metempſuchoſis, affirming that the ſoul of a righteous man paſſed from one man into another, at the time of his death: from whence the divers opinions touching Chriſt our Saviour, Mat. 16.v.14. are ſuppoſed to ſpring, as if his body had been animated with the ſoul of Elias, John the Baptiſt, Jeremy, or ſome other Prophet. 2. They adhered ſo tenaciouſly to unwritten traditions, that in compariſon of them, they neglected the written Law as either inſufficient or impertinent. And 3. aſcribed ſo much ſanctity unto frequent waſhings, eſpecially when they came from Market, Mark 7. v.4. where poſſibly they might meet with ſome unclean perſon; and before their ſitting down to meat, Mat. 15. 2. that if they came unto a place where there was not water enough both to drink and waſh, the Phariſee would rather chooſe to waſh than drink, though he died for thirſt. More of them he that liſt to ſee, may find it copiouſly ſet down in the four and twentyeth chapter of Saint Matthew; and thither I referre the Reader. By means of which pretenſions to ſo great a ſanctity, and ſome other arts they had to abuſe the people, they grew ſo ſtrong, and had ſuch ſtore of followers, and dependants on them, that they became formidable in ſhort time to their Kings and Princes. Inſomuch that Alexandra durſt not enter on the government in her Childrens nonage as Joſephus telleth us Antiqu. lib. 13. cap 23. untill ſhe had permitted all things unto their diſpoſing, καὶ μηδὲν ἄνευ τῆς ἐκείνων γνώμης, &c. and promiſed to doe nothing without their advice. And this ſhe did by the direction of King Alexander her dying Husband, whoſe Government as he found by too ſad experience, had in many things proved unſucceſsfull, διὰ τοῦτο ὑβριζόμενος παρ' αὐτοῦ, becauſe he had put ſome ſcornes upon them, and otherwiſe offended that prevailing faction. A faction ſo predominant amongſt the People. ſaith the ſame Joſephus, Antiqu. lib. 19. cap. 18. ὡς καὶ κατὰ βασιλέως πλάττοντες, καὶ καθ' Ἀρχιερέως, &c. that whatſoever they pleaſed to ſpread abroad either of the High Prieſt. or the King himſelf, how falſe and ſcandalous ſoever; it was received for truth without more diſpute, or any enquire made into it.

4. But of the Phariſees enough, of the Scribes anon. Proceed we now to the Herodians and the Gaulonites, whom I look not on as either the Authors or Promoters of any Sect of Religion in the Jewiſh Church; but as the names of two oppoſite factions in the Civil State. The firſt were ſuch who depending upon Herods fortune, as he did on the pleaſure of the Roman Emperours; ſollicited the paying of tribute to the Romans; and earneſtly preſſed upon that point, that Herod might be thereby the more indeered to his Maſters of Rome, and they to him. Upon this ground, nick-named Herodians by the people, as men that more endeavoured the greatneſs and eſtate of Herod, than the proſperity and liberty of their native Countrey. And poſſible enough it is, that ſome amongſt them ſeeing the magnificence of Herods palace, and experimentally knowing his proweſs; might fancy him to be the Meſſiah, ſo long looked for and thereby own this name with a better title than the others did. Oppoſite unto theſe were thoſe called the Gaulonites (we may call the one the Court-faction, the other the faction of the Countrey or Common-people): ſo named from one Judas, a Gaulonite as Joſephus calleth him from the place of his birth; a Galilæan, as Gamaliel calleth him, Acts 5.37. from the place of his abode or habitation. By him the Jews were practiſed with to deny this tribute, telling them that it was a manifeſt token of their ſervitude. and that they ought to know no Lord, but the Lord of Heaven: drawing them finally on this ground into open armes, in which action he and his adherents periſhed, and were brought to nothing. Moſt of his followers were of Galilee, though he had ſome diſciples in Hieruſalem and Samaria alſo: and of theſe Galilæans were thoſe poor men, whoſe bloud Pilate is ſaid to mingle with their Sacrifices, Luke 13. 1.

The language of this people by them called the Hebrew, was naturally and originally the ſame which Abraham found in the land of Canaan, at his comming thither: as hath been ſhewn before when we were in Phœnicia. Uſed by them conſtantly till their ſubjugation by the Babylonians, when being led captive to that Countrey, and conforming themſelves to the ſpeech and dialect of it: they came at laſt to ſpeak a kind of broken language, neither true Chaldæan, nor good Hebrew, but one made of both. Chaldee, as to the main body of it, but Hebrew, as to the Affixes, points, and Conjugations; being the ſame with that which we now call the Syriack. And at their comming home, after ſeventy years, had ſo far loſt the knowledge of their Mother-tongue: that they were not able to underſtand the words of the Holy Scripture, when Ezra read it in their hearing; inſomuch that he was forced to employ ſome learned in that tongue, to expound it to them. To this the Scribes ſo often mentioned in the New Teſtament, muſt refer their originall: there being no ſuch Office heard of till the time of Ezra, though long before that time the Law had ordinarily been read unto them in the feaſt of Tabernacles. For this cauſe they were called Scribes of the Law, Ezra 7. 6. Doctors ctors of the Law, Luke 5. 17. and ſimply by the name of Lawyers, Luke 7. 30. as men whoſe office was to expound the Law, and make it intelligible to the people. Theſe people we may reſemble to the Canoniſts in the Church of Rome, or the Divinity Reader in ſome School or College: and grew to ſo great eſtimation in the Jewiſh State, that it was hard to ſay at laſt whether the Phariſees or they were the better men. For what the Phariſees gained on the common people by pretence of ſanctity, theſe got more juſtifiably by their zeal to the written word, which they endeavoured to preſerve from the common dangers both of corruption and contempt. And though I look on thoſe men eſpecially, as the name of a function, not a Sect: yet being they held ſo cloſe to the Phariſees, and concurred with them in moſt of their ſuperſtitions, as appeareth Mat. 23. I conſider them as a ſtrong and potent faction, of great authority and influence in affaires of moment.

For matters of Religion, the people of this land were privileged above all others, had they had the grace to make good uſe of it: the Law being given to them by God the Father, the Goſpel preached amongſt them by God the Sonne, and that Goſpel countenanced and confirmed before their eyes, by the miraculous operations of the Holy Ghoſt. The Government of that Church in the time of the Law by a ſubordination of Prieſts and Levites to their ſeveral heads; the Prieſts divided by King David into 24. ranks or Claſſes, each Claſſis ſerving in their tumes at the holy Temple: the chiefs or Heads of which ſeveral Claſſes made but that body of men which are called Principes Sacerdotum, or chief Prieſts, ſo often mentioned in the writings of the holy Evangeliſts. Over all which there was one ſupreme, whom they called Summum Sacerdotem, or the High-Prieſt, deſcended lineally from Aaron, till the Romans out of averice and reaſon of State made the office ſaleable. And becauſe poſſibly the High-Prieſt might be under ſome pollution, and ſo uncapable by law to perform his Office, he had his Suffragan (or Sagan) to diſcharge it for him. Of which ſort was Zephaniah, the Sagan or ſecond Prieſt to Semiah, mentioned Ierem. 52. 24. And of this ſort is Annas thought by ſome to have been to Caiaphas; and for that cauſe the title of High-Prieſt to be given to both, Luke 3. 2. though others think that Annas was High-Prieſt in right, and the other in fact: the one being depoſed by the Romans, and the other ſuper-induced into the place. In time of Chriſtianity they were governed as in other Churches, by a ſubordination of Prieſts to Biſhops, the firſt ſaid to be Saint Iames, the Sonne of Alphæus, commonly called the Lords Brother: affirmed by Ignatius, Scholar to the Apoſtles, in his Epiſtle ad Trallianos; by Egeſippus who lived in the Apoſtles times, as Saint Hierome and Euſebius cite him; as alſo by Clemens of Alexandria cited by Euſebius, hiſt. l. 7. c. 14. by Cyrill of Hieruſalem, Catechiſm. 4. and 14. Epiphanius, Hæreſ. 78. n. 7. Saint Ambroſe in Gal. 1. Saint Chryſoſt. on the laſt of Saint Iohns Goſpel; Saint Hierome in his Catalogue of Eccleſiaſtical writers; Saint Auguſtine cont. Creſcon. l. 2. cap. 37. to whom there may be added the joint conſent of 289. Prelates, aſſembled in the ſixth General Council holden at Conſtantinople, affirming Iames the Lords Brother to be the firſt Biſhop of Hieruſalem: all of them, with the Fathers before mentioned, taking the word Biſhop in that ſenſe in which it generally paſſed for the times they lived in. His Succeſſors ſubject at the firſt to the Biſhop of Caſarea, as their Metropolitan; though privileged in their own Dioceſe with the rights of Patriarchs, as appears evidently by the Acts of the Nicene Council. But afterwards for the greater honour of the Holy City, wherein our Saviour wrought the work of our Redemption, it was ordained at Chalcedon, that the Biſhop of Hieru alem ſhould have as well the juriſdiction as the name of a Patriarch; the three Paleſtines, (for Conſtantine had before divided it into ſo many Provinces) being ſubducted from the power of the See of Antioch, to make up this Patriarchate. So ſtood it in the elder times, but now by the incroachment of Mahometaniſm the Chriſtian faith is ſo obſcured, and the beauties of it ſo Eclipſed: that were it not for ſome Sects of Chriſtians dwelling in Mount Sinai, and about Hieruſalem, it might be ſaid without any manifeſt untruth to be quite extinguiſhed.

But to look back upon the Countrey, it cannot be deſcribed more fully and ſignificantly than Moſes hath done it to our hands in the 8. of Deut. Where it is ſaid to be a land of Brooks and Waters, of Fountains and depths that ſpring out of the Vallies and Hills; a Land of Wheat and Barly, and Vines, and Fig-trees, and Pomgranates; of Oyl-olive, and Honey; a Land wherein was bread without ſcarceneſs; a Land whoſe ſtones were as Iron, and out of whoſe Hills one might dig braſs. An ample commendation, and yet in ſome ſort ſhort of the fertility of this flouriſhing Countrey, which did not onely conſiſt in the choice and plenty, but the perpetuity of its fruits: it being on record in the Epiſtles of the Emperour Julian, (ſurnamed the Apoſtate) that the Fig-trees, and other fruit-trees herein, were ſeldome or never without fruits: the old not fully falling off, till the new come on, which his report if true, (as certainly he did not love our Saviour ſo well as to flatter the Countrey for his ſake) we have then an anſwer to the difficulty which hath ſo much perplexed all Commentators of former times, and that is, why our Saviour ſhould curſe the Fig-tree for not bearing fruit; when the Text ſaith, that the time of fruits was not yet come, Mar. 14. 13. For though the time for new fruits was not come as yet (it being then but early Spring) yet our Saviour being hungry might expect to find ſome of the old, and failing of his expectation lay that curſe upon it. Nor is this ſolution of the doubt diſcountenanced, (rather much confirmed) by the Character and condition of the Countrey as it ſtands at preſent, naturally adorned with beautiful mountains and luxurious vallies, the rocks affording excellent waters, and the Air never pinched with colds, nor ſcorched with heats: though either by the negligence of the Inhabitants, or ſome curſe laid upon the land, far ſhort of that fertility with which once it flouriſhed. Yet ſtill Figs, Olives, Pomgranates, Palm-trees, are here very frequently to be ſeen; ſome ſtore of Wine, with Oranges, and the Apple of Paradice, which they preſerve upon the trees all the year long, (which agrees very well with that of Julian ſpoken of before) well furniſhed with Honey and Sugar-canes; as alſo with Goats, Swine, Hares, Quailes, and Partriges: but peſtred ſo in many places with rats and mice, that if it were not for certain Birds which feed upon them, it were not possible for the people to have any Harvest. Balm they had antiently, not now. Nor any Nuts, Peares, Plums, or Cherries, but what are brought hither from Damascus.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey, are, 1. Chison, the Chorsaus of Ptolomy, which riseth out of Mount Tabor in Galilee, and falleth into the Mediterranean Sea, not farre from Mount Carmel in Phœnicia. 2. Cedron, a Torrent rather than a River, passing betwixt Hierusalem and the Mount of Olives; but more remarkable for many notable actions, than many others of a greater both name and course. For over this Brook did David pass when he fled from Absolom; and over this our Saviour the Sonne of David passed, when he went to his passion. On the banks hereof did Asa the King of Judah burn his mothers Idols, 1 Kings 15. as Josiah did the vessels which were made for Baal, 2 Kings 23. 3. Zared, and 4. Napthea, which arising out of the hils of the tribe of Judah, have their fall into the Mediterranean. 5. Arnon, which hath its spring in the hills so called, and endeth its course in the Mare Mortuum. 6. Jabor, oft mentioned in the Scriptures, which issuing out of the Mountains of Galaad, and 7. Hermon which springing from the hills so named, lose themselves in Iordan. 8. Iordan, so called from Ior and Dan, two neighbouring fountains, out of which he seemes to take his source: though they do also fetch their spring from Phiala, a round deep well at the foot of Anti-Libanus, about twenti-four miles from these fountains, into which he maketh his way like a Mole, under ground. A River of more fame than length, breadth or depth, running from North to South, almost in a strait line to the Dead Sea only, where he endeth his course; not navigably deep, nor above ten yards in breadth, where broadest; shadowed on both sides with Poplars, Tamarisk-trees, and reeds of many several sorts, of some of which the Arabians make darts and Iavelines, of others Arrows, and some again they fashion into pens to write with. Passing along it maketh two Lakes, the one in the Upper Galilee, by the antients called Samachonitis; dry for the most part in the Summer, and then covered with shrubs and sedge; not mentioned in the Holy Scriptures: the other in the Lower Galilee, about a hundred furlongs in length, and about fourty in breadth, called the Sea of Galilee from the Countrey, the Lake of Tiberias from a City of that name on the banks thereof, and for the like cause called also the Lake of Genezareth. And it is to be observed, that the River passeth thorow this Lake with so swift a course, that it preserves it self distinct from the waters of it both in tast and colour, as is affirmed of Nilus for a long space in the Mediterranean, and other great Rivers in their falls. Finally, having run thorow the plains of Hiericho, it finisheth its course at last in the Mare Mortuum, or Dead Sea. Honoured with the name of a Sea, because salt, and large: seventy miles long, and sixteen broad, furnishing with salt the whole land of Iewrie: but called the Dead Sea, either because it hath no visible influx into the Ocean, nor is at all increased with the waters of this River and many other Torrents which fall into it; or because no living creature is nourished it it, suffocated with the bituminous savour which it sendeth forth, from the abundance of which matter it is also called Lacus Alphaltites. Nigh hereunto stood the once-famous Cities of Sodom and Gomorrah, with three others more, whence the valley had the name of Pentapolis, destroyed for their abominations by a fire from heaven: now fruitful in shew onely, but not in substance; the fruits here growing, being very fair unto the eye, sed levi tactu pressa in vagum fatiscunt pulverem, but if touched, moulder into ashes, as Solinus hath it.

Chief Hills and Mountains of it besides Anti-Libanus and Mount Hermon spoken of already, which be onely borderers, are, 1. Mount Sion, memorable for the Tower of David, which was built upon it, called frequently the Holy Hill of Sion. 2. Mount Moriah, famous for the intended sacrifice of Isaac, and the Temple of Solomon. 3. Mount Calvarie, on which CHRIST suffered, supposed to be the burial place of our Father Adam. 4. Mount Tabor, on which our Saviour was transfigured. 5. Mount Olivet, from which he ascended into Heaven. 6. Mount Garizim, whereon stood the Samaritans Temple, their ordinary place of worship, mentioned Iohn 4. 20. 8. The Mountains of Saron, stretching with intermixed vallies from the Sea of Galilee to the Mediterranean, not far from Tyre; there ending in a white cliff, and for that cause called Capo Bianco by the Sayler. The whole Mountain pleasantly enriched with the fragant smells of Rosemary, Sweet Marjoram, Hyssop, Baies, and other odoriferous plants which do grow their naturally: but for all that destitute of any other Inhabitants than Leopards, Boars, Jaccalls, and such savage Creatures. 9. the Mountains of Gilboa, the highest on the West of Iordan; as 10. those of Basan, celebrated for their height in the book of Psalmes; and 11. those of Abarim, on the East side of it: from one of the Summits of which last called Nebo, by some writers Pisgah, the Lord gave Moses a Survey of the Land of Promise.

As for this whole Countrey comprehended in the name of Palestine, it hath had divers divisions, according to the quality of the People, or the will of those who have been formerly Masters of it. Divided first betwixt the Philistims, Perezites, Hittites, Jebusites, and others of the sonnes of Canaan, on this side Jordan; the Moabites, Ammonites, Midianites, and Amorites, dwelling on the other. When conquered by the sonnes of Jacob, it was divided into the twelve Tribes, of 1. Judah, 2. Benjamin, 3. Simeon, 4. Dan, 5. Aser, 6. Nephthali, 7. Zabulon, 8. Issachar, 9. Gad, 10. Reuben, 11. Ephraim, and 12. Manasseth. When that great breach was made by Ieroboam in the Kindome of David, it was broken into the two Kingdomes of Judah and Israel; of which the first contained onely the two Tribes of Judah and Benjamin, the latter comprehending the other ten. When the Israelites were led captive into Assyria, and a new set of People planted in their rooms, those new-comers, from Samaria their capitall City, had the name of Samaritans: And when the men of Judah were released of their long captivity, and came back from Babylon, they took to themselves the name of Iewes: after which time the whole Countrey of Palestine antiently possessed or subdued by the seed of Abraham, was divided into 1. Perœa, 2. Iturœa, 3. Galilee, 4. Samaria, 5. Judœa, and 6. Idumœa. When conquered quered by the Romans, all theſe were joined into one Province, which for a time was reckoned as a part of Syria, or at leaſt ſubordinate. But Conſtantine not liking of the one or the other, went a way by himſelf, and caſt it into three Provinces, viz. 1. Paleſtina Prima, 2. Paleſtina Secunda, and 3. Paleſtina Salutaris; the Metropolis of the firſt being Cæſarea Paleſtinæ; of the ſecond, Samaria; of the third, Hieruſalem. But this diviſion of Conſtantines growing out of uſe, we will adhere unto the former, beginning firſt with thoſe parts hereof which lay on the other ſide of Iordan, becauſe firſt conquered and poſſeſſed by the houſe of Iſrael; who at that gate found entrance into the reſt; and coming round to Idumæa; which laſt of all theſe Provinces was added to the State of Iewry. In the Chorographis whereof, I muſt confeſs my ſelf a Debtor to Sir Walter Raleigh, whoſe induſtry herein hath ſaved me a great deal of ſearch, though ſometimes I make bold to differ from him, & add to him as I ſee occaſion.

PERÆA.

PERÆA, is that part of Paleſtine which lieth betwixt the River Iordan and the mountains of Arnon, which divide Paleſtine from Syria and Arabia, Eaſt and Weſt; and reacheth from Pella in the North, to Petra the chief Town of Arabia Petræa in the South. By Pliny it is made to bend more towards Egypt, who deſcribes it thus. Peræa Judeæ pars eſt ulterior; Arabiæ & Egypto proxima, aſperis diſperſa montibus & à cæteris Indæis Jordane amne diſcreta. Peræa (ſaith he) is the furtheſt part of Iudæa, neighbouring Arabia and Egypt, interſperſed with rough and craggy mountains, and parted from the reſt of the Iews by the River Iordan. So called from the Greek word περὰ, in regard of the ſituation of it on the other ſide of that River, and not improperly might be rendred by Tranſ-Iordana. Bleſſed with a rich ſoil, and large fields beſet with divers trees, eſpecially of Olive, Vines, and Palms. The habitation in times paſt of the Midianites, Amorites, and Ammonites; as alſo of the two Tribes of Gad and Reuben. Of all which I ſhall ſpeak in order, beginning with the Midianites, and the Children of Lot, as the firſt occupants hereof; upon the knowlege of whoſe affairs, the ſtate and ſtory of the Iſraelites hath ſo much dependance.

And firſt the MADIANITES inhabited on the South-Eaſt of the Dead Sea, at the very entrance of the Countrey; deſcended from one or more of the five Sonnes of Madian, the Sonne of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. v. 4. Who leaving the reſt of their brethren to ſeek themſelves new habitations more towards the banks of the Red Sea, and the deſarts of Arabia Petræa, continued neer unto the place of Abrahams dwelling; and mingling with the Moabites and Canaanites in blood and Mariages, came in ſhort time to loſe all the knowlege of the true God; and to worſhip Idols as the reſt of their neighbours did.

Their chief Cities were 1. Recon, built by one of the five Kings of the Midianites, which was ſlain by Ioſuah: afterwards called Selah, 2 Kings 14. 7. accounted at that time a City of the Edomites: next of the Iſmaelites or Arabians, and by them called Hagar. Beſt known unto the Greeks and Romans, by the name of Petra, and by that name we ſhall take further notice of it when we come to Arabia. 2. Midian, on the banks of the Dead Sea, the ordinary reſidence of their Princes, abſolute of themſelves at firſt, as in other places; but at the time when Moſes and Ioſuah led the people into their poſſeſſions, ſubjected unto Sehon King of the Amorites; whoſe Dukes their five Kings or Princes are ſaid to be, Ioſuah 13. 21. A people whom the Iſraelites had neither commiſſion or intent to make warre upon, if they had not cauſeleſly provoked them at the requeſt of the Moabites, by ſending amongſt them (as Balaam the falſe prophet had adviſed) the moſt beautiful of all their women, not only to entice them to prohibited mixtures, but to allure them to the worſhip of their Idols alſo. A miſchievous and ſucceſsfull plot, but alike dangerous to both parties: God ſending a fierce plague amongſt the Iſraelites, which coſt them the lives of 24000 perſons, beſides ſuch as periſhed by the ſword; and giving a command to Moſes to avenge him of the Midianites who had ſo provoked him. On which commiſſion Moſes culled out 12000 men, and ſent them under Phineas againſt the Midianites; by whom all their Princes were ſlain, their Cities and goodly Caſtles burnt with fire, their men, women, and male-children put unto the ſword; as is related in the one and thirtieth Chapter of the Book of Numbers Yet notwithſtanding this great ſlaughter they recovered their former power, if not a greater; and after the death of Barac the Judge of Iſrael, did for the ſpace of four years ſo afflict that people, that they were fain to hide themſelves in the Caves and ſtrong holds of the Mountains, as is ſaid Iudg. 6. 2. their enemies having left them neither ſheep, oxe, nor aſſe, or any ſuſtenance at all, v. 4. But Gideon being raiſed up by God for their deliverance, encountred with their four Kings and put them to flight: of which four, Oreb and Zeb were taken and ſlain by the Ephraimites at the paſſage of Iordan; Zebah and Salmanah, taken by Gideon himſelf, and executed by his own hand, as the ſtory telleth us. In this war there are ſaid to have periſhed of this people and their Confederates, no fewer than 120000 perſons: by which ſo weakned that we hear no more of them from this time forwards, in any action of importance: their name and Countrey being firſt incorporated into that of the Edomites; and after into that of the Iſmaelites and other the Inhabitants of Arabia Petræa.

2. The MOABITES, poſſeſſed all the Countrey from the Midianites in the South as far as to Eſebon in the North, on both ſides of the River Arnon: having Iordan on the Weſt, and the hills of Abarin on the Eaſt. Poſſeſſed at the firſt by the Emmims, a race of Giants, whoſe chief City was Sheneth Kiriathaim. But theſe being vanquiſhed and broken by Cherdorlaomer and his Aſſociates, of which ſee Gen. 14. 5. their forlorn ſeats were taken up by the Moabites, deſcended from Moab one of the Sonnes of Lot, who lived here in great proſperity till the time of Vaheb. Grand-father unto Balac the Sonne of Zippor, from whom Sehon King of the Amorites had taken all the parts of Moab on the North of the River Arnon, and made that River, which before was the middle of Moab, to be the North bound or border of it. In which estate it stood in the time of Moses.

Chief Cities of it at that time were 1. Rabbat, the Regall seat of Baalac the King of Moab, the Rhalmathum of Ptolomy. 2. Diblatham, destroyed with the rest of Moab by Nabuchadnezzer, as is said Ier. 48. 22. 3. Gallim, the principality of Phalti the Sonne of Laish, to whom Saul gave his Daughter Michael, formerly maried unto David, 1. Sam. 25. 44. 4. Muthana, and 5. Nathaliel, thorow which the Israelites passed, after they had left the well called Beer. 6. Bamath, where Moses was encamped when he sent to Sehon to demand a passage thorow his Countrey, Numbers 21. 19. &c. 7. Mizpah, the City of Refuge to the Father and Mother of David, in the time of his troubles under Saul. 8. Hor, the chief City of Moab, not medled with by Moses in his march this way, the Lord himself forbidding him to touch upon it, or distress it; because it had been given by him for an inheritance to the Children of Lot, Deut. 2. 9. Which prohibition was not onely for this place particularly (though this particularly their mentioned) but for all the lands and terretories then in their possession. 9. Kir-hasareth, of chief note for the barbarous and inhumane fact of Mesha the Moabitish King, who being besieged herein by the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom, without hope of escape, sacrificed his own eldest Sonne on the wall hereof, which so moved the Kings of Judah, and Edom, that they forsook the King of Israel whose the quarrel was. So the siege was raised, 2 Kings 3. 27.

Now as Moses did not at the present disobey Gods Order in leaving the Moabites in quiet; so neither did the Moabites on their parts provoke him to it; giving him a free and open passage in his march for Canaan: out of an hope that when the Amorites were subdued, they should be put into possession of their lost estates. And though they were deceived of that expectation, the Israelites looking on the Countrey which they had conquered, as the spoiles of the Amorites; and given it for a possession to the Tribe of Reuben: yet durst they not do any thing in the way of Annes, but sent for Baalam the false Prophet, to cast them by his curses and incantations into some diseases, whereby their strength and courage might be taken from them. Balaac the Sonne of Zippor was at this time King. After whom we find not the name of any other till we come to Eglon, who with the help of Ammon, and Amalek, over-mastered Israel, and for the space of eighteen years tyrannized amongst them: when slain in his own house, and afterwards 10000 of his people by the hand of Ehud. But this indignity was in the times succeeding revenged by Saul in some part, who made warre upon them; but more by David who subdued them, and made them Tributaries. And not so onely but subjected them to the vilest offices, as is intimated in that form of Speech, Moab is my wash-pot, Psal. 60. 8. Taking their opportunity they withdrew themselves from the house of David, and put themselves under the command of the Kings of Israel, to whom they paid for tribute in the time of Ahab, 100000 Lambs, and 200000 Rams, with their fleeces on: but quickly weary of those payments, and revolting from the house of Ahab also, they were invaded by Jehoram, aided herein by the Kings of Judah and Idumæa; by whom being vanquished, Mesha their King was fain to shut himself up in Kir-hasareth, as was said before. After this joining with the Ammonites, and the Idumæans, or Sonnes of Edom, they invaded Jehosophat King of Judah, to whom God gave a memorable and signall victory, without blow or battel: the Ammonites first setting upon the Edomites, and after upon one another, till they were almost all destroyed, 2 Chron. 20. 23. From this time we hear nothing of them; but that probably they recovered some parts of their former dwellings, when the two Tribes and a half, on the East of Iordan were carryed away captive by Tiglath Pileser. Possessed hereof and of other their habitations, till the reign of Zedekias King of Iudah; when vanquished, with the rest of these Nations by the Babylonians and Assyrians under Nabuchadnezzar. Nor find we any mention of them in the ages following; the name of Moab being forgotten, or grown out of use: the South parts of their Countrey laid to Arabia Petræa, as the East parts were to that also of Arabia Deserta; and all the rest, as well as that which had been conquered by the Iews, swallowed up in the general name of Palestinians.

3. The AMMONITES, inhabited on the North-East of the River Arnon, and possessed all that tract from Aroer on the head of that River to the City of Rabbah; and on both sides of the River Iaboc, as well within the mountains of Galaad as without the same. The seat in elder times of the Raphaims, and Zamzummins, a Giantlike race of men, as the Emmins were; but vanquished also, as the others, by Cherdorlaomor; Ashtaroth, and Heth, being then the principal of their habitations. Succeeded to, in their desolate and forsaken dwellings by the children of Ammon, the other Sonne of Lot, and the brother of Moab: both houses running the same fortune, these Ammonites being conquered and deprived of the best part of their Countrey on the South-side of Iaboc, by Og King of Basan; as the Moabites, at the same time of theirs by Sehon. A monument of which subjection was the bed of Og, found in the City of Rabbah, the chief City of Ammon; there to be seen when Moses had subdued the Kings of the Amorites, as appeareth Deut. 3.

Chief Cities at such times as the Israelites first conquered the Land of Canaan, were 1. Rabbah, the Regall City of their Kings; taken by Og of Basan, as is said before; but again quitted as it seemeth on the comming of Moses, that he might be the better able to keep the field. Memorabble in succeeding times for the death of Uriah, slaine here by a design of Davids, when besieged by Joab. Who having brought it to termes of yielding sent for the King to come before it, that he might have the honour of taking a place so defensible, environed in a manner with the River Iaboc, and therefore called the City of waters, 2. Sam. 12. 27. Afterwards repaired and beautified by Ptolomy Philadelphus King of Egypt, who who having made himself master of those parts of Arabia, which lie near unto it, and liking the conveniencie of the situation, honoured it with the name of Philadelphia. 2. Dathema, supposed to be Rithma by the learned Iunius; mentioned Num. 33. 18. (the Hebrew letters D. and R. being much alike) a place of great strength amongst the Ammonites. 3. Minneth, in the South border, and 4. Abel vinearum in the East border of Ammon; both mentioned in the pursuit of that people when subdued by Iephte. 4. Mitspa, sometimes one of the Cities of the halfe Tribe of Manasses, and at that time honoured with the residence of Iephte; but afterwards recovered by the children of Ammon: in whose hands it was when utterly destroyed and burnt by Iudas Maccabæus. 1. Macc. 5. 35. 6. Maged, and 7. Bosor, two other strong places of the Ammonites, there also mentioned; but said to be in the Region of Galaad, by which name, or by that of Gileadites, all the Countrey of the Ammonites lying on this side of the Mountains was at that time called.

As for those Ammonites; they had nothing at all to do with Israel as they passed towards Canaan; neither provoking them nor provoked by them to any acts of hostility. Afterwards not well pleased, that they were no restored to the possession of those lands which had been taken from them by Og of Basan, (conferred by the decree of Moses on the tribe of Gad); they joined with the Midianites in their expedition. But worsted by the puissance and good fortune of Gedeon, they lay still a while, till stirred up by some secret motions from Almighty God, to avenge him on that sinful and idolatrous people, who by worshipping the Gods of the Heathen, had provoked him to anger. Prosperous in it for a time, till his wrath was pacified, who having made use of them to chastise his people, delivered up his rod to be burnt by Iephte, vanquished, and driven home by him with a very great slaughter. Not so much chrushed by the unsuccessefulnes of this attempt, but that in the time of Saul they break out again, and besieged Jabesh Gilead, Nabas, a cruel Tyrant, being then their King: who having brought the City into great extremity, would give them no other conditions than the loss of every mans right eye; to the end that they using to carry a great Target on their left Armes; wherewith the eye on that side was wholly shadowed, they might by this means be disabled from all future service. But Saul came time enough to save them from that shame and loss: for that cause so offensive to Nabas, that to despight him, he shewed friendship to David in the time of his trouble. A curtesie which David was so mindful of, that he sent Ambassadours to Hanan the Sonne of Nabas to make acknowledgment of it, and to confirm the amity which he had with his Father: but found so ill requital from him, that instead of thanks and kind accepance, his messengers were despightfully handled, their beards half shaven, and their garments cut off by the knee. Incensed wherewith he sent Joab against them: by whom the Countrey was laid wast, and Rabbah their chief City taken; their Kings Crown, weighing a talent of Gold, set on Davids head, and all the Prisoners executed with great severity, some of them being cast into lime-kills, and the rest torn in peeces with saws and harrows. Quiet a long while after this we hear no great newes of them till the reign of Iehosophat, against whom confederated with the Edomites and Moabites, they made open warre; but fell by one anothers swords, as was said before. Not well recovered of this blow, they were subdued and made Tributaries by Ozias King of Iudah, and so continued in the time of Iotham his Sonne; who so increased the tribute laid upon them by his Father, that it amounted to a hundred Talents of Silver, ten thousand measures of Wheat, and as many of Barley. Taught by this lesson how to value the Kings of Iudah, they continued either quiet neighbours or obedient subjects, though much improved in power and reputation by regaining the greatest part of their antient dwellings on the removal of the two Tribes and an half, on the East of Iordan, to the land of Assyria, by Tiglath Phul-Assur. For after this, (with reference to the common danger) Baulis their King, was so strict a confederate with Zedechias, that when Nabuchadnezzar had taken Zedechias with him unto Babylon, and left Gedaliah as his Deputy to command the Countrey; Ismael, one of the blood of the Kings of Iudah, was sent by Baulis to slay him. But he paid dear for his attempt; his Countrey being shortly conquered by the Babylonians, and the name of Ammonite forgotten: changed by the Grecians when they came to Lord it over them, to those of Gileaditis, and Philadelphia; according to the new name of their principal City, and the old one of the Mountains and hills adjoining.

4. The REUBENITES took name from Reuben the eldest of Jacobs sonnes by Leah, of whom in the first muster which was made of them at Mount Sinai, there were found 46000. fighting men, and 43700. at the second muster, when they passed over Iordan. Their dwelling was on the East of that famous River; having the Gadites on the North, the Desart Arabia on the East, and the Land of Moab on the South, from which parted by the River Arnon.

Places of most observation here, 1. Abel-Sittim, seated in that part of the Countrey which was called the Plains of Moab: the last incamping place of Moses; afterwards by the Iews called simply Sittim; memorable for the wood so often mention in the Scriptures, of which the ark of the Lord was made; In after times by the Greeks and Romans it was called Abila, mistook by some for that Abila or Abilene whereof Lysanias was Tetrarch: that Town and territory as Iosephus doth affirm expressely being situate amongst the spurres and branches of Libanus, farre enough from hence. 2. Bethabora, or Beth-Bara; where Iohn baptized, and Moses made his last and most divine exhortations to the Tribes of Israel, contained in Deuteronomy. 3. Machærus, the strongest in-land City and Castle in those parts of the world, standing aloft upon a Mountain every way unaccessible; first fortified by Alexander Jannæus King of the Iews, as a frontire Town against the Arabians; and afterwards demolished by Gabinius one of Pompeys Lieutenants in the warre against Aristobulus. Unfortunately remarkable for the death of Iohn Baptist, where murdered by the command of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, and Lord of this Countrey of Perea. 4. Lasa, or Leshah, of which Gen. 10. 19. by the Greeks called Callirhoe, by reason of the fair fountains rising from the Hills adjoyning, out of which issue springs both of hot and cold waters, as also bitter and sweet: all which soon after joined into one stream make a wholesome Bath, especially for convulsions, and contraction of sinewes. 5. Medeba, famous for the defeat given to the Syrians and Ammonites by the conduct of Ioab, 1 Chron. 19.7. 6. Bosor, or Bozra, a City of Refuge, and one of those that were assigned unto the Levites on that side of the water. 7. Livias, a Town new built by Herod in honour of Livia, the mother of Tiberius Cæsar: different from that which the Geographers call 8. Libias, (though by some confounded) the same with Laban, mentioned Deut. 1.1. 9. Kedemoth, another City of the Levites, giving name unto the adjoining Desart, from whence Moses sent his Ambassage to Sehon King of the Ammorites. 10. Bamath-Baal, the chief City of the worshippers of Baal, to which Balaam was brought by Balaac to curse the Israelites. 11. Hesbon, the Regal City of Sehon King of the Ammorites. 11. Adam, or the City Adam (Ios. 3. 17.) where the Tribes passed drie-foot over Iordan, opposite unto Gilgal in the Tribe of Benjamin. Within this Tribe is the Mountain Nebo, from which Moses took a view of the land of Canaan: an hill as it seemeth, of two tops, whereof that which looketh towards Iericho is called Pisgah, that which looketh toward Moth being called Hnir. Here is also an high hill named Peor, where the filthy Idol Baal was worshipped also, who hath hence the addition of Baal-Peor.

5. The GADITES, were so called from Gad the seventh sonne of Jacob, begot on Zilphah the hand-maid of Lea; of whom were found at the first muster when they came out of Egypt forty five thousand five hundred and fifty fighting men; and at the second when they entred the land of Canaan, forty five thousand bearing armes. Their situation was betwixt the Rubenites on the South, and the halfe Tribe of Manasses upon the North, the River Iordan on the West, and the Mountains of Arnon on the East; by which last parted from the dwellings of the Children of Ammon.

Cities of most observation, 1. Aroer, on the banks of the River Arnon, the principall Citie of the Gadites. 2. Dibon, more towards Iordan, of great note in the time of Iosuah, and of no small accompt in the time of Saint Hierome. 3. Beth-nimrah, of which Esay prophesied that the waters thereof should be dried up; seated upon the Arnon also. 4. Nastoroth, more in the body of the Tribe. 5. Beth-haram, mentioned by Iosuah, chap. 13. v. 27. by Iosephus called Betaramptha; new built by Herod Antipas, and called Livias, in honour of Livia the wife of Augustus Cæsar, translated into the Julian family; who also laid unto it fourteen villages to make it of the greater power and jurisdiction. 6. Beth-ezob, by Iosephus called Vetezabra, the habitation of Miriam, who in the siege of Hierusalem when destroyed by Titus, was compelled by famine to eat her own sonne. 7. Succoth, not far from the River Iordan, so called from the Tents or Booths which Jacob set up there in his passage from Mesopotamia to the land of Canaan: the People of which Town having denied reliefe to Gedeon as he followed the chace of Zeba and Zalmanah, were by him miserably tortured at his return, under a tribulum or threshing carre, wherewith he tore their flesh, and bruised their bodies. 8. Jahzoz, another of the Regall Seats of Sehon King of the Amorites; first taken by Moses, after recovered by the Moabites (as appeareth Esay 6. 8.) then possessed by the Ammonites; and finally from them regained by Judas Maccabeus, 1 Macc. 5.8. 9. Mahanaim, so called from the Army of Angels which appeared to Iacob (Ger. 32. 2.) as ready to defend him against all his Enemies, the word in the originall importing a double Army. A place of very great strength and safety, and therefore made by Abner the seat Royall of Ishbosheth, the Sonne of Saul, during the warre he had with David; as afterwards the retiring place of David during the rebellion of his Son Absolom. 10. Rogelim, the City of Barzillai the Gileadite, so faithfull to David in that warre. 11. Ramoth, or Ramoth Gilead, so called from the situation of it neer the Mountains of Gilead; a Town of speciall note in the Book of God; particularly for the pacification here made betwixt Iacob and Laban; for the death of Ahab King of Israel, who lost his life in the recovery of it from the hands of the Syrians; and finally for the Election of Iehu to the Crown of Israel, Anointed at the Siege hereof by a Son of the Prophets. 12. Pennel, so called from the enter-view which the Lord pleased to bestow there on his servant Iacob at his return out of Mesopotamia, mentioned Gen. 32. 32. the word signifying the place of the face or vision of God: defaced by Gedeon, for their churlish usage of him, when he craved relief of them against the Midianites; to whom together with the Moabites, and Ammonites, the whole territory appertaining to these two Tribes did once belong. But being from them taken by Og King of Basan, and Sehon King of the Amorites, it came by the overthrow of those Kings to the hands of Moses: by whom assigned unto the Tribes of Gad and Reuben for their habitation; Continuing theirs till the fatall period of this Kingdome of Israel began to approach: at what time these two Tribes with the half Tribe of Manasses, lying on the East of Iordan, being carried captive into Assyria by Tiglath Philaser, the Moabites and Ammonites recovered a great part of their ancient dwellings. Of which possessed till their subversion by the Babylonians. Afterwards this whole Countrey coming into the hands of the Kings of Syria, had the name of Perea, for the reason formerly delivered. And being worne peece-meal by the Maccabeans, came with the rest of the Kingdome of Iudah to the possession of Herod the Great: by whom bequeathed at his death unto Herod Antipas, one of his Sonnes, who held it together with both Galilees, under the name of Tetrarch of Galilee and Perea, as Iosephus, or of Galile onely as Saint Luke: who being dead, it was bestowed on Agrippa King of the Iews, of whom more hereafter.

ITURÆA.

ITURÆA, hath on the East and North Cale-Syria; on the West, the River Iordan; and on the South Peræa. So called from Itur one of the Sonnes of Ismael, seated in this tract; though left by his posterity to the Amorites, one of the most powerful tribes amongst the Chananites; and by them made the patrimony of the Kings of Basan. The race of which Kings ending in Og, the wealthiest and best parts hereof, were given by Moses to the half Tribe of Manasses; such parts of it as lay towards Damascus being seized on by the neighbouring Aramites, and made a Kingdome of it self, called the Kingdome of Gessur; and the more mountainous and unpleasant left to the first inhabitanes, as not worth the conquering. But both the Kingdome of Gessur, and those of the half tribe of Manasses, shifting from one Lord to another, till they came into the hands of the Grecians, the name of Itureа revived again and grew into very good esteem, the Ituræans being reputed for good Souldiers, especially at the Bow and Arrowes; of which thus the Poet in his Georgicks lib. 2.

——— Ituræas taxi torquentur in arcus.
Of the best Eugh that can be had
The Ituræan Bows are made.

The whole Countrey in the times of the Greeks and Romans, divided into Trachonitis and Itureа specially so called: this last again being subdivided into Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas. For whereas it is said in Saint Lukes Gospel, that Philip the brother of Herod, was Tetrach of Ituræa and the Region of Trachonitis; and by Iosephus that for his Tetrarchy he had the Provinces of Trachonitis, Batanea, Gaulonitis, Auranitis, and Paneas: it must needs be that the four last mentioned Provinces make up that one which by Saint Luke is comprehended in the name of Ituræa; distinct from that of Trachonitis though a part hereof. Inhabited in the time of Iosephus, as in those of Iosuah and David, both by Iews and Syrians: the Syrians dwelling in the mountainous, and more barren parts, the Iews in that which was assigned them in the time of Moses: the whole not yielding unto Galilee for extent of ground; but far inferiour to it for wealth and fruitfulnes; not well inhabited where best, and in some places which are desart and very barren hardly inhabited at all, or bearing any thing but wild-fruits. Such was it in the time of Iosephus, and not bettered since.

1. TRACHONITIS is that mountainous and hilly Countrey, which beginning at the borders of the Ammonites, where the hills are called the Mountains of Galaad, extendeth it self Northwards as far as Libanus: the hills in those parts being by the Iews called Galeed, Syrion, and Hermon; but by the Grecians, for the craggednes and roughnes of them, by the name of Trachones. The people mischievously bent and much given to witch-craft, as we find in Strabo. Momanam regionem incolunt Ituræi & Arabes, maleficis omnes. So he, or his Transtatour rather, for I have not the Originall by me. Where by Arabians he meaneth those of Trachonitis, which every where he maketh to be the same with Ituræa, though differing from it as the Cots-wold Countreys do from the rest of Glocestershire, or as a part d th from the whole; because united by that name into one estate at the time he lived in. Solet & Trachonitis Iturææ nomine appellari, saith the learned Grotius, according to the generall consent of the antient Writers. A people generally addicted to spoyl and robberie, living especially on the spoil of those Merchants which traded to and from Damascus: till with some difficulty restrained to a more orderly life by Herod, on whom Augustus Cæsar had bestowed the Countrey, to the end that by strong hand he might hold them in.

The People and the Countrey by Iosephus are thus described. "The Trachonites (saith he) have "neither Towns nor lands, nor heritage or any other possessions, but only certain retreates and caves under "the ground, where they lived like beasts: and having made abundant provision of water and victuals, "were able to hold out a long time against any assailant. For the doors of their Caves were made so nar"row that they could be entered but by one at once; and the way to them not direct, but full of turnings "and windings, not possibly to be found out but by the help of a Guide, the whole Countrey naturally "consisting of craggy Rocks. The passages of the Caves once entred they were found to be very large and "spacious: sufficient to contain great multitudes of these theevish people, who when they had not oppor"tunity to spoile their neighbours, would rob one another, and omitted no kind of wickednes; being so "accustomed to theft that they could not live otherwise. But I conceive that this is not meant generally of all the people, but only of some bodie of theeves or out-lawes, which possessed themselves of the streits of the Mountains; and from thence issued to assault and spoil the Passengers. For it is afterwards expressed, that revolting upon the news of Herods death, and committing new out-rages, they no sooner heard of his recovery but they fled the Countrey, and betook themselves unto a strong Castle in Arabia, where they increased to the number of a thousand persons. So that there is no question to be made at all but they had villages and towns, and lands and heritages, in the more civill parts hereof; though not amongst those Mountainers which Iosephus speaks of. And amongst those, I reckon, 1. Gerra, 2. Elere, 3. Nelaxa, 4. Adrama; all named by Ptolomy, and all placed by him in the Longitude of 70 degrees or upwards: more towards the East than well agreeth with the position of this Countrey, or any part of Batanea lying more towards the West than Trachonitis, though to that part of Ituræa, by him ascribed. Hither also I refer the City of 5. Tisbe, the Countrey of old Tobit, and the Prophet Elias. 6. Tob, where Jephta lived in exile, when oppressed by his Brethren, till the necessities of his Countrey called him to the publick government; and 7. Hippos, at the foot of those Mountains, reckoned amongst the Cities of Cælé-Syria.

2. BATANEA is that part of Iturea, which antiently made up the beſt and greateſt part of the Kingdome of Baſan, whence it had this name: the changing of S to T, as Aſſyria into Attyria, and the like, being uſuall among the Greeks. But that Kingdome being brought to an end by Moſes, it was given to the half tribe of Manaſſes, ſo called of Manaſſes the Sonne of Joſeph, of whom there were found at the firſt muſter neer Mount Sinai 32200 men able to bear armes: which though conſumed in the Deſarts, yet were they of ſuch a ſwift increaſe, that there were found 52700 fighting men of them when they paſſed over Jordan. Their Territory on that ſide of the River, ſtretching from Jaboc on the South, to the Realm of Geſſur on the North, and from the mountains unto Jordan Eaſt and Weſt, was exceeding fertile: repeniſhed withall ſorts of Cattel, and adorned with the goodlieſt Woods in that part of the World; the Oakes of Baſan being celebrated in the Holy Scriptures.

It had in it 60. fenced Cities when firſt conquered by thoſe of this Tribe. The principall of which 1. Pella, formerly called Butis, but being rebuilt by Seleucus the Great King of Syria, was by him called Pella, with reference to a City of that name in Macedon, the birth-place of Alexander, to whom Seleucus owed his greatneſs and whole eſtate. Deſtroyed by Alexander Jannaus King of the Jews, becauſe not willing to admit of the Law of Moſes; it was afterwards reſtored by Pompey to its former luſtre. Memorable in Church-ſtory for the Admonition or premoniſhment given by a voice from Heaven to the Chriſtians dwelling at Hieruſalem, to remove thence and dwell at Pella: that ſo they might eſcape that deſtruction which the Roman Army under Titus was to bring upon it. 2. Edrey, the Seat-Royall of the Kings of Baſan. 3. Carnaim, on the banks of Jaboc, taken by Judas Maccabaus, who ſet fire on the Temple of the Idols there; and burnt therein all ſuch as fled thither for ſanctuary. 4. Ephron, a ſtrong City upon Jordan, taken and burnt by the ſame Judas Maccabaus, for refuſing to give a paſſage to his Army. 5. Jabeſh Gilead, more neer unto the Mountains, whence it had that Adjunct; memorable in the Scriptures for the ſiege of Nabas King of the Ammonites, the raiſing of that ſiege by Saul, and the gratitude of the People towards him again, in taking down, imbalming and intombing the bodies of him and his Sonnes, which the Philiſtims had moſt deſpitefully hanged on the walls of Bethſan. 6. Aſtaroth, a City of great note in the Elder times; the ſeat of the Rephaims, a Giantlike race of men, of whom deſcended Og of Baſan; from whence the Countrey adjoining had the name of the Land of Giants. Aſtaroth the Godeſs of the Sidonians had here her worſhippers. 7. Gaulon, ſometimes poſſeſſed by Og of Baſan, and afterwards made one of the Cities of Refuge; of ſuch eſteem in the times of the Greeks and Romans, that the North part of Baſanitis or Batanea was called Gaulonitis, divided into Superior and Inferior, ſo often mentioned by Joſephus. And of this City or Countrey was that Judas of Galilee ſpoken of in the fift of the Acts, the Founder of the Gaulonites, or Anti-Herodians. 8. Gamala, in the Lower Gaulonitis, ſo called becauſe the Hill upon which it ſtood was faſhioned like the back of a Camel: invincibly ſituate, ſtrengthned both by Art and Nature: and at the laſt with ſo great difficulty, and hazard of Veſpaſians perſon, ſtormed by Titus, that the Romans in the heat of the execution, ſpared neither Women nor Children; inſomuch that all the Inhabitants periſhed, except ſome few Women which had hid themſelves. 9. Gadara after ten moneths ſiege taken and deſtroyed by Alexander Jannaus King of the Iews; repaired by Pompey, and by Gabinius made one of the five ſeats of Juſtice for the whole Countrey of Paleſtine: the other four being Hieruſalem, Iericho, Hamath, and Sephoraih. 10. Geraſa, or Gergeſa, the Chief City of the Gergeſites, the people whereof on the loſs of their Swine, intreated our Saviour to depart out of their coſts, as Saint Matthew hath it. Saint Luke, and Saint Mark aſcribe it to the People of Gadara, not that the Cities were both one, or the Evangeliſts at ods in the Relation, but becauſe they were two neighbouring Cities, and their fields lay in Common pour cauſe de vicinage, as our Lawyers phraſe it; and ſo the ſtorie might be common to both alike. 11. Hippus, not far from the River Iordan, ſo called from a Garriſon of Horſe there placed by Herod: not from the Mountain Hippus, as ſome ſuppoſe; which is too far off to have any influence upon it. 12. Iulias, built by Philip the Tetrarch of Ituræa, in the Southern border of his eſtate, in imitation of the like work of Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa; to ingratiate himſelf with Iulia, the wife of Tiberius Ceſar. 13. Abel, by Ioſephus called Abel Maacha, for diſtinctions ſake: where Sheba that Grand Rebell being beſieged by Ioab, and the City brought into ſome danger; had his head cut off and thrown over the wall, at the perſwaſion of a wiſe woman of the Town. So the rebellion ended, and the City was ſaved.

North of Baſanitis or Batanea lieth the Kingdome of GESSUR by a latter name called AURANITIS, from Hauran, a chief City of it mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel chap. 16. 18. A Kingdome ſpoken of by Moſes as the Northern bound of the Half Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Iordan. Deut. 4. 14. by Ioſuah as the Northern border of the Kingdome of Baſan, chap 12. 5. but reckoned as a part of Syria, becauſe held by the Aramites, 2 Sam. 15. 8. A Kingdome though of no great territorie, yet of ſome conſideration in the eye of the World; David eſteeming the alliance of the Kings hereof of ſome uſe unto him; and therefore marying Maacha, the daughter of Tolmai, King of Geſſur, by whom he had Abſolom and Tamar. And to this King it was that Abſolom fled on the killing of Amnon, abiding here three years as the ſtorie telleth us.

Conterminus to this, or at leaſt not very much diſtant from it, was the petit Kingdome of Iſh-tob, which ſent 12000. men to the aid of the Ammonites againſt David: and not far off, but more towards Palmyrene, or Aram-Zobah, that of Beth-Rehob, confederate in the ſame war alſo with the other Syrians; mention whereof is made in the ſecond book of Sam. chap. 10. ver. 6. Which whether they belonged to Syria, or to thoſe North-parts of Ituræa, is of no great certainty, and as little conſequence.

For

For after their greateſt and laſt exploit we hear no more news of them; ſwallowed up not long after (as it ſeems) by the Kings of Damaſcus.

To return therefore into Geſſur, as more certainly within the limits of Paleſtine, the places of moſt obſervation in it were, 1. Geſſur, then the chief City of it, and giving name unto the whole. 2. Maha-cath or Macati as ſome call it: conceived to be that Maacha mentioned 1 Chron. 19.6. But of this we have already ſpoken in Comagena. 3. Chauran or Hauran, mentioned by the Prophet Ezekiel chap. 47. whence theſe Northen parts of Paleſtine were called Auranitis. 4. Chaſar-Hevan, there mentioned by that Prophet alſo. 5. Uz, neer the borders of Damaſcus, the firſt habitation of Uz the Sonne of Aram and Grand-child of Sem, by whoſe name ſo called: ſuppoſed to be the founder of Damaſcus alſo, and that more probably than that the Countrey thereabouts ſhould be the Land of Hus, enabled by the dwelling and ſtory of Iob. 6. Sueta, mentioned by Brochardus, and by ſome conceived to be the habitation of Bildad ſurnamed the Shuchite, one of Iobs three friends mentioned in that ſtory: but both of him, and Iob himſelf and the Land of Hus, we ſhall ſpeak more at large when we come to Arabia. More certainly remarkable for a Fort of great ſtrength and uſe for the commanding of the Countrey; recovered from the Turks in the time of Baldwin the ſecond, by digging with incredible labour thorow the very rock upon which it was ſeated.

As for the fortunes of this part, the Tribes on that ſide of Iordan were led captive into Aſſyria, and the Kingdome of Damaſcus ſubverted by Tiglah-Phalaſſar; it followed the fortune of the Babylonian and Perſian Empires, together with which it came to the Macedonian Kings of the race of Seleucus. In the declining of that houſe (but the time I find not) it made up the greateſt part of the Kingdome of Chalcis; poſſeſſed by Ptolomy the Sonne of Mennæus, in the beginning of Herods greatneſs, who dying, left it to Lyſanias his eldeſt Sonne, murdered about ſeven years after by Marc. Antonie, on the ſuggeſtions of Cleopatra, who preſently ſeized on his eſtates. But Antonie and Cleopatra having left the Stage, Lyſanias, a Sonne of the murdered Prince entreth next upon it, by the permiſſion of Auguſtus. During whoſe time Zenodorus Lord of the Town and territory of Paneas, farming his demeaſnes, and paying a very grat Rent for them: not only ſuffered the Trachonites to play the Robbers, and infeſt the Merchants of Damaſcus: but received part of the booty with them. Auguſtus, on complaint hereof, giveth the whole Countrey of Trachonites, Batanea, Gaulonitis, and Auranitis, to Herod the Aſcalonite, before created King of Iewrie: that by his puiſſance and power, he might quell thoſe Robbers, and reduce the Countrie into order: Leaving unto Lyſanias nothing but the City of Abila (of which he was the natural Lord) whereof and of the adjoining territory, he was afterwards created Tetrarch, by the name of the Tetrarch of Abilene, mentioned Luke 3. Nor did Herods good fortune end in this. For preſently on the death of Zenodorus, not long after following, Auguſtus gave him alſo the diſtrict of Paneas (of which we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Galilee): which with the Countries formerly taken from Lyſanias, made up the Tetrarchie of Philip his youngeſt Sonne, affording him the yearly Revenue of 100. Talents, which make 37500 l. of Engliſh money. On Philips death, his Tetrarchy was by Cains Caligula, conferred on Agrippa the Nephew of Herod by his Sonne Ariſtobulus, whom he had alſo dignified with the title of King; after whoſe death, and the death of Agrippa Minor, who next ſucceeded, his eſtates eſcheated to the Romans, and have ſince had the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

3. GALILEE.

GALILEE is bounden on the Eaſt, with Batanea, and part of the halfe Tribe of Manaſſes on that ſide of Iordan; on the Weſt, with the Sea-coaſt of Phœnicia, on the Mediterranean; on the North, with Anti-Libanus; on the South, with Samaria. So called, as ſome ſay, from Geliloth, a Phœnician word, ſignifying as much as borders, becauſe the bordering Countrey betwixt them and the Iews.

The Countrey not ſo large as that on the other ſide of the River, but far more fertile; naturally fruitfull of it ſelf, every where producing excellent fruits without much pains to the Husbandman; and ſo well cultivated in old times that there was hardly any waſt ground to be found in it. Thick ſet with Cities, Towns, and Villages in the time of Ioſephus, and thoſe ſo populous and rich that the ſmalleſt Village in it is affirmed by that Author, to comprehend no fewer than 15000 Inhabitants. A number beyond all parallel if reported rightly; and not miſtaken in the tranſcripts. The people from their childhood very ſtout and warlike, not daunted for fear of want or deard of penury: which ſeconded by their vaſt and almoſt incredible numbers, made them experimentally known for a tough peece of employment, when ſubdued by Titus. And this, together with their zeal to the Iewiſh Religion, makes it more than probable, that there was ſomething in them of the antient Iſraelite; and that they were not meerly of an Aſſyrian either ſtock or ſpirit, but intermixt with ſuch remainders of the Tribes as had ſaved themſelves either by flying to the Mountains, or hiding themſelves in Caves and Deſarts, or otherwiſe were inconſiderable for ſtrength and numbers; in the great tranſplantation of them made by Salmanaſſar. And in this I am the more confirmed by their ſpeech or language, which was the ſame with that of the natural Iews, differing no otherwiſe from it than in tone, and dialect; as our Northern Engliſh doth from that which is ſpoke in London: as appeareth by the communication which the Damoſel had with Saint Peter in the High-Prieſts Hall; in which ſhe plainly underſtood him, but ſo that ſhe pronounced him for a Galilean. For had the Tranſplantation been ſo univerſal as ſome think it was, and that both ſick and ſound, old and young had been caried away; and none but Colonies of the Aſſyrians to fill up their places: it muſt needs be that thoſe Newcomers would have planted their own language there; as the Saxons did on the extirpation of the Britans, on this ſide of the Severn. The like may be affirmed of the other Tribes on this ſide of Iordan (eſpecially cially Simeon and Dan) which either borderiug upon Iudah, or having their lands and Cities intermingled with it, continued in great numbers in their former dwellings, under the Patronage or subjection of the Kings thereof.

Divided it was antiently into the Higher, and the Lower. The Higher so called from its situation more amongst the Mountains, had also the name of Galilea Gentium, or Galilee of the Gentiles. And that either because it lay betwixt the Gentiles and the rest of the Iews, or because a great part of it had been given by Solomon to the Kings of Tyre. But for what cause soever it was called so first, certain it is, it held this name unto the last; known by it in the time of the Apostles, as appeareth by Saint Matthews Gospel, chap. 4. ver. 15. The Lower Galilee is situate on the South of the other, memorable for the birth and Education of our blessed Saviour, whom Iulian the Apostata, called, for this cause, in scorn, the Galilean: as for the same, the Disciples Generally had the name of Galileans imposed upon them, till that of Christian, (being a name of their own choosing) did in fine prevail. Both, or the greater part of both, known in the New Testament by the name of Decapolis, or Regio Decapolitana, mentioned Mat. 4. 25. Mark 7. 31. So called from the ten principal Cities of it, that is to say, 1. Cæsarea Philippi, 2. Aser, 3. Cedes-Nepthalim, 4. Sephet, 5. Chorazim, 6. Capernaum, 7. Bethsaida, 8. Iotopata, 9. Tiberias, and 10. Scythopolis. By which accompt it stretched from the Mediterranean to the head of Jordan, East and West, and from Libanus to the hills of Gilboa, North and South; which might make up a square of forty miles. With reference to the Tribes of Israel, the whole Galilee was so disposed of, that Aser, Nepthalim, and a part of the tribe of Dan, had their habitation in the Higher; Zabulon, and Issachar in the Lower: according to which distribution we will now describe them.

1. The Tribe of NAPHTHALI, was so called from NAPHTHALI the sixt Sonne of Jacob, begotten on Bilhah the handmaid of Rachel; of whom at their first muster were found 53400 fighting men, and at the second 44540 able to bear armes. The land alotted to them lay on the West-side of the River Jordan, opposite to the Northen parts of Ituræa, where before we left; having on the East, the Tribe of Aser, and that of Zabulun on the South. Within which tract were certain Cities which they never conquered; and one which appertained to the Tribe of Dan: the chief of those which were with-holden by the Gentiles, being Chalcis, Abila, Heliopolis, Cities accompted of as belonging to Cœle-Syria, where they have been spoken of already.

That which did appertain to the Tribe of DAN, lay on the North-east part hereof, confronting the most Northen parts of Ituræa, as before was said, where the Danites held one Town of moment, besides many others of less note. And it seemed destined to this Tribe by some old presage, the Eastern fountain of Jordan (which hath its originall in this tract) being called Dan, at the time of the defeat which Abraham gave to Cherdorlaomer and his Associates, hundreds of years before this Tribe had ever a possession in it. Of which see Gen. 14. v. 14. The Town of moment first called Leshem, by some Writers, Laish: afterwards subject or allied to the Kings of Sidon, and upon strength thereof made good against those of Naphthali; but taken by some Adventurers of the Tribe of Dan. Of whom it is said Josuah 19. 47. that finding their own Countrey too little for them, they went up and fought against Leshem, which they took and called DAN. Accompted after this exploit, the utmost bound Northward of the land of Canaan, the length thereof being measured from Dan in the North, unto Beersheba in the South: remarkable for one of the Golden Calves which was placed here by Ieroboam; and for the two spring-heads of Iordan, rising neer unto it. When conquered by the Romans, it was called Paneas, from a fountain adjoining of that name: which, with the territory about it, after the death of Zenodorus, who held it of the Roman Empire, as before is said, was given by Augustus Cæsar unto Herod the Great, and by him at his decease to Philip his youngest Sonne, with the Tetrarchy of Ituræa and Trachonitis. By him repaired and beautified, it was called Cæsarea Philippi, partly to curry favour with Tiberius Cæsar, partly to preserve the memory of his own name, and partly to distinguish it from another Cæsarea situate on the shores of the Mediterranean, and called Cæsarea Palestinæ, and being so repaired by him, it was made the Metropolis of that Tetrarchy. Mentioned by that name Mat. 16.13. when Saint Peter made that confession or acknowledgement of his Lord and Master, That he was CHRIST the Sonne of the living God. By King Agrippa, who succeeded him in his estates, in honour of the Emperour Nero, it was called Neronia. But that, and the Adjunct of Philippi, were of no continuance; the Town being called Cæsarea Panea in the time of Ptolomy, and simply Paneas, as before, in the time of Saint Hierome. Of this Cæsarea was tha woman whom our Saviour cured of a bloody Flux, by touching but the hem of his garment: who in a pious gratitude of so great a mercy, erected two Statuaes in this place, representing CHRIST, and her self kneeling at his feet; remaining here entire till the time of Iulian the Apostata, by whose command it was cast down, and a Statua of his own set up in the place thereof, miraculously destroyed by a fire from heaven, the City being at that time and long time before, an Episcopall See. Of less note there were, 1. Haleb, and 2. Reccath, both situate in the confines of it. And not far off the strong Town and Castle of 3. Magdala, (the habitation as some say of Mary Magdalen) where the Pharisees desired a signe of our Saviour CHRIST, as is said Mat. 15.39. and 16.1. the same, or some place neer unto it, being by Saint Mark reporting the same part of the Story, called Dalmanutha. chap. 8.10.11. But whether this Castle did antiently belong to these Danites, or to those of Naphthali, or to the Half Tribe of Manasses beyond the River, I am not able to determine.

Of those which were in the possession of the Tribe of NAPHTHALI, the Cities of most eminent observation were, 1. Hazor, or Azor, by Junius and Tremelius called Chatzar, the

the Regal City and Metropolis of all the Canaanites: memorable for the Rendez-vous of 24. Canaanitish Kings in the war with Josuah; by whom it was taken notwithstanding, and burnt to ashes. But being afterwards re-built it became the Regal Seat of Jabin the King of the Canaanites, who so grievously for the space of 20. years afflicted Israel, till vanquished by Deborah and Barak. Destroyed in that warre, and repaired by Solomon, it continued in so good estate in our Saviours time, that it was then one of the ten Cities of Decapolis: in being still, but known by the name of Antiopia. 2. Cape nam, seated on the River Jordan, where it falleth into the Sea of Galilee, of which Country it was accompted the Metropolis, in the time of our Saviour, with whose presence and preaching often honoured, and one of the principal of the Decapolitans. Some marks of its former greatnes it retained when Saint Hierome lived, who confesseth it to be a Town of some good capacity; but so decaied in the time of Breidenbech and Brochardus, that it consisted but of six poor Fishermens houses. 3. Hamath, so called from Hamath the Sonne of Canaan, planted in these parts; a Town of such esteem in the elder times, that it was reckoned one of the Gates of the Land of Canaan, and therefore called in Scripture, introitum Hamath, or the entrance of Hamath; as Num. 34. 8. Jos. 13. 5. Judg. 3. 3. &c. Mistaken by Saint Hierome for another of the same name in Syria, by the Greeks, and Romans after them, called Epiphania. And in this I say he is mistaken; Epiphania being placed by Ptolomy two degrees more Eastward than Cæsarea Philippi, the most Eastern City of all Galilee; and two degrees more North than that, though the most Northern City of all Palestine. The ground of this mistake we have seen before. Won by the Syrians of Damascus, it was again recovered to the Crown of Israel, by Jeroboam the second the Son of Joas: and after added by the Romans (as were Scythopolis, Pella, Gadara, and some other of the Cities of this tract unto Cœle-Syria. 4 Kadesh, to difference it from others of the same name, called Kadesh-Naphthalim, high-seated on the top of an hill, as is said Jos. 20.7. the King whereof being taken and slain by Iosuah, it was made one of the Cities of Refuge, and given to the Levites. Most memorable for the birth of Barac, who discomfited Sisera, Lieutenant of the host of Jabin before mentioned, in the infancy of the Jewish State; one of the ten Cities of Decapolis in the time of the Romans; and an Episcopal See in the first ages of Christianity. 5. Riblah, watered with the Fountain of Daphnis, a little Riveret, which hereabouts falleth into Jordan: to which City, as some say, (but I think erroniously) Zedechias the unfortunate King of the Iews was brought Prisoner unto Nebuchadnezzar, who caused his Children to be slain before his face, and then put out his eyes. But this I look on as an Errour in them that say it, the scæne of this sad Tragedy being by Iosephus laid in Reblatha (or Riblah) a City of Syria, the same which in succeeding times had the name of Antioch. And certainly Iosephus who for so long was Governour of both the Galilees, cannot be conceived to be so ignorant of the State of this Province, as to transferre that bloody execution to a City of Syria, if it had been acted in this Countrey. Nor can I think that this Riblah, none of the greatest Towns in the Tribe of Naphthali, should be capable of the Court and train of that mighty Monarch; especially for so long a time, as he is said to have attended in that place the success of his forces then before Hierusalem, and the disposal of the State when the Town was taken. 6. Saphet, another of the Decapolitan Cities, strongly if not impregnably seated; one of the strongest Fortresses of the Western Christians, as it was after their expulsion, of the Turks and Saracens, who from hence wasted and subdued all the neighbouring Countrey, as far as to the very Sea. The onely place, not of this Countrey onely, but of all the East, in which the Iews (who possessed a third part of this Town) have any shew or shadow of a Common-wealth. 7. Bethsemes, mentioned Ios. 15. 38. made tributary unto those of this Tribe; though otherwise possessed by the Canaanites who held out against them. 8. Carthan, or Kiriatham situate neer the mountain which in following times was called Mons Christi, because much frequented by our Saviour; who here made choice of his Apostles, as is said Mark. 3. 13. and where he also made that Divine Sermon, recited in the 5, 6, & 7. Chapters of Saint Matthews Gospel. 9. Masaloth, a place of great strength, but forced by Bacchides Generall of the Armies of the Kings of Syria, in the time of the Maccabees. 10. Cimereth, a strong City, after called Gennesareth; whence the Lake or Sea of Tiberias, neighbouring neer unto it, is sometimes called the Lake of Gennesareth, as Luke 5. 1. &c.

2. The Tribe of A S E R was so called from Aser, the 8. Sonne of Iacob, begotten on Zilpah the hand-maid of Leah; of whom at their first muster when they came out of Egypt were found 41500 persons, able to bear Armes, all above 20. years of Age; and at the second muster when they entred the Land of Canaan, 53400 fighting men of the new increase. The portion of the land allotted for their habitation was plentifull in wine, oyl, and wheat, with great store of Balsam: extending from the coast of Sidon to Ptolemais, 30 miles in length; and from the Mediterranean Eastward to the Tribe of Naphthali some twelve miles in breadth. And though they never were of power to reduce the maritime Cities of Ptolemais, Tyre, Sarepta, and Sidon, under their command: yet had they in this narrow compasse many beautiful Cities, and Towns of note, which they were quietly possessed of till their subjugation by the Kings of Assyria.

The principal of those, and others which have since been founded, 1. Aphek, memorable for the great slaughter there made of the Syrians, when besieged by Benhadad: of whom 100000. were slain by the Israelites under the leading of Ahab, and 27000 killed by the fall of the wall. 2. Gabala, mentioned by Ptolomy amongst the mid-land Cities of Phœnicia; but belonging properly to this Tribe; one of those twenty which were offered by Solomon unto Hiram, and upon his refusal peopled by the Israelites. Fallen to decay, it was afterwards re-built and strongly fortified by Herod the Great. 3. Giscala, a Town of great strength and consequence, the birth-place of John or Iehochanan, one of the three seditious in Hierusalem when besieged by Titus, where he did more mischief than the enemy. Attempting to betray tray this City to the power of the Romans, he gave the Tyrians an opportunity to be Masters of it, by whom it was burnt unto the ground. But being re-built by the Authority of Iosephus, then Governour of Galilee for the Iews, it was afterwards yielded to Titus upon composition. 4. Cana, for distinction sake called Cana-Maor, to difference it from another of that name in the Lower Galilee, assumed for the dwelling of that woman, whose daughter Christ delivered of an evil Spirit: called by Saint Matthew, a woman of Canaan, cap. 15. a Syro-Phœnician by Saint Mark chap. 7. the Syro-Phœnicians of this Tract, being originally of the race of Canaan, as was said before. 5. Hethlan, or Chethlan, the furthest City of the North; as 6. Messal, or Masheal, to the South, of the Tribe of Aser. Of later date there are. 7. Thoron, a strong piece built by the Christians on the hills neer Tyre, to hinder the excursions of the Turks, when they held that City. Situate in a pleasant and fruitful Soil, of great importance in the wars of the Holy Land, and giving name to the noble family of the Lords of Thoron: one of which being Constable to King Baldwin the third, lieth buried in the Chappel adjoyning to it, a curious piece of workmanship, and Dedicated by the name of the blessed Virgin. 8. Belfort, so named from the strength and beauty of it; seated on the high grounds neer the River Naar; and memorable for the great repulse which Saladine the Victorious King of the Turks received before it; being forced to raise his siege with dishonour and loss, on the comming of the Christian Armies. Some other Forts here are of the same erection, as 9. Monifort, and 10. Mount-Royall (or Castrum Regium) belonging to the Dutch Knights (of whom more hereafter) and by them valiantly defended against the Infidels.

3. The Tribe of ZABULON, was so called from Zabulon the tenth sonne of Jacob by his wife Leah: of whom there mustered neer Mount Sinai, 57400 able men; and 65000. at their second muster when they came into Canaan. Their territory lay on the South of Aser and Nephthalim, and the North of Zabulon, extending from the Lake of Tiberias to the Mediterranean.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Jokneham, the King whereof was slain by Josuah, and the City given unto the Levites. 2. Zabulon, or the City of men, a Sately and magnificent City, till burnt to the ground by Cestius, a Roman President. 3. Cana-Minor, so called to difference it from the other in the Tribe of Aser, the birth-place of Nathaneel, and as some say of Simon Zelotes: memorable for the mariage at which our Saviour wrought his first miracle, of turning water into wine. Called in Saint Johns Gospel Cana of Galilee. 4. Bersabe, standing in the border betwixt both Galilees, and therefore strongly fortified by Josephus against the Romans. 5. Dothan, where Ioseph found his brethren as they fed their flocks; and where the Prophet Elisha strook blind the Syrians, who besieged him in it. 6. Bethsaida, situate on the Sea of Galilee, one of the ten Cities of Decapolis, the birth-place of Peter, Andrew, and Philip, but most renowned for the miracles and preaching of our Lord and Saviour. 7. Nazareth, now a small village, seated in a vale betwixt two hills, not far from Ptolemais or Acon; upon one of which two hills it was formerly built, where still are to be seen the ruins of many Churches, here founded by the Christians: it being in the flourishing times of Christianity an Arch-Bishops See. Of great esteem, for being, if not the birth-place, yet the habitation of the Virgin Mary, who was here saluted with those joyful tidings, by an Angel, as she sate in her chamber. Of which chamber it is said in the Popish legends, that it was after the Virgins death had in great reverence by the Christians, and remained in this Town, till the Holy Land was subdued by the Turks and Saracens, Anno 1291. Then most miraculously transported into Scalvonia; but that place being unworthy of the Virgins Divine presence, it was by the Angels carried over into the Sea-coast of Italy, Anno 1294. That place also being infested with theeves and pyrats, the Angels removed it to the little village of Loretto, where her miracles were quickly divulged: insomuch that Paul the 2. built a most stately Church over this Chamber, and Xistus the fift made the Village a City. And thus we have the beginning of our famous Lady of Leretto. Here did our blessed Saviour spend a great part of his life before his Baptism; from whence both he and his Disciples had for many years the name of Nazarites. 8. Iotopata, strongly seated on the top of a Mountain, neer the Lake of Gennesareth, fortified by Iosephus in the warre with the Romans, but after a long siege taken by Vespasian, and in it Iosephus the Historian, chief Governour of the City, and of both the Galilees. 9. Tiberias, raised out of the ground by Herod the Tetrarch, and named thus in honour of Tiberius Cæsar. Situate in a fruitful soyl, on the edge of the Lake, which afterwards took the name of the Lake or Sea of Tiberias: this City being held to be the greatest of the Lower Galilee, and the Metropolis of the Decapolitan Region. In this City it was that our Saviour CHRIST called Saint Matthew from the receipts of the Custome-house; and neer unto it that he raised the daughter of Jairus. 10. Bethulia, more within the land, seated on an high hill, and of very great strength, as appears by the story of Judith and Holofernes. 11. Iapha, a place of like strength, but forced by Titus, who in the fury of the storm slew in it above 15000. persons, and carried away with him 2000 Prisoners. 12. Sephoris or Sipphora, the habitation of Ioachim and Anna, the Parents of the blessed Virgin: fortified with strong walls by Herod the Tetrarch, who made it his Regal seat for the Lower Galilee. Before that time, it had been made by Gabinius, one of the five Iuridical Resorts for the Palestinians; after that, not without great difficulty forced by Vespasian; and is now nothing but a Castle known by the name of Zaphet, or Saffet; the ordinary Residence for the most part of the Turkish Sanziack who hath the Government of this Province, and lately, if not still, of the Emirs of Sidon, Faccardine the late Emir having been made the Sanziack of it, before his falling off from the Turks. Not farre off is Mount Tabor, famous for the transfiguration of our Saviour; for a sumptuous Chappel built on the top of the hill in memory of it, by the Empresse Helen, mother of Constantine the Great, and for the Fountain of the brook Chison, which presently divided into two streams, runneth Eastward with the one to the Sea of Tiberias, and Westward with the other to the Mediterranean.

4. The

4 The Tribe of ISSACHAR is ſo called from Iſſachar the ninth ſonne of Jacob, by his wife Leah, of whom were found at the firſt muſter 54400 fighting men, and 64300 at the ſecond muſter. Their lot, in the partition of the land amongſt the Tribes, fell betwixt Zabulon, and the half Tribe of Manaſſes on this ſide Jordan, North and South; extending from that River to the Mid-land Sea. A territory not ſo well repleniſhed with ſtrong and eminent Cities, as was that before; nor yielding ſo much matter of obſervation in the courſe of buſineſs.

Thoſe of moſt note in it, 1. Tarichæa, on the ſide of the Lake, about eight miles from Tiberias, o great ſtrength both by Art and Nature, as witneſſed the notable reſiſtance which Veſpaſion found when he beſieged it: by whom taken with great difficulty and incredible ſlaughter. 2. Ciſhion, a City of the Levites. 3. Remeth, called alſo Jarmuth, another Citie of the Levites, where the hills of Gilboa take beginning, and thence range as far as the Mediterranean Weſtward, and the City of Jezreel towards the Eaſt. 4. En-hadda, neer which Saul being diſcomfited by the Philiſtims, ſlew himſelf for grief, or elſe for fear of falling into the hands of thoſe mercileſs Enemies, againſt whom he had ſo often returned victorious. 5. Naim, on the banks of the River Chiſon, where CHRIST raiſed to life the Widowes Sonne. 6. Hapharaim, or Aphraim, on the banks of the ſame River alſo. 7. Endor, of chief note for the Witch with whom Saul conſulted; and the diſcomfiture of the Midianites by Gedeon, who periſhed at Endor, and became as the Dung of the Earth, ſaith the Royall Pſalmiſt. 8. Dabarath, one of the Cities of refuge. 9. Arbela, not far from the Cave of the two theeves which ſo greatly infeſted Galilee in the time of Herod. And 10. of a later date the Caſtle of Pilgrims (Caſtrum Peregrinorum in Latine Writers) built by Raymond Earl of Tholouſe, and after fortified by the Templers, for the ſecurity of ſuch as traveled to the Holy Land: and for long time the Magazine or Store-houſe of the Weſtern Chriſtians; now called Tortora. Situate on the ſhores of the Mediterranean neer a ſpacious bay; on the North-ſide whereof Mount Carmel, deſcribed already.

As for thoſe Galileans which ſucceeded in the place of theſe Tribes, they were for the moſt part originally ſuch as were ſent hither by Salmanaſſar to inhabit there, when the Iſraelites were led away into endleſs thraldome; but intermixed with ſome Remainders of the ten Tribes, as was ſaid before. And yet as if they had been wholly of the ſame extraction with the reſt of the Samaritan Nations, they were as much deſpiſed by the Jews (as witneſſeth that ſcomful by-word, Can there any good come out of Galilee?) as the others were: though theſe as Orthodox in Religion as the Jews themſelves. In which ſo zealouſly affected, that neither threats nor force could make them offer ſacrifice for the health of the Roman Emperours, whom they looked on as the Enemies of their Law and liberty. Brought under the command of the Kings of Iewry by the Maccabæans, and with the reſt of that Kingdome beſtowed on Herod by the Romans. Left by him at his death to Herod, ſurnamed Antipas, the ſecond of his Sonnes then living, with the title of Tetrarch, which he enjoyed till the death of our Saviour, and on his deprivation (being baniſhed to Lyons in France by the Emperour Caligula) beſtowed upon Agrippa his brothers Sonne, the firſt King of the Iews ſo named. Under him and his Sonne Agrippa the ſecond, it continued till the generall revolt of the Jewiſh Nation: Subjected by the ſword of Titus to the power of the Romans, it hath ſince followed the ſame fortune with the reſt of Paleſtine.

4. SAMARIA.

SAMARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with the River Jordan; on the Weſt, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the North, with Galilee; and on the South, with Judæa. So called from Samaria, the chief City of it, of which more hereafter.

The Countrey interchangeably compoſed of fields and mountains, excellent good for tillage, and full of trees, yielding variety of fruits; watered both with the dew of heaven, and many freſh ſprings which the Earth affordeth it, occaſioning thereby abundance of graſs, and conſequently of Milch-beaſts exceeding plenty. Heretofore very wealthy, and no leſs populous, but now famed for neither.

The people for the moſt part were originally the deſcendants of thoſe Aſſyrians whom Salmanaſſar ſent hither to poſſeſs the dwellings of the captive Iſraelites. Gentiles at firſt, till better inſtructed by the Lions whom God ſent amongſt them, and after by the Prieſts ſent hither by the Kings of Aſſyria, they entertained the five Books of Moſes, and out of them learned the manner of the God of the Land, 2 Kin. 17. Further then this they would not go, rejecting all the reſt of the ſacred Canon; and no ſtrict obſervers of this neither. And though at firſt they ſo embraced the worſhip of God, as that they ſtill adhered to the gods of the Nations, where before they dwelt, as Nergal, Aſhimah, Nibbar, Tartak, and the reſt of that rabble, mentioned 2 Kings 17. yet they were ſoon taken off from thoſe impieties, and became zealous in the worſhip of one onely God, erronious cheifly in the place which was deſtined to it. The wicked policy of Ieroboam the Sonne of Nebat, was as naturall to them, as if they could not have poſſeſſed his eſtates without it: and therefore would not ſuffer their people to go up to Hieruſalem to worſhip, as the Law required. More pious yet in this than their Predeceſſours, that they erected no Golden Calves in Dan, and Bethel, or any other parts of their Dominions: though to divert the people from the Temple of God, they would have a Temple of their own. Mount Garizim, and the Temple there (of which more anon) as ſacred unto them, as that of Solomon to the Iews: Schiſmaticall enough in this, but not idolatrous and Schiſmaticall, as the others were; yet ſo conceited of themſelves, and their own perfections, that they imagined themſelves defiled by any company but their own. If therefore they had viſited any of their neighbour nations, at their return they uſed to ſprinkle themſelves with urine: but if by negligence, or the neceſſitie of buſineſs, they had touched any not of their own Sect, they drenched themſelves, cloathes and all, in the next fountain. But in this the Iews cryed quittance with them, not ſo much as eating or drinking with them, nor having with them any kind of commerce or dealing, as appeareth Iohn 4. 9. but loading them, on the other ſide, with all the bitterneſſe of reproach and hatred. There are two manner of people (ſaith the Sonne of Sirach) which mine heart abhorreth, and the third is no people: they that ſit on the Mountains of Samaria; the Philiſtims, and the fooliſh people that dwell at Sichem. Eccluſ. 50. And this continued to the times of our bleſſed Saviour; whom when the Iews endeavoured to reproch with their heavieſt calumnies, they could find out none ſo great as to ſay he was a Samaritan, (which they thought came all to one) a man that had converſe with Devils and familiar ſpirits.

Of theſe there were ſome Sects alſo as amongſt the Iews, 1. the Doſitheans, ſo called from Doſitheus or Doſthai, ſuppoſed to be the firſt Prieſt who was ſent thither by the Kings of Aſſyria: agreeing with the Iews in Circumciſion, and the Sabbath, and the doctrine of the Reſurrection (in which laſt they differed from the common Samaritan who was a Saducee in that point) but differing from them in ſome points of as ſignal conſequence. For they rejected the writings of all the Prophets, as not θεοπνευστοι, inſpired by the Holy Ghoſt; they eat of nothing that had life, like the Pythagoreans; abſtained from mariage, like the Eſſenes; and in the point of Sabbath-keeping out went the Phariſees: it being reſolved upon amongſt them, that in what poſture ſoever a man was found on the Sabbath-day-morning, in the ſame he was to continue without alteration the whole day after. 2. The Sebvians, ſo called from Sebva or Sebviah one of the Companions of that Doſthai: who though they kept all the publick feſtivals, as the Iews and the other Samaritans did, yet they kept them not at the ſame time; transferring the Paſſeover to Auguſt, the Pentecoſt to Autumn, and the feaſt of Tabernacles to the time of the Paſſeover; not ſuffered for that cauſe to worſhip in the Temple of Garizim. 3. The Gortheni, who kept the ſame Feſtivals, and obſerved the ſame times of thoſe Solemnities, as the Law required; but kept onely one of the ſeven dayes of thoſe great Feſtivals, and laid by the reſt, as dayes of ordinary labour. In other points not differing from the other Samaritans, who though at firſt poſſeſſed of all the land belonging to the ten Tribes of Iſrael, were yet reduced at laſt to a narrower compaſs: ſhut up betwixt Galilee and Judæa, within the antient territories of the Tribe of Ephraim, and the other half Tribe of Manaſſes on this ſide of the water.

1. The half Tribe of MANASSES on this ſide of Jordan was ſituate betwixt Iſſachar on the North, and the Tribe of Ephraim on the South, extending from the Mediterranean to the banks of that River. In which the places of moſt conſequence and conſideration, 1. Beth-ſan, environed almoſt with the land of Iſſachar, ſituate neer the banks of Jordan, where it beginneth again to ſtreighten and be like it ſelf, having been almoſt loſt in the Sea of Galilee: firſt called Nyſa, and ſo called by Bacchus or Liber Pater the founder of it, in memory of his Nurſe there buried: but the children of Manaſſes not being able to expel the natives out of it, as in other places, gave it the name of Beth-ſan, or the houſe of an Enemy. Afterwards when the Scythians invaded thoſe parts of Aſia, and compelled ſome of the Jews to ſerve them againſt the reſt (whom notwithſtanding their good ſervice they put all to the ſword) they new-built this City: called therefore by the Grecians, Scythopolis, or the City of Scythians; and by them reckoned as a City of Cœle-Syria. Memorable in the old Teſtament for the hanging of the dead bodies of Saul and his ſonnes on the walls hereof, by the barbarous Philiſtims; in the time of our Saviour for being the greateſt of all the Decapolitan Region; as afterwards in the flouriſhing times of Chriſtianity, for being the See of an Arch-Biſhop: now nothing but a deſolate village, or an heap of rubbiſh, out of which many goodly Pillars, and other peeces of excellent Marble are often digged. 2. Terzah, uſed by the Kings of Iſrael for their Regal Seat; till the building of Samaria, and the removal of it thither. 3. Acrabata, the territory whereof called Acrabatena, was after made one of the ten Toparchies of Judæa. 4. Thebes, not far from Samaria, where the Baſtard Abimelech was wounded with a ſtone which a woman threw at him from the wall; and perceiving his death to be drawing on, commanded his Page to ſlay him, that it might not be ſaid he periſhed by the hands of a woman. 5. Ephra, or Hophra, in which Gideon dwelt: neer whereunto there ſtood an Altar, conſecrated to Baal, defaced by Gideon; and not farre off the fatal ſtone on which Abimelech ſlew 70 of his Brethren. An heatheniſh cruelty, and at this day practiſed by the Turks. 6. Aſophon, an ignoble village, made famous only for the great and notable defeat which Ptolomy Lathurus here gave to Alexander the King of the Jews: which victory he uſed with ſo great barbarity, that he ſlew all the Women as he paſſed along, and cauſed young children to be ſod in Caldrons. 7. Bezek, the City of the bloody Tyrant Adoni-Bezek, whoſe ſtory (touched upon before) ſee at large in Judges chap. 1. By Joſephus it is called Bala, and ſeemeth to be the place in which Saul aſſembled the chief ſtrength of Iſrael and Judah, to the number of 330000. men, for the relief of Iabeſh Gilead then diſtreſſed by the Ammonites. 8. Iezreel, the Royal City of Ahab and the Kings of his race, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains of Gilboa; So neer unto the Borders of Iſſachar, that ſome have placed it in that Tribe. Memorable in ſacred ſtory for the ſtoning of Naboth by the procurement of Iezabel; and the breaking of Iezabels neck by command of Iehu. A City which gave name to the plains adjoyning, called the valley or Plains of Iezreel, (but by the name of Campus Magnus in the book of Maccabees; lib. 1. cap. 12.) extending from Scythopolis to the Mediterranean: famous for the great and many battels which have been fought in it, as namely of Gideon againſt the Madianites, of Saul againſt the Philiſtims, of Ahab againſt the Syrians, of Jehu againſt Iehoram, and finally of the Chriſtians againſt the Saracens. 9. Megiddo, unfortunately obſervable for the death of the good King Ioſiah, ſlain hereabouts in a battel againſt Pharaoh Neco, King of Egypt; and before that of Ahaziah King of Judah, who received his death-wound at Gabar, a Town ad-adjoining, when purſued by Iehu. 11. Dora, or Dor, as the Scriptures call it, on the Mediterranean, not far from the Caſtle of Pilgrims in the tribe of Iſſachar; a very ſtrong and powerfull City, and therefore choſe by Tryphon for his City of Refuge, who having firſt treacherouſly taken, and barbarouſly murdered Ionathan the Maccabean, after he had received 200 talents for his ranſome, and no leſs villanouſly ſlain Antiochus the ſixt of Syria, his Lord and Maſter, whom he ſucceeded in his throne; was by Antiochus the ſeventh, with an Army of 120000 foot, and 8000 horſe, beſieged in this City, and moſt deſervedly put to death. 12. Cæſarea, antiently called the Tower of Straton, from Straton a King of the Zidonians, new built by Herod, and by him not only beautified with a large Theatre and Amphitheatre, both of poliſhed Marble, but with a fair and capacious haven, which with incredible charge and pains he forced out of the Sea. And having in twelve years brought it to perfection, in honour of Druſus Cæſar, Sonne-in-Law of Auguſtus, he cauſed one of the chief Towers thereof to be called Druſius, the City it ſelf to be called Cæſarea Paleſtina. In this City was Cornelius baptized by St. Peter; here did St. Paul plead in defence of Chriſtianity, before Feſtus then the Roman Preſident; and finally, here Herod Agrippa was ſmitten by an Angell, and devoured by worms, after his Rhetorical Oration, which his Paraſites called the voyce of God and not of man. The Metropolis of all Paleſtine, when one Province only; as afterwards of Paleſtina Prima, when by Conſtantine, or ſome of his Succeſſors, cantoned into three: the firſt Biſhop hereof being ſaid to be that Cornelius whom Saint Peter here initiated in the faith of CHRIST. 13. Antipatris, another City of Herods building, in the place where Kapharſalama, mentioned 1 Maccab. 7. 31. had ſometimes ſtood; who in honour of his Father Antipater gave it this new name. Neer hereunto did Iudas Maccabæus overthrew a part of Nicanors Army; and not far off the Mountain where Abdia, the Steward of Ahab, hid the hundred Prophets, whom he preſerved againſt the fury of Iezabel: finally to this City it was that S. Paul was conveyed by the command of Lyſias, to ſave him from the Iews who lay in wait to deſtroy him.

2. The Tribe of EPHRAIM was ſo called from Ephraim the ſecond and yourgeſt ſonne of Joſeph; of whom were muſtered in the Deſarts 45000 fighting men, and 32500 in the Land of Canaan: where their lot fell betwixt this half Tribe of Manaſſes on the North; and the Tribes of Dan and Benjamin, upon the South; extending from the River Jordan to the Mediterranean.

Places of moſt conſideration, 1. Soreu, on the Mediterranean, to the South of Antipatris, mentioned Acts 9. 35. and giving name unto that fruitfull valley, which reacheth from Cæſarea Paleſtina, as far as Joppa. 2. Lydda, upon the ſame ſhores, where Saint Peter (virtute Chriſti in eum ſua) cured Æneas of the Palſey. By the Gentiles it was called Diospolis, or the City of Jupiter; but by the Chriſtians in the time of the holy wars, it had the name of the St. Georges: partly from a Magnificent Temple which the Emperour Juſtinian there erected to the honour of that bleſſed Martyr; but principally from an opinion which they had amongſt them, that he ſuffered martyrdome in that place. An opinion founded on miſtakes, firſt of a Cenotaphium, or an empty Monument, erected in this City to preſerve his memory, for the grave in which he was interred; the other, in taking the word Paſſio, uſed in the Martyrologies, for the place of his ſuffering, which is meant onely of the ſtory or celebration. But howſoever they intituled it by the name of Saint Georges, as was ſaid before, and made it on that accompt alſo an Epiſcopall See. 3. Ramatha, or Aramathea, a City of the Levites, ſuppoſed to be the dwelling of Joſeph, who begged of Pilate the bodie of CHRIST. 4. Helon or Aialon, a City of the Levites alſo. 5. Themnath-Chares, given by the Iſraelites to Ioſuah, who enlarged the ſame, and made it a ſtrong and goodly City; honoured with the ſepulchre of that brave Commander, one of the nine Worthies of the World; and afterwards made one of the Prefectures of Judæa, by the name of Thamnitica. 6. Adaſa, or Adarſa, where Iudas Maccabæus with 3000 Iews overthrew the Anny of Nicanor. 7. Ieſſeel, called otherwiſe Pelethi, which gave name and birth unto the Pelethites, part of Davids guard, under the governance of Benaiah. 8. Silo, ſituate on the top of a lofty mountain; the receptacle of the Ark, till taken and carryed thence by the Philiſtims. 9. Michmas, the habitation of Jonathan one of the Maccabean Brethren, ſituate in the middle way from Samaria to Hieruſalem, now called Byra. 10. Nioth, where Saul propheſied. 11. Bethoron, a City of the Levites, beautified by Solomon, but made more famous by the great and notable overthrow which Judas Maccabæus here gave to Lyſias. 12. Pirhathon, on the Mountain Amalec, the City of Abdon the Judge of Iſrael. 13. Sichem, called alſo Sichor, the habitation in the old times of Sichem the father of that Hamor who deflcured Dinah the daughter of Jacob; the City for that cauſe deſtroyed by Simeon and Levi, repaired again, and afterward by Abimelech levelled with the ground; a third time re-edified by Ieroboam the Sonne of Nebat, and a third time ruined by the Kings of Damaſcus; yet notwithſtanding theſe blowes it was of good eſteem in the time of our Saviour, who abode in it two daies, and converted many. Memorable for Iacobs Well which was very neer it, more for its neighbourhood to Mount Garizim, where the bleſſings were to be read to the people (of which ſee Deut. 11. 27. and Ioſ. 8. 23.) and where afterwards was built a magnificent Temple for the uſe of the Samaritan Nation; at the coſt and charge of Sanballat a great Prince amongſt them. Who having marryed his Daughter to Manaſſes, brother of Iaddua the High Prieſt of the Iews; and fearing he would put her away, to avoid the ſentence of excommunication, which he was involved in for that match, promiſed him, that if he would retain her, he would build a Temple anſwerable unto that of Hieruſalem, and make him the High Prieſt thereof, which was done accordingly. But this Temple had not ſtood above 200 hundred years, when deſtroyed by Hyrcanus the Maccabean: the place remaining notwithſtanding a place of worſhip, as appeareth Ioh. 4. 20 As for the City of Sichem or Sichor, it was by the Grecians called Neapolis, afterwards made a Colony by the Emperour Veſpaſian, who cauſed it to be called Flavia Cæſarea; of which Colony was that renowned Iustin Martyr. 14. Samaria, the Metropolis of the Kingdome of Israel, founded by Omri one of the Kings thereof, on the top of the Mountain Samrom, (which overlooketh all the bottom as far as the Sea-coast) whence it had the name. A stately and magnificent City, conjectured by Brochardus, who had traced the antient ruins of it, to be bigger than Hierusalem. Destroyed by the Assyrians when they carryed away the Ten Tribes, but afterwards repaired again, and again beaten to the ground by the Sonnes of Hyrcanus above-mentioned. But Herod the Great, who was pleased with the situation of it, did again re-edifie it, in more stately manner than before, as appeareth by the great store of goodly Marble pillars, and other carved stones, in great abundance found amongst the rubbish: and having rebuilt it to his mind, inclosed it with a strong wall, and beautifyed it with a goodly Temple; in honour of Augustus Cæsar, whom the Greeks call Sebastos, he caused it to be called Sebaste. Memorable after this new erection for the Sepulchre of John Baptist, and being made the Metropolis of Palestina Secunda, (by consequence an Arch-Bishops See), now nothing but a few Cottages filled with Grecian Monkes.

Nor were the Samaritans themselves (so called from this their principall City) less subject to the vicissitudes and change of fortune, than the City was. Descended for the most part from the Assyrians, and such other Nations, as were sent thither to fill up the empty places of the Captive Tribes: but called Cutheans by the Jewes, either because most of them were of Cuth, a Region of Persia, as Josephus telleth us, which is now called Chuzestan: or else by way of scorn, for Chusites, as being of the posterity of the accursed Cham, by Chus his sonne. Having imbraced the Law of Moses, they began to think better of the Jews than the other Nations, but fitted their affections to the change of times: it being the observation of the said Iosephus, that as often as the Iews were in any prosperity, then they called them Cousins, and would be of the same Nation with them; but when their fortunes were on the declining hand, then they were strangers which came thither out of forrain Nations, and no kin at all. Nor doth he wrong them in that Character. For when Alexander the Great had granted the Iews a release of the seventh years tribute, and the Samaritans desiring the like exemption, pleaded for themselves Ἑβραῖοι μὲν εἶναι, &c. that they indeed were very Hebrews, though it pleased the Sidonians to call them Sichemites. But when Antiochus raged against them with fire and sword, the Samaritans sent letters to him, disclaming all relation to those of Judah, and challenging their descent from the Medes and Persians. Nor were they content onely to disclame all kindred with the Iews in the times of trouble, when any persecution rose against them for the Law of God; but did them also all ill offices, and joyned with their Enemies to their destruction: especially after the Iews had refused to admit of their assistance, in the re-building of the Temple; which after that they hindred with great malice, and no less perverseness. But the fortune of the Iews did at last prevail, the whole Nation being subdued by Hyrcanus the Maccabean, who destroyed their Schismaticall temple also, and levelled Samaria it self to the very ground. After this subject to the Iews, who possessed themselves of most of their Cities, and contracted them into a narrower compass than they were in formerly: but still so hated and contemned, that nothing was able to appease that inveterate malice, which they had conceived, till both Nations were extirpated in the time of Adrian, and made to seek their dwellings in other Countries. Made afterwards a Province of the Roman Empire, by the name of Palestina Secunda: successively subject with the rest to the Persians, Saracens, and Turks, who doe now possess it.

IUDÆA.

IUDÆA is bounded on the East, with the Dead Sea, and the River Iordan; on the West, with the Mediterranean; on the North, with Samaria; and on the South, with Idumæa. So called from the Iews, or People of the Tribe of Iudah, who after their return from the Captivity of Babylon, communicated the name of Iew unto all the Nation; as they did that of Iudæa to this part of the Countrey.

The Soyl of the same nature with that of Samaria, before described; but that it is more swelled with hills, and more stored with Rivers, though of no great fame. And therefore we shall say no more as to the generall character and description of it; but look on the particular parts as it stood divided betwixt the Philistims, the Ttibes of Dan, Simeon, Judah, and Benjamin.

And first, the PHILISTIMS commanded all the Sea-coasts from the South of Phœnicia, to the North of Idumæa, or from the Castle of Pilgrims, to the City of Gaza, taking both into the accompt. But Joppa, and all the Towns on the North of that being taken in by the Israelites, they held no more than six Towns of any importance, with the Countries and territories adjoyning to them: but those so populous and strong, that by their own power, and the assistance of the Edomites and the rest of their neighbours, not well affected to the Tribes, they kept them unto harder terms, and lay more heavy on them than all the Canaanites together; as will appear when we summe up the story and successes of their affairs.

In the mean time let us survey the Countrey which was holden by them, notwithstanding all that could be done against them by the Kings of Israel: and therein we shall find worth our observation, 1. Geth, or Gath, the birth-place of the huge Giant Goliah, slain by David; as also of many others of the like Gigantine proportion, slain by Davids worthies. Destroyed by David, or rather slighted and dismantled, it was re-built by Reboam the sonne of Solomon; but again razed by Ozias King of Judah, who found the Philistims there garisoned but ill neighbours to him; and finally laid wast by Hazael the King of Syria. Not much regarded after that, though it kept the name of Gath in Saint Hieromes time; till in these last Ages Fulk the King of Hierusalem erected there a new Castle from the antient ruins. From hence as I conceive, ceive, the Idol Dagon, ſo much worſhipped by theſe Philiſtims, was by the Syrians and Phœnicians called Ater-Gatis; and not from Gatis a Syrian Queen, as is ſaid by many. 2. Accaron, on the South of Gath, of great wealth and power, and one that held out notably againſt the Danites and Judæans: much ſpoke of in the holy Scriptures, but for nothing more than their Idolatrous worſhip of bel-zebub, that is to ſay the Lord of Flies: ſo called by the Iews, either in contempt of the Idolatries committed to him, or becauſe of that great multitude of flies which attended his ſacrifices, whereof ſome ſay, the Temple of Hieruſalem was wholly free. But whatſoever he was, or for what cauſe ſo named, certain it is that he was here had in eſpecial honour, and therefore called in Scripture the God of Accaron: and hither Azahiah the King of Iſrael ſent his meſſenger to enquire of this Idol concerning his health. 3. Aſhdod (by the Grecians called Azotus) memorable in holy writ for the Temple of Dagon, into which the Ark of the Lord was brought; that Idol falling down before it, as not able to ſtand upright when the Ark ſo neer. Neer to this Town was Iudas Maccabeus overcome and ſlain by Bacchides, Lieutenant to Demetrius the King of Syria; and not long after the Town it ſelf was taken by Ionathan the brother of Iudas, who put the Citizens to the ſword, and burnt all ſuch as fled into the Temple of Dagon, together with the very Idol, conſumed in the ſame fire with the Idolaters. Re-built by Gabinius, a Roman General, in the times of Chriſtianity it was made an Epiſcopal See; and continued a fair village till the daies of Saint Hierom. 4. Aſcalon, on the Sea-ſide alſo, ſaid to be built by Aſcalus a noble Lydian, employed by his King in a warre againſt the Syrians; but this very uncertain. One of the chief and ſtrongeſt Cities of the Philiſtims, of great note amongſt the Gentiles for a Temple dedicated to Dirceto the mother of Semiramis, here worſhipped in the form of a Mer-maid: and for another of Apollo, wherein Herod the father of Antipater, and Grand-father of Herod the Great (from his birth in this City called Herod the Aſcalonite) is ſaid to have ſerved as the Prieſt. It had in the firſt times of Chriſtianity an Epiſcopal See; and in the courſe of the holy warres was beautified with a new wall and many fair buildings by King Richard the firſt. 5. Gaza, more within the land, on the River Beſor; a fair and ſtrong Town, formerly called Aſſa, from whence perhaps the name of Gaza was derived by the Heathens; or elſe it was ſo called by the Perſians, in regard that Cambyſes here laid up the treaſure which he had provided for the warre of Egypt; the word Gaza in the Perſian language ſignifying treaſures. Of which Cambyſes it is ſaid by Pomponius Mela, cum armis Ægyptum peteret huc belli opes et pecuniam in vehi curavit. After which it was made the Receipt or Treaſury in which the Perſians laid the tributes of the Weſtern Provinces; whence all Riches had in time the name of Gazæ. Once Caleb took it, but not able to hold it againſt the Philiſtims, he again deſerted it. Deſtroyed by Alexander the Great, and re-built again it made notable reſiſtance againſt the Maccabees, till at laſt forced by Simon the brother of Judas, who liked the place ſo well that he intended to have made it his place of reſidence; not ſo decayed in length of time, but that it was a goodly City in the dayes of Brochardus. And is ſtill the beſt of all this coaſt, built on an hill encompaſſed with rich and pleaſant vallies; the building low and mean as in other places; but ſome of them adorned with pillars of fair Parian marble, digged out of the remaining ruins. 6. Maioma, the Port Town of Gaza, but made a City of it ſelf by Conſtantine, by whom called Conſtantia: but reſtored again by Julian unto thoſe of Gaza, and by him commanded to be called Gaza Maiuma.

Theſe were the chief places holden by the Philiſtims, a ſtrong and Giantlike race of men, ſuch as the Scripture call by the name of Anak, or the Sonnes of Anak. Originally deſcended from Caſluhim, and Copthorim, of the race of Mizraim the ſonne of Cham: as appeareth both by the common conſent of antient Writers, and plain Texts of Scripture, Jerem. 47. 4. and Amos 9. 7. Theſe being ſetled firſt in the borders of Egypt and Idumæa, where the Caſluhim gave name unto the Province of Caſiotis, and the Mountain Caſius; proceeded North-wards and ſubdued the Avim, a Canaaniſh people, planting themſelves in their habitations, as is ſaid expreſſely Deut. 2. 23. Here Abraham found them in his time, and here they were when Iſaac went down to Gezar. Governed at firſt by one King, whom they called alwayes by the name of Abimelech, as the Egyptians theirs by the name of Pharaoh; ſometimes by five, according to the number of their principal Cities; but ſtill united in the times of approaching dangers. Too ſtrong to be ſubdued by the Tribes of Iſrael, they made head againſt them, and maſtered them at ſeveral times for above 150. years, Tyrannizing over them, till broken by Sampſon, and for a time kept off by Samuel. Recovering again, they vanquiſhed the Iſraelites in the time of Saul, whom they diſcomfited, and hanged his dead body barbarouſly on the walls of Bethſan. But David a more fortunate Prince, overthew them in many ſet battels, and at length took the Town of Gath, one of the ſtrongeſt Towns they had: and by that means ſo weakned them that they durſt not ſtirre all the time of David, nor a long while after. Beginning to be troubleſome in the dayes of Ozias King of Judah, they were warred on by him, their army overthrown, Ita and Ammia, two of their ſtrong Forts, took and razed; and the Town of Gath again diſmantled. In the time of the Idolatrous Achaz, aſſociating with the Edomites, (who evermore attended the deſtruction of Judah) they brake out again, took Bethſemes, Aialon, Timnah, and ſome other Towns, carried away many Priſoners, and ſlew much people. But the good King Ezekiah made them pay dear for it, taking from them the greateſt part of their Country, betwixt Gath and Gaza. Which notwithſtanding, they recovered to ſo great eſteem that the whole Countrey had from them the name of Paleſtine. But broken by degrees by the Maccabæans, they loſt both their power and reputation, paſſing in common eſtimate as a part of Iewry; the fortunes of which it followed for the times ſucceeding.

2. The Tribe of DAN, ſo called from Dan the fift ſonne of Iacob, by Bilhah the hand-maid of Rachel, of whom were muſtered at Mount Sinai 62700. fighting men; and 66400. at the ſecond muſter in the Land of Canaan; where their lot fell betwixt Ephraim on the North, Simeon on the South, South, the Tribe of BENIAMEN on the East, and the Mediterranean on the West.

Places of most note in it, 1. Ioppa (now called Iaffa) once a famous Mart-Town, and the onely Haven to Judæa in foregoing times: the Town, where Ionah took ship to fly unto Tarshish; where Peter raised Dorcas from death to life, and where he lying in the house of one Simon a Tanner, was in a vision taught the conversion of the Gentiles. This City they report to have been built before the flood: and here they say reigned Cepheus, whose daughter Andromeda was by Perseus delivered from a Sea-monster, some of whose bones the people use to shew to strangers; even till the flourishing of the Romans. Just as our Citizens of Coventry and Warwick, shew the bones of the Dun-Cow of Dunsmear heath, and the bones of I know not what Gyant, slain by Guy Earl of Warwick. In the time of the Maccabees it was garrisoned by the Syrians, who having in the Port a Fleet of good power and strength, invited 200 of the chief Citizens to go aboard with them, and there drowned them all: for which their fleet was fired by Judas, and such as did escape the fire fell upon his sword. Twice taken by the Romans, and the second time burnt unto the ground: new walled, and fortified with Towers, by King Lewis of France, in the year 1250, the Holy Warres then drawing to their finall end. Now nothing standing of it but two little Turrets where are certain Harquebusses for defence of the Haven; none of the best, defended from the South and West winds with eminent Rocks, but exposed to the fury of the North, which makes it more unsafe than the open Seas, when inraged by Tempests. Not much frequented by the Merchant, who trade here but for Cottons onely; and hold their Factory not far off in a Town called 2. Rama, by the Moores called Ramula, situate in a sandy plain on the rising of a little hill; built of free-stone, but the streets thereof narrow, and the houses contemptible. More beautifull in the ruins of some Christian Churches, and a Monastery built by Philip the Good of Burgundie, where the house of Nicodemus stood, than in any of the remaining edifices. 3. Iamnia, neer Ioppa, where Judas burnt the rest of the Syrian Fleet, the flame whereof was seen to Hierusalem, 240 furlongs off; mentioned by Ptolomy, and in the times of Christianity an Episcopall See; now not discernable in the ruins. 4. Cedar, or Cedron, fortified against the Iews by Cendebæus one of the Lieutenants of Antiochus, who hereabouts was overthrown by the Maccabees. 5. Modin, a small Town, but honoured with the birth and sepulchre of those Maccabæans; the Sepulchre being seven Marble Pillars of so great an height, that they served as a mark for Seamen. 6. Gibbethon, in the Countrey called Makats, a City of the Levites, but afterwards possessed by the Philistims; at the seige whereof Nadab, the Sonne of Ieroboam King of Israel, was slain by Baasha, who succeeded; and Omri chosen King on the death of Zimri. 7. Cariathiarim, where the Ark of the Lord was kept for 20 years in the house of Aminadab; that is to say, from the sending it home by the Philistims, till brought to Hierusalem by David. 8. Beth-semes, to which the Ark was brought by a yoke of Kine, turned loose by the Philistims: for irreverent looking into which there were slain by the immediate hand of God, no fewer then 50070 persons of this City. 9. Tsarah, neer which is a fountain, called the Fountain of Æthiopia, because Philip there baptized the Ethiopian Eunuch. 10. Caspin, taken with great slaughter by Iudas Maccabæus. 11. Lachis, remarkable for the death of Amaziah King of Iudah. 12. Aialon, a City of the Levites also, in the valley whereof the Moon is said to have stood still at the prayers of Iosuah, as the Sun did over the City of Gibeon: the motion of the Heavens being staid, that he might have the more time for execution on the Kings of the Canaanites. To this Tribe also belonged the Town and Territory of Dan, or Lesshem, afterwards called Cæsarea Philippi, in the Tribe of NEPHTHALIM; whereof we have there spoke already.

3. The Tribe of SIMEON was so called from Simeon the second Sonne of Iacob by his first wife Leah: of whom were found at the first muster 59300 able men; and but 22200 at the second muster, when they came into Canaan. Where they enjoyed but a small Territory to themselves, their lot falling amongst the Philistims, whom they were not able to expell: and therefore they were taken into the Tribe of Iudah, where they were permitted to enjoy some Towns and Villages, intermixed with that more potent Tribe. Afterwards in the reign of King Hezekiah, some of them possessed themselves of Gedar, belonging to the Children of Ham; and others passing Southwards into Idumæa, smote the Amalekites which inhabited in the Mountains thereof, and dwelt in the places by them conquered. But for all this, wanting room for themselves and their Children, many of them undertook the Office of Scribes or Scriveners, and dispersed themselves amongst the rest of the Tribes, teaching their Children to write, and giving themselves to the employment of Publick Notaries: God herein verifying the curse which Iacob had denounced on Simeon, that he should be divided and scattered in Israel. But for their fixed habitation which fell to them by lot, it lay betwixt Dan upon the North, and Idumæa on the South; the Tribe of Iudah on the East, and the Philistims upon the West.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Gerar, the Royall seat of the two Abimelechs, Kings of the Philistims, with whom Abraham and Isaac had to do; and probably of some other of their Kings and Princes, till subdued by the Israelites. Situate in the South border of Canaan, not far from the Wilderness of Beersheba, but in a very healthfull air; called therefore Regio Salutaris in the times succeeding. 2. Siceleg, or Ziglag, belonging to the Philistims till the time of David, to whom given by Achish King of Gath, for his place of retreat, when persecuted by Saul, from whom flying he lodged here all his goods and carriages: sacked by the Amalekites, but the booty recovered from them speedily by the diligence and good fortune of David. 3. Haiin, a City of the Levites. 4. Cariath-Sepher, that is to say the City of Books, seated within the bounds of Simeon, but belonging to Iudah, which some hold to be the University or Academie of old Palestine. A Citie of the Levites also, and at first pos-ſeſted by the Sonnes of Anak, or men of a Gigantine ſtature, but taken by Othoniel, the Sonne of Kenaz, on the promiſe and encouragement which was given by Caleb, that whoſoever took it ſhould have his Daughter Achſah to wife. Afterwards it was called Debir, Iudg. 1. 11. known in the time of Saint Hierome, by the name of Daema. 5. Chorma, conceived by ſome to be that place mentioned Num. 14. 45. to which the Canaanites and Amalekites purſued thoſe of Iſrael. 6. Beerſheba, or Puteus juramenti, ſo called of the Well of waters, and the oath which was there ſworn betwixt Abraham and Abimelech, Gen. 21.31. Memorable in the Scripture for the Grove which Abraham there planted, the wandring of Hagar thereabouts, when ſhe was caſt out of Abrahams houſe with her young ſonne Iſmael, and the dwelling of Iſaac, for which cauſe called the City of Iſaac. Situate in the extreme South border of the Land of Canaan, the length whereof is often meaſured in the Scripture from this Town to Dan: and for that cauſe well fortified by the Weſtern Chriſtians, when they were poſſeſſed of this Countrey, as ſtanding on the borders of Idumæa, and the Deſarts of Arabia, in the way from Egypt.

4. The Tribe of I U D A H was ſo called from Iudah the fourth ſonne of Iacob, by his wife Leah; of whom there were numbred at the firſt generall muſter taken neer Mount Sinai, 76600 fighting men; and no fewer than 76500, at their entrance into the Land of Canaan. The greateſt Tribe, and therefore anſwerably fitted with the largeſt territory; bordering on the Dead Sea, Eaſt; upon Simeon, Weſt; and the Tribe of Benjamin on the North; and the Idumæans on the South. Comparatively large, with reference to the other Tribes: but otherwiſe unable to contain or feed thoſe infinite multitudes, without the extraordinary providence of Almighty God, which are recorded to be in it: King David muſtering 470000 fighting men of this Tribe alone; which was more than half the number found in the reſt of the Tribes. A Tribe which had a native Sovereignty over all the others, the Scepter, the Legiſlative power, and the worlds Meſſiah, being all promiſed unto this.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Arad, ſituate in the entrance of Iudæa, in the way from the Wildernes of Edom. 2. Hebron, one of the antienteſt Cities of Canaan: the ſeat of Giants, called Anakim, or the ſonnes of Anak. This word Anak ſignifieth a chain worn for ornament: and it ſeemeth that this Anak enriched with the ſpoils of his enemies, wore a chain of Gold, leaving both the cuſteme and name to his poſterity. We read the like of Manlius Torquatus in the Roman Hiſtories. This Town did Abraham buy for a buriall place for his dead, and in it his wife Sarah was firſt buried; and after her four of the Patriarchs. Adjoyning to this town is the plain of Mamre, where Abraham the Father of the faithfull, ſitting in his Tent, was viſited from Heaven by God in the ſhape of man. Here David kept his Court before the winning of Hieruſalem; to this place came the Tribes to anoint him King over Iſrael; and hither came Abſalon, under the pretence of paying his vowes, to uſurp the Kingdome of his Father. 3. Tecoa, the City of Amos the Prophet; and alſo of that woman, who by the words which Ioab put into her mouth, perſwaded the King to call Abſolon from exile. In the Wildernes of this Tecoa, there aſſembled the Inhabitants of Moab, Ammon, and Mount Seir, to overthrow Iuda. But the Lord being appeaſed by the publique Faſt, proclamed and kept by Iehoſaphat and the people, ſowed diſſentions amongſt them: So that the children of Ammon and Moab ſtood up againſt the inhabitants of Mount-Seir, utterly to ſlay and deſtroy them; and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Mount Seir, every one helped to deſtroy one another. 4. Cerioth, or Carioth, the birth-place of Iudas, hence ſurnamed Iſcariot (or the man of Carioth) who betrayed our Saviour. 5. Jether, or Jatter, nigh unto which was fought that memorable battell, wherein Aſa, King of Iudah, by the help of God, diſcomfited Zerah, King of the Arabians; whoſe Army conſiſted of a Million of fighting men. 6. Marſha, the native Soyl of the Prophet Michah, neer whereunto firſt Aſa King of Iudah diſcomfited the vaſt Army of Terah the Arabian or Ethiopian, conſiſting of above a Million of men; and afterwards Gorgias was overthrown by Iudas Maccabæus. 7. Emaus, (after called Nicopolis) memorable for the third overthrow which Iudas gave to the ſaid Gorgias; for our Redeemers ſhewing himſelf after his Reſurrection to Cleophas and another of his Diſciples; & for the hot Bathes hereabouts, which gave the name of Salutaris to this part of Paleſtine. The ſouvereign vertue of which waters Sozomen, a Chriſtian, attributes to the waſhing of Chriſt's feet in them, as he paſſed by at that time; but Ioſephus, a Iew, aſcribes (as it is moſt likely) unto naturall cauſes. 8. Haſor, or Chatſor, one of the fomtiere Towns towards Idumæa. 9. Odalla, or Hadullan, an antient and magnificent City, taken and deſtroyed by Joſuah; and long after much enlarged and beautified by Ionathan, one of the Maccabees. 10. Ceila, or Keila, where David ſometimes hid himſelf when he fled from Saul; by him delivered afterwards from the aſſaults of the Philiſtims. 11. Eleutheropolis, or the Free City, not far from Hebron, a City of later date than any of Iudah, mentioned by Ptolomy, and much remembred by Saint Hierome. 12. Azecha, not far from Emaus, to which Joſuah followed Dabir the King of Eglon and his four Aſſociates, whom he diſcomfited in the cauſe and quarrell of the Gibeonites, moleſted by them for ſubmitting to their common Enemy. Seated in the vally of Terebinth, and of very great ſtrength; preſuming upon which, it revolted from Ioram King of Judah, at the ſame time that Libna, and the Edomites had revolted from him. 13. Beth-Sur (or Seth-Sora) that is to ſay, the houſe on the Rock, ſo called from the ſituation on a rocky hill, one of the ſtrongeſt places of Sudah: Fortified firſt by Roboam the ſon of Solomon, after by Iudas Maccabæus, and finally made impregnable by his brother Simeon. 14. Adoram, bordering on the Dead-Sea, beautified alſo by Roboam. 15. Zoar, in former times called Bela, but took his name from the words of Lot, alleging that it was but a little one, Gen. 19.20. as the word Tſohor doth import; in whoſe eſcape it was preſerved: being otherwiſe one of the five Cities of the Region called Pentapolis, doomed unto deſtruction; the other four, Sodom, Gomorrah, Adama, and Seboim, being at the ſame time deſtroied by fire and brimſtone. 16. Maſſada, ſituate on an high high Mountain called Collis Achillæ, an impregnable fortreſs, built by Herod the Great, in the place where Ionathan the Maccabee had ſometime raiſed a very ſtrong Caſtle; Which he fortified with 27. Turrets, and left therein, as in a place impregnable, and inacceſſible, a Magazine of Armes and all warlike furniture for an Army of 100000 men. 17. Libna, a ſtrong City ſeated in a corner of Iudah, running between the Tribes of Dan and Beniamin. This City revolted from Ioram King of Iudah, at the ſame time the Edomites did: and continued a free State, even as long as Iudah continued a Kingdome. 18. Ziph, in the wilderneſs, wherein David hid himſelf from the fury of Saul. Hither, when Saul purſued him, David came into his Camp (the watch being all aſleep) and took thence his ſpear, and a Cruſe of oyl, and departed. Abiſhai indeed would fain have killed him: but David, though he knew that Samuel had by Gods command abdicated Saul from the Kingdome, and that himſelf was appointed in his ſtead, would not touch him, but left him to the judgement of the Lord, whoſe annointed he was. 19. Bethlem, or (to diſtinguiſh it from another of this name in Zabulon ſo called) Bethlem-Iudah, where Chriſt was born; and the Innocents ſuffered for him, before he had ſuffered for them. In this general Maſſacre of young children, a ſonne of Herods, which was at nurſe, was alſo ſlain: Which being told unto Auguſtus, he replyed, he had rather be Herods ſwine than his ſonne. His ſwine being ſafe in regard the Iews were forbidden hog-meat; but his ſonnes frequently made away upon fears and jealouſies. A Town for this cauſe had in great reſpect by the Primitive Chriſtians, beautified by Helen with a Stately Temple, which yet ſtandeth entire; by the Lady Paula (much extolled by Saint Hierome) with ſome goodly Monaſteries, in one of which the body of that Father lieth; and by the Weſtern Chriſtians with a See Epiſcopal. 20. On the frontire of this Country towards the Philiſtians, was that ſtrong Caſtle, which Herod repairing, called Herodium, ſeated on a hill, the aſcent unto which was made with 200 ſteps of Marble exceeding fair and large. In this Countrey alſo are the hils of Engaddi, in a Cave of which David cut off the lap of Sauls garment, and all along the bottomes whereof were the gardens of Balſamum, or Opobalſamum, the trees of which, were by Cleopatra (at ſuch time as ſhe governed M. Antony, and the Eaſt,) ſent for to be replanted in Heliopolis of Ægypt; and Herod, who durſt not deny them, plucked them up by the roots and ſent them to her.

5. The Tribe of BENIAMIN took name from the twelf and youngeſt ſonne of Iacob, by Rachel his beſt beloved wife, who died in that Child-birth: of which at the firſt muſter neer unto Mount Sinai, were numbred 35000 able men; and at the ſecond muſter when they entred the Promiſed Land, there were found of them fit for Armes, 45600. perſons. A Tribe in great danger to have been utterly cut off, by the folly of the men of Gibeah: all Iſrael arming againſt it, as one man. For beſides thoſe that periſhed in the former battels, there fell in one day 25000 men that drew the ſword: the fury of the Conquerours after that great victory ſparing neither man nor beaſt, nor any thing that came to hand, and burning down all their Cities alſo which they came unto. So great an havock was there made even of innocent maidens, that when the edge of this diſpleaſure was taken off, there were not wives enough found for thoſe few young men which had eſcaped; the other Tribes having bound themſelves by a ſolemn oath, not to beſtow their daughters on them: inſomuch, that they were fain to provide themſelves of wives of the daughters of Iabeſh-Gilead, a Town of the Manaſſites beyond Iordan, which they took by aſſault, and of the daughters of Shilo, whom they took by Stratagem. The whole ſtory ſee at large in the Book of the Iudges, chap. 19,20,21.

The territories of this Tribe lay betwixt thoſe of Ephraim on the North, and Iudah on the South, having the Dead-Sea to the Eaſt, and Tribe of Dan to the Weſt-ward of them. The chief of their Towns and Cities, were, 1. Micmas, the incamping place of Saul, 1 Sam. 13.2. and the abiding place of Ionathan, one of the Maccabæan brethren. 1 Macc. 9.73. 2. Miſpah, famous in being the ordinary place of aſſembly, for the whole body of the people, in matters of warre or peace: as alſo in that ſtanding in the midſt of Canaan, it was (together with Gilgal) made the ſeat of Iuſtice to which Samuel went yearly, to give judgement to the people. 3. Gebah, the North border of the Kingdome of Iudah toward Iſrael. 4. Gibeah, the Countrey of Saul, the firſt King: where the abuſing of the Levites wife by the young men of this Town, had almoſt rooted the Tribe of Benjamin out of the garden of Iſrael. 5. Ai, a great and ſtrong City, in the ſiege of which, the Iſraels were firſt diſcomfited: but when by the death of Achan, who had ſtoln the accurſed thing, the Camp was purged; Joſuah by a warlike ſtratagem ſurpriſed it. 6. Gibeon, the mother City of the Gibeonites, who preſaging the unreſiſtable victories of the Iſraelites, came to the Camp of Joſuah, and by a wile obtained peace of Joſuah and the People. Emploied by them in hewing wood and drawing water for the uſe of the Tabernacle, after the fraud was made known unto them; called Nethinims, Ezr. 43. from Nathan, which ſignifies to give, becauſe they were given to the ſervice of the Tabernacle firſt; of the Temple after. Saul about four hundred years after, ſlew ſome of them, for which fact the Lord cauſed a famine on the land: which could not be taken away till ſeven of Sauls ſonnes were by David delivered unto the Gibeonites, and by them hanged. This famine did God ſend, becauſe in killing thoſe poor Gibeonites, the Oath was broken, which Joſuah and the Princes ſwore concerning them. In defence of thoſe Gibeonites it was, that Joſuah waged war againſt the Kings of the Canaanites; and ſtaied the motion of the Sun by his fervent praiers. 7. Jericho, deſtroied by the ſound of Rams-horns, was not onely levelled by Joſuah to the ground, but a curſe inflicted on him that ſhould attempt the re-building of it. This curſe notwithſtanding, at the time when Ahab reigned in Iſrael (which was about five hundred years after the ruine of it) Hiel a Bethelite, delighted with the pleaſantneſs of the place, reedified it. But (as it was foretold by Ioſuah) as he laid the foundation of the wals, he loſt his eldeſt Sonne; and when he had finiſhed it, and was ſetting up the gates thereof, he loſt alſo the younger. It may be Hiel, when he began his work minded not the prophecy; it may be he believed it not: peradventure he thought the words of Iosuah, not so much to proceed from the spirit of prophecy, as from an angry and vexed heart; they being spoken in way of wish, or execration. And it is possible, it may be, he chose rather to build the eternity of his name on so pleasant and beautifull a City, than on the lines and issues of two young men. 8. Anathoth, the birth-place of the Prophet Ieremy, and the patrimony of Abiathar the high Priest, sent hither by the command of Solomon, as to a place of his own when deposed from his Office by that King. 9. Nob, called 1 Sam. 22. 19. the Cit of the Priests, destroyed by Saul, for the relief which Abimelech the high Priest had given to David; the Ark of the Lord then residing there. 10. Gilgal, upon the banks of Iordan, where Iosuah did first eat of the fruits of the Land, and kept his first Passeover; where he circumcised such of the People as were born during their wandring in the Wilderness; and nigh to which he set up twelve stones for a Memorial to posterity that the waters of Jordan did there divide themselves to give passage to the twelve Tribes of Israel; where Agag, King of the Amalekites, was hewen in peeces by Samuel, and where Samuel once every year administred Justice to the People. For being seated in the midst of the land of Israel betwixt North and South, and on the Eastside of the Countrey neer the banks of Iordan, it served very fitly for that purpose: as Mispah also did, which stood in the same distance in regard of the length of the land of Canaan, but situate towards the West Sea, neer the land of the Philistims: used therefore enterchangeably for the ease of the people, 11. Bethel, at first called Luz, but took this new name in remembrance of the vision which Iacob saw here at his going towards Mesopotamia, as is said Gen. 28. 19. It signifieth the house of God, and was therefore chosen by Jeroboam, for the setting up of one of his Golden Calves; though thereby, (as the Prophet saith) he made it to be Beth-aven, the house of vanity, Osee 4. 15. and 10. 5. For then it was a part of the Kingdome of the Ten Tribes, and the Southern border of that Kingdome on the coasts of Ephraim: but taken from it by Abijah the King of Judah, and after that accounted as a member of his Kingdome till the destruction of it by the Chaldæans. Called with the rest of those parts, in the time of the Maccabees by the of Apharema, which signifieth a thing taken away, because taken from the Ten Tribes, to which once it belonged, 1. Maccab. 11. 34. where it is said, to have been taken from the Countrey of Samaria, and added unto the borders of Iudæa. 12. Ramath, another place there mentioned, and said to have been added to the Realm of Iudah, having been formerly the South border of the Kingdome of Israel, and therefore strongly fortified by Baasha, in the time of Asa King of Iudah. 13. Chadid, or Hadid, one of the three Cities (the other two being 14. Lod, and 15. Ono) which were inhabited by the Benjamites after the Captivity. Destroyed in the warres with the Kings of Syria, and afterwards rebuilt by Simon the Maccabæan.

But he chief glory of this Tribe, and of all the rest, and not so only, but of all the whole world besides, was the famous City of Hierusalem: seated upon a rocky Mountain, every way to be ascended with steep and difficult ascents, (except towards the North;) environed on all other sides also with some neighbouring mountainets, as if placed in the middest of an Amphitheatre. It consisted in the time of its greatest flourish of four parts, separated by their several Walls, as if severall Cities; we may call them the Upper City, the Lower City, the New City, and the City of Herod: all of them but the Lower City seated upon their severall hills. Of these, that which we call the City of Herod, had formerly been beautified with the houses of many of the Prophets, as in our Saviours time with that of Mary the mother of John Mark, mentioned acts 15. 37. converted to a Church by the Primitive Christians: the Western part whereof was wholly taken up by the Palace of Herod (a wicked but magnificent Prince) for cost excessive, and for strength invincible; containing gardens, groves, fish-ponds, places devised for pleasure, besides those for exercise. Fortified with three Towers at the Corners of it, that on the South-East of the wall, 50 Cubits high, of excellent workmanship, called Miriamnes Tower, in memory of his beloved but insolent wife, rashly murdered by him. Opposite to which on the South-West corner, stood the Tower of Phaselus, so called by the name of his brother, 70 Cubits high, and in form resembling that so much celebrated Ægyptian Pharos; and on the North Wall on an high hill the Tower of Hippicus exceeding both the rest in height by 14 Cubits, and having on the top two Spires, in memory of the two Hippici, his very dear friends, slain in his service by the wars.

2. On the South-side stood that part which was called the Old City, possessed if not built by the Iebusites, and therein both the Mountain and Fort of Sion; but after called the City of David, because taken by him, who thereon built a strong and magnificent Castle, the Royall Court and Mansion of the Kings succeeding. In the West part hereof stood the Tower of David; a double Palace built by Herod, the one part whereof he named Agrippa, and the other Cæsar, composed of Marble, and every where enterlaid with gold; and not far off the house of Annas and Caiaphas, to which the Conspirators led our Saviour to receive his tryall.

3. That which was called the Lower City, because it had more in it of the Valley, was also called the Daughter of Sion, because built after it, in majesty and greatness did exceed the Mother. For therein upon Mount Moriah stood the Temple of Solomon (whereof more anon,) and betwixt it and Mount Zion, on another hill, the Palace which he built for his Wife the Daughter of Ægypt, and that which he founded for himself, from which by an high Bridge he had a way unto the Temple. West hereof on a lofty rock overlooking the City, stood the Royall Palace of the Princes of the Maccabeans, re-edified and dwelt in by King Agrippa (though of Herods race,) and not far off the Theater of Herods building; adorned with admirall pictures, expressing the many victories and triumphs of Augustus Cæsar. In this part also stood Mount Acra, and on that once a Citadell built by Antiochus King of Syria, but razed by Simon, one of the Maccabæan Brothers, because it overtopped the Temple; the house of Helena Queen of Adiabene, who converted from Paganism to Judaism, had here her dwelling, and here died; and finally ly Herods Amphitheatre, capacious enough to contain 80000 people, whom he entertained ſometime with ſuch ſhews and ſpectacles as were in uſe amongſt the Romans. And in this part alſo on an high and craggy rock, not far from the Temple, ſtood the Tower of Baris, whereon the ſame Herod built a ſtrong and impregnable Citadell, in honour of Marc. Antonie, whoſe Creature he firſt was, called by the name of Antonius, having a fair and large Tower at every corner, two of them 50. Cubits high, and the other 70. afterwards garriſoned by the Romans, for fear the Jews preſuming on the ſtrength of the Temple, might take occaſion to rebel.

4. As for the New City, which lay North to the City of Herod, it was once a Suburb onely unto all the reſt; inhabited by none but mechanicall perſons, and the meaneſt tradeſ-men; but after incompaſſed by Agrippa with a wall of 25 Cubits high, and fortified with ninety Turrets. The whole City fenced with a wonderfull circumvallation, on all parts thereof, having a Ditch cut out of the main Rock, as Joſephus an eye-witneſs writeth, ſixty foot deep, and no leſs than two hundred and fifty foot in bredth. Firſt built, ſay ſome, by Melchiſedech the King of Salem; by the Jebuſites themſelves, ſay others: by whomſoever built, called at firſt Jebuſalem, afterwards Jeruſalem, with the change of one letter only; inlarged in time, when made the Royall ſeat of the houſe of David, to the Magnificence and greatneſs before deſcribed, till it attained unto the compaſs of ſixty furlongs, or ſeven miles and an half. Unconquered for the firſt four hundred years after the entrance of the Children of Iſrael: and when David attempted it, the people preſumed ſo much on the ſtrength of the place, that they told him in the way of ſcorn, that the blind and the lame which they had amongſt them (as the Text is generally expounded) ſhould defend it againſt him. But as I think, the late learned Mr. Gregory of Chriſt-church in Oxon, hath found out a more likely meaning of the Text than this, who telleth us, that the Jubeſites by the blind and lame (as they knew well the Iſraelites called blind and lame) did underſtand thoſe Tutelar Idols, on whoſe protection they relied (as the Trojans did on their Palladium) for defence thereof: and then the meaning muſt be this, thoſe Gods whom you of Iſrael call blind and lame, ſhall defend our Walls. Why elſe ſhould David ſay (had they meant it literally) that his ſoul hated the lame and the blind? 2 Sam. 5. 8. or why ſhould the People of Iſrael be ſo uncharitable, as to ſay that the blind and lame ſhould not come into the Houſe (or Temple of God) were it meant no otherwiſe? But notwithſtanding theſe vain hopes, the Town was carried under the conduct of Joab, that fortunate and couragious leader, and made the Royal ſeat of the Kings of Judah.

Proceed we now unto the Temple built by Solomon, in providing the materials whereof there were in Lebanon 30000 workmen, which wrought by the ten thouſand every moneth; 70000 Labourers which carried burdens; 80000 Quarry-men that hewed ſtones in the Mountains; and of Officers and Overſeers of the work, no leſſe then 3300 men. The deſcription of this Stately Fabrick we have in the firſt of Kings, cap. 6. 7. In the year of the world 2350 it was deſtroyed by Nabuchadnezzar at the taking of Hieruſalem: rebuilt again after the return from the Captivity; but with ſuch oppoſition of the Samaritans, that the Workmen were fain to hold their Tooles in one hand, and their ſwords in the other, to repulſe, if need were, thoſe malicious enemies. But yet this Temple was not anſwerable to the magnificence of the former; ſo that the Prophet Haggi had good occaſion to ſay to the People, cap. 2. ver. 3. Who is left among you that ſaw this houſe in her firſt glory? is it not in your eyes as nothing, in compariſon of it? Nor fell it ſhort thereof onely in the outward ſtructure, but ſome inward Additaments. For it wanted, 1. The Pot of Mannah, which the Lord commanded Moſes to lay up before the Teſtimony for a Memorial, Exod. 16. 32. &c. 2. The Rod of Aaron, which onely budded of all the Rods of the Princes of Iſrael, and was commanded to be kept before the (Ark of the) Teſtimony, for a token againſt Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, Num. 17. 10. 3. The Ark of the Covenant: the making whereof we have Exod. 25. 10. and the placing of it in the Oracle, or Sanctum Sanctorum, 1 Kings 6. 19. 4. The Two Tables of the Law, writ by Gods own finger, and by Moſes laid up in the Ark of the Covenant, Exod. 40. 20. and Deut. 10. 5. And 5. The fire of Sacrifice, which came down from Heaven, mentioned Levit. 9. 24. 2 Chron. 17. 1. which by the Prieſt was to be kept continually burning, never to go out. This ſecond Temple, partly becauſe it was grown ruinous, partly becauſe it ſeemed not magnificent enough, but principally to curry favour with the Jews, Herod the Aſcalonite pulled down, and ſet up another in the place; making it not much inferiour (if at all) unto that of Solomon, but far ſuperiour to the other: immenſæ opulentiæ Templum, as Tacitus moſt truly called it. And this was it to which our Saviour did ſometimes vouchſafe his preſence. But here we are to underſtand, that by the Temple is not meant the Fabrick onely, or the houſe it ſelf, but alſo all thoſe ſeveral Courts with which encompaſſed, being four in number: That is to ſay, Atrium Sacerdotûm, or the Prieſts Court, which was next unto the Temple, wherein ſtood the brazen Altar for the dayly ſacrifice, and the Laver for the waſhing of the Prieſts and the Sacrifice alſo: into which Court might none enter but the Prieſt alone. 2. Then there was Atrium populi, or the Peoples Court, ſeparated from the other by a wall of three Cubits height; to which the people did repair to perform their Sacrifices, to ſay their prayers, and to make payment of their vowes. In the middle of this Court, did Solomon maken a brazen Scaffold for the Kings his Succeſſors, 2 Chron. 6. 13. and afterwards in imitation of his Porch built before the Temple, were many Porches built about it, for the people to repaire into in rainy weather, which gave to this whole Court the name of Solomons porch; whereof ſee John 10. 23. Acts 3. 11. Without that ſtood 3. Atrium Fœminarum, or the Womens Court, divided from the other, as is collected out of 2 Chron. 20. 5. in the time of Iehoſophat King of Judah; in which ſtood their Treaſury, or poor-mans Box, mentioned in the one and twentieth Chapter of Saint Lukes Goſpell, from whence this whole Court had ſometimes the name of Treaſury, as appeareth John 8. 20. where it is ſaid, that theſe words ſpake J E S U S in the Treaſury, that is to ſay in the Womens Court, where the

the Treasury or Alm-Box stood. Betwixt these last was an Ascent of fifteen steps, on which the Levites used to sing those 15. Psalmes which do immediately follow the hundred nineteenth Psalm, upon each step one; from whence they had the name of Psalmi Graduales, or Cantica graduum, i.e. the Psalms or Songs of degrees. And so farre all was counted holy Ground, upon which none might tread but either natural Jews, or circumcised Proselytes, whom they called Proselyti fœderis, as before was said; or such of the other Sex, (not natural Jewesses) who having received all outward initiations, had bound themselves unto the observation of the law of Moses. 4. So was it not with the fourth and last Court, called Atrium Gentium, or the Court of the Gentiles, designed for the use of those Gentiles whom they called Proselyti portæ, bound onely unto the keeping of the Precepts given the Sonnes of Noah. For in that, as unsanctified ground, (though counted part of the Temple also) did they permit a market of sheep and oxen, the sale of Doves and Pigeons, and the Tables of money-changers, for the oblations of the people: stabling the poor Gentiles amongst their Cattel, and ranking them with the worst of men. And out of this Temple, or Court of the Temple, did CHRIST our Saviour cast the buyers and sellers, and overthrew the Tables of the money-changers, asserting it to its primitive and original use, which was to be an house of prayer for all the Nations. This last Court separated from the other by a wall of three Cubits height, adorned with certain Pillars of equal distance, bearing this inscription, Μη δεῖ ἀλλόφυλον ἐντὸς τῦ Ἁγίυ παεέναι, i.e. Let no Alien (or one that is no Iew) enter into the holy place, And to this wall it is that the Apostle alludeth, saying, He hath broken down the middle wall of partition betwe.n us (i.e. betwen the Iews and Gentiles) making one of twain, Ephes. 2. 14, 15. inferring hereupon that the Gentiles are no more strangers and forreiners, but fellow Citizens with the Saints, and of the houshold of God, v.19.

But to go forwards with the Temple, having continued in the glories to which Herod brought it, not above 85 years, it was finally destroyed by Titus the sonne of Vespasian, in the 69. year after Christs nativity. At what time the Temp'e of Delphos was utterly overthrown by Earth-quakes and thunder-bolts from Heaven, neither of them ever-since repaired, though much endeavoured. The concurrence of which two miracles evidently sheweth that the time was then come in which God would put an end both to the Iewish Ceremonies, and Heathen Idolatries, that so the Kingdome of his sonne might be all in all. For this destruction of the Temple of Hierusalem I may call a miracle, in regard it was done against the command of Titus, who was not onely careful to preserve it, before his Souldiers had put fire to it, but did all that possibly might be to quench it. His reason was Ῥωμάιων γὰρ ἴσως ἡ βλαβλὼ; as Iosephus hath it, because the loss thereof would redound so highly to the prejudice of the Roman Empire, in being deprived of such a glorious and magnificent structure. But do he what he could with his utmost industry, there was no quenching of it till it was consumed. And it addes somewhat to the marvel, that this should happen on the tenth day of August, on which day, the first Temple had been burnt by Nabuchadnezzar. And certainly it is worth the noting (I hope I shall not be accounted superstitious for this observation) to see how happy or unfortunate one and the same day hath been found unto divers persons. In the wars betwixt the French and the Spaniards for the Realm of Naples, Friday was observed to be very lucky to that great Captain Gonsalvo; he having on that day given the French many notable overthrows. Wednesday is said to have been fortunate to Pope Sixtus the fift; for on that day was he born, on the same made a Monk; on that day created Generall of his Order; on the same made Cardinal, the chosen to be Pope, and finally on the same inaugurated. To Henry the seventh of England Saturday was observed to be very fortunate in all his actions, as was the 24. of February unto Charles the fift, on what day soever: for on that he came into the world, & in that he took K. Francis Prisoner at the battel of Pavie, and on the same received the Imperial Crown. But to return unto the Temple, we find that on the Sabbath or Saturday it was taken by Pompey, on the same by Herod, and on that also by Titus.

But goe we forwards to Hierusalem as now it standeth, it lay in rubbish and unbuilt (after the destruction of it by Titus) till repaired by Adrian: and then the Temple not so much as thought of, till out of an ungodly policy, in the Reign of Julian that Politick Enemy of the Church; who to diminish the infinite number of Christians by the increase of the Jews, began again to build this Temple. But no sooner were the foundations laid, but a terrible Earth-quake cast them up again, and fire from Heaven consumed the Tools of the Workmen, together with the Stones, Timber, and other materials. As for the City it self, after the desolation in it which was made by Titus, it was re-edified by the Emperour Ælius Adrianus, who named it Ælia, drave thence the Jews, and gave it to the Christians. But this new City was not built in the place of the old. For within this Mount Calvary is comprehended, which was not in the Old before: As on the other side a great part of Mount Sion, part of the City of Herod, and the Soyl where the New City stood, are left out of this: the ruines of the other still remaining visible, to shew the antient greatness and magnificence of it. To look upon it then as it stands at present, it is now onely famous for the Temple of the Sepulchre, built by Helena (whom most report to have been daughter to Coilus a British King) Mother to Constantine the great. Much a doe had the good Lady to find the place where the LORDS body had been laid: for the Jews and Heathens had raised great hillocks on the place; and built there a Temple of Venus. This Temple being plucked down, and the earth digged away, she found the three Crosses, whereon our blessed Saviour, and the two Theeves had suffered. To know which of these was the right Cross, they were all carried to a woman, who had been long visited with sickness, and now lay at the point of death. The Crosses of the two Theeves did the weak woman no good: but as soon as they laid on her the Cross on which the Lord died, she leaped up and was restored to her former health. This Temple of the Sepulchre, even at the first building, was highly reverenced and esteemed by the Christians of these parts: and even untill our daies, it is much resorted to, both by Pilgrims from all the parts of the Romiſh Church, who fondly and ſuperſtitiouſly hope to merit by their journey: and alſo by divers Gentlemen of the reformed Churches, who travell hitherward; partly for curioſity, partly for love to the antiquity of the place, and partly becauſe their generous ſpirits imitate the heaven and delight in motion. Whoſoever is admitted to the ſight of this Sepulchre, payeth nine crowns to the Turkiſh Officers: ſo that this tribute onely is worth to the Grand Signeur, eighty thouſand Duckats yearly. The other building generally very mean and poor, if not contemptible. Built of flint ſtones, Low, and but one roof high; flat on the tops for men to walk on, and fenced with battlements of a yard in hight to preſerve them from falling; the under-rooms no better than vaults, where they repoſe themſelves in the heat of the day.

Some houſes neer the Temple of Solomon, and the Palace of Herod, adorned with Arches toward the Street, where the paſſenger may walk dry in a ſhowr of rain; but not many ſuch: nor any thing but the ruins left of the antient buildings. The whole circuit of it reduced to two or three miles: and yet to thoſe which take a ſurvey thereof from ſome hills adjoining, where the ruines are not well diſcerned from the ſtanding edifices, it affordeth to the eye no unpleaſing proſpect. And as the place is, ſuch is the people, inhabited for the moſt part by Artizans of the meaneſt quality, gathered together of the ſcumme of divers Nations: the greateſt part conſiſting of Moores, and Arabians; a few poor Chriſtians, of all the Oriental Sects, which dwell there for devotion, and ſome Turks, who for the profit which they make of Chriſtians, are content to ſtay in it. Inſomuch that when Robert Duke of Normandy, being then not cured of his wounds, and was carried into this City on the backs of ſome of this raſcal people, he called to a Gentleman of his, who was going for England, and bad him ſay, that he ſaw Duke Robert carried into Heaven on the backs of devils.

Come we now to the Tribe of L E V I, though indeed not reckoned for a Tribe, becauſe not planted cloſe together as the other were, nor had whole Provinces to themſelves, but mingled and diſperſed amongſt the reſt of the people, having forty eight Cities aſſigned them for their habitation, proportionably taken out of the other Tribes. So was it ordered by the Lord, partly that they being ſet apart for his Service, might be at hand in every place to inſtruct the People; and partly to fulfill the Prophecy which he had ſpoken by Jacob, who had fore-ſignified to Levi at the time of his death, that he ſhould be divided in Jacob, and ſcattered in Iſrael. The like fortune he had propheſied of Simeon alſo; of the accompliſhment whereof, ſo far as it refered to him, and the diſperſion of his Tribe, we have ſpoken before. Now to make up the number of the twelve Tribes, Joſeph was divided into Ephraim, and Manaſſes; and the Levites were reckoned to belong unto that Tribe, within whoſe territorie, that City which they dwelt in, ſtood. Their maintenance was from the tenths or tithes, the firſt fruits, offerings, and Sacrifices of the People: and as it is in the eighteenth of Joſhua, v. the ſeventeenth, The Prieſthood of the Lord was their inheritance. There were of them four kinds. 1. Punies or Tirones, which from their childhood, till the five and twentieth year of their age, learned the duty of their offices. 2. Graduates, λυσαι, which having ſpent four years in the ſtudy of the Law, were able to anſwer and oppoſe in it. 3. Licenciates, περλυται, which did actually exerciſe the Prieſtly function. And 4. Doctors (Rabbins they uſe to call them) who were the higheſt in degree. For maintenance of whom they had (as before is ſaid) the Tithes, firſt fruits, and offerings of all the reſt of the People; beſides the 48 Cities aſſigned for their habitation: which laſt, with the ſeverall territories appertaining to them, extending every way for the ſpace of two thouſand Cubits, ſeems to have been a greater proportion of it ſelf, than any of the other Tribes (with reference to the ſmall number of the Levites) had in their poſſeſſions. Then for the Tithes, there was not onely a full tenth ſet out of all kinds of increaſe, but ſuch an impoſition laid upon all ſorts of grain, as came to more than a ſixt part of the Crop it ſelf. For firſt, out of ſix thouſand buſhels (and ſo accordingly in all after that proportion) a ſixtieth part at leaſt, (and that they termed the Therumah of the evil eye, or the niggards firſt fruits) was to be ſet forth as the firſt fruits of the threſhing floor, which was an hundred in the totall. Out of the reſidue, being five thouſand and nine hundred Buſhels, the firſt Tith paid unto the Levites came to five hundred and ninety Buſhels: and of the reſidue, being five thouſand three hundred and thirty Buſhels, five hundred thirty and one were paid for the ſecond Tithe unto the Prieſt which miniſtred in the holy Temple: yet ſo, that ſuch as would decline the trouble of carrying it in hand unto Hieruſalem, muſt pay the price thereof at the Prieſt's own eſtimate. Laying which ſeverall ſummes together, it appears demonſtrably, that of ſix thouſand Buſhels (& ſic de cæteris) there will accrew one thouſand two hundred ſeventy and one Buſhels to the Prieſts and Levites; and but four thouſand ſeven hundred ſeventy and nine to the Lord or Tenant; which is not fully a ſixt part, as was ſaid before. Then had they the firſt born of mankind and all unclean Beaſts, redeemed at a certain rate; the firſt fruits of Wine, Oyl, and wool; the firſt fruits of the dough, and of the firſtlings of clean Beaſts (their bloud being ſprinkled on the Altar, and the fat offered for a burnt offering) the fleſh remained unto the Prieſt. They had alſo the meat-offerings, the ſinne-offerings, the treſpaſs-offerings, the ſhake-offerings, the heave-offerings, and the Shew-bread: as alſo of all Euchariſticall Sacrifices the breaſt and the ſhoulder; of others the ſhoulder, the two cheeks, and the maw; and of the whole burnt-offering they received the skin; beſides the free-gifts of the people appearing thrice yearly before the Lord; and all this brought in unto them without charge or trouble. Which makes it evident that they were farre moore liberally provided for than the reſt of the Tribes; though they had no whole Countrey allotted to them, as the others had. And ſo much for ſuch parts of the Land of Paleſtine as were poſſeſſed in part or wholly, by the Sons of Jacob: proceed we now to the Inheritance of the Sons of Eſau.

IDUMÆA.

IDUMÆA.

IDUMÆA, or the Land of EDOM, is bounded on the East and South, with Arabia Petræa; on the North, with Judæa; and on the West, with the Mediterranean Sea. So called from the Edomites, or Children of Esau, whose name is Edom, Gen. 36. 1. the Father of the Edomites, v.43. by whom it was planted and possessed: or as others say from the Idumæi, a people of Arabia, who in a mutiny being forced to forsake their Countrey, came and setled here. The first the more certain of the two, and therefore I adhere to that.

The Countrey towards the Seaside very fat and fruitful; but where it bendeth towards Arabia, exceeding mountainous and barren. Heretofore it afforded Balm, not now: but still it hath some store of Palm-trees, for which much celebrated by some writers of antient times, as Arbusto Palmarum dives Idume, in the Poet Lucan. Sandy and full of vast desarts, for which, and for the want of water, it is thought unconquerable. For though they have many wells there for the use of the natives, yet to them only are they known, not obvious at all to the eyes of strangers, no not upon the strictest search that can be imagined. But all places are not so well furnished, as appeareth by the sad condition which the Kings of Judah, Israel, and Edom were fallen into, when they led their Armies thorough the desarts of this Countrey against the Moabite, finding herein no water for man or beast: insomuch that the King of Israel said, Alas that the Lord hath called these three Kings together to deliver them into the hand of Moab, 2 Kings 3. 10. Not otherwise delivered out of this perplexity, but by a miracle from Heaven: God sending them the next day an abundance of water, without wind or rain, or any other visible means, ver.17,20.

The people antiently rude and barbarous, greedy of change in government, easily stirred to insurrections, and in love with tumults. Professed enemies to the Iews, till conquered by them: and when compelled by Hyrcanus to the Iewish Religion, they were at the best but false friends, and in the siege of Hierusalem by Titus, did them more mischief than the Romans. At this time subject to the Turk, and differ not much in life and custome from the wild Arabians.

Rivers of note there can be none, where so little waters. One Lake it hath, though possibly it had been better had they been without it, now small, and every day growing less; the passage being long since bared which it had to the Sea. Antiently, though then narrow, it was two hundred furlongs, or five and twenty miles long; bordered on each side by hills of Sand, which born by the winds into the water did so thicken the same, that it was not easie to be discerned from the dry land; insomuch as whole Armies have been swallowed up in it. Thence called Barathrum by the Latines; The true name of it formerly was the lake of Sirbon. By the Italians it is now called Lago di Teveso, by the Natives Bayrema, the utmost bound of Palestine where it joineth on Ægypt.

The Chief mountains of it, are, 1. Mount Seir, the first habitation of Esau, after he left his dwelling in the Land of Canaan to make room for Iacob, as is said Gen. 36. 7, 8. Not called so unless by Anticipation (a thing not unusuall in the Scriptures) till the coming of Esau thither; the word Seir signifying hairy or brisled, such as Esau is described to be, Gen. 27.11. To this St. Hierome doth accord, deriving the name of Seir from Esau, Sumpto ab autore nomine. His reason is, Seir quippe interpretatur Hispidus & pilosus qualis Esau fuit. So he in his Comment on Esaiah, cap. 21. For the same cause, is the whole Countrey of Edom, sometimes called Mount Seir, in Scripture, by the name of this Mountain, as 2 Chron. 20. 10, 23. The 2. hill of note is that called Cassius, not far from the Lake of Sirbon, now nothing but an huge heap of sand, formerly famous for a Temple of Iupiter, and the Sepulchre of Pompey the Great. Who being basely murdered here (after his defeat neer Pharsalia by Iulius Cæsar) by the command of Ptolomy the younger, King of Ægypt, unto whom he fled (or rather by the command of Achillas who then governed his Counsails) by the piety of a private Souldier was here interred in an obscure and homely, but honest Sepulchre. The Sepulchre afterwards re-edified and made more suitable to the man, by the Emperour Adrian. The piety of the Souldier not a whit the less for the cost of the Emperour; in whose name Lucan had bestowed this Epitaph on that first Monument.

Hic situs est Magnus; placet hoc Fortuna Sepulchrum Dicere Pompeii, quo condi malluit illum,
Quam terrâ carnisse Socer.

Which may be Englished to this purpose.

Here Magnus lies, Such, Fortune, is thy doom
That this vile earth should be great Pompeys Tomb.
In which even Cæsars self would rather have
His Son-in-Law interr'd, than want a grave.

Places of most consideration in it, 1. Dinhabah, the City of Bela, the first King of Edom. 2. Avith, the City of Hadad, and 3. Pan, the City of Hadar, two others of the Kings hereof: which three are mentioned Gen. 36. 32.35.39. 4. Berzamna, placed here by Ptolomy, supposed to be the same with Bersbabee in the Tribe of Simeon, the utmost border South-wards of the Land of Canaan: of which more there. 5. Caparorsa. 6. Gammararis, and 7. Elasa, all of them mentioned by Ptolomy, which sheweth them to be of some consideration in those times; though now forgotten with the former. 8. Anthedon, on the South-side of the River Besor; opposite to Gaza in the Tribe of Simeon, which is situate on the Northern bank. A port Town, once of good repute, till defaced by Alexander King of the Iewes: re-edified afterwards by Herod the Great, and named Agrippias, in honour of Agrippa the favorite and Sonne-in-Law of Augustus Cæsar. 9. Raphia, memorable for the great defeat which Ptolomy Philopater there gave unto Antiochus ſurnamed Magnus. 10. Rhinocurura, ſo called from a mishap which befel the Inhabitants hereof, by mangling and defacing their noſes. By Plinie and Strabo called Rhinocurula; and at this day Pharamica. Memorable for an old but ill-grounded tradition, that here the world was divided by lots, betwixt the poſterity of Noah: and ſo conſiderable in the warres of the holy land, that it was ſtrongly fortified by Baldwin the firſt, to obſtruct the paſſage of ſuch forces as uſually came out on Egypt to aid the Turks. 11. Oſtracine, now Stragioni; on the Sea-ſide beneath Anthedon, and in that part of the Countrey which from Mount Caſius hath the name of Caſiotis: aſcribed by Ptolomy to Egypt; but being they are both on the North of the Lake of Sirbon, more properly belonging to Paleſtina. But moſt of theſe being now buried in their ruines, there are left none but a few Cattles and ſcattered villages: the villages inhabited for the moſt part by Arabians, the Caſtles garriſoned by Turks. The chief of which lying on the Sea in the road to Egypt, are 12. Hamones, a ſmall Caſtle not farre from Gaza, uſed chiefly for a Toll-booth, to receive cuſtome of ſuch Merchants as paſs that way. 13. Hariſſa, a ſmall Caſtle alſo, ſerving ſpecially for the ſame uſe, but ſtronger and of more importance becauſe neer the Sea; from which not above two miles diſtant; and for that cauſe garriſoned with a hundred Souldiers: environed with a few houſes, by reaſon of the commodity of the water, which is ſweet and wholeſome; elſe little better than a Deſart. 14. Catio, an other Caſtle, or rather Toll-booth, with a garriſon of about 60 Souldiers in it: ſeated in a place ſo deſert and unfruitful, that nothing vegetable groweth in it, but a few ſtarved Palm-trees; The water which they have there ſo bad and brackiſh, though eſteemed good enough for the common Souldiers, that all which the Captain drinketh is brought from 15. Tina, a Town upon the Sea-ſhore, about twelve miles diſtant, and the laſt upon this coaſt towards Egypt.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Countrey were the Horites, the Horites which dwelt in Mount Seir, as we reade in Gen. cap. 14, v. 6. that is to ſay, which dwelt in that hilly Countrey which afterwards was called Mount Seir. But whether it were ſo called from Eſaus dwelling here, as is ſaid before, or from Seir the Horite, mentioned Gen. 36. 20. as perhaps may probably be ſuppoſed, need not now come into diſpute. Broken by Cherdolaomer and his Aſſociates, they were the more eaſily ſubdued by Eſau. Who leaving the land of Canaan to his brother Iacob, *Gen.*36.7,8. becauſe thoſe parts in which they dwelt did not afford them room enough for their ſeveral Cattel, came into this Countrey, and having deſtroyed the Horites from before them, ſucceeded in their habitations, and dwelt there in their ſtead even unto this day, Deut. 2. 22. Tis true, we find Eſau in Mount Seir, before this remove: for it is ſaid, that Iacob at his firſt coming out of Meſopotamia, ſent meſſengers before him to Eſau his brother, unto the Land of Seir, the Countrey of Edom, Gen. 32. 3. And hence a queſtion hath been moved, how Eſau dwelling there before Jacobs coming, can be ſaid to remove thither to make room for him. To this Sir Walter Raegh and ſome others anſwer, that at the time when Jacob came out of Padan-Aram, Eſau dwelt in thoſe parts of the Mountains which lie on the Eaſt of Jordan, called afterwards Galaad and Mount Hermon, by which Jacob muſt needs paſſe in his way to Canaan; which Mountains then were called by the name of Seir, and from thence Syrion by the Zidonians or Phœnicians in the ages following: from whence driven by the Amorites at ſuch time as they vanquiſhed thoſe of Moab and Ammon, they were forced to ſeat themſelves on the South of Canaan, where Moſes found them. But with this I am by no means ſatisfied. For beſides that it maketh Eſau to carry a Mount Sier with him, whereſoever he went; it doth expreſſely differ from the plain words of Scripture, both in the occaſion and the time of his ſetling there: the victories which the Amorites had over the Ammonites and Moabites, being then freſh and newly gotten when Moſes with the children of Iſrael came into theſe parts, which was at the leaſt 200. years after Eſau did withdraw himſelf to the land of Edom. And therefore I ſhould rather think, that Eſau finding himſelf diſtaſted by his Father and Mother, in regard of his Canaanitiſh mariages, and the hatred which he bare to Jacob, departed from them, and ſojourned in the South parts amongſt the Horites of Mount Seir; that thither Jacob ſent his meſſengers to make peace between them; that the reconciliation being made, Eſau returned unto the place where before he ſojourned; and having brought thence his children, cattel, and the reſt of his ſubſtance, fixed himſelf again neer the houſe of his Fathers; and finally, that on Iſaacs death, finding his family increaſed, his heards of flocks augmented, and the reſt of his ſubſtance alſo doubled by the death of his father; he thought it fit alſo to enlarge his dwelling, and ſo removed back once more to Edom. A thing not needful to be done had he dwelt in Galaad, Hermon, or any other part of that Mountainous Tract: conſidering the great diſtance betwixt thoſe Mountaines and the City of Hebron in which Iſaac dwelt, nigh to which Iacob alſo had ſet up his dwelling.

But on what ground ſoever Eſau left the poſſeſſion of the land of Canaan to his brother Iacob, certain it is, he did it not without ſome ſtrong impulſions from the ſpirit of God, by whom the poſſeſſion of that Land was deſigned for Iacob; to whom the bleſſing & the birth-right had been both preferred. And though Eſau overruled by Almighty God, ſeemed to have forgotten all diſpleaſure againſt his brother: yet the quarrel began by them in the womb of Rebecca, brake out more violently in the times of their poſterity. Inſomuch that Moſes could by no means obtain a paſſage thorow Edom into the Promiſed Land, though he ſought it by a fair addreſs, and preſſed it by all thoſe motives and inducements which a wiſe and underſtanding man could have ſet before them. For though the King of Edom then being, ſeemed to pretend nothing but the ſafety of himſelf and his people, both which he might have hazarded (in all humane Reaſon) by opening the cloſures of his Mountains, and letting in a Nation mightier than his own: yet it is poſſible there might be as much of ſtomach as worldly policy, and that aſwell the buying of the birth-right for ſo ſleight a trifle, as the getting of the bleſſing by ſuch fraudulent means, might not be forgotten. For he not onely denyed them paſſage and and ſent back word expreſſely they ſhould not go thorow, but came againſt them with much people and a ſtrong band, as is ſaid Numbers 20. 20. But the Edomites could not for all this prevent their deſtiny, or make the word of God to be ineffectuall, by which it had been ſignified, when they were yet in their mothers womb, that the elder ſhould ſerve the younger. Not verified in Eſaus perſon, for Iacob called him his Lord Eſau, profeſſed himſelf to be his Servant, and willingly ſubmitted to his ſuperiority; but in the iſſues of them both: then ſpecially when David had ſubdued the Edomites, and made them Homagers and Vaſſals to the Crown of Iudah, 2 Sam. 8. 14. Nor is leſs intimated in thoſe words of the 60 Pſalm, where it is ſaid, Over Edom will I caſt my ſhooe; it being a cuſtome of old times to fling their ſhooes upon a Countrey conquered or deſigned for conqueſt. Pro actio calceamenti ſuper Regionem aliquam denotat ſubiicere, as my Author hath it. And in alluſion unto this, there is a ſtory in the Chronicles of the Kings of Man, how Magnus King of the Iſles ſent his Ambaſſadours to Murchard a King in Ireland, commanding him on the next Chriſtmas day to carry openly the ſhooes of King Magnus upon his ſhoulders, in teſtimony, ſaith the ſtory, that he was his Vaſſal. The caſting of the Shooe on a conquered Countrey, or the treading of it under feet, another ceremony of this nature mentioned Deut. 33.29. do come both to one, and ſignifie that vaſſallage or bondage, which ſuch a captivated Country was reduced unto.

But on the other ſide, there was another part of the heavenly Oracle, which made for Edom: Iſaac had ſignified to Eſau, that though the bleſſing given to Jacob could not be revoked, and that he muſt content himſelf with being a ſervant to his brother for a certain ſeaſon: yet there ſhould one day come a time in which he ſhould not onely break that yoke from off his neck, but obtain the dominion over him, Gen. 27. 40. The firſt part verified, when the Edomites revolted from the Kings of Judah in the time of Joram, or Jehoram the Sonne of Jehoſophat: and inſtead of a Vice-Roy ſent unto them from the Court of Hieruſalem, ſet up a King of their own Nation; never returning after that to the houſe of David. For though Joram made war preſently upon them, and got the victory, yet he did not proſecute it unto any effect, nor beat them out of any of their ſtrong holds, nor reduce any of their Cities unto his obedience: as if he had got honour enough in the eye of the world by being maſter of the Field; or ſhewing his abilities in command of a greater Army than the Edomites could bring againſt him. The like errour was committed alſo by Amaziah, who by a vaſt Army of 300000 fighting men, did no greater wonders, than the killing of 10000, and the taking of as many Edomites; but neither left garriſons in any of their defenſible places, nor reduced any part of their Countrey under his obedience. And for the later part thereof, it was as punctually fulfilled in the time of Antipater an Idumæan, Herod the Aſcalonite his Sonne, and their Succeſſors, who in the decrepit age of the houſe of Iacob, became Kings of the Iews, and lorded over them with inſolence and contempt enough.

Mean time to look upon the intermediate paſſages of their State and ſtory, it ſeemeth that at the firſt they were governed by Dukes, each having the command of thoſe ſeverall families of which they were the heads or Princes. But as ambition and power did prevail among them, the moſt potent having vanquiſhed or awed the reſt, took to himſelf the name of King: which by the names of their Fathers, and their ſeveral Cities in which they reigned, ſeem to have been choſen by election, or otherwiſe to come in by ſtrong hand, as the ſword could carry it. The names of which are thus ſet down in the book of Geneſis.

The Kings of Edom.

1. Bela, the Sonne of Beor.
2. Iobab, the Sonne of Zerah.
3. Haſham, of the Land of Temani.
4. Hadad, the Sonne of Bedad, who warred againſt the Midianites, and vanquiſhed them in the fields of Moab, Gen. 36. 35.
5. Samlah, of Maſrekah.
6. Saul, of Rehoboth by the River Euphrates.
7. Baal-Hanan, the Sonne of Achbor.
8. Hadar, the Sonne perhaps of Baal-Hanan, for I find no mention of his Father. After whoſe death, the heads of the ſeverall Families reſumed the Government again, ruling over their own Tribes, without any one Soveraign or Supreme. And all theſe Kings they had before there reigned any King in Iſrael, Gen. 36. 31. that is to ſay, before any form of Supreme Government was eſtabliſhed amongſt them in the perſon of Moſes, called by the name of a King in the book of Deut. chap. 35. v. 5. But this diſtracted Government did not long continue, the Edomites being under a King again, at ſuch time as the Children of Iſrael came out of Egypt: for it was unto the King of Edom that Moſes ſent Meſſengers from Kadeſh to deſire a paſſage thorow his Countrey. Which being denied, and the Edomites in Armes to defend their paſſes, Moſes forbore to force his way, though the neereſt for him, partly becauſe he had no mind to ſpend thoſe forces in fighting with hills and deſarts, which were deſigned for the conqueſt of another Countrey; but principally becauſe God commanded him not to medle with them, or to take ſo much as a foot of their Countrey from them, Deut. 2. 5. But David, upon whom lay no ſuch obligation, having vanquiſhed the Syrians and other Nations round about him, followed his fortunes unto Edom, whom he overcame, and put Garriſons into all their Cities, and the Edomites became his ſervants. Governed from thenceforth by a Deputy or Vice-Roy (as is ſaid before) till the time of Joram the Son of Jehoſophat King of Judah; in whoſe Reign they revolted as before was ſaid. Never regained to that Crown, and but twice endeavoured, that ſo the word of God might be all in all. Onely the Simeonites in the reign of Hezekiah, wanting paſture for their cattel, and room for themſelves, ſeized on the parts which lay neereſt to them, deſtroyed the inhabitants thereof, and dwelt in their habitations, becauſe there was paſture for their flocks, 1. Chron. 4. 39. Provoked wherewith, and with the natural Antipathy which was between them. No people were more mischievously bent against Judah, than these Edomites were: no men so forward of themselves to assist Nabuchadonosor against Hierusalem; none that so vehemently cryed Down with it down unto the ground; none half so ready to set fire to the holy Temple. But they got little by this service to the Babylonians, their own thraldome following close upon that of Judah: with whom made fellow-subjects to the Chaldæans, as afterwards to the Persians, and Kings of Syria of the race of Seleucus. In the declining of that house, subdued by Hyrcanus the Son of Simon, the fourth of the Maccabæan Princes; by whom they were compelled to be Circumcised, and to receive the Law of Moses: not onely reckoned after that, as a Province of the Jewish Kingdome, but as naturall Jews. Which notwithstanding, and that the setting of that Crown on the head of Herod and his house, being originally Idumæans, might in all reason have extinguished their inveterate malice: yet was their hatred of that Nation as great as ever. Forgetting therefore how they had been rewarded by the Babylonians, they would needs aid the Romans against them also: putting themselves into Hierusalem, when besieged by Titus, onely of purpose to betray it; joyning with the seditious there, doing more mischief in the City than the enemy had done without; and finally, setting fire to the second Temple, as they had done unto the first. Subjected afterwards by the Romans, they followed the same fortune with the rest of Palestine.

Having thus gon through with the story of those neighbouring Nations which encompassed Canaan: it will be seasonable to look on the affairs of the Canaanites first, and after of the house of Jacob who possessed their Countrey. First for the Canaanites, they descended from Canaan the son of Cham, who with his eleven sons were here setled immediatly after the confusion at Babel. Of those twelve, (taking in the Father) five planted in Phœnicia, and the coasts of Syria, that is to say, Sidon, Harki, Arvadi, Semari, and Hamathi: the other seven in those parts which we now call Palestine, though not all of that, the Edomites, Moabites, Midianites, Ammonites, and Ituræans, being Occupants or Tenants with them. And of those seven came those seven Nations, which by Gods appointment were totally to be rooted out, viz. the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hittites, the Iebusites, the Hivites, the Gergeshites, and the Perizites. But from which of the sons of Canaan these last descended, is not yet agreed on, unless perhaps they were descended of the Sinites (not otherwise reckoned in this muster) and got the name of Perizites, on some new occasion. Governed at first by the Chiefest of their severall Families, with the names of Kings; the number of which increased as their Families were subdivided into smaller branches: insomuch as Iosuah found 31 Kings of the Canaanites onely, besides what might descend from those who were setled in Phœnicia and the borders of Syria. The most potent of those Nations were the Amorites, the Iebusites, and the Chanaanites properly so called. Of which the Amorites had not onely inlarged their borders beyond Iordan, but in the reigns of Og and Sihon, ruling at the same time in their severall parts, had thrust the Ituræans, Ammonites and Moabites, out of most of their Countries: and so restored the same again to the race of the Emmims and Zanzummims (of which they were) who had been dispossessed thereof by the Sons of Lot. These vanquished in the time of Moses, and their habitations assigned over to the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the one half-tribe of Manasses. The Canaanites properly so called, as they were the first which fought with the house of Iacob; so they were the last of all these people that contended with them. They first fought with them under the conduct of Arad their King, who thinking it more safe and prudent to encounter the Enemy in an other mans Countrey, than to expect them in his own; gave battell unto Moses in the Desarts of Moab: and having cut off some of the out-parts of his Army, and taken a few Prisoners, he went home again. But Iabin, under whom they made their second onset, went to work more resolutely; and taking a time when the iniquities of that People cried loud for vengeance, so prevailed against them, that he tyrannized over them for the space of 20 years. After which time, his Army being discomfited by Barak, in the time of Debora; Sisera, his great Captain, slain by Iael the wife of Heber the Kenite; and most of his Cities taken and possessed by the Israelites; he perished himself in the close of that war; for it is said that they prevailed against Iabin the King of Canaan, till they had destroyed him, Judg. 4. 24. As for the Iebusites, they were grown so formidable (at the time of the comming of the Hebrews) to the rest of their neighbours, that their King Adonibezek bragged that he had cut off the thumbs and great toes of 70 Kings, and made them eat the crums which fell under his table. But being vanquished by Iudah, he was served in the same kind himself by Iudah and Simeon, and carried to Hierusalem, where he died: the whole Countrey of the Iebusites, and the City of Hierusalem it self, the fortress of Mount Zion excepted onely, being made a prey unto the Victor. And though the Iebusites held that fortress till the time of David, yet being they were onely on the defensive side, and made no open war against those of Israel, I reckon the Canaanites as the last which did contend with them for the chief command.

The Canaanites thus conquered, and for the most part worn out of the Countrey, the Israelites succeeded in their possessions; according to the promise of God made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac, and confirmed to Iacob. Governed, after the death of Moses and Josuah, by the Congregation of the Elders, as appears by many passages in the book of Iudg. the Iudges (as the Scripture calleth them) not being the ordinary Magistrates, but raised up occasionally by God for some speciall purpose, according to the exigence of their affairs. Carrying in this a likeness unto the Dictators in the State of Rome. So that the Government at the first was an Aristocratie; though to say truth, it rather was a Theocratie, as the Fathers call it, that is to say, a government wherein God presided more immediatly than in other Nations. And thereupon when the People cried out to Samuel to have a King, God said unto him, Hearken unto the voice of the people, for they have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me that I should not reign over them, 1 Samuel 8. 7. God was their King, and he had mightily reigned over them since they came out of Egypt; but they desired to have a King like to other Nations, to go in and out before them, and to fight their battels; a King whom they might see with their bodily eyes, and converse with him in such manner as the people did, which dwelt round about them. And so came in the Monarchy or Kingly Government, begun gun in Saul, but confirmed in David; the first a Benjamite, the second of the Tribe of Judah; of which Jacob had fore-told at the time of his death, that the Kingdome of his People should be vested in it. But there were onely three in all, reckoning Saul for one, who had Dominion over the whole house of Israel; the Kingdome after Solomons death being rent in twain; ten of the twelve Tribes revolting unto Jeroboam the Sonne of Nebat; and only Benjamin and Judah, and so much of the Tribes of Dan and Simeon, as lay intermingled with and in the Tribe of Judah, remaining firm to Rehoboam the Son of Solomon, who misguided by some evil Counsellers which were about him, had given occasion to the breach. A breach that never could be soldered or made up again; notwithstanding the fair opportunities which were after offered, of uniting Judah unto Israel (for so the two Kingdomes were distinguished) in the time of Joas; and rejoining Israel to Judah, in the time of Asa. The opportunity offered to Asa King of Judah for regaining the revolted Tribes, was the confusions which in his time had fallen out amongst them by severall factions, each challenging the privilege of making a King unto it self: Nadab the Sonne of Jeroboam being slain by Baasha, Ela the sonne of Baasha murdered by Zimri, Zimri deposed by Omri the Father of Ahab, and Tobni a competitor against Omri also. During which time, as the people must needs suffer many great oppressions, which might make them think of their allegeance to the house of David: so could not Asa have wanted many fair advantages (had he made his best use of them) of working on the divided Kingdome, and reducing it back unto his house. But there were two reasons which prevailed more against this re-union, than any that could be presented to invite them to it. First the imperiousnes and arbitrary government of the Kings of Judah, putting to death without formality of law, those that had displeased them; as in the case of Shimei, Ioab, and Adonijah, in the daies of Solomon: and raising on the Subject what sums they pleased, though more for ostentation of their own magnificence, than the necessities of the State. Of which exactions Rehoboam the Sonne of Solomon was so far from promising a release, or some mitigation at the least, that he threatned to make them more than double what they had been formerly: and how knew they, but that Asa, and all such as descended from him, might be of the same temper also, and act according to those Principles which their Fathers left them. Whereas the Kings of Israel holding by no other title than the love of their people, and the moderate and regular form of their government over them, had put their mouthes in such a tast of the sweets of liberty, and made them so much masters of their own both lives and fortunes; that Naboth durst deny his vine-yard to Ahab, though offering full compensation for it; and Ahab durst not question the life of Naboth, but by suborning witnesses to accuse him of blasphemie. So that the present confusions under which they suffered by the change and violent death of so many Kings one after another, being only temporary, and not likely to continue long; were no perswasions unto them to accept of Asa, and much less to offer themselves unto him; who conceived all adversity to be far more tolerable than the weighty Scepter of that house. And there was something also of present profit which swaied the business. The people were obliged by the Law of Moses to make three chargeable journeys yearly to Hierusalem, to worship there in the Holy Temple; and to pay a double tenth yearly out of their estates (besides offerings and other casualties) to the Priests and Levites. Jeroboam out of an ungodly policie, fearing these frequent journeys unto Hierusalem might be an occasion of reducing them to the house of David, released them of that charge and trouble, by setting up a new form of worship, erecting golden Calves for them in Dan and Bethel, and leaving every man unto the liberty of his own opinion, so it tended not to the establishment of the old Religion. And on the other side the Levites which dwelt amongst them, and received their Tithes, not willing to conform to these new impieties, and finding that their Ministery was no longer useful, withdrew themselves into the Kingdome of Judah, and left the antient places of their habitations: by means whereof, the people were released of those payments also. If they returned again to their old obedience, and accepted Asa for their King, they must return again also to their old Religion; the golden Calves of their own imaginations and inventions must no more be worshipped: and (which no doubt prevailed most on the common people, who like that Religion best which costs them nothing) the antient payments to the Priests and Levites must come up again. Rather than so, they were resolved to suffer yet a little longer, to please themselves in expectation of more settled times: and so no falling off to Asa, though as moderate and religious a Prince as they could have wished for, had they had power of fashioning a King to their own desires. Now as this opportunity of rejoining Israel unto Judah, proved unsuccesful unto Asa, so did the like of uniting Judah unto Israel prove as unprofitable unto Joas the Sonne of Jehoahaz and grand-child of Iehu King of Israel, who being provoked by Amaziah King of Judah made warre upon him; and not onely discomfited him without battell, and took him prisoner without blowes, but led him captive to the very walls of Hierusalem, and by his authority got the gates thereof to be opened to him. But not contented with this honor, (greater than ever had befallen to the Kings of Israel) he caused 400 Cubits of the wall to be broken down, thorow which breach he entered triumphantly in his chariot, carrying the unhappy Prince before him: and being entered, sacked both the Royal palace, and the holy Temple. This was the opportunity which was given to Ioas of uniting Judah unto Israel; and this the loss of it. For the people, otherwise like enough to have accepted him for their King, as a Prince of whose noble Acts they had heard much speech; were so exasperated by these rash and unseasonable out-rages, that they looked upon him as a Sacrilegious Church-Robber, whom the Holy Altars were not safe from; and as a covetous and ungoverned Tyrant, not able to concoct the fulness of his own prosperities. If he were thus unsatiable in his covetousnes, and insupportable in his pride, when he was a Candidate for their Kingdome: when in all common prudence he should have sought their loves, and insinuated into their good opinions, by easing them of former taxes, and shewing them fair hopes of his moderate government: what must they look for when their towns were fill'd with garrisons, Hierusalem stuffed with armed troops; & all the Princes of the house of David, from whom they might Redemption from cruel bondage, deſtroyed or baniſhed, or otherwiſe made unable to afford them ſuccours? Rather than ſo, they were reſolved to riſe as one man againſt him, and let him ſee, that neither their Army was ſo ſcattered, nor themſelves ſo cowed, but that they durſt adventure it to a farther trial. The fear of which made Ioas ſenſible of the loſs of his opportunity: and ſo content with hoſtages for his ſafe retreat, he returned home again without other benefit of his victory, than the ſpoil and honour. And that this poſſibly might be the motive of his going back, without putting the ſucceſs of the affair to a further hazard; may be made probable by the like occurrence in the ſtory of Guicciardine, which in brief is this. Peter de Medicis had very weakly opened the gates of Florence to Charles the eighth, then in his paſſage towards Naples. Charles entreth it triumphantly as a conquered City, armed in compleat manner, and his lance on his thigh; his whole army with him. Many inſolencies being committed by the French, the Citizens prepare to fight in defence of their liberties. Charles willing to go forwards on his march towards Naples, propounds conditions in writing: but ſo intolerable, that Peter Cappon one of the chief Citizens catching the papers out of the Kings Secretaries hands, and tearing them before his face; do you, ſaith he, ſound your trumpets, we will ring our bells, and ſee what will follow. Which ſtout and peremptory dealing did ſo daunt the French, that they condeſcended upon very eaſie termes to abandon the City, and reſtore all the places appertaining unto their eſtate, which were then in his power. The like conſideration probably might prevail with Ioas, as did then with Charles; and prompt him not to fight with an inraged multitude in the ſtreets of a City where he could make no uſe of his horſe; and where he might be more galled with women and children, throwing ſtones or darts out of their windows, and from the tops of their houſes, than with an armed enemy in the open field. Nor wanted Ioas an example of this kind in the times before him, even that of Abimelech in the book of Iudges, who having taken the Town of Thebet, and forced all the men and women into the Caſtle, was ſlain there by a peece of a Mill-ſtone, thrown at his head from one of the Turrets of it by the hands of a woman.

To proceed further in the ſtory of theſe ſeveral Kings, or recapitulate the ſumme of their principal actions (as in other places we have done) may be thought unneceſſary: the Scripture being in the hands of all ſorts of perſons, in which their actions, and ſucceſſions, are at large contained. So that I onely ſhall ſubjoin their names, with the time of their reigns, and the year of the world in which they did begin their Empire: leaving the reſt unto the induſtry and ſearch of the Chriſtian Reader, of whoſe acquaintance with the Scriptures I dare make no queſtion. This onely I premiſe as concerning the Iudges, that the time of their continuance in that authority is not to be meaſured from the time of their coming to it, till the entrance of the next Succeſſor, as in that of the Kings; theſe being occaſionally raiſed by Almighty God, for ſome preſent ſervice, and no ſtanding or eſtabliſhed Magiſtrates; except Moſes and Ioſuah onely, who held the government during life, and managed it as abſolute Princes.

3310. 16. Iosiah, the sonne of Amon, a right godly King, unfortunately slain by Pharaoh Necoh King of Egypt, at the battel of Megiddo. 31.

3341. 17. Iehoahaz, the sonne of Iosiah, a King of 3. moneths onely, deposed and sent Prisoner by Pharaoh Necoh, to Riblah in the land of Hamath, since called Antiochia.

18. Iehoiakim the sonne of Iosiah, and half Brother of Iehoahaz, advanced unto the Throne by Necoh, who changed his name from Eliakim, by which he formerly was called, into that of Iehoiakim. 11.

3351. 19. Iehoiachin or Iechoniah, the sonne of Iehoiakim, at the end of three moneths led captive unto Babylon, with his wives and Mother, and the great Officers of the Realm, by Nebuchadnezzar.

20. Zedekiah, an other of the sonnes of Iosiah, and brother by the whole blood of Iehoahaz, made King by Nebuchadnezzar in the place of Iehoiachin or Iechoniah; his name being changed from Mattaniah, by which called before. But rebelling against his Benefactor, contrary to the Counsel of the Prophet Ieremy, he was taken Prisoner in the 11. year of his reign, Hierusalem destroyed, the Temple ruinated, and the People carried Captive to the land of Babylon. A.M. 3362. where they lived in exile 70 years: which time being expired, Cyrus the King of the Persians, gave them leave to return to their Country, and to re-edifie their City and Temple; which work being finished, by the encouragement of Ezra, Nehemiah, and Zorobabel, and the Nation again setled in some part of their old possessions, they were after governed by their High-Priests, and the Counsel of the Elders, which they called the Sanhedrim: the High-Priest bearing the chief stroke, and being looked on as the man of the greatest power. And therefore I will here subjoyn the Catalogue of so many of them, 3427. 1. Iosuah, the High-Priest at the time of the Return, assistant to Zorobabel in rebuilding the Temple, which he lived not to finish; though continuing (as som say) in the Government 100. years. But I believe rather, that the names of his Successors being lost, the whole time is ascribed to him.

3530. 2. Ioiakim, said to be the sonne of Iosuah; in whose time, by the diligence of Ezra and Nehemiah, the Temple was finished, and the Worship of God restored.

3580. 3. Ionathan, or Iohanan. 30.

3610. 4. Iaddus, who entertained Alexander the Great coming to Hierusalem (of whom more anon) the brother of that Manasses, for whose sake, and on whose occasion, the Temple on Mount Garazim was built by Sanballat, with the leave of Alexander. 20.

3630. 5. Onias succeeded Iaddus, as Iaddus had done Ionathan, not by birth (as formerly) but by the Election of the People.

3651. 6. Simon, surnamed Iustus. 9.

3660. 7. Eleazer, the brothet of Simon. 32.

3692. 8. Menelaus, the brother of Eleazer and Simon.

3718. 9. Onias II. 14.

3732. 10. Simon II. 10.

3742. 11. Onias III. the sonne of Simon the 2.

3787. 12. Iason, the brother of Onias the 3.

3789. 13. Menelaus II. the brother of Iason; in whose time the Temple was profaned by the Syrians, at the command of Antiochus Epiphanes.

3794. 14. Alcimus, under whose Government the Maccabees began to appear in defence of their Countrey and Religion, by whom succeeded in the office of High-Priest, after his decease. Among these none of greater note than Iaddus, High-Priest at such time as Alexander the Great having conquered Syria marched towards Hierusalem, and was encountred by this Iaddus in his Priestly vestments; assuring him in the name of the most high God, and making it demonstrable from the Prophecy of Daniel, that he should prosper in his enterprize against the Persians. An hope which Alexander did imbrace with the greater confidence, because (as he affirmed to Parmenio his chief commander) he had once at Diu, a City of Macedon, seen in a dream or Vision such a person as Iaddus was, so habited, and professing the same one God, by whom he was encouraged to pursue the action which he had in hand, with assurance of Victory. And upon this, the Iews were so much favoured by him, that he gave them leave to live according to their own laws, and to enjoy with freedome their own Religion. But it held onely for his own time. For shortly after his decease, they were on both sides plagued by the Kings of Egypt and Syria, who ransacked their Cities, slaughtered their People, made havock of their goods, and compelled many of them both to eat of forbidden meats, and offer sacrifice unto Idols. At the last God raised up Mattathias and his five sonnes to resist these insolencies, who in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes King of Syria, undertook the protection of the People, and gave unto the Syrians many notable overthrows, insomuch that the Iews made choice of Iudas surnamed Maccabaus (the eldest of the five brethem) for their Prince or Governour.

1805. 2. Jonathan, the brother of Judas, vanquished the forces of Bacchides and Alcimus, Captains of Demetrius King of Syria; and after many notable exploits and deeds of Armes, was treacherously murdered by Tryphon, aspiring at that time to the Syrian Diadem.

3823. 3. Simon, the brother of Judas and Jonathan, subdued the Cities of Gaza, Joppe, and Jamnia, and cleered Judæa of the Syrians: perfidiously slain in the course of his fortunes by his sonne-in-law Ptolomy. 8.

3831. 4. Johannes Hyrcanus, the third sonne of Simon, (his two other Brethren being in the power of Ptolomy) succeeded in the Government. He destroyed the Temple on Mount Garazim, subdued the Idumæans, compelling them to be Circumcised; transferred the warre into Syria, and dying left the Sovereignty to his eldest sonne Aristobulus.

40. 4. Herod III. ſurnamed Agrippa, Nephew to Herod the Great, by his ſonne Ariſtobulus begotten on Mariamne of the race of the Maccabees; was by Caligula firſt inveſted in the Tetrarchy of his Uncle Philip with the title of King, and next in that of Antipas alſo, and finally by Claudius in that of Lyſanias alſo; ſome part of the Tetrarchie of Archelaus being added unto his dominions. This was the man that murdered Iames, and impriſoned Peter, and in the end was ſtricken by an Angel, and devoured by wormes. 7.
47. 5. Agrippa Minor, ſonne of Herod Agrippa, was he before whom Saint Paul pleaded in defence of the Goſpel; and the laſt which had the title of King of the Iewes: for in his time the City of Hieruſalem was deſtroyed by Titus, and the whole Kingdome made a Province of the Roman Empire. Anno 73.

And here it is to be obſerved, that when Salmanaſſar had ſubdued and captivated the ten Tribes of Iſrael, he ſent new Colonies of his own to plant this Countrey; that ſo fruitful and well-ſituate a part of his Empire might yield its juſt tribute, and not lye open to the fury of the next Invader. But the Romans not having (it ſeemeth) ſo much policy or providence, as thoſe whom they accounted barbarous; having laid the Countrey deſolate, left it unfurniſhed of new Colonies; whereby the Perſians, next the Saracens, and after them the Turks, entring the Roman Empire at this doore, have ſucceſſively driven the Romans out of the whole houſe. Now that we may the better perceive how the Romans had weakned and almoſt utterly rooted out the Iewiſh Nation, we will relate ſome of their particular maſſacres: which were not more cruelly inflicted on them by the enemy, then juſtly deſerved by themſelves; they wiſhing, though (I ſuppoſe) not deſiring, that the innocent Bloud of our Saviour ſhould be on them and their children. Firſt then the inhabitants of Cæſarea ſlew of the Iews in one day, about 20000, and ſuch as fled were took and impriſoned by Florus the Roman Lieutenant of Iudea. To revenge this ſlaughter, the Iews ſet upon the Syrians; in which skirmiſh 13000 of them were ſlain. The people of Alexandria put 50000 of them to the ſword; they of Damaſcus, 10000; Antonius a Roman Captain, ſlew in Aſcalon 10000 of them; and Ceſtius another Captain, 8040 perſons. Now to come to the warres here managed by Veſpaſian. This Veſpaſian in the ſiege of Aphaca, ſlew and took priſoners, 17130. perſons. In Samaria, 11600. perſons; in Iotopata, 42200 perſons. In Ioppa, ſo many killed and drowned themſelves, that the Sea threw up again 4200 dead bodies: and the reſt ſo totally periſhed, that there remained none to carry tidings unto Hieruſalem, of the loſs of the Town. In the City of Tarichea, were ſlain, and made captives, 45000 perſons, beſides thoſe which were given to the King Agrippa. In Gamala there periſhed 90000. and none left alive but only two women: In Gaſcala 5000. men dyed by the ſword; in the City of Gadera there were ſlain 32200, beſides an infinite number of ſuch as had drowned themſelves. In Hieruſalem it ſelf, there died 1100000 of them, partly by the ſword, and partly by the famine; the worſer enemy of the two: there were found 2000 in privies and ſinks; and 97000 taken priſoners, inſomuch that 30 Iews were ſold for a penny. So punctual was the Divine Juſtice in retaliating to this wretched people according to the meaſure of their iniquities; that they who bought their Saviour for 30 pence, ſhould be ſold at 30 for a penny in the open market.

Now that Hieruſalem was able to contain ſuch a number of people, is evident in that when Ceſtius was Lieutenant of Iewry, the High-Prieſt did at his requeſt number the people which came thither to eat the the Paschall Lamb, and found them to be two millions and seven hundred thousand living souls, all sound and purifyed: For to leapers, or men having a flux of seed, or women in their monethly terms, or to strangers; it was not lawful to eat of it. And when Titus laid siege to the City it was in the feast of the Passeover, when most of the people were there assembled; God (as it were) having thus imprisoned them. All these massacres, besides divers others which I have omitted, and infinite numbers which were slain in the fields and villages, which drowned themselves, and which were privately made away, amounting all to almost 2000000 of people, hapned in the compass of 4 years, beginning at the 12 of Nero, and ending at the 2d. of Vespasian: yet was not the whole Nation rooted out, till the year 136. For then this miserable people, having stirred two notable rebellions; the one under Trajan, and the last under Adrian the Emperours; were generally banished their native Countrey, and never again permitted to inhabite it, otherwise than as strangers. After this dissolution the Iews were dispersed all over the world, and especially in Spain, where Adrian commanded many of them to dwell: yet they found every where so little favour, that having divers times been put to grievous mulcts and ransomes, they were at last thrust out of most of the Kingdomes of Europe also. They were banished out of England by Edward the first, Anno 1290. Out of France, by Philip the fair, 1307. Out of Spain, by Ferdinand the Catholique, 1492. Out of Portugal, by Emmanuel, 1497. Out of Naples and Sicily, by Charles the fift, 1539. Yet are they found in great numbers in the Romish parts of Germany and Poland; in most Cities of Italy; especially Rome it self, where there are no less then 15000 or 20000 of them; and also in the Popes Countrey of Avignion. The reason why they are permitted to live thus under the Popes nose, is pretended to be an expectation of their conversion, which is a meer pretence; indeed the true reason being the benefit hence arising to his Holiness coffers: the hopes of their conversion being very small, and the means less. For besides the scandal, datum & acceptum, by the Papists fond worshipping of Images, so peremptorily contrary to the first table of the Law: they are not permitted to see any book of the Christian Religion, no not so much as the new Testament. And (which worketh much upon men of their metall) because at their conversion they must quit all their goods unto the Church, as being ill gotten, and by consequence the works of the devil; which in their baptism they promise to renounce. They have also a Synagogue at Amsterdam, and are pretty thick spred over the Dominions of the Turkes: who notwithstanding so hate them for crucifying of CHRIST, that they used to say in detestation of a thing, I would I might dy a Iew. Neither will they permit a Iew to turn Turk, unless he be first baptized. And though their multitudes be so great both in Thessalonica and Constantinople, that it is conceived they do amount to the number of 160000 persons: yet are they not only contemned and hated, but there and in all other places of their habitation, upon every tumultuous assembly of the Common people, and constantly every Easter, whersoever they be, in danger of death. Insomuch that if a Iew do but stir out of doors betwixt Maundie Thursday at noon, and Easter Eve at night, the Christians of the East amongst whom they dwell, (though far fewer in number) will be sure to stone them, because at that time, they buffeted, derided, and in fine crucified their Saviour. Hated in all the parts of the Turks dominions, because imployed as Publicans in gathering and enhauncing the publick tributes, which they exact with all severity that may be, and improve unto the most. And no less hated in all parts of the Christian world, as enemies to the Cross of CHRIST, so unreclaimably addicted to their antient Judaism, and so abhorring from the conversation of other men, that it is not possible that they should reap any other harvest than contempt and scorn from those amongst whom they dwell.

To give you their Character in brief. They are a people which know how to comply with the times, and the condition which they live in; especially if their profit be concerned in it: reviled like dogs, and used like slaves, yet never shew so much as an angry Countenance. A Nation which will thrive whersoever they come, but most by usury and brocage; not lending any thing but on pawnes, and those once forfeited never more redeemable. The best of both Sexes said to have an unsavoury rankness, not incident (if not caused by sluttishness) to other people: from whom as different in their habit as in their Religion. And as for that, they retain still Circumcision as the badge and cognizance of their Nation, but mingled with many ceremonies not prescribed by the law, nor observed by the Antients: placing a void chair for the Prophet Elias, whom they believe to be present, though unseen, at the solemnity. And upon this they are so besotted, that they conceive the female sex uncapable of eternal life, because not capable of Circumcision: and therefore use to name them with no other Ceremonie, than at the six weeks end to have some young wenches lift up the Cradle with the child in it, which she that standeth at the head, giveth the name unto. Of their Sabbath so extremely doting, that they have added to the superstitions left them by the Pharisees: and herein they are so precise, that if a Iew travel on the Friday, and in the Evening fall so short of his journeys end, that it amounts to more then 2000. Cubits, or six Furlongs, which they accompt a Sabbath dayes journey, there must he sit him down and keep his Sabbath, though in a wood, or field, or the high-way side, without fear of wind or weather, of Theeves or Robbers, and without taking order for meat or drink: periculo latronum prædonumq; omni, penuria item omni cibi potusq; neglectis, as Buxdorfius hath it. And so farre have they gone in despight of Christ, as to declare it unlawful to lift the Ox or Asse out of a ditch, permitted in the strictest times of Pharisaical rigor. So pertinacious in retaining the difference of meats and drinks, that thy will by no means sit at the same table with other men: and so precise in the dressing of it, that they will eat of no flesh but of their own killing onely; and that too with such cautions and reservations, that if any of the entrailes be corrupt or dislocated, they will sell the whole beast to the Christians for a very trifle. Beneficial in that onely to the neighbouring Christian. Wine they forbear except it be of their own planting, not so much out of dislike of that liquor, for they are generally generally good fellows, and love their bellies; as for fear the wine ſhould be baptized; a Ceremony much uſed in the Eaſtern parts. Of the coming of their Meſſiah ſo full of hopes, that there is no great Warrier ſtirring, but they look upon him as the man, till ſome ſad tragedy or other, which they ſuffer under that perſwaſion, makes them ſee there error: promiſing to themſelves whenſoever he cometh, a reſtitution of their Kingdome; and ſuch felicities therein in the litteral ſenſe of ſome Texts of Scripture, which carry in them a more myſtical and ſacred meaning. That in good time (but Gods not theirs) they ſhall be made partakers of the ſeveral bleſſings which thoſe Texts do ſpeak of, is both the hope and wiſh of all pious men, who cannot chooſe but grieve to behold the natural branches ſo long diſmembred and cut off from the tree of life. And this they neither hope nor wiſh for but on ſome fair grounds preſented to them by Saint Paul: who ſaith expreſſely, that when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is once come in, that then all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved; Rom. 11. 25,26. The words ſo plainly poſitive that they need no commentary; or if they did, we have the general conſent of the antients, beſides the conſtant current of moſt modern writers, which cheriſh the glad hopes of their converſion to the Goſpel, which the Apoſtle doth there aim at. Origen, Athanaſius, Hierome, Auguſtine, Chryſoſtome, for the primitive times; Beda and Hugo Cardinalis in the times ſucceeding, Gorram and Thomas Aquinas for thoſe of Rome, Calvin, Beza, Bullinger and Peter Martyr for the Reformed Churches, beſides divers others of great note, ſo expound that Text. Nor want there other Texts of Scripture to affirm as much; which he that doth deſire to ſee, may find them with the expoſitions of moſt Chriſtian Writers, in a Book writ by Doctor Willet, entituled De generali et noviſſima Judæorum vocatione; and thither I referre the more curious Reader. Out of all I ſhall take theſe words of Peter Martyr, written on that paſſage of Saint Paul to the Romans, viz. Non ita Judæi perierunt, ut nulla de illorum ſalute ſpes ſuperſit; The Jews (ſaith he) are not ſo wholly fallen from the favour of God, but that there ſtill remain ſome hopes of their ſalvation. Of their Salvation then by the Goſpel of Chriſt, when the fulneſs of the Gentiles is once come in, we conceive good hopes: but whether there be any of their reſtitution to their temporal Kindome, is a further queſtion, and not ſo cleerly evidenced in the Book of God, though there be ſomewhat in that Book which may ſeem to intimate it. That the opinion of being reſtored by the Meſſiah to that temporal power which was taken from them by the Romans, was prevalent as well amongſt Chriſts Diſciples, as the reſt of the Iews, is, as I take it, clear enough in the holy Goſpel. In ſuch a Kingdome and no other did the two ſonnes of Zebedee deſire to ſit on both hands of their Maſter: and the ſame was it and no other, which all of them expected, appeareth by the words of Cleophas, Luke 24.21. that Chriſt ſhould have reſtored them. We thought ſaid he, that this would have proved the man that ſhould have redeemed Iſrael, Redeemed Iſrael? from what? from ſinne and Satan, or the curſe and bondage of the Law? Not ſo, ἀλλ' ἀπὸ τῆς ζυγῦ τῆς δουλείας; but from the yoke of vaſſallage which the Romans had ſo lately impoſed on them, ſay the Fathers right. Touching the ſame it was that they moved him ſaying, Lord wilt thou at this time reſtore again the Kingdome of Iſrael? Acts 1.6. In anſwer whereunto, our Saviour makes them no deniall, as unto the thing, nor tells them that they never muſt expect ſuch a reſtauration; but only puts them off as unto the time, and bids them reſt themſelves on the pleaſure of God the Father, in whoſe hands the diſpoſing of all Kingdomes was. It is not for you (ſaith he) to know the times and ſeaſons, which the Father hath in his own power, ver.7. By which anſwer (as it ſeems to me) there is a poſſibility of reſtoring them to their Kingdome alſo, though not in the τὸ νῦν, at that very inſtant when they were moſt deſirous to have it done, or at any other time fit for them to know, that being a ſecret which the Father hath reſerved to himſelf alone.

But leaving theſe ſpeculations of a reſtitution of the Throne of Iſrael, and the great power and privileges it may then enjoy; let us look back on the eſtate in which it flouriſhed in the former times, when the forces and Revenue of it were at the higheſt. And firſt for the Revenues, they amounted in the time of Solomon (as is ſaid 2 Chron. 9. 13.) to 666 Talents of Gold, beſides the benefits of his Cuſtomes and Impoſitions, which cometh to two Millions, and nine hundred ninety and ſeven thouſand pounds of yearly income. A vaſt ſumme for ſuch a litle Kingdome. Nor can we reckon them at leſs, if they were not greater, in the time of David: of whom it is affirmed, 1 Chron. 22. 14. that he left to Solomon an hundred thouſand Talents of Gold, and ten hundred thouſand Talents of Silver, towards the building of the Temple: beſides three thouſand Talents of Gold, and ſeven thouſand Talents of Silver, formerly depoſited for that purpoſe, as is ſaid 1 Chron. 29. 4. Which if it be computed at the ordinary rate of a Jewiſh Talent, reckoning a Talent of Gold at four thouſand and five hundred pound, and a Talent of Silver, at three hundred ſeventy five pound, will amount in our money to eight hundred and forty millions and one hundred twenty and five thouſand pounds. So vaſt a ſumme, that it had been ſufficient to have built a Temple of pure Gold and Silver, far greater than the Temple of Solomon, without other materials. I conceive therefore with our learned and induſtrious Brerewood, that by the Talent in thoſe places we are to underſtand a far leſſer ſumme than the ordinary Hebrew Talents: which whether it doth there ſignifie a Sicle onely, which is half a Crown of Engliſh money, as Eupolemus, cited by Euſebius, was of opinion; or that every Talent of Gold, came to three golden Crowns of Athens, which maketh forty five ſhillings of Engliſh money, as Julius Pollux hath it in his Onomaſticon; I am not able to determine. But meaſuring it by the laſt eſtimate, which I more approve of, it will amount to two millions and two hundred ninety and five thouſand pounds: a vaſt ſumme for a King to leave in ready money, which was alwaies exerciſed in war. And though I doe not find expreſly what the Revenues of Judah might amount unto after the diviſion: yet by one circumſtance I find them to be very great. For it is written 2 Kings 18. 14. that the yearly tribute impoſed upon Hezekiah by the King of Aſſyria, was three hundred Talents of Silver, and thirty Talents of Gold, amounting (according to the ordinary Hebrew Talent, which queſtionleſs is there intended) to two hundred forty ſeven thouſand and five hundred pounds of English money: and therefore probably his ordinary Revenue must be thrice as much, above tha ttribue; Elſe the Aſſyrian had not left him a ſubſiſtance for a King to live on. Nor can I think that the Revenues of this Crown were leſs to Herod, than formerly to Solomon or David; conſidering his vaſt expences, the many and magnificent Structures which he brought to perfection, and the large Legacies he gave at the time of his death; not paralleld by any King before or ſince, though of a larger and more ample territory than he ſtood poſſeſſed of.

What forces the Kings of the Hebrews were able to bring into the field, may beſt be eſtimated by the muſter which David made when he numbred the People: the inrolment of ſuch as were able to bear arms, and fit for ſervice, coming in all to five hundred thouſand fighting men, in Judah onely, and eight hundred thouſand men in the Tribes of Iſrael. Tis true, that David never brought into the field ſo vaſt a multitude; but when the Kingdomes were divided, and warre denounced betwixt Jeroboam and Abijah, we find almoſt the whole number brought into the field: that is to ſay, eight hundred thouſand on the ſide of Jeroboam the King of Iſrael, and four hundred thouſand by Abijah the King of Judah. After this, out of that ſmall Kingdome, Aſa the Son of Abijah, being invaded by Zerah the Arabian or Ethiopian, advanced an Army of five hundred and eighty thouſand men; which was more than the inrolment made in the time of David. An infinite proportion for ſo ſmall a Kingdome; and were it not avouched in the holy Scriptures, far above belief: had not that God who ſaid to Abraham, that his ſeed ſhould be as the ſtars of Heaven for multitude, been able to have made it good.

As for the ſtory and affairs of this Countrey ſince the time of Adrian, the Iews being all expelled their native Soyl, and Chriſtianity in fine prevailing over all thoſe parts, it was inhahited as the reſt of the Empire was, by men of that Religion onely: in this Countrey ſo advanced and countenanced, that Helena the Mother of Conſtantine, is reported to have built in it no leſs than two hundred Temples and Monaſteries in places of moſt note for the miracles of Chriſt our Savio ur, or the dwelling of ſome of his Diſciples. In the year 615. the Perſians, under the conduct of Choſroes their King, became Maſters of it; and poſſeſſed themſelves of Hieruſalem alſo: expelled thence by the valour and good fortune of the Emperour Heraclius, who recovering the Croſs on which Chriſt ſuffered, out of the hands of the Pagans, carried it with as great a triumph into Conſtantinople, as David once did the Ark into Hieruſalem. But this glory and rejoycing did not long continue: For within twenty years after the recovery of this City from the power of the Perſians, it was again conquered and ſubdued by Homar or Aumar Caliph of the Saracens, Anno 637. Under this yoak the captivated Chriſtians had long ſuffered, when they changed the Tyrant but not the tyranny: the Turks about the year 1079. overcoming the Saracens, and domineering in their ſteed. Twenty years did the Chriſtians langniſh under this oppreſſion, when one Peter an Hermite, travelling for devotion to the holy Lnd, and being an eye-witneſs of the miſeries under which they groaned, at his return, made his addreſſes to Pope Vrban the ſecond, acquainting him with the ſad condition of the poor Chriſtians in thoſe Countries. A Councill thereupon is called at Clermont in France, where the Pope (willing to imploy the Chriſtian Princes farther off, that he might the better play his game at home) did ſo effectually advance and indeer the buſineſs, that no fewer than three hundred thouſand fighting men, under ſeverall Leaders, undertook the ſervice. And it proſpered ſo well with them in the firſt beginning, that having beaten the Turks out of Aſia Minor, taken the great City of Antioch, and moſt of the ſtrong Towns of Syria, they incamped before Hieruſalem, and in ſhort time took it, Anno 1099. after it had been four hundred years and upwards in the power of the Infidels. The City being thus gained, was offered with the title of King, to Robert Duke of Normandy, Sonne of William the Conquerour: but he upon the hopes of the Kingdome of England, refuſed that honour, never proſpering, as it was obſerved, after that refuſall. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorreine, had the next offer of it, which with a religious joy he accepted of; though on the day of his Inanguration he refuſed the Crown: affirming that it was not fit for a Chriſtian Prince to wear in that City a Crown of Gold, where the Redeemer of the World ware a Crown of Thornes.

The Kings of Hieruſalem.

1099. 1. Godfrey of Bouillon, Duke of Lorreine.

1100. 2. Baldwin of Lorreine, brother of Godfrey, wonne Ptolemais, and many other Cities of Syria.

1118. 3. Baldwin II. ſurnamed of Bruges, Couſin of Godfrey and Baldwin, the Former Kings, overcame the Sultan of Damaſcus, and inlarged his Kingdome by the addition of Tyre.

1131. 4. Fulk, Earl of Anjou, having maryed Milliſcent the daughter of Baldwin the 2d. ſucceeded after his deceaſe; unfortunately killed with a fall from his horſe.

1142. 5. Baldwin III. Sonne of Fulk and Milliſcent, fortified Gaza againſt the Caliph of Ægypt, and recoverd Paneade from the King of Damaſcus.

1164. 6. Almericus, the Brother of Baldwin the 3d. ſo diſtreſſed the great Caliph of Ægypt, that he was forced to call in the Turks to aid him; by whom ſlain, and his Kingdome transferred on Sarracon, the Turkiſh Generall.

1173. 7. Baldwin IV. Sonne of Almericus, overthrew Saladine the victorious King of the Turkes in a fight neer Aſcalon, and valiantly defended his Dominions.

1185. 8. Baldwin V. Sonne of Sibyll the Siſter of Baldwin the 4th. by William Marqueſs of Montferrat, unnaturally poiſoned by his own mother, having reigned only five moneths, to make way for her ſecond husband, called

1185. 9. Guy of Luſignan, the laſt King of Hieruſalem, that had the poſſeſſion of the City, during whole time Saladine the Sultan of Ægypt won that Kingdome, Anno 1187. which his Succeſſours defended againſt all invaſions, till the year 1517. in which Selimus the firſt, Emperour of the Turks, added the Holy Land, together with Ægypt, to his Empire. When Hieruſalem was taken by the Chriſtians, the German Emperours name was Fredericus, the Popes, Urbanus, the Hieroſolymitan Patriarch, Heraclius; and ſo alſo were they called, when the Chriſtians again loſt it. This is the conceit of Roger Hoveden in the life of Henry the ſecond; but how it can agree with Chronology, I do not ſee.

After the taking of Hieruſalem by Sultan Saladine, the Chriſtians retired their forces into ſome of the other Towns of the Holy land; which they made good againſt the enemy: and defended them under the government of theſe three Kings following, viz.

10. Conrade Marq. of Montferrat, husband of Iſabel the daughter of Almericus King of Hieruſalem.

11. Henry Earl of Campagne, ſecond husband of Iſabel.

12. John di Brenne, husband of Mary, or Yoland as ſome call her, daughter of Conrade and Iſabel, the laſt Chriſtian King that ever had poſſeſſion in Syria or Paleſtine: inhabited ever-ſince by Moores and Arabians, few Chriſtians, and not many Turks but ſuch as be in garriſons onely. Yoland the daughter of this John di Brenne, was wife to Frederick King of Naples, who in her right intituled himſelf King of Hieruſalem: and ſo now do the Kings of Spain, as heirs unto, and poſſeſſors of the Kingdome of Naples. Concerning which title it would not be amiſſe to inſert this ſtory. When the warres, in Queen Elizabeths time, were hot between England and Spain, there were Commiſſioners of both ſides appointed to treat of peace. They met at a Town of the French Kings, and firſt it was debated in what tongue the negotiation ſhould be handled. A Spaniard thinking to give the Engliſh Commiſſioners a ſhrewd gird, propoſed the French tongue as moſt fit: it being a language which the Spaniards were well skilled in; and for theſe gentlemen of England, I ſuppoſe (ſaith he) that they cannot be ignorant of the language of their fellow-ſubjects: their Queen is Queen of France as well as of England. Nay in faith my maſters, replyed Doctor Dale, (the maſter of the Requeſts) the French tongue is too vulgar for a buſineſs of this ſecrecy and importance, eſpecially in a French Town. We will rather treat in Hebrew, the language of Hieruſalem, whereof your maſter is King: and I ſuppoſe you are therein as well skilled, as we in the French. And thus much for this title.

The Armes of the Chriſtian Kings in Hieruſalem was Luna, a croſs croſſet croſſed, Sol, which was commonly called the Hieruſalem Croſs. But for their forces and Revenues, I cannot ſee how any eſtimate may be made hereof, in regard they ſubſiſted not by their own proper ſtrength, but by the Purſes and the Forces of the Weſtern Chriſtians; more or leſs active in that ſervice, as zeal, or emulation, or deſire of glory were predominant in them.

Chief Orders of Kinght-hood in this Kingdome after the recovery thereof from the power of the Turks, Were

1. Of the Sepulchre, ſaid to be inſtituted originally by Queen Helena, the Mother of Conſtantine the Great, by whom the Temple of the Sepulchre was indeed firſt built: but more truly by Philip King of France, Anno 1099. at ſuch time as that Temple was regained from the Turks. Their Armes the ſame with that of the Kings before blazoned, repreſenting the five wounds of our Saviour CHRIST. At the firſt conferred on none but Gentlemen of blood and fortunes; now ſaleable to any that will buy it of the Pater-Guardian, who with a Convent of Franciſcans doth reſide neer that Temple.

2. Of Saint John of Hieruſalem, begun by one Gerrard, Anno 1114. and confirmed by Pope Paſchalis the ſecond. Their badge or Cognizance, is a White Croſſe of eight points. Their duty to defend the Holy land, relieve Pilgrims, and ſuccour Chriſtian Princes againſt the Infidels. They were to be of noble parentage and extraction: and grew in time to ſuch infinite riches, eſpecially after the ſuppreſſion of the Templars (moſt of whoſe lands were after given unto this Order) that they had at one time in the ſeveral parts of Chriſtendome no fewer than 20000. Mannours; and of ſuch reputation in all Chriſtian Kingdomes, that in England the Lord Prior of this Order, was accompted the Prime Baron in the Realm. But now their Revenue is not a little diminiſhed, by the withdrawing of the Kings of England and other Proteſtant Princes from the Church of Rome: who on that change, ſeized on all the Lands of this Order in their ſeveral Countries, and either kept them to themſelves, or diſpoſed them to others as they pleaſed. Of theſe we ſhall ſpeak more when we are in Malta, where they now reſide: advertiſing onely at the preſent, that their firſt Great Maſter was that Gerrard by whom they were founded; the laſt that had his reſidence in the Holy land one John de Villiers, in whoſe time being driven out of Paleſtine, they removed unto Cyprus, and in the time of Fulk de Villaret Anno 1309. to the Iſle of Rhodes. Outed of which by Solomon the Magnificent Anno 1522. they removed from one place to another, till at laſt by the magnificence of Charles the fift Anno 1530. they were ſetled in Malta: and there we ſhall ſpeak farther of them.

3. Of the Templers, inſtituted by Hugh of Payennes, Anno 1113, and confirmed by Pope Eugenius. Their enſign was a Red Croſs, in token that they ſhould ſhed their blood to defend Chriſts Temple. They were burried Croſs-legged, and wore on their backs the figure of the Croſs; for which they were by the common people called Croſs-back, or Crouch-back, and by corruption, Crook-back. Edmund Earl of Lancaſter, ſecond ſonne to our Henry the third, being of this Order, was vulgarly called Edmund Crook-back; which gave Henry the fourth a fooliſh occaſion to faign, that this Edmund (from whom he was deſcended) was indeed the eldeſt ſonne of King Henry the third, but for his crookedneſs and deformity, his younger brother was preferred to the Crown before him. These Knights had in all Provinces of Europe their subordinate governours, in which they possessed on lesse than 16000 Lordships: the greatness of which Revenue was not the least cause of dissolving the Order. For Philip the fair, King of France, had a plot to invest one of his sonnes with the title of King of Hierusalem, and hoped to procure of the Pope the revenue of this order to be laid unto that Kingdome for support of the Title: which he might the better do, because Clement the fift then Pope, for the love he bare to France, had transferred his seat from Rome to Avignion. But herein his hopes deceived him; for this Order being dissolved, the lands thereto belonging were given to the Knights Hospitallers, or of Saint John. The crimes objected against this Order was, first, their revolt from their professed obedience unto the Patriarch of Jerusalem, who was their visitor; Secondly, their unspeakable pride; and thirdly their sinnes against nature. The house of our Law-students in London, called the Temple, was the chief house of the Knights of this order in England: and was by the Knights of Saint John, whose principal mansion was in Smithfield, sold unto the students of the Laws, for the yearly rent of 10 l. about the middle of the reign of Edward the third.

These three orders M. Selden (and deservedly) putteth not in his Titles of honour, in that they were prohibited to kiss a woman: honourary Knight-hood, and the love of Ladies, going together like vertue and reward.

Thus much for Palestine.

OF ARABIA.

ARABIA hath on the East, Chaldæa, and the Bay or Gulf of Persia; on the West, Palestine, some part of Ægypt, and the whole course of the Red-Sea; on the North, the River Euphrates, with some parts of Syria and Palestine; and on the South, the main Southern Ocean. But at some times the name extended somewhat further: Pliny enlargeth it as far as to Comagena, the North part of Syria, in regard that many Arabian Colonies had been their planted by Tigranes; and Xenophon comprehending in it the greatest part also of Mesopotamia, because situate on the West of the River Tigris, and consequently the Western part of the Assyrian Empire, as the word Ereb doth import; from whence some derive the Etymon and name hereof. Which notwithstanding, in the generall esteem of Authors it is bounded only as before.

As for the name, there be some that derive it from Arabus a supposed Sonne of Apollo and Babylonia; others from three suppositious Sons of Janus Pater, one of the pretended Grand-Sonnes of Cham. Who is fabled to have sent his Sonne Arabus into Arabia Deserta; Petreius, into Arabia Petræa; and Sabus, into Arabia Felix the dwelling place of the Sabæans. And for this trim conceit we are beholding to the Berosus of Frier Annius. More probable is their conjecture who derive the name from the Hebrew, Arab, signifying black, by reason of the swarth or tawny complexion of the inhabitants, who are inter nigrum & fulvum, as Vertomannus an eye-witness hath informed us of them: on the same reason as one of the Provinces of Africa, is commonly entituled the Land of Negroes. But the most likely origination of it, as I conceive, is from Harabi, which signifieth in the Hebrew a Theef or Robber, such as the Arabians, in all ages, have been known to be. According unto that of the Prophet Jeremy, In the waies thou hast sate for them as an Arabian in the Wilderness, as our English reads it, tanquam Latro insidians in solitudine, saith the Vulgar Latine, Jerem. 32. St. Hierome, though he render it, quasi Latro, as the Vulgar doth, yet in his Commentary he informs us, that the word doth also signifie an Arabian, quæ gens latrociniis dedita usq; hodie incursat Palestinæ fines, &c. which people being addicted to theft and robberie, do to this day (saith he) infest the coasts of Palestine which border neer them, and lay in wait for those which had any occasion to travel thither. Agreeable hereunto is the observation of Martin del Rio; Adeo latrocinii is infames sunt, ut Hebræis Arabs, latronem denotat, sicut Chananæus Mercatorem, Chaldæus Mathematicum: i. e. So infamous were they for their theft and frequent Robberies, that it was as familiar with the Jews to call a thief by the name of Arabian, as by Chanaanite to signifie a Merchant, or to use the word Chaldæan for a Mathematician. In the same sense they came in the succeeding times to be called Saracens, from Sarak or Saraka, an Arabian word, which signifieth to steal; whereof more anon: no otherwise than one of the American Islands had the name of Ladrones, or Insula latronum, given by Magellanus, from the theevishness of the Inhabitants, who had stoln his cock-boat.

I have staid the longer on the name, because it doth express so much of the Character of the people also: living for the most part upon spoil and robberie, as all that travell that way know by sad experience. Of mean statures, raw-boned, tawny or swart-complexioned, having feminine voices; of swift but noiseless gate, and upon you ere you are aware. Of no set dwellings (except only in Arabia Felix) living in tents which they remove like walking Cities, for the benefit of pasturage, and hope of booty: for this last cause hanging about the skirts of more habitable Countreys; and having robbed retire with a marvellous speed. Mounted on Dromedaries for that purpose, a beast of most incredible swiftness, satisfied with little food, though without water to it, and will easie carry a man a hundred miles a day without any refreshing. Nor are such horses as they have, though but poor and lean, of less speed, or less patient of travel: whom they feed twice a day with the milk of Camels, and think them not worth keeping, if not able to outgoe an Ostrich. As now, formerly all horsemen, and but ill appointed; fitter to rob and spoil than to deal with Souldiers, as riding stark naked, and trusting rather to the swiftness of their horses than any other way of resistance where they were opposed.

Their language is the Arabick, so called from this Countrey, but not proper to this Countrey onely. Spoken in all places where Mahometanism hath got any footing. The Alcoran being written in it, the publick offices of their Religion performed in it, and the tongue taught in Schools as generally as with us the Latine: but made the natural language in Mesopotamia, Syria, Palestine, the three Arabia's, Egypt, and all Barbary, except the Kingdome of Morocco. A great extent, but short of that which some give to it, who will have it spoken in two parts of the whole habitable world.

The Christian faith was first here planted by Saint Paul, of whose being in Arabia, after his conversion, he telleth us, Gal. 1. 17. to which the coming in of the Saracens gave a great increase in the time of Mavia their Queen, during the Empire of Valentinian the first; Moses a man of exemplary piety, and famed for many miracles, being created their first Bishop: after more generally propagated over all the Countrey by their King Alamandarus, Anastasius then reigning in the East. But long it had not been received, when supplanted by Mahometanism, which had its first beginning here, and hath so universally overspred the whole face hereof, that now there are no Christians left in all the Countrey, except only in Elor a Port Town in the Bay of Arabia Felix, in Petra the chief City of Arabia Petræa, and two small Monasteries about Mount Sinai.

It is in circuit about 4000 miles, but of so unequall and heterogeneous composition, that no generall Character can be given of it: and therefore we must look upon it, as it stands divided into Arabia Deserta, 2. Arabia Petræa, 3. Arabia Felix, and 4. the Arabick Ilands.

1. ARABIA DESERTA.

ARABIA DESERTA, (called Beriara by the Turks) is bounded on the East, with Babylonia; on the West, with parts of Palestine, and Arabia Petræa; on the North, with Palmyrene and Mesopotamia, from which last parted by Euphrates; and on the South, by some parts of Petræa, and Arabia Felix.

It hath the name of Deserta, from the vast desarts which are in it, and the un-inhabitednes thereof, called also by Aristides, Aspera, from the roughnes; by Servius, Inferior, or the Lower, in regard of the situation of it more towards the River; by Lucian, from the frequent bottoms and vallies in it, Arabia Cava; and finally by the Iews it was called Kedar, from the blacknes or swarthines of the People; the word in Hebrew signifying as much as Sun-burnt; whence the people are by some writers called Kedareni, and by Pliny Cedrei.

But the common and most usuall name of it is Arabia Deserta, agreeable to the nature of it, being generally a sandy Countrey full of vast desarts, in which all such as travell use to carry their Provisions with them, and to guide themselves in their journey by the course of the Stars: though in some parts which lie neer Euphrates and the Mountains of Arabia Felix, it have some few towns, and those resorted to by Merchants. But this is onely in those parts, the residue of the Countrey being so desolate and wast, that one who had travelled in it, doth describe it to be so wild a place, vt nec homines nec bestiæ videantur, nec Aves; imo nec arbores nec germen aliquod, sed non nisi montes saxosi, altissimi, asperrimi. A Countrey saith Guilandinus Melchior, where are found neither men nor beasts, no not so much as birds or trees, nor gras nor pasture, but onely stones, high, and most craggy mountains

The people for the most part used to dwell in Tents, alluded to by David Psalm 120. v. 5, which they removed from place to place as the pasture for their cattell failed them: taking no other care for houses than the boughs of Palm-trees to keep them from the heats of the Sun, and other extremities of weather. Hence by the Antients called Scenitæ, or men dwelling in Tents (in which respect the Jews call the Tartarians Kedarim, from the like course of life which these Kedareni or Arabians lived) but the name reaching into the other parts of Arabia also, where they use the same kind of living; of whom more anon.

Yet notwithstanding most memorable is this Countrey in sacred story, both for the dwelling place of Job, and the habitation of those Wise-men who came out of the East unto Hierusalem to worship Christ, the new-born King of the Jews. That Job was an inhabitant here, appeareth by the situation of his dwelling, being in the East, as is said in the Story of him, chap. 1. v. 3. that is to say, in the Countrey lying East to the Land of Canaan, as this part of it doth, and therefore called simply by the name of the East, as Judg. 6. 3. where by the Children of the East, are meant expresly the Inhabitants of Arabia the Desart, who together with the Midianites, and Amalekites, oppressed those of Israel. Secondly, by the ill neighbourhood which he found from the Sabæans, who inhabited in this part also; and of the Chaldæans mentioned v. 17. the next borderers to it: and Thirdly, by the inconsequences which needs must follow if we place him as some do, in the land of Vs, neer unto Damascus. For how improbable must it be for the Sabæans of the Red-Sea or the Persian gulf; or the Caldæans, dwelling on the banks of the River Euphrates, to fall upon Jobs Cattell grazing near Damascus: the Countries being dis-joyned by such vast Desarts, and huge Mountains, that it is impossible for any Strangers to pass them, especially with any numbers of Cattel, in respect of those large Mountains, deep Sands, and the extreme want of water in all that passage? And how impossible must we think it, that the pen-man of the story of Iob, who certainly was guided in it by the Holy Ghost, should be so mistaken, as to place Iobs dwelling in the East, if the Land of Vs wherein he dwelt bordered on Damascus; which lay not on the East, but the North of Canaan? A City called Vs, or Vz, there was situate neer Damascus, so called from Vz, the Son of Aram, Gen. 10. 23. A Land of Vz also amongst the Edomites, spoken of in the Lamentations of the Prophet Ieremie, chap. 4. v. 21. so called from Vz, one of the posterity of Esau, mentioned Gen. 36. 28 and finally, a Land of Vs, or Vz, so called from Hus the sonne of Nachor the Brother of Abraham, mentioned Gen. 22. 21. which is that situate in this Tract, the habitation and possession of that righteous man: the Countrey hereabouts being called Ausitis, and the people Ausitæ, though by mistaking in the transcripts, we find them named Αἰσῖται, or Æsitæ, in the fifth of Ptolomy. The like I say also of the Wise-men, or Magi, who came to Hierusalem from the East, that they dwelt in this Countrey, where the said Ptolomy placeth the City Sabe; according unto that fore-signified by the Royall Psalmist, that the Kings of Arabia and Saba should bring their gifts, Psalm 72. 10. Confirmed herein by the situation of the Countrey lying East of Canaan; the authority of those Fathers who lived neerest to the time of our Saviours birth, Justin Martyr, Tertullian, Cyprian, prian; and by the teſtimony of Guillandinus Melchior above-mentioned, affirming on the credible report of the people hereof, that they came neither out of Meſopotamia, or Arabia Feliz, as many wiſe-men doe believe, but out of Saba in Arabia the Deſart, which City (ſaith he) when my ſelf was there, was, as I judged, called Semiſcaſach.

Cities of note in a Countrey ſo deſart and uninhabited we muſt look for few; yet ſome there are, inhabited by a more Civill ſort of people, whom they call by the name of Moores, giving that of Arabian to thoſe onely, who live roming and robbing up and down. Ptolomy gives the names of forty Cities and villages in it (civitates & vicos ſaith the Latine) the memory of moſt of which is now utterly periſhed. Thoſe of moſt obſervation, 1. Sabe, or Saba, the habitation of thoſe Sabæans who pillaged Iob; ſo called from Sheba, the grand-ſonne of Abraham by Keturah, mentioned Gen. 25. 3. Of whom, and of the reſt of that line, it is ſaid, in the ſixt verſe of that chapter, that Abraham gave them gifts, and ſent them away from Iſaac Eaſt-ward, unto the Eaſt Countrey: now called Semiſcaſac, as is thought by Melchior. 2. Theman, which poſſibly may be the Countrey of Eliphaz the Themanite, one of the viſitants of Iob; As 3. Shuah, on the North hereof, was probably of Bildad, another of them, hence ſurnamed the Shuhite. 4. Tharſacus, by Pline called Aphipolis. 5. Zagmais, near the Perſian Gulf, in the Countrey of the Raubeni, ſuppoſed to be deſcended from Miſhma the fourth ſonne of Iſmael. 6. Phunion the 36th. 7. Oboth the 37th. manſion of the Children of Iſrael. 8. Rheganna, another of thoſe named by Ptolomy, in the Greek Copies called Eeganna. Of any Town of note now being more than this, and Semiſcaſac, before named, I find nothing certain.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Countrey, of whom there is any certain Conſtat, were the poſterity of Huz, the Sonne of Nachor, and the Sonnes of Abraham by Keturah, of whoſe being ſetled in theſe parts, we had before good teſtimony from the Book of God: and intermixt with them lived ſome of the deſcendants of Iſmael alſo. For if the Adubeni, whom Ptolomy calleth the Agubeni, fetch their originall from Adheel the third, and the Raubeni, from Miſhma the fift ſonne of Iſmael, as ſome ſay they doe; I ſee no reaſon but the whole Countrey might be called Kedar, from Kedar the ſecond Sonne, as well as from the tawny complexions of the people of it. From them deſcended the Tribes or Nations ſpoken of by Ptolomy, that is to ſay, the Orcheni, Chaucabeni, Auſitæ, Maſoni, Materni, and Agræi, beſides the Adubeni, and Raubeni, already ſpecified. But being a diſ-joynted people not under any ſetled form of Covernment, nor poſſeſſed of any thing worth looking after, they were either held not worth the conquering, in regard of their penury; or elſe unconquerable in reſpect of their Countrey, impaſſable for great Armies, by reaſon of the rolling Sands, and want of all things. Yet I conceive that lying ſo near to the Chaldæans, they followed the fortunes of that mighty Monarchy, ſubjects unto it whilſt it ſtood, and after Tributaries unto thoſe who ſucceſſively poſſeſſed themſelves of the Supreme power. Not looked at by the Romans, or regarded by them, who aimed at wealth as well as honour, in their expeditions: nor otherwiie ſubject to the Turk at this preſent time, than as they can make uſe of him and his protection in their frequent robberies. Though counted of as a part of the Turkiſh Empire, becauſe the more civill Arabians are indeed his ſubjects.

2. ARABIA PETRÆA.

ARABIA PETRÆA, (now called Barra, Baraab, and Barthalaba) hath on the Eaſt, Arabia Deſerta, and part of Sinus Perſicus, or the Bay of Perſia; on the Weſt, the Iſthmus which joineth Africa to Aſia, and part of the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; on the North, Paleſtine; and on the South, a long ridge of Mountains, which divide it from Arabia Felix.

It had this name either from the rockineſs of the ſoil hereof, or more properly from Petra the chief City of it, called alſo by Æthicus, Sicaria, but I know not why; by the Hebrews, Chus, generally tranſlated Ethiopia; by Willian of Tyre, Arabia Secunda, Felix being reckoned for the firſt. By Strabo, Ptolomy, and Pliny it is called Nabathæa, which name it had from Nabaioth, the eldeſt of the twelve Sonnes of Iſmael, though properly that name belonged only to thoſe parts which lay next Judæa: fruitfull though joining to the Deſarts; and thus remembred by the Poet, as an Eaſtern Countrey.

Eurus ad Auroram, Nabathæaque regna receſſit.
Eurus unto the Eaſt did flie,
Where fruitful Nabathe doth lie.

The Countrey much of the ſame nature with the other, but in ſome parts thereof more fertile if well manured: and in the time of Marcellinus, affirmed to be a rich land, flouriſhing with variety of trade and trafick. But for the moſt part full of untravellable Deſarts, except to thoſe which carry their proviſions with them for fear of ſtarving, and goe in great companies or Carvans for fear of robbing, and yet much travelled by Merchants who trafick into Egypt and Babylonia, the commodities whereof they lay on Camels, which are the ſhips of Arabia, as their Seas, the Deſarts. For upon one of theſe Camels, they will lay ordinarily 600. and ſometimes 1000. pound weight: yet not afford him water above once in four days, not oftner in fourteen, if there be occaſion. So that the Camel carrying ſo great a burden, and ſeldome fewer than 500 going in one voyage; the Merchant, if he ſcapeth robbing, makes a rich return. Of theſe Deſarts the moſt memorable are thoſe of Sin, and Pharan, in which the Iſraelites ſo long wandred: not beautified with graſs, nor adorned with trees, the Palm onely excepted; nor furniſhed with water but by rain or miracle.

The people of it for the moſt part deſcended of the ſonnes of Chus and Iſmael, intermixed with the Madianites dianites descending from Abraham by Keturah, and the Amalekites, descended probably from Amalek, the Grand-sonne of Esau, mentioned Gen. 36. but all united at the last in the name of Saracens. This name derived, as some think, from Sarra, signifying a desart, and saken which signifieth to inhabit, because they live for the most part in these desart places; as others say, from Sarak, signifying a Thief or Robber, agreeable to that of Arabia before delivered. This last most suitable to their nature, and best liked by Scaliger. Saraceni à vicinis dicuntur ab Elsarak, i. e. λῃστικοὶ, νομαδικοὶ, quod rapinis victitent. So he, in his second book de Emend. Temp. A people not reckoned of in the former times, till made remarkable by their conquest of a great part of the world; but alwaycs counted warlike and martial men. Of whom take this Character out of Marcellinus. "The Saracens (saith he) whom "we are neither to wish for our friends or enemies, are a martiall people, half-naked, clad as far as the "groin with painted Cassocks, ranging up and down on Camels, and swift horses, as well in peace as "troublesome times. Not used unto the Plough, to plant trees, or get their livings by tillage, they wander "from one place to another, without house or home, or any constant dwelling place, or the use of laws: "nor can they long endure the same either Air or Soyl, the manner of their lives being alwayes flitting; like "ravenous kites, which if they chance to spie a prey, snatch it up in their flight, or if they chance "to fasten on it as it lieth on the ground they make no long stay. Their food is chiefly upon "Venison, and store of milk, herbs which they gather from the ground, and birds which they "get by fowling; but altogether ignorant of corn and wine. Their wives they hire onely for a time, "though for a shew of Matrimony they present their husbands with a spear and a tent, as in way of "dowrie; but they part with them when they please. Both Sexts most extremely given to carnal lusts; "the women as rambling as the men, maried in one place, and brought to bed in another; leaving their "children where they fall, without more care of them. So farre, and to this purpose he.

Rivers of note here are not many. The principall are, 1. That called Trajanus amnis, or the River of Trajan, which passing thorow this Country endeth his course in the Red Sea. 2. Rhinocorura, called in Scripture the torrent of Ægypt, which rising in this Countrey, and passing by the borders of Idumæa, hath its fall in the lake of Sirbon, and together with the waters thereof, loseth it self at last in the Mediterranean.

With Mountains it is better stored, and those of eminent observation, as 1 Mount Sinai, famous in all ages, for the promulgation of the Law, and of late times for a Monastery of Maronites on the top thereof. The hill so high, that both shores of the Red Sea may be thence seen: but easie of ascent by reason of steps cut out of the rock: which notwithstanding, he that beginneth to go up it at the break of day, will hardly overcome the top of it till the afternoon. The Monastery made an Episcopall See, and formerly very well endowed, as appeareth by the letters of Eugenius Bishop hereof to the Arch-Duke Charles, Anno 1569. complaining that the Turk had sold all their lands, and that himself and the Monkes were fain to pawn their holy Vessells, and take up money on Usury. Here is also a Mesque or Mesquit of Turks, who resort in pilgrimage to this hill, as well as the Christians. 2. Mount Horeb, where the Israelites worshipped the Molten Calf, about a mile and an half distant from Mount Sinai, but not so high, on the top of which is a Church also; and a Monastery of Coloires, or Greek Monks, at the bottom; exceeding hospitable to strangers, whom they entertain of free cost, and cheerfully shew them all the places worth observation, which the Scripture mentioneth in that tract. Both hills by Ptolomy, called Melani, or the Black Mountains; the last now called Orel. 3. Mount Hor, bordering on Idumæa, and memorable for the death of Aaron.

Places of most observation, 1. Petra, the name-giver to this part, at first called Recem, and at that time belonging to Midian: afterwards called Serah when pertaining to the Idumæans. But falling under the power of the Arabians, it is now called Crat. Best known in holy Scripture by the name of Selah, before mentioned, which signifies the same with the Latine Petra. A City of great note and strength in all times foregoing, taken by Amaziah the King of Judah, 2 Kings 14. 7. and by him called Jock-beel, but in vain besieged by Scaurus, a Roman Generall, who finding the place to be impregnable, was content by the perswasion of Antipater, to take a sum of money and raise his siege. Nor did the Emperour Trajan speed much better at it, his Souldiers being still beat off in all their assaults, the very next man to him slain with a dart, and himself forced to cast away his Imperiall habit, and flie for his life: the heavens themselves, if Dion (who is never sparing of the like prodigies) may be believed, fighting against the Romans with thunder, lightning, whirlewinds, and tempests, as often as they made any approaches to it. But in the end subdued with the rest of the Countrey. In such esteem, by reason of the strength of it, by the Soldans of Ægypt, that they kept here their choisest treasures: and in the course of the Holy Wars, much aimed at by the Turks and Christians, as the key that opened the Gates of Palestine, on the South border whereof, not far from Mount Hor, beforementioned, the Town is situate. The Metropolis of the Province when first under the Romans; and made the Seat of a Latine Bishop, when the Christians of the West were the Lords thereof. 2. Bosra, said to have been built by Augustus Cæsar, because by him repaired, when decayed and ruined; afterwards by Alexander Severus made a Colony of the Romans. This last most certain, and for such testifyed by this antient inscription, in an antient coin, COL. BOSTRAN. T. R. ALEXANDRIANÆ: Memorable also for the birth of Philip the Emperour, one of that Alexanders next Successors; by whom it was caused for a time to be called Philippus; for the Metropolitan dignity removed hither from Petra, somewhat before the time of Justinian, but by whom I find not; and for being the Episcopall See of Titus (hence surnamed) Bostrenus, a Reverend Father of the Church in the time of Julian the Apostate. A City of as great antiquity as the most that be, mentioned Gen. 36. 33. though there accounted of as a City of Edom, to which at that time it did belong; and is still remaining, and well known by the name of Bussereth. 3. Elama, on a bay of the Red Sea, called hence Sinus Elaniticus, 4. Phara, reckoned by Ptolomy for a chief Town of this Tract, from whence the Wilderneſs of Paran ſeems to take its name. 5. Berenice, ſo called from ſome of the Queens of Ægypt, but better known by the name of Eſion-geber, one of the Stations or incampings of the Children of Iſrael; and made by Solomon the ordinary harbour for his Ships which ſailed to Ophir in the Eaſt-Indies. 6. Sur, the chief City of the Amalekites, giving name to the Wilderneſs or Deſart of Sur, comming cloſe up to it; remarkable for the firſt incamping of the Tribes of Iſrael after their miraculous paſſage over the Red Sea; and the defeat which Saul gave to the Amalekites, whom he ſmote from Havilah to this place. 7. Havilah, ſo called from Havilah the Sonne of Chus, being the furtheſt border of theſe Amalekites and Iſmaelites on the Gulf of Perſia, as Sur was on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia. 8. Madian, ſo called of Madian, the Sonne of Abraham by Keturah, ſituate towards the Red Sea alſo; the City of Jethro, whoſe daughter Zipporah was the wife of Moſes: who flying from the Court of Pharaoh King of Ægypt, was by Gods ſecret providence directed hither; that keeping the flocks of Jethro in the Deſarts adjoining, he might acquaint himſelf with the waies and paſſages, thorow which he after was to lead the houſe of Iſrael. 9. Rephaim, the incamping place of Moſes, where he diſcomfited the Amalekites; and to which the ſaid Jethro came to him with his wife and Children; adviſing him to eaſe himſelf of ſome part of that burden, which the government of ſo great a people would elſe bring upon him. 10. Kadeſh-barnes, the ſtation of the Tribes, when the ſpies which were ſent to diſcover the Land of Canaan, returned back unto them; memorable for the death of Miriam the Propheteſs; and 11, Thara, no leſs memorable for the mutiny and puniſhment of Corah, Dathan, and Abirom, the place remembred *Numb.*33. 27. but others will have 12. Makheloth, mentioned v. 25. of that Chapter, to be the Stage of that action; the Scriptures being ſilent in this particular. The reſt of their encamping places, being moſt of them in this part of Arabia, I omit of purpoſe, as obvious in the Scripture unto every Reader: as I do alſo ſome of the Cities of Moab and Ammon, accompted of by Ptolomy as Cities of this Province; but ſpoken of already in our Deſcription of Paleſtine, to which more properly belonging.

The old Inhabitants of this Countrey, were the Madianites, the Iſmaelites, the Amalekites, and the Children of Chus; who dwelling promiſcuouſly together, are ſometimes uſed for one another: the Merchants which bought Joſeph of his Brethren being indifferently called Midianites, and Iſmaelites, Gen. 37. 28. and Zipporah the wife of Moſes, who queſtionleſs was a daughter of Madian, being by Miriam, and Aaron, called an Ethiopian or Chuſite, as in way of reproach, Num. 12. 1. But being they were different Nations, and ſuch as had ſome ſpeciall ingagement with or againſt the Children of Iſrael; we will conſider them by themſelves, till we have brought them into one body, by the name of Chuſites, Hethiopians, or Arabians, which are all the ſame.

And firſt, the MADIANITES were ſuch of the poſterity of Madian, the ſonne of Abraham by Keturah, who preſerving the knowledge of the true God, withdrew themſelves from all communion with the idolatrous Canaanites, at ſuch time as the reſt of their brethren did aſſociate with them; and ſetled themſelves more towards the banks of the Red Sea; where they did all good offices to the children of Iſrael, as they paſſed thorow their Countrey. Of theſe the Kenites were a branch, as appeareth Judges 1. 16. where Jethro the Prince or Prieſt of Madian is called a Kenite: ſome of which turned Proſelytes, and dwelt with the Iſraelites in Canaan, of which race Heber the Kenite, the husband of Jael who ſlew Siſera, was undoubtedly one. The reſt, continuing mingled with the Amalekites, till the time of Saul, were by him warned (in memory of former curteſies) to withdraw themſelves from them; leſt they ſhould periſh with them in the ſame deſtruction. Afterwards we hear litle of either People, loſing their name in the greater Nation of the Iſmaelites, with whom intermingled; or paſſing with them into the ſame common notion of Arabians, Chuſites, or Ethopians.

2. Nor were the AMALEKITES, though a greater and more powerful Nation, of much more continuance: deſcended, as it is conceived, from Amalek, the Grand-ſonne of Eſau, (though I deny not but there are ſome reaſons to be urged againſt that opinion,) and planted on the back of the Edomites, as their Guard or outwork. A people miſchievouſly bent againſt thoſe of Iſrael, as if they had inherited the hatred which Eſau their fore-father did bear to Jacob, whom they violently ſet on at Rephidim, when they ſuppoſed them ſpent and wearied with their flight from Egypt. And though diſcomfited in that battel, yet they continued in their malice againſt the Tribes: and joyning firſt with the Canaanites againſt them when they were in their March; and after with the Midianites when not well ſetled in their new poſſeſſions. A provocation ſo ill-taken by the Lord of hoſts, becauſe unnatural, and ill-grounded, that he declared his reſolution from the time of the battel of Rephidim, to put out the remembrance of Amalek from under Heaven, Exodus 17. 14. Accordingly, when the Children of Iſrael were provided for it, he commanded Saul to ſet upon them, and to ſlay both man and woman, Infant and ſuckling, yea their ſheep and Cattel. But ſome of them eſcaped this ſlaughter, and fell not long after upon Ziglag, the retiring place of David, which they took and ranſacked; but being by him followed on the firſt intelligence, they were eaſily overthrown, and the prey recovered. Their malice yet ſurvived their power; and what they could not do by their proper forces, they endeavoured to affect by joyning with the Ammonites, Moabites, and other enemies of David, in their warres againſt him. And this was ultimum conamen, one of the laſt flaſhes of their dying light: nothing done by them worth remembrance of the times ſucceeding, moſt of the Nation being worn out, and thoſe few which were left, retiring to the Mountains of Edom; but thereof alſo diſpoſſeſſed by the Simeonites, during the reign of Hezekiah.

3. The

3. The ISMAELITES, descending from Ismael, the sonne of Abraham by Hagar, branched into twelve great Nations, and grown wondrous populous, spread themselves over a great part of these three Arabias: all of them either Theeves or Merchants; trading to Egypt, in spicery, and balm, and myrrhe, or robbing those which traded in the like commodities. Called also Hagarens in the Scripture, as 1 Chron. 5. 10. Psalm 83. 6. &c. and by that name well known to many of the antient writers. A people for the most part of a vagabond and roguish life, more given to spoyl, than any honest course of living, which made every Traveller and Merchant to be armed against them: so verifying the prediction which was given of Ismael, that he should be a wild man, having his hand against every man, and every mans hand against him. Saint Hierome so conceives that Prophecy to have been accomplished. More fitly verified perhaps, when in and under the name of Saracens, (by which, and by the name of Scenites, they were most generally known to the Greeks and Romans) they made such foul havock in the world, and were esteemed the common enemies of all Civil Nations. Never so governable in their best and most orderly times, as to acknowledge King or Law, till made one body with the Chusites, and the rest of these Nations: and then no further than it stood with their lust or liking.

4. As for the Chusites, though they permitted the Nations above specified to inhabit in those Desarts and wast places which themselves either could not people or cared not for: yet were they alwayes of most power, and gave name to that whole tract of ground containing now all Petræa, the South part of Deserta, and the Mountains which divide Petræa from Arabia Felix; which from them was called Chus, or the land of Chus. Rendred in all places of the old Testament by the name of Ethiopia, first by the Septuagint, and afterwards by all the Fathers Greeks and Latine, the Vulgar translation of the Bible, and almost all the other translations at this day extant. And rendred right enough at first, as in all times since, though by some mistaken: who having never heard of any other Æthopia than that in Africk, have transferred thither all those actions and Texts of Scripture, which are meant of this. The Septuagint, no doubt, were not so ignorant of the affaires of their next neighbouring Nation, as not to know by what name they were called by the Greeks, their then Lords and Masters. And he that looks into the History of Herodotus, who lived 150 years before that translation; will find, that by the Grecians they were called Æthiopians: and called so questionless from the self same reason, that is to say, the swarthyness, or Sun-burnt-ness, of their complexion, as the Æthiops of Africk were; that name being framed of the Greek word Αἴθω, signifying to burn, and ὄψ, a countenance, by reason of their tawny and Sun-burnt Countenances. For speaking of the huge Army of Xerxes against the Greeks, he doth thus proceed, Ἀρσάμην δὲ ἀπὸ Αἰθιόπων τῶν ὑπὲρ Αἴγυπτον οἰκημένων ἦρχε Ἀρσάμης &c. "Arsames (saith he) was Captain of "the Arabians (he meaneth the Troglodites) and Æthiopians which are beyond Egypt: but the Ea- "stern Æthiopians were ranked with the Indians, nothing differing from the other in the structure of their "bodies, but their hair and voice onely: the Eastern Æthiopians wearing their hair smooth, those of Libya "curled. The Æthiops of Asia were armed like the Indians, but the Æthiops of Africa were arrayed with "the skins of beasts. Here then we have an Asian Æthiopia in the time of Herodotus: the same acknowledged by Pausanias an old Greek writer, and by Philostratus after him, though they look for it in the wrong place; the first amongst the Seres in the North of Asia, the other on the River Ganges, too much in the East. Nor doth Æthicus one of the old Cosmographers; published by Simlerus, shoot more neer the mark, who speaking of the River Tigris, saith that it buryeth it self, and runneth under the ground in Æthiopia: Which though Simler doth interpret of these parts of Arabia; yet questionless that Author meaneth it of the Countreys about Mount Taurus, where that River doth indeed run under ground, and having passed under those vast mountains, riseth up again.

But what need further search be made to find out the situation of this Æthiopia, when it is bounded out so plainly in the holy Scriptures. For when it is said of Zipporah the wife of Moses, that she was an Æthiopian woman, Num. 12. 1. who is well known to have been a native of this Countrey; and when it is said in the 2 Chron. 21. 16. that the Lord stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the Philistims, and of the Arabians that were near the Æthiopians: it must needs be that the Æthiopia there spoken of must be conterminous to the rest of Arabia, and be intended of that Countrey wherein Madian was. So where God threatneth by the mouth of the Prophet Ezekiel, that he would lay wast the land of Egypt from the Tower of Syene even unto the borders of Æthiopia, chap. 29. 10. that is to say, from one end thereof unto the other: it followeth necessarily, that Æthiopia there meant, must be this part of Arabia, or the Land of Chus, as the bound of Egypt most remote from the tower of Syene, which all Geographers acknowledge to be in the extreme South parts thereof towards the Cataracts of Nilus. For to expound it as some do, of Æthiopia in Africk, on the borders whereof Syene stood, and stood so indifferently betwixt it and Egypt, that Stephanus an antient Writer makes it very doubtfull to which of the two it did belong; were to make the Scripture speak plain non-sence, as plain as if a man should say, that the French conquered all the Netherlands from Graveling to Flanders; or that the sword hath ranged over all England, from Barwick to Scotland. As then we have found this Æthiopia of the old Testament to be neer the Philistims on the one side, and the Land of Egypt on the other; so may we find it to be bounded also on the East, with Babylonia, or Chaldæa: the River Gihon, which is said to compass the whole Land of Æthiopia (or the land of Chus) Gen. 2. 13. being no other than a branch of the River Euphrates, which falleth into the Lakes of Chaldæa. So that the translation of the Septuagint in reading Chusitis, or the land of Chus, by Ethiopia, needs no such alteration or emendation as some men suppose. The mistakes (whereof there have been many) which arise from hence, not being to be charged on them or on their translation, but on the ignorance of the Reader, or errour of such Expositors, who dreaming of no other Æthiopia than of that in Africk, have made the Scriptures speak such things as it never meant, and carried these Chuſites into the African Ethiopia, where they never were. And yet perhaps it may be ſaid, that this poſterity of Chus, being ſtreitned in their own poſſeſſions, or willing to ſeek new adventures, might have croſſed over the Red-Sea or Gulf of Arabia (being but ſeven miles broad where narroweſt); and mingling with the Sons of Ludim on the other ſide, might either give the name of Æthiopians to them, or receive it from them.

Chusites

Now to go forwards with the ſtory, the firſt great action attributed to theſe Chuſites, or Arabian Æthops, incorporated with the reſt of thoſe mingled Nations, is the expedition of Zerah, the King hereof, againſt Aſa King of Judah, drawing after him an Army of a million, and three hundred Chariots of war (the greateſt Army ever read of in unqueſtioned ſtory) but for all that, diſcomfited by the Lord of hoſts, on the praiers of Aſa, and all the ſpoyl of that huge Army carried to Hieruſalem. After this Tirrakah, another of theſe Æthiopian Kings, finding how dangerous the great growth of the Aſſyrian Kingdome might prove unto him, prepared a puiſſant Army againſt Senacherib; then beſieging Libna, threatning the conqueſt of all Judah, and invading Egypt: upon the news of whoſe approach Senacherib's forces which were even upon the gaining of Peluſium, the Gate of Egypt, were fain to diſlodge and provide for their ſafety. For though Herodotus call Senacherib King of Arabia and Aſſyria, yet was he Maſter onely of thoſe parts of Arabia, which had been formerly poſſeſſed by the Kings of Iſrael, being no more than ſome few Cities of Petraa, bordering next unto them: or perhaps called ſo onely in reſpect of thoſe parts of Syria and Meſopotamia, which were ſometimes comprehended under the name of Arabia, as before is ſaid. What part they after took in the great war betwixt Nebuchadnezzar and Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, is not hard to ſay. For that beſides the ſame reaſons of ſtate obliging them to ſide with the Egyptian were ſtil in force; their giving Necho leave to paſs thorow their Countrey with his Army, to invade the Babylonian on the banks of Euphrates, make that plain enough. Now that both Tirrakah and Zerah, were Kings of this Aſian, and not of the African Æthiopia, is moſt clear and evident: partly in regard the Kings of Egypt would never ſuffer ſuch huge Armies to paſs thprow the whole length of their Dominions; but principally becauſe it is ſaid in the holy Scriptures, that Aſa having overthrown that vaſt Army of Zerah, ſmote all the Cities about Gezar, which formerly had belonged unto the Philiſtims, but were then poſſeſſed by theſe Chuſites and their Aſſociates. After this, either as Confederates or ſubjects, we find them aiding unto Xerxes in his war on Greece: and like enough it was that in Alexanders march from Egypt towards Perſia, they ſubmitted to him, as did all the other Countries thorow which he paſſed. He being dead, Antigonus, one of his great Commanders, ſent Athenæus with an Army to bring them in, who being trained into an ambuſh was diſcomfited by them; Demetrius the Sonne of Antigonus thinking that he had done enough in revenge of that overthrow, by compelling them to ſue for peace. In the time of the Selencian race in Syria, we find them governed by Kings of their own, moſt of them called by the name of Aretas; of which one was of ſpecial note in the declining fortunes of the Seleucidans, for bidding very fair for the Crown of that Countrey; another mentioned by Saint Paul, 2 Cor. 11. 32. as Lord of Damaſcus. In the flouriſhing of the Roman fortunes, the Kings hereof having firſt aided Mithridates and Tygranes in the warre againſt them, ſubmitted themſelves unto Lucullus, being then no neerer to them than Armenia Major. The like they did to Pompey alſo, being then in Judea. First vanquiſhed by Ælius Gallus in the time of Auguſtus; but the Victory not improved to an abſolute conqueſt, till the time of Trajan: when partly by his perſonall preſence, and partly by the valour and good fortune of Palma, his Lieutenant, they were fully vanquiſhed, and brought into the form of a Roman Province; but ſo that they had Kings of their own, (Vaſſalls and Feudataries of the Empire) as in former times; continuing in that condition till the riſe of Mahomet; of which more hereafter.

3. ARABIA FELIX

ARABIA FELIX is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Perſian; on the Weſt, with the Arabian Gulf; on the North, with a long ridge of mountains, which part it from Deſerta, and Petraa; and on the South, with the boundleſs Ocean. Environed on three parts with the Sea, on the fourth with rough, impaſſable mountains, in ſituation and figure much reſembling Italy.

It had the name of Arabia Felix from the fertility and happy condition of it, being eſteemed the moſt fruitful and pleaſant and Countrey in all Aſia, abounding with Myrrhe, Balſamum, Frankincenſe, Gold, and precious ſtones: by Curtius called Odorum fertilitate nobilis Regio, from the abundance of Frankincenſe wherewith enriched beyond all others. Concerning which there goeth a ſtory, that when Alexander in his Adoleſcency or boyage was ſacrificing to the Gods, and caſt into the fire with both hands great ſtore of Frankincenſe and Myrrhe; Leonidas, his Governour, bid him be more ſparing of thoſe precious and dear Commodities, till he was Maſter of the Countrey in which they grew. Which Alexander remembring, when he brought almoſt all the Eaſt under his obedience, he ſent unto Leonidas a ſhip laden with Frankincenſe, biding him from thenceforth ſerve the Gods more liberally. But aſwel for the reaſon of this adjunct, as a more perfect Character, and deſcription of it, take along this of Ammianus Marcellinus who deſcribes it thus. "On the Eaſt, and South hereof (ſaith he) are the Happy Arabians, ſo called becauſe ſo rich "in corn, aſwel as plenteous in cattel, vines, and odoriferous ſpices of all kinds; ſhut up betwixt the Red Sea, "and the Perſian Gulf, and ſo acquainted with all bleſſings, which either Element can afford: well fur- "niſhed with Roades, and quiet harbours for ſhipping, the Towns of Trade and merchandiſe ſtanding "very thick, the retiring houſes of the Kings, paſſing neat and ſumptuous. Beſides moſt wholeſome foun- "tains of medicinall waters, they enjoy divers Brooks and Rivers very cleer and pure, and a temperature "of Air exceeding healthy, ſo that whoſoever conſidereth all things aright, may well conclude, that there "is nothing wanting to the accompliſhment of its felicity in the higheſt degree. So Ammianus Marcelli-

"nus. To which we need adde nothing more to ſet forth its happineſs, than that Danæus in his comment on Saint Auguſtines Echiridion ad Laurentium, is perſwaded that it was the local place of Paradiſe. Dicitur (ſaith he) Paradiſi terreſtris Regio pars quædam eſſe Arabiæ, quæ nunc dicitur Felix. But it hath other names beſides this of Felix, by the Arabians themſelves called Jeman, and Al-jeman (Ayaman corruptly by the Turks) which in that tongue ſignifieth the South, or Southern Region. By Virgil it is named Panchaia, quaſi tota dehiſcens, becauſe of the many chops and chinks which the ardour of the Sunne makes in the ſands thereof, though by him much extolled alſo for its plenty of Frankincenſe,

Totaq; thuriferis Panchaia pinguis arenis,
Famed are the whole Panchaian lands
For rich and incenſe-bearing ſands.

The People antiently, though more civil than the reſt of the Arabians, had yet many ſtrange and barbarous cuſtomes. Adultery amongſt them was puniſhed with death, as in other places, but he onely was held an Adulterer, which enjoyed any that was not his own kinſwoman, be ſhe his Siſter or his mother, and ſo they kept themſelves in their own families, community of wives or woemen was eſteemed no crime. And of this there is a tale in Strabo, that a King of this Countrey had 15. ſonnes, and but one daughter, who according to the cuſtomes hereof, was the common wife of all the Brethren: every of which had a ſtaff of like making, which when he went in unto his Siſter he did leave at the door, and by ſo doing did forbid entrance to the reſt till it were removed. The young Lady wearied with a continual exceſs of dalliance, ſecretly procured a ſtaff like unto the reſt, which when ſhe was deſirous to prohibit their acceſſes to her, ſhe left at her chamber door; and by that means did many times enjoy her deſired privacy. At laſt it happned that all the Brothers being together, one of them departed towards his Siſters lodging; Where finding a ſtaff before the door, and knowing that he had left his brethren in one place together, accuſed her of Adultery: but the truth being made known, the Lady was quitted, and her viſits afterwards reſtrained. Of dead bodies, they took no care, not ſo much as of their Chiefs, or Princes, but left them to the cuſtody of the next dung-hil. They bragged much of their deſcent from Jupiter; and neglected all ſciences and arts, as diſparagements to ſo great nobility. Commendable onely in the keeping of their faith and promiſes, and in that moſt punctual. Much of the ſame condition are the preſent Inhabitants, ſave that leſs faithful in their contracts, and by their law reſtrained from the medling with the wives of others, permitted many of their own. Some there are of them which apply themſelves to the grazing of cattel, and the reſt to Merchandize, wherein very cautious, and cunning: but hating to this day all Mechanical Arts. A Nation from the beginning unmixed with others till the coming of the Turks amongſt them, of which but few, and thoſe diſpoſed of in garriſons: boaſting of their nobility, and glorying in nothing more than their greateſt ſhame, namely that the falſe Prophet Mahomet was their Countrey-man, whoſe impieties are here generally embraced and followed.

Amongſt the rarities of this Countrey, ſome account the Phœnix, which growing old burneth it ſelf in a neſt of ſpices, and from thence a young one is ingendred; one of them onely at a time, which after a life of five or ſix hundred years, thus reneweth her kind. But this tradition, queſtioned in former times by Pliny and ſome others, is now proved a fiction; contrary both unto divinity and natural reaſon, though ſome of the Fathers made uſe of it as an argument to prove the Reſurrection againſt the Gentiles, by whom the tradition was believed. More common, but of no leſs obſervation, is the Oſtrige, a Bird which ſwalloweth all it findeth, be it ſtones or Iron, They delight chiefly in the Deſarts, in the ſands whereof they lay their eggs, and then forgetting where they left them ſit on thoſe they meet next. In that reſpect accounted for a ſimple fowl, though otherwiſe of wit enough to preſerve themſelves, keeping in flocks, and oftentimes with their fearful ſhreeches affrighting Paſſengers, to whom they do appear a farre off like a Troop of horſemen. Their wings too little for their bodies, ſerve them not for flight, but to run more ſpeedily; and by that means not eaſily caught, though much laid in wait for, for their skins, which the people ſell unto the Merchant with the feathers on them. Nor of leſs note is the Frankincenſe, though of common uſe; almoſt peculiar to this Countrey, and here but to thoſe parts thereof which were formerly poſſeſſed by the Sabi, the wood out of which this gum proceedeth being about 100 miles long, and 500 broad; gathered onely in Spring and Autumn. More of this anon.

The Countrey is much commended by Ammianus for plenty of Rivers, the principal whereof are ſaid by Ptolomy, to be 1. Betus. 2. Prion. 3. Harman. 4. Lar; but the modern names thereof I find not. Many fair lakes, and ſtore of large capacious Baies on each coaſt of the Sea, as 1. Sinus Eliniticus. 2. Sachalites. 3. Leanites. 4. Sinus Magoram. 5. Sinus Iehthy-phagorum. 6. Meſſanites. 7. Sacer Sinus, or the holy Bay, and 8 the Road or Naval ſtation called Neogilla. Mountains of moſt note, 1. Thoſe which are called Melanes, at the entrance of the Perſian Gulf. 2. Cabubuthra, at the entrance of the Red Sea or Gulf of Arabia. 3. Hippus. 4. Prionotus, not far from the River Prion, from whence ſo denominated. 5. Climax. 6. The Mountains called Dedymi, &c.

Towns of good note in antient times it had very many, no Region affording unto Ptolomy the names of more; and amongſt thoſe, many commodious Ports for trafick, the Sea begirting it for the ſpace of three thouſand miles and upwards. Of moſt importance and obſervation in thoſe times were, 1. Zabrum, 2. Badæ, 3. Rhabana, 4. Carman, 5. Manambis, 6. Sabe, 7. Are; the Royal ſeats of ſo many ſeverall Kingdomes, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the title of Regia. Then there are 1. Macoſmos, 2. Meara, 3. Nagara, 4 Sabbatha, 5. Mapha, and 6. Saphar, which he called Metropoles; as being the head Cities of ſome ſeverall Nations. Amongſt the Ports, he reckoneth, 1. Soſippus, 2. Trulla, 3. Tretos, 4. Cryptus, 5. Itamos, and 6. Moſcha: amongſt the moſt noted Empories ports or Towns of Trafick, 1. Muſa, 2. Ocelis, 3. Arabia, 4. Cane. Beſides which there are ſome which do preſerve the memory of their firſt Plantations, as, 1. Saphta, upon the Perſian Gulf, ſo called from Sabta, the third Sonne of Chus. 2. Rhegama, or Regma (as the Greek copies of Ptolomy have it) ſo named from Regma or Raama his ſixt Soane; On the ſame Gulf alſo. 3. Sabe, on the ſhores of the Red Sea, and 4. Sabe Regia, more within the Land, ſo named from Seba the eldeſt Sonne of the ſame Chus, from whom the rich and potent nation of the Sabeans are to be derived. Out of all which, and many others by him named, we ſhall take more particular notice of ſome that follow. 1. Muſa, a noted Port on the entrance of the Red-Sea, frequented antiently by the Ethiopian and Egyptian Merchants, who there laded their ſhips, with Frankincenſe, Myrrhe, Spices, and other commodities of this Countrey, bringing in, in exchange thereof, Saffron, corn, wine, ointments, purple dies, &c. 2. Sabe, the Regal Seat of the Kings of the Sabeans, particularly of that Queen ſo memorized in holy Scripture: called in the old Teſtament the Queen of Sheba, from her Countrey and place of dwelling, in the New Teſtament, the Queen of the South, becauſe of the Southern ſituation of it in reſpect of Judea: ſaid there to come from the furtheſt parts of the world, becauſe there was no part of the world which lay ſouth to the Countrey of the Sabeans over which ſhe reigned. Situate on a little Mountain, aſſumed by Agatharcides to be πολὺ κάλλιστον ἅπ κατὰ τ' Ἀραβίαν, the moſt beautiful by far in all Arabia, and the Metropolis of the rich and potent Nation of the Sabeans; rich in all the excellencies of Nature, eſpecially in Frankincenſe, a gum peculiar to them only, and growing here in a wood of about 100 miles long, and 50 broad, not gathered but in the Spring and Autumn, nor then without great care, and many ceremonies. The Countrey hereabouts from hence called Thuriferæ, and this ſweet gum appropriated ſoly to it. Sabæi Arabum propter thura clariſſimi, as we find in Pliny, Solis eſt thurea virga Sabæis, as it is in Virgil; and finally—Thuriferos, felicia Regna, Sabæos, in the Argonauticks of Valerius Flaccus. It was called alſo Mariaba, and by that name occurreth in ſome antient Writers. 3. Saphar, more towards the Perſian Gulf, on the South-ſide of the mountain Climax, the chief City of the Homeritæ; adorned in times of Chriſtianity with a beautifull Temple. 4. Sabbatha, or Sabota, as Pliny calleth it, ſeated about the middeſt of the Countrey, on the top of an high and lofty hill, from whence it had a gallant proſpect on the fields adjoyning; antiently large and populous, and ſtrongly fortified, having no fewer than 60 Temples within the walls, the principal that conſecrated unto Sabis, the God of their Nation, to whom they offered the tith of their Frankincenſe, ubi decimas Deo quem Sabin vocant, menſura non pondere capiunt Sacerdotes, as we read in Pliny.

But theſe and almoſt all the reſt being grown out of knowledge, there have riſen in their rooms, 1. Egra, on the ſhore of the Red Sea, neer the Bay called Sinus Elaniticus, by Ptolomy called Arga, by the Arabians themſelves, Algiar, the Port Town to Medina, from which about three daies journey diſtant. 2. Jatrib, or Jathrib, in the way betwixt Aygiar, and Medina, the birth-place of Mahomet; by whom fortified with a mud-wall as his place of retreat in the firſt beginnings of his fortunes. 3. Medina, or commonly called Medina Talnabi, corrupty for Medinatho-Inabi, that is to ſay, the City of the Prophet, ſo called from the Sepulchre of Mahomet, that vile Impoſture, which is there to be ſeen; although not in ſuch an iron coffin, or drawn up to the roof of the Temple by vertue of an Amant there placed, as ſome deliver. The Town ſituate in a deſolate and barren place, bordering on Arabia Petræa; but of great trade, rich, and well inhabited: the Sepulchre of that falſe Prophet drawing thither a continuall reſort of Pilgrims. The Temple gorgeous, having 3000 lamps in it, which burn continually. The Sepulchre or Tomb incloſed within an Iron grate, but of no magnificence or beauty: covered with a carpet of Green Velvet, which is ſent hither yearly by the Grand Signeur, the old one being taken off, and cut into innumerable ſhreds or peeces, and ſold for Relicks by the Prieſts, (to ſuch as come in Pilgrimage thither) to their great enriching. 4. Cufa, the ordinary reſidence of the firſt Caliphs, till the removing of the Imperiall Seat to Damaſcus in Syria; and after that, the uſuall place of meeting for conſultation in affairs of State, relating to the peace of this Countrey, and the common intereſt of this People: as memorable for the Sepulchre of Mortis Hali, the Progenitor of the Perſian Sophies, as Medina is for that of Mahomet. 5. Meccha, ſuppoſed to be the Mechara of Ptolomy, ſituate in the like barren ſoyl, not far from Medina, but of far greater reſort and trafick: the whole wealth in a manner of this Countrey, together with the commodities of Perſia, and India, being firſt brought hither, and from hence on Camels backs tranſported into Ægypt, Syria, Paleſtine, and other parts of the Turkiſh Empire. Unwalled, and either for that cauſe or for concealement of their fopperies from the eyes of Chriſtians, it is made death for any Chriſtian for to come within five miles of it. Utterly deſtitute of water, but what they keep in ciſternes from one ſhewer of rain to another, or elſe brought thither with great charge; otherwiſe pleaſantly ſeated, rich, and containing about 6000 families: every year viſited with three Caravans or troops of Merchants and Pilgrims, from India, Damaſcus, and Grand Caire: who having done their buſineſs and devotions there, go afterwards in Pilgrimage to Medina alſo, to the great enriching of both places. 6. Ziden, the Haven Town to Mecca, from which diſtant about 40. miles, ſituate on the Red Sea, in a ſandy ſoyl, unwalled and much expoſed both to wind and weather, but wealthy, well-built, and of great reſort. 7. Zebit, now the Metropolis of the Countrey, ſituate about half a daies journey from the Red Sea, in a large plain between two mountains; a Riveret of the ſame name paſſing by it, well-traded for Sugars, ſpice, and fruits; the ordinary reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbe, by whom taken not longer after Aden. 8. Eltor, a Port Town of this Countrey, where the Chriſtians are ſuffered to inhabit. 9. Aden, on the very entrance of the Red Sea, neer the Streights called Babe'-Mandell, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Madoce of Ptolomy, but more agreeing in ſituation, with the famous Emporie by him called Arabia. The faireſt Town of the whole Peninſula, of great ſtrength, both both by Art and Nature, well-traded, and well-fortified, having a large capacious Haven, seldome without good store of shipping, and containing to the number of six thousand persons. Once a distinct Kingdome of it self, but treacherously surprized by the Turks, Anno 1538. and therewith all the rest of the Countrey made afterwards the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, under whom, and him of Zebit, are supposed to be no fewer than thirty thousand Timariots. 10. Oran, the Lock and Key of the Southern Ocean. 11. Thema, or Theman, the same I take it, which our later travellers call Zeman, situate more within the land, affirmed by Benjamin the Jew, surnamed Tuledensis, to be a Town of 15 miles square, but to have within the walls thereof great quantity of ground for tillage. 12. Zarval, a retiring place of the Caliphs, when they lived in this Countrey. 13. Hor, on the point or Promontory called Chorodemus, a Garrison not long since of the Kings of Ormus. 14. Muskahat, on the Persian Gulf, neer the point of Land called Cape Rozelgate; opposite to Surat, in the East India, and possessed by the Portugals, who have fortified it with a well-built Castle, for defence of their ships and Frigots which frequent those Seas. Of no great note till the taking of Ormus by the Persians, many of the Inhabitants whereof were since setled here. Of the affairs of this Countrey we shall speak anon; having first took a brief view of the Ilands which belong unto it.

4. THE ARABICK ILANDS.

The ILANDS which lie round about the shores of Arabia Felix, and have been antiently accompted as parts thereof, are dispersed either in the 1. Red-Sea, 2. Southern Ocean, or 3. the Gulf of Persia.

1. The RED-SEA, (called also by the Antients Sinus Arabicus, and now Golfo di Mecca) is that part or branch of the Southern Ocean which interposeth it self betwixt Egypt on the East; Arabia Felix and some part of Petræa on the West; the North-East bound of it touching upon Idumæa, or the Cost of Edom. Extended in length from the Town of Sues, antiently called Arsinoe, in the bottom of it, to the streights of Babel-Mandel, where it openeth into the Southern Ocean, for the space of one thousand and four thousand miles, in breadth for the most part but one hundred, but in some places almost two: the Streights themselves not being above a mile and an half; antiently chained by the Kings of Ægypt, as is said by Strabo, but now left open by the Turk, who is Lord hereof. A violent and unquiet Sea, full of sands and shelves; insomuch as they who passe in and out, are fain to make use of Pilots which dwell thereabouts, and are experienced in the channel. Sufficiently famous in all times and stories for the miraculous passage of the Children of Israel.

It took the name of the Red-Sea, as some conceived, from the redness of the sands; as others have delivered, from the redness of the waters: but later observations have discovered the weakness and absurdity of these Etymologies; the Sea and Sands being coloured here as in other places. By the Grecians it was called Erythræum, which in that tongue signifieth Red also, not from the colour either of the sands or waters, but from one Erythras supposed to be the Sonne of Perseus and Andromeda, who commanded the Eastern shores hereof. And these come neerer to the mark than the others did. For the truth is, it was originally called the Sea of Edom, because it took beginning on the coasts of that Countrey: which word in the Hebrew, signifying Red, as appeareth Gen. 25. 30. first given as a nick-name to Esau, and from him afterwards to Mount Seir, or the Land of Edom, Gen. 36. 31. was by the Greeks rendred Erythræum, and Mare Rubrum by the Latines. Whence the name of the Red Sea became known to all, but the reason of the name to few.

Of the great trafick which was antiently driven up this Sea, we shall speak hereafter, when we are in Egypt, on the other side of it. Look we now on the Ilands which belong to Arabia, as they all generally do. Known in the times of Ptolomy by the names of 1. Adani, 2. Æni, 3. Are, 4. Cardamine, 5. Combusta, 6. Damanum, 7. Hieracum, or the Isle of Hawkes, 8. Maliaci, 9. Polbii, 10. Socratis, 11. Timagenis, and 12. Zygæna. But by what names now called, and of what note then, is a thing so doubtfull, that I dare not offer a conjecture. Late Travellers report almost all of them to be small, desolate, or but meanly inhabited, described by them under other names. One there is of indifferent largeness, said to be an hundred twenty and five miles long, though but twelve broad, called Dalaqua, with a City in it of that name, where they gather Pearls. 2. Then there is Camaran, most extremely hot, of most note for the many spoils there made by the Portugals. 3. Xamoa, the earth whereof is said to be Red, (perhaps to countenance the vulgar tradition of calling this the Red Sea from the colour of the sands or shores) and the King a Moore. 4. The Samaritan Iland, spoken of by Scaliger, inhabited by a remainder of that people; who assoon as they saw any stranger land upon their coasts, would most religiously desire him not to touch them.

II. The SOUTHERN OCEAN comprehendeth that vast body of waters, which from the Eastern banks of both Æthiopia's, coast along on the South of Arabia Felix, and so directly East-ward to the furthest India: in this regard called by some Writers Oceanus Indicus, by others Mare Australe, from the situation; and by some also Mare Rubrum or the Red Sea, from Erythras a great King (as they suppose) reigning hereabouts, and giving name not onely to the Red Sea (or Gulf of Arabia) strictly and specially so called, but to all the Sea-coasts also from the opening of the Bay of Arabia to the coasts of India, by them called Mare Erythræum.

In this vast Ocean Ptolomy placeth many Ilands which belong to Arabia, but of little note, viz. two Ilands by the name of Insulæ Agathoclis. 2. Three more by the name of Cocconati. 3. Dioscoris, by Pliny called Dioscurias, with a City of the same name in it. 4. Seven others in the Bay called Sinus Sachalites Sachalites, by the name of Zenobii. 5. Organa, by Strabo called Tyrrina, memorable for the Sepulchre of Erythras before mentioned, being a great Hill planted with trees. 6. Sarapias, by Ammianus Marcellinus called Turgana, famed for a Temple of Serapis, the Egyptian Idol. None of them now of any Credit, nor formerly of any great note, the two laſt excepted.

III. On the Eaſt-ſide of Arabia Felix, betwixt it and Perſia, lieth another large Arm of the Southern Ocean, antiently called Sinus Perſicus, or the Bay of Perſia, now Golfo di Elkadiffe. A turbulent and unruly Sea, the Southern Ocean breaking in at the one end, and the River Euphrates at the other: the continual combatting or claſhing of which two great waters, makes it ſo unquiet. Ptolomy placeth in this Bay (but as parts or members of Arabia,) 1. Tylus, which Arianus ſets at the mouth of Euphrates, Solinus in the Indian Seas, affirming it to be well ſtored with vines, and olives: another of this name being placed by Theophraſtus in the Bay of Arabia (but probably the place miſtaken) affording good materials for ſhipping. 2. Apphana. 3. Tharo. 4. Ichara; of which nothing memorable. To theſe ſome late Travellers have adjoyned two others, if not ſome of the former under thoſe new names, that is to ſay, 5. Bayren, and 6. Gonſiar, where they take the beſt Pearles in the World, in beds of Oiſters. Other Ilands of this Bay (if any) do belong to Perſia: where, if occaſion ſo require, we ſhall ſpeak more of them.

To return therefore to the main-land of Arabia-Felix, the firſt Inhabitants thereof were the ſonnes of Chus, and the families which they brought with them. Their memories preſerved in the names of ſome of the chief Towns and Nations, till the dayes of Plinie, Ptolomy, and ſome others of the antient writers. Divided afterwards into the ſeverall Tribes or Septs of the Caſſanitæ, Cinædocolpitæ, Homeritæ, Adramitæ, Eleſari, Salchalitæ, Anaritæ, Gerræi, Ægæi, Sabæi, Minæi, Leanitæ, Cattabani, Abuceni, and divers others: each governed ſeparately and apart by their ſeveral Chiefs; whom they honoured, as in other places, with the name of Kings. One of which ſpoken of by Juſtine, named Hierotimus, is ſaid to have been the Father of 500 Children. Eaſie to have been overcome, becauſe ſo divided, if any potent neighbour had attempted the conqueſt of them: as it is wondrous ſtrange they did not, conſidering the richneſs of the Countrey, and the many temptations which it had to invite them to it. More worthily deſerving the name of Felix in that never conquered, than in all the other rarities and delights thereof. By Alexander once deſigned for the ſeat of his Empire, who probably had endeavoured the conqueſt of it, having finiſhed his warre againſt the Perſians, had he not died in Babylon at his coming back. Nor did the Romans ever extend their Empire beyond Petræa, though once Auguſtus did attempt it, employing in that action, Largus, his Lieutenant in Egypt, one Samos being then King of thoſe parts which lay neereſt to him. The Romans at their firſt entry found no reſiſtance. But when by the extraordinary heat of the air, and drinking ſalt waters, they began to grow diſeaſed and ſickly; the Arabians fell luſtily upon them, and made them return back both with loſs and ſhame. After this nothing done by the Romans to diſturb their quiet; nor much done by the Chriſtians to advance their glories: the whole divided into almoſt as many Religions as Principalities and Eſtates. Moſt of them Gentiles, but Circumciſed, as the Iſmaelites and other Arabians had been of old; many Jews intermingled with them, and ſome ſtore of Chriſtians, but thoſe divided alſo into Sects and factions. And in this ſtate it ſtood, when Mahomet firſt began to broach his blaſphemous dotages. By birth of Jathripp, an obſcure village then, not far from Medina; his Father called Abdilla, an Idolatrous Pagan; his mother named Hemina, as perverſe a Jeweſs. Deprived of both his Parents when but two years old, he was left unto the care of an Uncle: who not able to give him education, not willing to be at the charge to keep him longer, ſold him at ſixteen years of age to the Iſmaelites, by whom expoſed to ſale in the open markets, he was bought by one Abdulmutalif, a wealthy Merchant. By him employed at firſt in drudgery, and ſervile offices, till noting his great wit, and fitneſs for better ſervices, he at laſt uſed him as his factor, ſending him with his Camels and loads of Merchandize, into Syria, Perſia, Egypt, and other places: wherein he did behave himſelf with ſuch dexteritie, that he much increaſed his Maſters wealth, and his own eſtimation. Of perſon he is ſaid to be low, and withall ſcald-headed; but otherwiſe comely to the eye, and of good aſpect. Much troubled with the falling ſickneſs, which infirmity he made good uſe of afterwards, affirming that thoſe fits were nothing but heavenly raptures, in which he did converſe with the Angel Gabriel. He is ſaid to have been alſo well skilled in Magick, by which he taught a white Pigeon to feed at his ear, which he gave out to be the Holy Ghoſt, by whom inſtructed in the law which he was to publiſh: but this not till afterwards. By Sorceries, comelineſs of perſon, and the great knowledge which he had in his maſters buſineſs, he gained ſo farre on the affections of his Miſtreſs, that on the death of Abdalmutalif, ſhe made him her husband. Poſſeſſed of all his maſters wealth, he affected eaſe; and being till then of no Religion, or at beſt a Pagan, he began to harken unto Sergius, a Neſtorian Monk, who flying out of Syria for fear of puniſhment (the hereſies of Neſtorius being newly both revived and cenſured) came into Arabia, where he found entertainment in the houſe of Abdalmutalif, the Maſter of Mahomet. By his perſwaſions, who found him a fit Inſtrument for the devil to work on, he began to entertain the thoughts of hammering out a new Religion, which might unite all parties in ſome common principles, and bring the Chriſtians, Jews, and Gentiles, into which the world was then divided, under one Profeſſion. Reſolved on this, he retired himſelf unto a Cave not farre from Mecca, as if he there attended nothing but meditations: Sergius in the mean time ſounding in the ears of the people, both his parts and piety. The people being thus prepared to behold the Pageant, out-comes the principal Actor with ſome parts of his Alcoran (pleaſing enough to ſenſual minds) which he profeſſed to have received from the Angel Gabriel. And finding that this edified to his expectation, he next proclaimed liberty to all ſlaves and ſervants as a thing commanded him by God, by whom the natural liberty of mankind was moſt dearly tendred: which drew unto him ſuch a rabble of unruly people, that without fear of oppoſition, he diſperſed his doctrines, reducing them at laſt to a book or method.

The Book of this religion he calleth the Alcoran, that is to ſay, the Collection of Precepts: the Originall whereof they feign to be written on a Table which is kept in Heaven, and the Copy of it brought to Mahomet by the Angell Gabriel. A Book ſo highly reverenced by the Mahometans, that they write upon the cover of it, let none touch this but he that is clean. The body of it (as it now ſtandeth) was compoſed by Oſmen the fourth Caliph; who ſeeing the Saracens daily inclining to divers hereſies, by reaſon of ſome falſe copies of Mahomets Lawes; and that the Empire by the ſame means was likely to fall into civill diſſention; by the help of his wife, who was Mahomets daughter, he got a ſight of all Mahomets papers, which he reduced into four Volumes, and divided into one hundred twenty and four Chapters; commanding expreſly upon pain of death, that that book, and that onely, ſhould be received as Canonicall, through his Dominions. The whole body of it is but an expoſition and gloſs on theſe eight Commandments.

1. Every one ought to believe that God is a great God; and one onely God, and Mahomet is his Prophet. They hold Abraham, to be the friend of God; Moſes the meſſenger of God; and Chriſt the breath of God: whom they deny to be conceived by the Holy Ghoſt, affirming that the Virgin Mary grew with child of him by ſmelling to a Roſe; and was delivered of him at her breſts. They deny the myſtery of the Trinity; but puniſh ſuch as ſpeak againſt Chriſt, whoſe Religion was not (they ſay) taken away, but mended by Mahomet. And he who in his pilgrimage to Mecca, doth not, comming or going, viſit the Sepulchre of Chriſt, is reputed not to have merited, or bettered himſelf any thing by his journey.

2. Every man muſt marry to encreaſe the Sectaries of Mahomet. Four wives he alloweth to every man, and as many Concubins as he will: between whom the Husband ſetteth no difference either in affection or apparrell; but that his wives onely can enjoy his Sabbaths benevolence. The women are not admitted in the time of their lives to come into their Churches; nor after death to Paradiſe: and whereas in moſt or all other Countries, Fathers give ſome portions with their daughters, the Mahometans give money for their wives; which being once paid, the contract is regiſtred in the Cadies book, and this is all their formality of Mariage. More of this theme we ſhall ſpeak when we are in TRECOMANIA.

3. Every one muſt give of his wealth to the poor. Hence you ſhall have ſome buy ſlaves, and then manumit them; buy birds, and then let them flie. They uſe commonly to free Priſoners, releaſe bondſlaves, build caves or lodgings in the waies for the relief of Paſſengers, repair bridges, and mend highwaies. But their moſt ordinary almes conſiſt in ſacrifices of Sheep or Oxen, which when the ſolemnity is performed, they diſtribute among the poor; to whom alſo, on the firſt day of every year, they are bound to give the tith or tenth part of their gettings in the year fore-going: inſomuch that you ſhall hardly find any beggers amongſt them.

4. Every one muſt make his prayers five times a day. When they pray they turn their bodies towards Mecca, but there faces ſometimes one way, ſometimes another way, believing that Mahomet ſhall come behind them, being at their devotions. The firſt time is an hour before Sun-riſing; the ſecond at noonday; the third at three of the clock after noon; the fourth at Sun-ſetting; the fift and laſt, before they go to ſleep. At all theſe times the Cryers keep a balling in the ſteeples (for the Turks and Saracens have no bells) for the people to come to Church. And ſuch as cannot come muſt when they hear the voice of the Cryers, fall down in the place where they are, do their devotions, and kiſs the ground thrice.

5. Every one muſt keep a Lent one moneth in a year. This Lent is called Ramazan, in which they ſuppoſe the Alcoran was given unto Mahomet by the Angel Gabriel. This faſt is only intended in the day time, the law giving leave to frollick it in the night as they beſt pleaſe, ſo they abſtain from Wine, and Swines fleſh, prohibited by their Law at all times, but never ſo punctually abſtained from, as in the time of their Lent.

6. Be obedient to thy Parents; which law is the moſt neglected of any; never any children being ſo unnatural as the Turkiſh.

7. Thou ſhalt not kill; and this they keep unviolated among themſelves; but the poor Chriſtians are ſure to feel the ſmart of their fury. And as if by this law, the actual ſhedding of bloud only were prohibited, they have invented puniſhments for their offenders, worſe than death it ſelf. As firſt the Strappade, which is hanging of them by the arms drawn backwards: when they are ſo bound, they are drawn up on high, and let down again with a violent ſwing, which unjoynteth all their back and armes. Secondly, they uſe to horſe up their heels, and with a great cudgell to give them three or four hundred blowes on the ſoles of their feet. Thirdly, it is ordinary to draw them naked up to the top of a Gibbit or Tower, full of hooks; and cutting the rope to let them fall down again. But by the way they are caught by ſome of the hooks, where they commonly hang till they die for hunger.

8. Doe unto others as thou wouldeſt be done unto thy ſelf. To thoſe that keep theſe Lawes he promiſeth Paradiſe, and a place of all delights, adorned with flowry Fields, watered with Chryſtalline Rivers, beautified with Trees of gold, under whoſe cool ſhade, they ſhall ſpend their time with amourous Virgins, whoſe manſion ſhall not be far diſtant. The men ſhall never exceed the age of thirty; nor the women of fifteen; and both ſhall have their virginities renewed as faſt as loſt.

Fryday he ordained to be the Sabbath-day, partly to diſtinguiſh his followers from the Jewes and Chriſtians, who ſolemnize the daies enſuing; but principally becauſe he was on that day proclamed King or Emperor, and ſolemnly ſo created. Wine and Swines-fleſh are the principall things forbidden by the Alcoran, the laſt whereof they unanimouſly refrain; but on the firſt they are ſo ſotted, that when they come at

it

it, they ſeldome go home again unled; inſomuch that all the wines in Conſtantinople have been thrown about the ſtreets, and death made the penalty for any that will preſume to bring any more into the City. Mahomet taught them that every one ſhould be ſaved by his own Religion; him onely excepted that revolted from the Alcoran, unto another law; but ſo that under the notion of Religion, he means onely ſuch as worſhip the one and onely God; excluding by that means the old Idolaters of the Gentiles from the hopes of ſalvation. And he taught too, that at the end of the world all men that profeſſed any ſuch Religion, ſhould go into Paradiſe, the Jews under the banner of Moſes, the Chriſtians under the banner of Chriſt, and the Saracens under the banner of Mahomet. They compel no man therefore to abjure the faith in which he was born, but commend and approve ſecretly ſuch as they find zealous and conſtant in their own Religion, yet holding it an eſpecial honour to have daily new proſelytes, they incite them by hope of freedome and preferment, which with many are motives too much prevailing. Hence I have heard many ſay, that it is better for a man that would enjoy liberty of conſcience, to live in the Countries profeſſing Mahometaniſm, than Papiſtry: for in the one he ſhall never be free from the bloody inquiſition; in the other he is never moleſted, if he meddle not with the Law, their women, or their ſlaves.

The opinions which they hold concerning the end of the World are very ridiculous: as that at the winding of a horn, not all fleſh onely, but the Angels themſelves ſhall die; that the Earth with an Earthquake ſhall be kneaded together like a lump of dough; that a ſecond blaſt of the ſame horn, ſhall after fourty dayes reſtore all again; that Cain ſhall be the Captain or ring-leader of the damned, who ſhall have the countenance of dogs and ſwine; that they ſhall paſs over the bridge of Juſtice, laden with their ſinnes in ſatchels; that the great ſinners ſhall fall into hell, the leſſer into purgatory onely; with a thouſand of the like fopperies; which it is needleſs to add here, conſidering that the Alcoran it ſelf is now extant in the Engliſh, and every one that liſts may read it. A thing ſo full of tautologies, inchoærencies, and ſuch groſs abſurdities, of ſo impure and carnal mixture, that he muſt lay aſide the uſe of his natural reaſon, who is taken by it, if force, ambition, or the want of Chriſtian education do not lead him on. For if we ſeriouſly look into the cauſes of the deplorable increaſe and long continuance of this Religion, we ſhall find them to be chiefly theſe, 1. The Greatneſs of the Victories gotten by the Saracens; who eaſily compelled the conquered Nations to receive their Law. 2. The great zeal and diligence of the Arabians themſelves, who being a numerous People, and much given to Merchandiſe, have poſſeſſed themſelves of all the Sea-coaſts of Africk, from the ſtreights of Babel-Mandel, almoſt as farre as to the Cape of good hope; of all the Ilands in thoſe Seas, and many Factories and good Towns on the coaſts of India: in all which they have ſetled their Religion alſo, as a thing inſeparable from their Nation. 3. A peremptory reſtraint of all diſputation in any point of Religion whatſoever it be. 4. The ſuppreſſing of Philoſophy, and the ſtudy of Humane Sciences; the light whereof might eaſily detect the groſſeneſs of their Superſtitions. 5. The ſenſual liberty allowed of having variety of wives, and as many Concubines as they are able to keep. 6. The promiſe of the like ſenſual pleaſures in the other world, with which a ſenſe not illuminated with the Spirit of God, doth for the moſt part uſe to be more affected, than with the ſpeculative hope of ſpirituall happineſs. 7. The forbiding of Printing and printed Books, by which the People might come to ſee the verity and purity of the Chriſtian faith; the falſhood and impurity of the Law of Mahomet. Theſe laſt not uſeful, or at leaſt not able to induce belief, if the firſt had not opened and prepared the way.

For indeed force of Armes was the ſtrongeſt Argument by which Mahomet himſelf confirmed, and his Succeſſors in their times have ſince propagated and diſperſed his doctrines. Strengthened by the reſort of that raſcal Rabble which repaired to him, he aſſaults Medina, pretending a quarrel to the Jews, who had there a Synagogue. Repulſed at firſt with loſs of men, and a wound in his face, by which ſome of his fore-teeth were beaten out, there likely to have made an end of his new Religion, if not recovered by his Souldiers for a further miſchief. At the next onſet he prevailed, the battel being fought neer a place called Bedez, ſituate betwixt Mecca and Medina, frequently mentioned in the Alcoran. After which fight he took the City, converting the Synagogue to a Temple for his own impieties: the news whereof ſo ſtartled the Phylarchy, or nobility of Mecca, that they armed all their powers againſt him, and ſped ſo well in the beginning of the warre, that they drove him forcibly from their territories, which not long after he ſubdued, and ſet his chief ſeat at Mecca. From that his flight, the Saracens began their computation of years (as we from CHRISTS Nativity) which they call the Hegira; which beginneth about the year of our Redemption 617. concerning which time, I cannot but obſerve, that Mahomet compiled his deviliſh doctrine, beginning his Empire; and Boniface the third aſſumed his Antichriſtian title, beginning his unlimited Supremacy, nigh about the ſame year. It was called the Hegira, from the Arabick Hegirathi, which by the learned in that tongue, is rendred by διωγμὸς ἐφ' ἡμᾶς ἐγερθείς, i.e. the perſecution raiſed ab ut Religion. Joſeph Scaliger in the firſt edition of his moſt laborious work de emendatione temporum, caſteth off this Etymology with purum putum mendacium. He will not have it called Æra fugæ or perſecutionis, but Æra Hagarene: becauſe forſooth the Arabians were by ſome called Hagarens. I believe it would have puzled Joſeph, with all his reading, to ſhew unto us any Epoche or Æra, which is taken from the name of a Nation. And therefore other reaſon he giveth us none but this. Nos autem ſcimus vocem illam primogenia ſignificatione ab Hagarenis, non à fuga duci. But time, and oppoſition, at the laſt reclamed him from this error: and in the ſecond edition of his work, he is content to follow the common opinion of thoſe men, whom in the firſt he whiſtled off with the infamous appellation of mendaces.

But to proceed, It hapned much about this time, that the Saracens revolting from Heraclius the Eaſtern Emperour, joyned themſelves unto him. They had long been diſpleaſed with their condition; and now hoped to mend it. Exaſperated by Julian the Apoſtate, when they ſerved in his warres againſt the Perſian, for telling them when they demanded their pay, that he had more ſtore of Steel than Gold: but then they wanted a fit head to reſort unto. Now ſerving Heraclius in the ſame warre, they were uſed by his Officers in the ſame ill manner. Asking their pay, the Treaſurer of the Army made them this churliſh anſwer, that there was ſcarce money enough to pay the Roman and Grecian Souldiers; and muſt thoſe dogs be ſo importunate for their wages? Provoked herewith, and hearing the fame of Mahomet, they betook themſelves to him: who ſtrengthned by their forces, and the coming in of the reſt of their Countrey-men, ſoon brought the three Arabias under his ſubjection. To which, having defeated the Emperors forces ſent againſt him, he added ſome parts of Syria and Egypt; and returning to Mecca, there dyed frantick and diſtempered, in the 70th. year of his Age, and three and twentieth of his impoſtures: of which he had ſpent thirteen at Medina, and the reſt at Mecca; from his firſt ſerling in which City the years of his Empire were computed. His dead body being kept four daies in expectation of a reſurrection, which he promiſed to perform at the end of three; grown full of ſtench and putrefaction, was carried to Medina, and there intered: his Succeſſors out of wicked and worldly policy, keeping up the reputation of that Religion after his deceaſe, which they derided in his life; and calling themſelves Caliphs, or Vicars Generall, to him, their Prophet, to the Catalogue of which we haſten; made intricate, not more by their own confuſions, than by the difference of thoſe names by which they are preſented to us by ſeverall Writers, according to the times and Languages in which they writ.

The Caliphs or Emperours of the Saracens.

A.C.	A.H.
622	5	1. Mahomet the Impoſtor, of whom before.
632	15	2. Ebubezer, or Uquebar, Mahomets Father-in-Law, and one of his Great Captains, ſupplanted Ali, to whom the Empire was deſigned by the will of Mahomet; and took unto himſelf the name of Caliph. 2.
634	17	3. Haumar, the ſecond of Mahomets Great Captains, having the command of the Army under Ebubezer, ſucceeded him in the eſtate; and added to it Perſia, Egypt, Paleſtine, with great part of Syria and Meſopotamia. 12.
647	30	4. Oſmen, the third of Mahomets great Captains, Husband of Zeineb, his ſecond daughter; ſucceeded under that pretence, and added all Barbary to his Empire. Diſtreſſed by the faction of Hali, and beſieged in his own houſe, he ſlew himſelf, in the eighty ſeventh year of his Age, and the tenth of his Reign.
657	40	5. Hali, the Kinſman and next heir of Mahomet, and the husband of Fatime his eldeſt daughter, ſucceeded on the death of Oſmen: murdered by the procurement of Muavias neer Caſa in Arabia Felix.
660	43	6. Muhavias, having murdered Hali, his Sonne Haſem or Oſſan, and eleven of the Sonnes of that Haſem, the twelfth onely eſcaping with life (from whom deſcended the Family of the Alaveci, and the Perſian Sophies) aſſumed the Government as rightfull Succeſſor to Oſmen, whoſe widow, the daughter of Mahomet, he had took to wife. He conquered Rhodes, Cyprus, and a great part of Aſia Minor, and was the Founder of the Family of Aben Humeya.
681	64	7. Gizid, the Son of Muhavias, more skilled in Poetry than in Armes.
		8. Habdalla and Marvan, Competitors for the Supreme dignity; but carried at laſt by Marvan.
685	68	9. Abdimelech, the Sonne of Marvan, eſtabliſhed the begun conqueſts of Armenia and Meſopotamia 22.
707	90	10. Vlidor Vlit, under whom the Saracens or Moors firſt conquered Spain. 9.
716	99	11. Zulcimin, Brother to Vlit, whoſe Captain Mulſamas beſieged Conſtantinople, till his Ships were burnt, and his men conſumed with the Plague. 3.
719	102	12. Homar or Haumar II. Son of Vlidor Vlit 2.
721	104	13. Izit, or Gizid II. the brother of Haumar, with whom during his life he was joynt Caliph, and after his deceaſe enjoyed it wholly to himſelf.
725	107	14. Evelid, by ſome called Iſcham, in whoſe time Charles Martel made ſuch havock of the Moores in France Anno 734. their General then named Abderamen. 18.
743	125	15. Gizid III. the Son of Gizid the ſecond.
744	126	16. Hyces, by ſome called Ibrahim, the brother of Gizid the third, ſlain by Marvan.
745	127	17. Marvan II. the laſt of the houſe of Ben-Humeya, ſlain by Abdalla, of the houſe of Fatime and Hali. 7.
752	134	18. Abdalla, of the houſe of Alaveci, or Alabeci, deſcended from Hali, and Fatime, the eldeſt daughter of Mahomet: called alſo the Family of Abas, becauſe of their deſcent from Abas the Uncle of Mahomet, and perhaps Father unto Hali.
756	138	19. Abdallas II.
		20. Mahomet II. ſurnamed Bugiaſer, or Abugefer, who built the City of Bagdat, made from that time the conſtant ſeat of his Succeſſors till their fatall period.
777	156	21. Mahadi. 9.
786	168	22. Muſa, or Moyſes. 1.

787. 169. 23. Aron, or Arachid, who compelled Irene Empreſs of Conſtantinople to pay him tribute. 23.
810. 193. 24. Mahamad, or Mahomet III.
825. 198. 25. Abdalla III. who took and ſpoyled Crete, and overthrew the Greeks; he ſpoiled Sicilia, Sardinia, and Corſica. 17.
832. 215. 26. Mahomet IV. waſted Italy, burnt the ſuburbs of Rome, and haraſſed the fore-named Ilands. 40.

Others reckon theſe Caliphs to have ſucceeded Mahomet II.

863. 245. 32. Motadi Bila 7. After whoſe death the Ægyptians with-drew themſelves from their obedience due to the Babylonian Caliph, and choſe one of their own, to whom all the Arabians, or thoſe of the Mahumetan religion, in Africa and Europe, ſubmitted themſelves. Of the Ægyptain Caliphs, when we come into that Countrey: take now with you the names onely of the Syrian and Babylonian Caliphs; for ſtory of them I find little or none; the power being totally in the hands of the Sultans of the ſeverall Provinces, and nothing left unto the Caliphs but an aiery title; the ſhadow of that mighty Tree, which formerly had ſpread it ſelf over moſt parts of the World.

		20. Muſtenatzer.
1255	638	21. Muſtatzem, the laſt Caliph or High-Prieſt of the Saracens of Bagdet, or Babylon, living in the accompt of a Prince or an Emperour, or looked on as the Supreme Lord of the Saracen Empire: ſtarved in his Caſtle of Bagdet, and his whole poſterity rooted out, by Allan, or Halon the Tartar, in the firſt year of his reign. Yet there is ſtill remaining a carcaſs of the old body, one whom they call Caliph, at whoſe hands the neighbour Princes uſe to receive their Diadems and regalities: ſo we find Solyman the magnificent, after his conqueſt of Chaldæa, Meſopotamia, and Aſſyria, to have been by one of theſe poor titulary Caliphs, Crowned King of Babylon, Anno 1513.

This unwieldy body of the Saracen Empire, having thus two heads, began apparently to decline: loſing to the Kings of Leon and Oviedo, the greateſt part of Spain; to the Genoeſe, Sardinia, and Corſica; to the Normans, Naples, and Sicily; and finally moſt of their Empire, with their very names, to the Turks and Tartars. For Allan, or Haallon, a Tartarian Captain, ſtarved Muſtatzem the Babylonian Caliph, in his Tower of Bagdet, and rooted out all his poſterity: and Sarracon the firſt Turkiſh King of Egypt, brained the laſt Ægyptian Caliph with his horſemans Mace; leaving not one of his iſſue or kindred ſurviving. The office of the Caliphs is now executed in the Turks Dominion, by the Mufti or chief Prieſt of the Turkiſh Mahometans.

As Mars ſhewed himſelf a friend unto thoſe Moors in their warres and triumphs; ſo alſo did Phœbus powre down no leſs celeſtial influence, on ſuch as addicted themſelves to Scholarſhip. Bagdet in Chaldæa, Cairoin, Feſs, Morocco, in Barbary, and Corduba in Spain, were their Univerſities: out of which came the Philoſophers, Avicen, and Averroes; the Phiſicians, Rhaſis, and Meſue; the Geographers, Leo, and Abilfada; & almoſt all the Textuaries & profound Writers (as Hali, Algazel, Albumazar, &c.) in Aſtrology; from whom a great part of our Aſtronomicall and Aſtrologicall termes are borrowed.

There is now no Kingdome, Iland or Province, which acknowledgeth the Empire of the Saracens, but the Kingdome of Feſs and Morocco ovely: Arabia it ſelf, the very firſt ſeat of their power, acknowledgeing a ſubjection to the Turkiſh Empire. For firſt Petræa and Deſerta being ſubdued by the Turks, when they conquered Perſia, or otherwiſe following the fortunes of the preſent Victor, were afterwards accounted of as ſubject unto the Mamalucks of Egypt, who out of that Countrey and all Syria, had by degrees diſſeized the Selzuccian Family. And as the vaſſals of that Crown, though but Subjects at will, they more moleſted Selimus in his march towards Egypt, by falling on his Rear, and terrifying him with their night-Alarms, than all the forces of the Mamalucks in the field againſt him. But Egypt being ſubdued, and the Mamalucks utterly deſtroyed, ſome of their Chiefes being gained by money, and the reſt by promiſe miſe of preferment, the whole Nation of theſe wild Arabs ſwore alleageance to him; continuing in accompt as Subjects unto his Succeſſors, but in effect doing what they liſt: governed as formerly by the Chiefes of their ſeverall Clannes, and in their Robberies taking no more notice of the Turk than they do of the Chriſtians. And as for Felix, it continued alſo in a free condition, in reſpect of any forein power, till of late times the Turks and Portugals entrenched upon them. For in the year 1538. Solyman Baſſa, Admirall of the Turkiſh Fleet againſt the Portugals, who had diverted the trade of the Red Sea, and otherwiſe given offence to Solyman the Magnificent by aiding the Perſians, went with a ſtrong Army to take Diu, a Town and Iland of East-India, then in their poſſeſſion. But being unable to effect it, at his coming back he called in at Aden, one of the beſt traded Ports of Arabia Felix, invited the King thereof aboard, moſt trecherouſly hanged him, and ſurprized the City. The like he alſo did to the King of Zibit, the Port Town to Mecca: and by that means got poſſeſſion of all the Coaſts of this Countrey, bordering on the Red Sea, or Gulf of Arabia; of which the Turks ſtill continue Maſters. But in the inland parts, and towards the Perſian Gulf, of no power at all; not ſuffered to travell up and down without a Paſs from ſome of the Arabian Chiefes, or if they do, in danger to be ſet upon by the Natives, who brook them not. Some parts hereof which lie next unto the Iſle of Ormus, made one Kingdome with it; but the Kings originally of this Countrey, by whom the City of Ormus was firſt builded; and ſo continued till the taking of Ormus by the Portugals, Anno 1622. who ſince the taking of that Iſle by the King of Perſia, hold Muskahat, and ſome other peeces upon this Continent. The reſidue of the Countrey cantonned amongſt a company of petit Princes, as in former times; before ambition taught them to devour one another.

And ſo much for Arabia.

6. CHAL-

6 CHALDÆA, 7 ASSYRIA, 8 MESOPOTAMIA.

THese Provinces, which properly and originally constituted the Assyrian Empire, I have joined together in the Title, because united in the story, and affairs thereof; though severally to be considered in the description, and Chorographie of them.

CHALDÆA is bounded on the East, with Susiana, a Province of Persia; on the West, with Arabia Deserta; on the North, with Mesopotamia; and on the South, with the Persian Bay, and the rest of Deserta. Originally called Chasdim, from Chesed the fourth Son ne of Nachor the brother of Abraham. Chesed quoq; quartus est, à quo Chasdim, id est Chaldæi postea vocati sunt, as Saint Hierome hath it. But why the Chaldeans should derive their name from Chesed, being a People long before Cheseds birth, I am not able to determine: unless he taught them the first Principles of the Art of Astronomy; or was the Author of some signall benefit unto them, which we know not of. It was called afterwards Babylonia, from Babylon the chief City of it; and at this day by Bellonius, Azamia; by the Arabians, Keldan; by the Turks, Curdistan.

But the name of Chaldæa sometimes went beyond these bounds, taking in some part also of Mesopotamia, as appeareth by that passage of Saint Stephen, saying, Acts 7. v. 2, 3, 4. That the God of glory appeared to our Father Abraham, when he was in Mesopotamia, before he dwelt in Charran; And said unto him, Get thee out of this Countrey, and from thy Kindred, and come into the Land which I shall shew thee. Then came he out of the Land of the Chaldees, and dwelt in Charran, &c. Where clearly that part of Mesopotamia which lay next unto Assyria, where then Abraham was, is included under the name of Chaldæa, or the land of the Chaldees. Which I desire the Reader to take notice of, because I must make use of this observation in another place.

The Countrey by Herodotus said to be so fruitful that it yielded ordinarily two hundred, and in some places three hundred fold; the blades of wheat and barley being (as he affirmeth) four fingers broad. By Pliny it is said of the Babylonians, that they mowed their corn twice, and seeded it a third time, or else it would be nothing but blades: and yet so, that the worst of their land yielded fifty, and their best an hundred fold increase. Nor is the nature of the soyl so altered in long tract of time, but that (as late Travellers have observed) it would in all likely-hood attain to its first fertility, if it were ordered with like care and diligence, as in former times. But what need more be said as to the natural fruitfulness and delights of this Countrey, than that it pleased Almighty God to make choice of some part hereof for the terrestrial Paradise or Garden of Eden, in which he placed our Father Adam, at his first creation. For here that Paradise, by men both skilled in Divinity, and Geography, is affirmed to have stood. Yet amongst all sorts of Writers we find different opinions. Some make Paradise to be a place of pleasure, and the four Rivers to be the four Cardinal Vertues: but these allegories on the Scripture are not warrantable. Others place it in the air, under the circle of the Moon; and tell us that the four Rivers in the Scriptures mentioned, fall down from thence, and running all under the Ocean, rise up again in those places, where they are now found: but this is so vain a foppery, that I will not honour it with a confutation. Such as make Paradise local, are divided also into three ranks, (for I omit the rest) whereof some place it under the Æquator; but this agreeth not with the bounds prescribed by the Holy Ghost. Some conceive the four Rivers to be Tigris, Euphrates, Nilus, and Ganges; and that Paradise was the whole world: but this cannot be, for then when Adam was driven out of Paradise, it must also follow that he was driven out of the world, which were absurd. Those of the soundest judgements place it here, in an Iland which is made by the Rivers Tigris and Euphrates, and some branches running from them both: the uppermost of which is called Pison (falsely rendred Ganges) which watereth the land of Havilah, or that part of the land of Havilah which is now called Chuzestan or Susiana, a Province of Persia containing Susiana; and the lowermost is named Gihon, (improperly by some translated Nilus, which compasseth the East parts of Arabia Petræa, by the Septuagint for the reasons above-mentioned, rendred Ethiopia. And this agreeth both with the position of this Countrey, and the course of those Rivers. For that Tigris, and Euphrates (which the Hebrew text called Hiddekel, and Perah) do here join their streams, is confessed on all sides. Then as for Pison, it is no other than that River by Ptolomy called Basilius, or Regius; by Curtius more neerly Piso-Tigris, or Pasi-Tigris, Pervenit ad fluvium, Pasitigrin incolæ vocant, as his own words are. A little stream, which watering the Land of Havilah, or the Countrey of the Chavelei, or Chaulasei, or Chaulterei (for by these severall names they are called amongst the antients, who place them betwixt the Babylonians, and the Nabathæans, an Arabian People) powreth it self into the Tigris, and falls together with it in the Gulf of Perſia. And finally for Gihon, by Ptolomy called Maarſares, and by others Marſyas, it is no other than a branch of Euphrates, which watering the Land of Chus, or Ethiopia Aſiatica, take which name you will, loſeth it ſelf at laſt in the Lakes of Chaldæa.

But though in generall the Countrey was extremely fruitfull; yet in ſome places was it covered with a ſlimy matter, which the overflowings of the waters, and the nature of the ſoyl together, did bring forth abundantly. Uſed by them in their buildings inſtead of morter, than which more durable and binding; and therefore choſen for the cement of the Tower of Babel, *Gen.*11.3. Some alſo tell of a clyff which opening ſendeth out ſuch a ſtink that it killeth birds as they flie over it: and others of a like open place neer a Town called Ait, which continually throweth out boyling pitch (named therefore Hell-mouth by the Moores) filling therewith the adjoining fields; and that herewith the people uſe to pitch their boats. But this is in ſome places onely, the Countrey generally being both healthy and delightfull, as before was ſaid.

The people antiently were much addicted unto Sooth-ſaying and Divinations; and no leſs noted for being Authors of the firſt Idolatry that was ever practiſed in the world. Induced unto the laſt perhaps by the power of their Kings, who would needs confer divine honours upon ſome of their Anceſtors. But to the firſt inclined by their own diſpoſition, and the ſituation of their Countrey, yielding a fair ſenſible Horizon, (for the Rationall is alike in all places both in hills and valies) and conſequently profitable to the obſervation of the riſing and ſetting of the Stars, whether Heliacal, Acronicall, Matutine, or Veſperline, as the Artiſts phraſe it. Whereunto may be added the length of life in thoſe elder times, furniſhing them with the greater meaſure of experience concerning the diſtinct motions of each ſeverall Orb, and the full period of the courſes of each ſeverall Planet. Certain it is, that they grew ſo noted in this Art, that at the laſt every Aſtrologaſter, or figure-flinger, was called a Chaldæan: Gentis nomine ad eos homines tranſlato, qui ſeſe illius ſapientiæ ſpecie venditabant, as Beza hath obſerved in his Annotations. For giving too much credit to them, the people thus flouted by the Satyriſt.

Chaldæis ſed major erit fiducia, quicquid
Dixerit Aſtrologus, credent à fonte relatum
Ammonis, &c.

That is to ſay,

Joves Oracles no greater credit have,
Than Sooth-ſayings of a Chaldee cozening knave.

The language which was ſpoken here had the name of the Chaldee or Chaldæan tongue: of great antiquity, and ſanctified by the Holy Ghoſt, ſome Chapters of the prophecy of Daniel being written in it. So different from the Hebrew in its primitive purity, that the Jewes did not underſtand it, as appeareth by the words of the Officers of Hezekiah, 2 Kings, chap. 18. ver. 26. deſiring Rabſaketh to ſpeak to them in the Chaldee tongue, that the common People of the Jewes might not hear his blaſphemies. A further proof whereof may be, that a man may have ſome knowledge in the Hebrew, and yet be ignorant of the Chaldee, as many are, no doubt, at this preſent day. But whatſoever it was in its primitive purity, it altered afterwards, when the Jews came to live amongſt them during the Captivity: out of whoſe long commerce with them, both nations loſt their proper languanes, and fell upon a third, made out of both, which was called the Syriack. Of this we ſpake before when we were in Syria, and Paleſtine. And this is now the naturall language of this Countrey, and its neighbour Aſſyria, but with a little mixture of the Greek and Arabick, not vulgarly ſpoken elſewhere, for ought I can find; but uſed by many others, in their ſacred offices, by whom not commonly underſtood. For in this language all the Sects of the Eaſtern Chriſtians do officiate their publick Liturgies, that is to ſay, the Neſtorians, Jacobites, Maronites, (for I reckon not the Melchites, who uſe the Greek Liturgie, amongſt the Sectaries.) The like do alſo the Indians, or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas; the Cophties or Chriſtians of Ægypt, and the poor remainder of Chriſtians in the Iſle of Zocatara, an Iſland on the coaſt of Africk. Uſed to thoſe Liturges when that language was more underſtood amongſt them; though now worn out of Vulgar knowledge by the overſpreading of the Arabick, Tartarian, and Turkiſh Conqueſts. In which the Prelates of theſe Churches have fallen into the great errour of the Church of Rome: and without taking notice of the alterations hapning in the Vulgar tongues of thoſe ſeverall nations, which are united under them into one opinion, keep up a language in their Liturgies which they underſtand not: as if the capacities of the people could be ſooner raiſed to the underſtanding of an unknown language; than the publick Liturgies be fitted unto their capacities. The antient piety of the Church and the modern languages of Gods people are not inconſiſtent; though out of private ends ſome have taught us otherwiſe. But I fear this errour (as ſome others) will not be ſo eaſily remedied, as reprehended. From the tongne in which they celebrate the Divine Offices of their Religion, paſs we to the Religion it ſelf, whoſe Sacred Offices are ſo celebrated.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached in this Countrey by Saint Peter, of whoſe being in Babylon, (the chief City hereof) himſelf aſſureth us in the laſt words almoſt of his Firſt Epiſtle: and other buſines he had none here but to preach the Goſpell. Much perſecuted by the Perſians, (who were then poſſeſſed of all theſe parts) it prevailed at laſt, Chriſtianity growing up the faſter for the cutting down. The Patriarchall See, originally planted in Seleucia, ſucceſſour unto Babylon in repute and greatneſs, if not alſo in name, the Biſhop whereof, by order of the Nicene Councill, had the Eccleſiaſticall juriſdiction of theſe parts with the name of Catholique, and the next place in Seſſion at all publick aſſemblies of the Church, next after the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. And beſides this the Indians or Chriſtians of Saint Thomas, acknowledge him for their Primate or Metropolitan; politan; as they did afterwards in his right, the Patriarch of Muzal. At this preſent here are ſome remainders of Chriſtianity, part of them Jacobites, but the moſt Neſtorians; of whom more anon.

Of the chief Rivers hereof we have ſpoke already, and Mountains there are none to hinder us in our paſſage forwards. So that without more delay we may take a view of their principall places. And in the firſt place we meet with Babel, (in the Hebrew ſignifying confuſion) famous for the confuſion of languages which here hapned. For immediately after the Univerſal deluge, Nimrod the ſonne of Chus, the ſonne of Cham, perſwaded the people to ſecure themſelves from the like after-claps, by building ſome ſtupendious Edifice, which might reſiſt the fury of a ſecond deluge. This Counſel was generally imbraced, Heber onely and his Family, (as tradition goeth) contradicting ſuch an unlawful attempt. The major part prevailing, the Tower began to rear a head of Majeſty, 5146 paces from the ground: having its baſis and circumference equal to the height. The paſſage to go up, went winding about the outſide, and was of an exceeding great breadth, there being not only room for horſes, carts, and the like means of carriage, to meet and turn; but lodging alſo for man and beaſt, and (as Verſtegan reporteth) graſs and corn-fields for their nouriſhment. But God beholding from an high this fond attempt, ſent amongſt them (who before were of one language) a confuſion of tongues: which hindred the proceeding of thisbuilding, one being not able to underſtand what his fellow called for.

2. Babylon, on the Bank of Euphrates, the antienteſt City in the World, on this ſide of the flood, firſt built by Nimrod, in the place deſtinated to the raiſing of the Tower of Babel, and by him made the Seat of his Kingdome; afterwards beautified and enlarged by Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, one of his Succeſſors; and finally much increaſed both in bulk and beauty by Nabuchadnezzar, who therefore arrogated to himſelf the whole glory of it, ſaying in his pride, is not this the great Babel that I have builded? Dan. 4. 30. A City of great fame and ſtate, accompted one of the worlds nine wonders, and deſervedly too.

The compaſs of the walls 365 furlongs, (or 46. miles) according to the number of the dayes in the year; in height 50. Cubits, and of ſo great breadth, that carts and carriages might meet on the top of them: fmiſhed in one year by the hands of 200000 workmen, employed dayly in it. Situate on both ſides of Euphrates, over which there was a ſumptuous bridge, and at each end of that bridge a magnificent Palace: and beautified alſo with the Temple of the Idol Bel, and famous for the Penſile Gardens, made with great charge, and born up with moſt ſtately Arches. In a word, ſo great and vaſt it was, that Ariſtotle ſaith, that it ought rather to be called a Countrey, than a City: adding withall, that when the Town was taken, it was three dayes before the furtheſt parts of the Town could take notice of it. Which taking of the Town muſt be underſtood of the ſurprize thereof by the Medes and Perſians; and not of the taking of it by the Macedonians, as Pet. Ramus (as great a Clerk as he was) in his marginal notes upon the Politicks of that Author, hath moſt vainly told us. Which whether it were that there were Gates at the end of every ſtreet, which made it be ſo long in taking; or that the Babylonians were not wakened from their drunken feaſt, in the time whereof it was ſurprized, I determine not. Revolting in the time of Semiramis, the news came to her as ſhe was ordering her hair: whereupon, leaving her head half-dreſt ſhe went and beſieged it; never ordering the reſt of her hair, till ſhe had recovered it. How it fell into the hands of Cyrus, we learn out of Xenophons Cyri-paideia, which was in this manner. The River Euphrates ran quite thorow the Town, round about whoſe banks the politick Prince cut many and deep channels: into which when the Babylonians were ſecurely merry at a general feaſt, he ſuddenly drained and emptied the River, conveying his own forces into the Town all along the dry and yielding Channel; and in a little time made himſelf maſter of it. From the Perſians it revolted in the reign of Darius Hyſtaſpes: and that ſuſtenance might not be wanting to the men of warre, they ſtrangled the moſt part of the women, being thought in actions of this quality, not ſo much as neceſſary evils. When they had for twenty moneths ſo obſtinately defended the Town, that the Perſians had leſs hope than ever of prevailing; Zopyrus one of Darius Captains, mangling his body, and disfiguring his face by cutting off his noſe and ears, fled to the Babylonians, complaining of the tyranny of his King. They crediting his words, and knowing his proweſs, commited the charge of the whole army unto him, as a man, to whom ſuch barbarous uſage had made the King irreconcilable. But he taking the beſt opportunity, delivered both the Town and Souldiers into the hands of his Soveraign. Which made Darius often ſay, that he had rather have one Zopyrus, than twenty Babylons. Here died Alexander the Great, after whoſe death the Grecian Captains regardful rather of their own ambitions, than the common loyalty, divided the Empire among themſelves; leaving the body of the King 8 dayes unburied. A wonderful change of fortune, that he who living thought the world too ſmall for his valour, being dead ſhould find no place big enough for his body. After this taking of it by the Macedonians, the glories and magnificence hereof began to decline, leſſned unto a fourth part in the time of Qu. Curtius the hiſtorian; in ſolitudinem redacta, reduced to deſolation in the dayes of Pliny; and being turned into a Park, in which the Kings of Perſia did uſe to hunt, in the time of Saint Hierome. That wondrous change occaſioned partly by the injury of time, partly by the neglect of the Macedonians, who removed the Seat Royal of their Empire more towards Greece; but principally by Seleucus Nicanor, who offended with the Babylonians, built the City of

3. Seleucia, the ſecond City of note in all this Countrey, ſituate in a place more commodious and healthy, neer the meeting of Tigris, and Euphrates, and about 40 miles more North than Babylon, out of which he drew 500000 perſons for the peopling of it. Nor did this new City rob the old onely of its power and greatneſs, but alſo of its very name; being called Babylon in ſome of the antient Authors; Βαβύλων περσικὴ πόλις, Μητρόπολις, Σελευκία καλυμένη, as (for one) by Stephanus. In the primitive times of Christianity, the Biſhop of this See was accounted for the Primate of the Chaldæans; with a ſuper-intendency over the Chriſtians of India alſo, as before was ſaid. But this Supplanter was in time brought to ruin alſo, And

4. Bagdad, a new City raiſed from the ruins of it; built neer the foundations of Seleucia by Bugiaſer the twentieth Caliph of the Mahometans, at the expence (as ſome write) of eighteen millions of Crowns; which becauſe of the many Gardens contained in it had the name of Bagdad, the word ſo ſignifying in the Arabick tongue. Firſt built upon the Weſtern bank of the River Tigris neer to its confluence with Euphrates; but in the year 1095. removed to the other ſide of the River, by Muſtetaher, the 45 Caliph of the Saracens, becauſe leſs ſubject to the inundations of that furious River. But it was reckoned ſtill for the ſame City, as if built by Bugiaſer, by whom being made the ſeat of his Royall Reſidence, (whoſe Succeſſors were from hence called the Caliphs of Babylon) it flouriſhed in great pride and ſplendour, till taken and taked by Allan, or Haalan a Tartarian Captain, who here ſtarved Muſteatzem, the laſt Caliph of it, and rooted out his whole poſterity, as if the Caliphate and the City were to end together. But the Town revived again, though the Caliph could not; continuing to this day a City of great wealth and trafick, but nothing comparable unto what it was for beauty and bigneſs; being not above ſeven miles in compaſs, and having nothing in the buildings to be juſtly bragged of. Taken by Solyman the Magnificent with the reſt of the Countrey, it became ſubject to the Turks; from them recovered by Abas the King of Perſia, Anno 1625. and again recovered by the Turks, about the year 1640. In which changes it can be no marvell that ſhe hath loſt much of her former ſplendour. Maintained eſpecially at the preſent by the trade of Aleppo, to which, beſides ſuch goods as go up the water, there paſſe yearly many Caravans, or troops of Merchants, each of them having in it ſome hundreds (if not thouſands) of Camels laden with commodities. For whoſe ſafe lodging, as they paſs (the waies being generally ill provided for Travellers, in theſe Eaſtern Countreys) there are ſome houſes of receipt built at the publick charge, or by ſome ſpeciall Benefactor, to preſerve his memory; moſt of them ſtrong, and many very fair and lovely: which in the dominions of the Perſians they call Caravane-Ruwes; in the Turkiſh, Canes. And for communicating the ſucceſs of their buſineſs unto the place from whence they came, they make uſe of Pigeons, which is done in this manner. When the Hen-Pigeon ſitteth, or hath any young, they take the Cock, and ſet him in an open Cage: whom, when they have travelled a daies journey, they let go at liberty, and he ſtrait flieth home to his Mate. When they have trained them thus from one place to another, and that there be occaſion to ſend any advertiſements, they tie a letter about one of their necks, which at their return home is taken off by ſome of the houſe, advertiſed thereby of the eſtate of the Caravan. The like is alſo uſed betwixt Ormus, and Balſora. But of this enough.

5. Cteſiphon, on the River Tigris, not far from Seleucia, by whoſe fall it roſe; occaſioning the decay thereof, as that did of Babylon. So Pliny, ſpeaking of the fall of Babylon, by the building of Seleucia ſo neer unto it; then adding, invicem ad hanc exhauriendam, Cteſiphontem juxta tertium ab ea Lapidem condidere Parthi. Firſt built, ſaith Marcellinus, by Vardanes, afterwards beautified and walled by Pacorus, a Parthian King; and by him made the Seat-Royall of the Perſian Kingdome. Many times beſieged and aſſaulted by the Roman Emperors; but moſt commonly without ſucceſs; and amongſt others, by Julian the Apoſtate, that bitter enemy of the Goſpell, who here breathed out his ſoul to Satan, in theſe dying words, Viciſti tandem Galilea. But Vardanes (whoſoever he was) cannot of right be called the firſt founder of it, who raiſed it rather from the rubbiſh of an old foundation: this City being the ſame with that which Moſes calleth Calne; and Ezekiel, Canneh, Gen. 11. and Ezek. 27. 23. and therefore rightly ſaid by Pliny to be built in Chalanitide, or the Region of Chalne.

6. Sipparum, remarkable for the great Trench made neer it, to receive the over flowings of Euphrates, which otherwiſe might have annoyed the City of Babylon: in compaſs 1280 furlongs or 160 miles; In depth 20 fathoms. A vaſt and expencefull work; but that nothing was to be admired when Babylon it ſelf was up and in full proſperity.

7. Apamia, a City of Seleucus foundation alſo, ſituate at the fall of Piſon into the River of Tigris.

8. Vologeſia, placed by Ptolomy amongſt the Cities of Chaldæa, but by Marcellinus in Aſſyria; built or repaired by one of the Vologeſes Kings of Perſia, and from him denominated.

9. Borſippa, by Ptolomy called Barſita, memorable for the great victory which Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch, obtained here againſt Nabonid the King of Babylon, by Scaliger called Darius Medus, (of which more anon): whom having vanquiſhed, he pardoned him (as he ſaith) his life, and gave him the government of Carmania.

10. Balſora, the Port Town to Babylon, ſituate at the fall of Euphrates into Sinus Perſicus, and conſequently of great wealth and trading: The riches of Arabia, Perſia, and ſome part of India, being landed here, and ſo carryed to BABYLON, and thence up the water to Aleppo. Suppoſed to be the City of Teredon, mentioned by Ptolomy; built or repaired by Nebuchadnezzar, and not long ſince taken from the Turks by Abas, the Perſian.

7. ASSYRIA.

ASSYRIA is bounded on the East, with Media, by which parted by the mountain called Coathras; on the West, with Mesopotamia, from which divided by the River Tigris; on the North, with some part of Turcomanie, and part of Chaldea. So called from Assur the sonne of Sem, by whom first inhabited. But having long since lost that name, as to vulgar speech, it is by Niger called Adrinse; by Mercator, Sarh; by the Turks, Arzerum.

The Countrey very plain, and levell, exceeding fruitfull, and abounding in Rivers. For besides Tigris, which washeth one whole side thereof, Ptolomy assigneth to this Countrey the Rivers of 2. Lycus, 3. Caprus, and 4. Gorgos; all of good note, and all of them increasing, with their tributarie Streams, the greatness of Tigris.

The people were antiently great warriers, and together with the Babylonians or Chaldeans, commanded a great part of the East; extending their dominion from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus; insomuch that not the people of this Province only, but of all the Provinces almost of this spacious Empire, had the name of Assyrians. The men for all this, exceeding formall in their habit, wearing long robes which trailed on the very ground, their hair long, their hats or Caps Pyramidall like the Persian Mitres; not stirring out of doors but perfumed with Musk, rings on their fingers, and a Scepter in their hands; and very frequent in their washings, especially after copulation. As for their women, it was an antient custome with them, to expose the fairest unto sale in the open Market; and with the money given for those, to put off such as were deformed and not so amiable. And hence perhaps the Fathers of our times have learnt this lesson of giving less portions with such daughters as will sell themselves, but greasing the fat sow (as the saying is) with the addition of some hundreds; which made the merry fellow say, That the money were a good match if the wench were away.

The Christian faith was first here planted by Saint Jude, and took such deep root in that plantation, that it could never be pulled up, notwithstanding the cruel persecutions raised against it by the Kings of Persia; who when they saw there was no means to destroy it by violence, attempted in the next place to corrupt it with heresie. And to that end, as also to revenge himself upon the Emperor Heraclius, a great Champion of the Orthodox belief against Nestorianism, Chosroes the great King of Persia inforced all the Christians of his Empire unto those opinions, which he knew that Emperour condemned; permitting none who were counted Catholicks within his Dominions. By means whereof, and afterwards for want of Preachers to instruct them otherwise (the Saracens having conquered the Persian Empire) Nestorianism prevailed so far, that it extended over all the Countreys East of Tigris, as far as India; and Northwards too amongst the Tartars, of which more hereafter. Governed by their own Patriarch who resideth at Mosul, now the chief City of this Countrey; and honoured by his people with the Title of Jacelich, mistaken or pronounced amiss for Catholique; an attribute given antiently to all Orthodox Prelates.

The Opinions held by them as Nestorians, were, 1. That there were two persons in our Saviour, as well as two natures; but yet confessing that CHRIST from the first instant of his conception, was both God and man. 2. That the blessed Virgin ought not to be called Θεοτόκος, or the Mother of God; but yet acknowledging her to be the Mother of God the Sonne. 3. That Nestorius, condemned for these opinions in the third and fourth Generall Councills, was an holy man; for whose sake they condemn Saint Cyrill his profess'd Antagonist, and all those Councils wherein any censure was laid upon him. In other points, though differing from the Church of Rome, they are right enough, (their rejecting Episcopall Confirmation excepted only) as 1. in celebrating the Sacrament of the Lords Supper with leavened bread; 2. communicating in both kinds; 3. enjoining no necessity of auricular Confession; 4. contracting mariages in the second degree of Consanguinity; 5. permitting second and third mariages unto men in Orders, after the death of their first wives; 6. not praying before the Crosse, nor giving religious worship to the Crucifix, or other Images. So much for these Nestorians, if so named aright, considering the qualifications added unto their opinions; now (but corrupely) called Nestranes; the greatest Sect of Christians in all the East.

The solemnities which these Christians use in contracting mariage, because not very usual, I will here relate. Their Wives they never see till the day of their mariage, but hearing a good report of the young Woman, negotiate with her parents for her. Agreed upon the business, they meet in the Chancell of the Church, wherein there is a partition with an hole in it: the Bridegroom and his friends standing on the one side; the Bride and her kindred on the other. When there, the Cassisse or Church-man biddeth the Bridegroom to put his hand thorow the hole in the Partition, and take his Bride by the hand, which he doth accordingly: the mother of the Bride, with a sharp-pointed instrument, made of purpose, pricking the Bridegrooms hand all over, with sufficient eagernes. If when he feeleth the smart, he lets go her hand, they take it for a sign that he will not love her; but if he hold her fast, and wring her hand till she cry again, they take it for a very good Omen, and are glad they have so well bestowed her. After the mariage consumate, if a male-child be born unto them, the Father loseth his own name, and is called by the name of his eldest Sonne: so as if the Fathers name be Moses, and his Sonnes name Joseph; the Father is no more called Moses, but Abba-Joseph, or the Father of Joseph. So highly do they reverence mariage, and the fruit thereof, posterity.

It was antiently divided into these six parts, 1. Arraphachitis, bordering on Armenia Major; so calledfor Arphaxaditis, or the plantation of Arphaxad, the Sonne of Sem. 2. Adiabene, bordering on on Mesopotamia, so called, quasi Ἀδιαβατος, or inaccessible, because fenced with such unfordable Rivers, Tigris, and Euphrates, that there was no easie comming to it; διὰ δυχερειὰν ϗ διάβασιν, as it is in Suidas: or rather for Adiavenena, from Diavas, and Adiavas, the chief Cities of it (the same which Ptolomy called Lycus, and Caprus) as in Marcellinus. 3. Calacine, and 4. Sittacene from Sittace, and Calach, two chief Cities of it; of which more anon. 5. Arbelites, and 6. Apollo-niates, from Apollonia and Arbela, two others of the principall Cities.

Here then we have four of the Cities of Assyria brought unto our hand, 1. Calach, one of those four which Nimrod built in the Land of Assur, Gen. 10. 11. and one of them to which the Ten Tribes were transplanted by Salmanasser, 2 Kings 17. 6. & 18. 11. of such esteem in those elder dayes, that Calacine, as Ptolomy, or Calachene as Strabo more rightly calleth it, did take name from hence. 2. Sittace, situate about two miles from the banks of Tigris, in the way from Babylon to Susa. A City, when it gave name to the parts adjoyning, both great and populous; well seated, in a fruitful soyl, and well shaded with trees of several sorts; supposed by the situation of it to be that Accad, (or rather built in or neer the place of it) which was one of the first four Cities of Nimrods Kingdome. 3. Arbela, on the banks of the River Caprus, built as some say by Belus, (or Belochus) Priscus, an Assyrian King, whence it had the name. Neer unto which there is a place which Strabo calleth Κυπαρίσσων, or Cupressetum, conceived by some to be the place where Noah framed the Ark. 4. Apollonia, built after the Macedonian conquest, as appeareth by the name which is wholly Greek: not otherwise observable but for giving the name of Apolloniates to the Countrey adjacent. Adde unto these, 5. Gaugamela, situate in the middle space betwixt Lycus and Caprus; memorable for the last and greatest battel betwixt Alexander and Darius the King of Persia: who had he made good the Eastern banks of the River Tigris, might easily have hindred the Macedonians from coming over: the River being so extremely swift and violent, that the Macedonians were not able to pass it but by linking their hands and armes together, and making one entire body to oppose the current; and therewithall of so great depth, that the footmen were fain to hold their Bows and Arrows over their heads, to keep them from being moistned and made unservicable. But having miserably lost this opportunity by the cowardise of Mazæus, who had the keeping of this pass; he was inforced to venture all upon a battel: drawing unto this place an Army of 50000 horse, and 200000 foot, in their accompt who speak least of it (for Arrianus makes it above a Million.) Opposed by Alexander with no more than 40000 foot, and 7000 horse of his Europæans; but those victoriously successful: 40000 of the Persians slain, (but Diodorus Siculus speaks of 900000) with the loss of 300 Macedonians onely, as is said by Curtius. In memory of which notable victory, a Mountain neer the place of the battel, was by Alexander called Nicator, known by that name to Strabo and some other antients. 6. Rehoboth, another of the four Cities, which Nimrod is said to have built in Assur; by some supposed to be Birtha, an antient City upon Tigris, and bordering so neer unto Mesopotamia, that by Ptolomy it is placed in it. Of which more anon. 7. Rhesen, another of the Cities of Nimrods building, seated by Moses between Calach and Ninive, Gen. cap. 10. v. 12. and there commended for a great City. Which Character with the site thereof have induced some learned men to think it to be the same which is by Xenophon called Larissa, seated by him on the River Tigris, much about this place, and said to be a City of such strength and greatness, that it was no less than two Parasangs, or four miles in compass, the walls in height a hundred foot, twenty five in breadth; so strongly cemented, that Cyrus, who besieged it, could have never taken it if a casual Eclipse of the Sunne had not discouraged the defendants. But whether this conjecture be good or not, we have here Larissa for another of the principal Cities. 8. Ninive, by the Greeks and Latines called Ninus; first built by Nimrod, and called Ninive with relation unto Ninus, his sonne or Nephew, after the example of Cain whose steps he followed: of whom it is said that he built a City, and called it after the name of his sonne Enoch, Gen. 4. 17. I know the building of this City is by some ascribed to Assur, grounding themselves on that of Moses, Gen. 10. 11. Out of that Land went forth Assur, and built Ninive &c. But I like better of their judgement who take Assur in this place for the name of the Countrey and not of the man; making the Text to speak of Nimrod, and to say of him, Et egressus est in Assur, &c. that is to say, And he went forth to Assur or the land of Assyria, and there built Ninive, Rehoboth, and the rest there named. A City so enlarged by some of the succeeding Kings, that it came at last to be bigger than Babylon, in compass 480 furlongs, or 60. miles; and therefore said in the Book of Jonah, to be a City of three dayes journey, in circuit, as indeed it was; accompting 20 miles for a dayes journey, according to the common estimate of those elder times, as also of the Greeks and Romans in the times succeeding. Nor was it of less strength than greatness, the walls an hundred foot high, and so broad that three Carts might go abrest on the top thereof: and in those walls 1500 Turrets, each of 200 foot in height. So strong, that it was thought to have been impregnable, especially because of an antient Prophecy, which signifyed that the Town should never be taken, till the River became an enemy to it. A Prophecy which induced Sardanapalus to make it the seat of his warre against Belochus, and Arbaces, then in armes against him: who having besieged it three years without hope of success, at last the River over-flowing, carried before it twenty furlongs of the Wall. Which accident so terrified the effeminate King, that he burnt himself in the midst of his enemies, and left the Town to the Besiegers. Threatned destruction by the preaching of the Prophet Jonah, it escaped then upon repentance. But the people going on in their wicked courses, it was destroyed by Astyages King of the Medes, that it might no longer be an encouragement to the Assyrians to rebel against him, as formerly against some of his Predecessors: and so destroyed, that in the time of Saint Cyril of Alexandria, as himself affirmeth in the comment on the Prophet Nahum, ὡς μηδὲ ὅπου ποτὲ γέγονεν ὁρᾶσθαι λοιπὸν, that one scould scarle discern in what place it stood. 9. Mosul, at this time, and for long since, the chief of Assyria, seated on the Tigris, and raiſed out of the ruins of Ninive: of moſt note for being the ordinary abiding place of the Neſtorian Patriarch, who either in the City it ſelf, or the Monaſterie of Saint Hermes neer adjoyning to it, hath his conſtant Reſidence. The Neſtorians in this City ſo conſiderable both in power and number, that though it be in the hands of Mahometans, either Turks or Perſians, yet there are numbred in it fifteen Chriſtian Churches, and at leaſt 40000 ſouls. A Sect ſo maligned by the Pope, (whom they commonly call the Reprobate Biſhop) for the greatneſs of the juriſdiction which this Patriarch hath; that not contented to withdraw the Indians from him, (whereof more hereafter) Pope Julius the third, ſet up an Anti-Patriarch againſt him, to whom he gave the title of the Catholique of Muſal alſo; to whom the Neſtorians dwelling in the Northern parts of Meſopotamia (if ſome writers of the Papal party may be believed) do ſubmit themſelves. 10. Arzeri, of greater ſtrength than Moſul, though of leſs antiquity and repute; from which the whole Province of Aſſyria, is now called Arzirum. And 11. Scheheruzi, at this time of the greateſt note, as being the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Beglerbeg or Baſſa, who hath 10000 Timariots under his command, to defend this Countrey, and be ready for any ſervice, as occaſion is.

MESOPOTAMIA.

MESOPOTAMIA, is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Tigris, by which parted from Aſſyria; on the Weſt, with Euphrates, which divideth it from Comagena, a Province of Syria; on the North, with Mount Taurus, by which ſeparated from Armenia Major; and on the South, with Chaldæa, and Arabia Deſerta, from which laſt it is parted by the bendings of Euphrates alſo.

In the Scripture it is called moſt commonly by the name of Padan Aram, that is Syria Culta; but that name properly belonging to the North-parts of it: Aram or Syria, becauſe inhabited originally by the Aramites, whom the Greeks call Syri; and Padan or Culta, from the fruitfulneſs and riches of it, exceeding plentifully ſtored both with corn and wine, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries for the life of man; in that regard by Strabo called Meſopotamia Felix. The Southern parts hereof being barren and full of Deſarts, not having any herbage in them, ὑδὲ ἄλλο δένδρον, nor any kind of Tree, as we read in Xenophon; amongſt ſome of the antient Writers, had the name of Arabia: partly becauſe ſo like in nature to Arabia Deſerta, and partly becauſe planted with Arabian Colonies. The name which comprehends both parts is ſometimes Syria Tranſ-fluvialis, or Syria beyond the River (Euphrates,) of which ſee 2 Sam. 10. 16. But generally in the Hebrew it is called Arom-Naharaijn, which the Greeks render properly by Meſopotamia, or the Countrey in the middle of Rivers; environed by Tigris on the Eaſt, and Enphrates on the Weſt and South; the River Chabaras or Abaras, paſſing alſo thorow it. The Latines generally call it by the ſame name which the Greeks had given it: Priſcian only to ſhew his faculty in Grammar, calling it Medamna, by the Turks now Diarbech.

As is the Countrey, ſuch the People, the moſt Adjective of any we have met with hitherto; able at no time to ſtand by themſelves, but ſtill requiring the addition of ſome neighbour Nation to be joyned unto them. Nothing that they can call their own, their Name, their Language, nor their Countrey. Beholding for their Name in the North, to Syria, in the South, to Arabia; the Chaldæans alſo putting in for a ſhare, and challenging thoſe parts which lie next Aſſyria, to belong to them. Their Language antiently the Syriack, at this day the Arabick. Their Countrey ſucceſſively ſubjected to the Babylonians, Aſſyrians, Medes and Perſians. From them firſt conquered by the Romans, under the conduct of Pompey; reduced into the form of a Province, by the Emperour Trajan; more fully ſetled and confirmed by Aurelianus. But being recovered by the Perſians, they fell together into the power of the Saracens, and are now commanded by the Turks. Never appearing of themſelves on the Stage of action, but when once God ſhewed his mighty power in their many weakneſſes, and raiſed them up to be a Scourge to the houſe of Iſrael; of which ſee Judges chap. 3. v. 8. Hired afterwards by Adadezer King of Syria Zobah, in his warre againſt David; by whom moſt ſhamefully defeated, 2 Sam. 10. 16, 18. Yet notwithſtanding memorable in the Book of God for the birth of Abraham and Rebecca, the long abode of Jacob, and the birth of his Children: in that reſpect affording an Original to the Hebrew Nation.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt preached here by Saint Thaddæus, one of the 70. Diſciples, Anno 43. upon this occaſion. Agbarus the Toparch, or Prince of Edeſſa, one of the chief Cities of this Countrey, having been long afflicted with an incurable infirmity, and hearing of the fame of JESUS, beſeeched him by a ſpecial meſſage to come and help him: whereunto our Saviour made this Anſwer, that he could not viſit him in perſon, the things he was to do, whileſt upon the earth, being to be performed only in the land of Canaan; but that he would take care of his health in convement time. Accordingly, not along after his Aſcenſion, Saint Thomas the Apoſtle, by immediate revelation from our Saviour, ſent Thaddæus thither; by whom the Prince was cured, and the Goſpel preached, and many of the Nation converted to it; the Acts whereof, together with the Copies of the ſeveral Letters from Agbarus to CHRIST, and from CHRIST to him, preſerved in the Archives of Edeſſa, were by Euſebius tranſlated out of the Syriack, and inſerted into the body of his Eccleſiaſticall Hiſtory, lib. 1. cap. 14. Once planted, it found good increaſe, continuing in the purity of it till about the yeare 530. at what time one Jacobus Syrus (ſo called from his birth and abode in Syria) took on him the defence of the Errors of Eutyches, touching the unity of natures in CHRIST our Saviour. Whoſe followers finding the Patriarchs of Antioch too vigilant over them, removed for the moſt part further off, ſetling themſelves in Babylonia, and Meſopotamia, where they continued in great numbers: Governed by their own Patriarch, to whom the Jacobites in Syria are alſo ſubject, who takes unto himſelf the title of Patriarch of Antioch, and is ſucceſſively called led Ignatius, as if the undoubted Succeſſor of that Saint and Martyr; ſuperior in that regard to the Patriarch of Hieruſalem who is alſo a Jacobite. The Patriarchal See, fixt in the Monaſtery of Saphran, neer the City of Merdin; but the Reſidence of the Patriarch for the moſt part at Caramit: the number of Chriſtians under his obedience, computed formerly at 160000 Families, reduced ſince unto 50000. That which they hold as Jacobites, diſtinct from all other Chriſtians, is 1. The acknowledgement but of one nature, one will, and one operation (as there is but one perſon) in Chriſt our Saviour. 2. In ſigning their Children before Baptiſm, in the Face or Arm, with the ſign of the Croſs, imprinted with a burning iron. 3. Retaining Circumciſion, and uſing it in both Sexes. 4. Affirming the Angels to conſiſt of two ſubſtances, Fire, and Light; and 5. Honouring the memory of Dioſcurias (of Alexandria) and Jacobus Syrus, condemned by the antient Councils. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome,

1. Not enjoining on the People the neceſſity of Confeſſion to a Prieſt, before they admit them to communicate.

2. Not admitting Purgatory, nor Prayers for the Dead.

3. Adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in both kinds.

4. Allowing the mariage of Prieſts; And

5. Teaching that the ſouls of men deceaſed, are not admitted preſently to the Viſion of God, but remain ſomewhere in the Earth, to expect Chriſts coming. In which laſt, (letting aſide the determination of the place) as they have many of the Fathers concurring with them; ſo to the firſt (touching the unity of nature in our Saviour Chriſt) they have of late added ſuch qualifications, as poſſibly may make it capable of an Orthodox ſenſe.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey, (beſides Tigris and Euphrates, of which more hereafter,) 1. Chaboras, which riſing in Mount Maſius, paſſing directly South, falleth into Euphrates; as alſo doth, 2. Syngarus, by Pliny, called Maſca, ariſing out of the Mountain Syngarus, which is but the more Weſtern part of the ſaid Mount Maſius. Which names of Maſca, Maſius, and the Maſieni (being the name of a People dwelling thereabouts) ſhew plainly that they go upon very good grounds who place Maſch, or Meſech, one of the ſonnes of Aram in theſe parts of the Countrey.

It was divided antiently into, 1. Anthemaſia, 2. Chalcitis. 3. Gaulanitis. 4. Accabene. 5. Ancorabitis, and 6. Ingine: each part containing ſeveral Cities or Towns of name. Theſe ſix when conquered by the Romans reduced unto two Provinces onely, viz. 1. Meſopotamia, lying on the South of Mount Maſius, or the head of Chaboras; and 2. Oſrhoene on the North: this laſt ſo named from one Oſrhoes, the Prince or Governour of theſe parts in the time of the Perſians, as Procopius telleth us.

Chief places of the whole, 1. Edeſſa, the Metropolis of Oſrhoene, ſituate on the River Scirtas, which runneth thorow the middeſt of it, not far from the fall thereof into Euphrates. Memorable for the Story of Agbarus before related, amongſt Church-Hiſtorians: and in the Roman Hiſtories, for the death of the Emperor Caracalla, ſlain here by the appointment of Macrinus, Captain of his guard. The occaſion this. The Emperour conſcious to himſelf of his own unworthineſs, employed one Maternianus to enquire amongſt the Magicians in the Empire, who was moſt likely to ſucceed him: by whom accordingly advertiſed that Macrinus was to be the man. The letters being brought unto Caracalla, as he was in his Chariot, were by him delivered with the reſt of the Packets, to the hands of Macrinus, (who by his Office was to be attendant on the Emperours perſon) that he might open them, and ſignifie unto him the contents thereof at his better leiſure. Finding by this the danger in which he ſtood, he reſolved to ſtrike the firſt blow; and to that end entruſted Martialis, one of his Centurions, with the execution; by whom the Emperour was here killed as he withdrew himſelf, Levandæ veſicæ gratiâ, as my Author hath it. So impoſſible a thing it is to avoid ones Deſtiny; ſo vain a thing for any Prince to think of deſtroying his Succeſſor: and therefore very well ſaid to Nero in the times of his tyranny, Omnes licet occideris, Succeſſorem tuum occidere non potes, that though he cauſed all the men of eminence to be forthwith murdered; yet his Succeſſor would ſurvive him, and eſcape the blow. But to return unto Edeſſa, in following times it was made one of the four Tetrarchies of the Weſtern Chriſtians when they firſt conquered Syria, and the Holy Land; the two firſt Governors or Tetrarchs, ſucceſſively ſucceeding Godfrey of Bouillon in the Kingdome of Hieruſalem. But in the year 1142. it was again recovered by Sanguin the Turk, Father of Noradin Sultan of Damaſcus, and by the loſs thereof no fewer than three Arch-Biſhopricks withdrawn from the obedience of the See of Antioch.

2. Cologenbar, another ſtrong peece adjoining, beſieged on the taking of Edeſſa, by the ſame Sanguin, who was here ſtabbed in a drunken quarrell by one of his familiar friends; and the Fort ſaved for that time.

3. Niſibis, ſituate ſomewhat to the Eaſt of Mount Maſius, called alſo Antiochia Mygdonia; from the River Mygdonius, which runneth thorow it; and afterwards Conſtantia, from Conſtantius the Sonne of Conſtantine. A City of great note in thoſe elder times, a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Meſopotamia, properly and ſpecially ſo called: which being beſieged by Sapores the King of Perſia, (Conſtantius ruling in the Eaſt) and in no ſmall danger to be loſt, was gallantly defended by James the then Biſhop of it, whom Theodoret calls not onely, Epiſcopum Civitatis, ſed Principem & Ducem, not the Biſhop only of the City, but the Prince and Captain of it, libr. 2 cap 31. So little inconſiſtencie was there found in thoſe early daies betwixt the Epiſcopall function and civill buſineſſes, that the Biſhops were not interdicted from the Acts of war, when the neceſſities of the State did invite them to it. The City not long after moſt unworthily delivered to the ſaid Sapores by the Emperour Jovinian; which drew along with it in ſhort time the loſs of the Province.

4. Ur,

4. Ur, ſeated on the Eaſt of Niſibis, betwixt it and Tigris; and ſo placed by Ammianus who had travelled this Countrey. Conceived to be the Birth-place of Abraham, and called Ur of the Chaldees, Gen. 11. 28. either becauſe the Chaldees were in thoſe daies poſſeſſed of the place; or becauſe the name of Chaldæa did comprehend alſo thoſe parts of this Countrey which lay towards Tigris, as was ſhewn before. For that the place from which Terah the Father of Abraham did return to Haran in Meſopotamia, was rather ſituate in this coaſt where Ur is placed by Ammianus, than betwixt the Lakes of Chaldæa and the Perſian Golf, where moſt Writers place it, may appear probable for theſe reaſons.

1. Becauſe it is ſaid by Joſuah, chap. 24. ver. 12. That Terah the Father of Abraham and the Father of Nachor dwelt on the other ſide of the Flood; that is to ſay on the further ſide of the River Euphrates, and that too ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, as the Septuagint; ab initio, as the Vulgar Latine; in the firſt beginning. Which cannot be underſtood of any Ur, placed on or neer the Lakes of Chaldæa, thoſe being on this ſide of that River. 2. Becauſe all the reſt of Abrahams Anceſtors from Phaleg downwards, were ſeated in the Northern parts of Aſſyria and Meſopotamia: and it were ſtrange that Terah ſhould be planted ſo far from the reſt of his kindred. 3. Becauſe from Ur in Meſopotamia neer the banks of Tigris, the way to Canaan, (to which Terah did intend to go) was directly by Haran: whereas if he had dwelt (as ſome ſay he did) by the Lakes of Chaldæa, his way had been directly Weſt thorow Arabia Deſerta, and not to have travelled, with his family, ſo far North as Haran; and then to have fallen back as much Southward, as he had gone Northward, croſſing Euphrates twice with his herds and Cattel. 5. Haran, the place to which Terah did remove when he went from Ur, and from which Abraham did remove when he went towards Canaan; ſo named in memory of Haran the ſonne of Terah: but called afterwards by the name of Carræ, and by that name well known to the Roman Writers for the death of Craſſus, that wealthy Roman, whoſe eſtate, (beſides the tenth which he offered to Hercules, and three moneths corn diſtributed amongſt the poor) amounted to 7100. Talents, which comes in our money to one Million, 331250. l. But all his wealth could not preſerve him from the ſlaughter, ſlain neer this City, with the routing of his Army alſo by Horodes King of Parthia; of which briefly Lucan,

——miſerando funere Craſſus
Aſſyrias Latio maculavit ſanguine Carras.

Which may be Engliſhed to this purpoſe,

By a defeat lamented Craſſus ſtains
With Roman blood the Aſſyrian Carras Plai.

Called the Aſſyrian Carræ by Poeticall Licence, becauſe the Aſſyrians formerly had been Lords thereof. And no leſs memorable was it in the times foregoing, for a famous Temple of the Moon, worſhipped here (but in no place elſe) under both Sexes: ſome honouring it as female Deity, then called Dea Luna; and others in the ſhape and dreſs of a man, and called Deus Lunus. But with this fortune and ſucceſs, as ſaith Spartianus, qui Lunam fœmineo nomine putabat nuncupandam, is mulieribus ſemper inſerviat; that they who worſhipped it in the form of a Woman, ſhould be alwaies ſubject to their Wives (I trow there were but few of that Religion) qui vero Marem deum crederet, is uxori dominetur; but he that worſhipped it as a man, ſhould preſerve the maſterie. 6. Amida, neer the River Tigris, the Metropolis of Meſopotamia when one Province only, and before it fell into the hands of the Romans: much beautified by Conſtantius the Sonne of Conſtantine, by whom named Conſtantia. But that new name dying with him, the old revived: of great ſtrength, as a frontire Town againſt the Perſians, and by them much aimed at. Honoured of late times with the Reſidence of the Patriarch of the Jacobite Chriſtians, as the chief City of this Province: for this cauſe alſo made the dwelling of the Pſendo-Patriarch of the Neſtorians (or Noſtranes) of the Popes erection; and the chief Seat alſo of the Baſſa or other Officer, governing this Countrey for the Turks; by whom called Caramit, or Kara Amida, that is to ſay, Amida the black, becauſe it was walled with black ſtone. 7. Phalga, or Phaliga, at the meeting of Chaboras with Euphrates not far from Carræ, mentioned by Stephanus, and Arrianus, and by Ptolomy miſtakingly called Pharga; the ſeat or firſt plantation of Phaleg, one of Abrahams Anceſtors: Serug, another of them giving name to 8. Sarug, about a daies journey off from Haran, ſpoken of by ſome later writers. 9. Singara, on the River ſo named, a well fortified City in the time of Ammianus, by whom mentioned, lib. 20. 10. Berabde, mentioned by the ſame Author, by whom ſaid to have been a very ſtrong Fort, ſeated on a pretty high hill, and bending towards the banks of Tigris; before whoſe times it had antiently bin called Phœnicha. 11. Virta, ſuppoſed to have been the work of Alexander the Great, cireled with walls, environed with half-moones and Bulwarks, and made unacceſſible: in vain beſieged by Sapores the Perſian King after the taking of Bezabde. The ſame perhaps with the Birtha of Ptolomy. 12. Merdin, not far from which in the Monaſtery of Saphran, is the Patriarchall See of the Jacobite Sectaries.

The firſt Inhabitants of theſe Countries, though united from the firſt begining under the ſame Princes, and form of Government; came from ſeverall Families: all the three ſonnes of Noah concurring as it were in this plantation. From Nimrod, Havilah, and others of the poſterity of Chus, the ſonne of Ham, came the Babylonians: with whom Cheſed the Sonne of Nachor, of the houſe of Sem, intermingling families; or being the Author of their language, or of ſome other ſignall benefit; gave to them the name of Chaldim, whence came that of Chaldeans. From Assur, Arphaxad, and those of Arphaxads posterity, intermingled with the Sonnes of Mash, the sonne of Aram, came the Mesopotamians, and Assyrians. And that Japhet also and his Children may put in for a part, the neighbourhood of the Medes, and Albanese, descended from him, makes it somewhat probable.

But, whatsoever parents they descended from, Nimrod the Sonne of Chus made so bold with them, as to bring them under his command: planting in Chaldea, the Cities of Babylon, and Calne; in Assyria, Ninive, Rhesem, and Calach; and finally Rehoboth (if that were Birtha, as some think it was) in Mesopotamia. By these strong Forts he curbed the natives, and assured his power; being the first that altered the Paternall form of Government, and drew unto himself the government of severall Nations, not having any dependance upon one another. The foundation thus laid by him, his Successors soon raised the building to a wondrous height; advancing the Assyrian Empire, from the Mediterranean Sea, to the River Indus; and that too in a shorter time than could be imagined, but that the world was then divided into petit States, not cemented together with the ligaments of power and policy: for though there be litle found of Belus the Sonne of Nimrod, but that he spent most of his time in draining the marishes, and making firm ground of those vast fennes which lay neer to Babylon, which were works of peace: yet by those and the like works of peace he so setled his affairs at home, that he gave his Sonne Ninus the better opportunity to look abroad; who mightily improved his Empire, and was the greatest and most powerfull of all that line; extending his dominions from the River Indus, to the Mediterranean; and from the Caspian Sea, to the Southern Ocean. His Successors we shall find in the following Catalogue of

The Assyrian Monarchs.

A. M.

1798 1. Nimrod, called by some Saturnus Babylonius, the Sonne of Chus, and Nephew of Cham, was the first who altered the Paternal government, and usurped dominion over others; making Babylon his Imperiall City. 47.

1845. 2. Belus, or Jupiter Babylonicus, the Sonne of Nimrod, whose Image was worshipped by the old Idolaters under the names of Bel and Baal. 62.

1907. 3. Ninus, the Sonne of Belus, conquered Armenia, Syria, Media, Bactria, and the Persian Provinces, and removed the Imperiall Seat to Ninive, by him much beautified and inlarged. 52.

1959 4. Semiramis, the wife of Ninus, subdued the Arabians; but invading the Indians also, she was vanquished and slain by their King Staurobates. Of this great Lady it is said, she was born in Ascalon, a Town of Syria, and exposed to the fury of wilde beasts. But being born not to die so ingloriously, she was brought up by shepherds, and at full age presented to the Syrian Vice-roy, who gave her in mariage to his onely Sonne. Going with him to the warres, she fell in acquaintance with Ninus, who liking her person and spirit, took her to his bed. This bred in him a greater affection towards her, so that he granted her at her request, the command of the Empire for five daies; making a Decree that her will in all things should be punctually performed: which boon being gotten, she put on the Royall Robes, and (as some Writers doe report) commanded the King to be slain. Having thus gotten the Empire, she exceedingly enlarged it, leading with her an Army consisting of one hundred thousand Chariots of warre, three millions of Foot, and half a million of Horse. A woman in whom there was nothing not to be honoured or applauded, but her insatiable lusts: in which if the Greek writers say true (as we have no reason to believe it of so gallant a woman) she was very guilty.

3126 38. Sardanapalus, by Eusebius called Tonosconcolos, the last King of this Race. Of which being being 38. in all, there is ſcarce any thing remaining but the very names: regiſtred in this order by Beroſus, or rather by Frier Annius a Monk of Viterbum in Tuſcany, who hath thruſt upon the world, the fancies of his own brain, under the name of that antient Hiſtorian. The chief Kings of note after Semiramis, were,

1. Ninus, or Zameis her Sonne; who by his Deputies and Lieutenants ſubdued the Arrians, Bactrians, and Caſpians, but was otherwiſe a man of effeminate and unkingly carriage. And therefore is conceived to be the elder Bacchus, ſo much celebrated amongſt the Grecians.

2. Belus the ſecond, who recovered that Countrey which afterwards was called Judæa, to the Aſſyrian Empire, from which it had revolted in the time of his Predeceſſor, (on the defeat of Amraphel, one of his Lieutenants, by the ſword of Abraham,) and ſubdued many other nations.

3. Belochus Priſc. the tenth King, who by ſome writers is ſaid to be the Author of Divination by the flying of Birds, called Auſpicium. For of Sooth-ſaying there were in all four kinds.

1. This Auſpicium, quaſi Aviſpicium, taken from the flight of birds, either on the right hand, or on the left; (and hence the Proverb commeth, avi ſiniſtrâ, good luck, becauſe in giving, the right hand is oppoſite to the receivers left;) or from the number of the birds, whence Romulus had promiſed to him the Empire, before his Brother, becauſe he had ſeen the double number of Vultures: or laſtly, from the nature of them, whence the ſame Romulus, ſeeing the Vultures, was (ſaith Florus) ſpei plenus urbem bellatricem fore, ita illi ſanguini, & prædæ aſſuetæ aves pollicebantur.

2. Aruſpicium, ab inſpiciendo, in which the Sooth-ſayers obſerved whether the Beaſt to be ſacrifiſed came to the Altars willingly, or not: whether the entrails were of a naturall colour, exulcerate, &c. or whether any part were wanting. All Hiſtories afford variety of Examples in this kind; I need give no particular inſtance. A kind of Divination ſaid to be practiſed firſt by the Tuſcans, or Hetrurians; inſtructed in the knowledge thereof by one called Tages, who appearing to certain Ploughmen out of a Furrow, taught them this myſtery, and ſo vaniſhed.

3. Tripudium, ſo called quaſi Terripudium, and Terripavium, from the trembling or ſhaking of the Earth, was a conjecture of future ſucceſſes, by the rebounding of crums caſt unto Chickens. We have an inſtance of this in the life of Tiberius Gracchus, who being ſeditiouſly buſie in promoting the Law Agraria, was fore-warned by the keeper of his Chickens to deſiſt from that enterpriſe, becauſe when he had thrown the crums to the Coop, there came out but one of the Chickens only, and the ſame without eating went back again, which was taken for a ſign of ill luck, as the greedy devouring of them had been of good. But Tiberius ſlighting the advertiſement, and purſuing his deſign, was the ſame day ſlain.

4. Augurium, ſo called ab avium garritu; was a prediction from the chirping or chattering of birds; as alſo from the ſounds and voices heard they knew not whence, nor on what occaſion. In which later kind the death of Cæſar was divined from the clattering of Armour in his houſe, and the poiſoning of Germanicus by the ſounding of a Trumpet of its own accord: in the former, an Owl ſcreeching in the Senate-houſe was deemed ominous to Auguſtus; and a company of Crowes following Sejanus to his houſe with great noiſe and clamor, was judged to be fatall to that great Favorite; and ſo it proved.

4. Manitus, the thirteenth King; who revived again the antient Diſcipline, corrupted by the ſloathfulneſs and effeminacie of his Predeceſſors; and by the terrour of his name awed the Ægyptians.

5. Aſcatades, the eighteenth King, more abſolute in Syria, and the Weſtern-parts, than any of the Kings before him.

6. Sardanapalus, the laſt King of this Race; who being wondrous effeminate, and utterly unable to govern ſo great an Empire, gave opportunity to Arbaces his Lieutenant in Media to conſpire againſt him. By whom, aſſociated with Belochus Governour of Babylon, he was beſieged in his City of Ninive: and there reduced unto ſuch extremities, that gathering his treaſures all together, he burnt himſelf and them in one funerall Pile, eo ſolum facto virum imitatus, as is ſaid by Juſtine. The treaſure which he is ſaid to have burnt with him amounted to one hundred Millions of Talents of Gold, and a thouſand Millions of Talents of Silver: which in our Engliſh money comes to twenty thouſand and five hundred Millions of pounds. A maſs of money, which as it muſt be long in gathering, ſo probably it had not ſeen the Sun in many years, and therefore grown ruſty, deſired a fire to purge it. This Sardanapalus afforded it, it may be to end his life with that, in which he placed his Summum Bonum: It may be in ſpight unto his enemies; and it is poſſible it might be in policy, that ſo great a treaſure not falling to the poſſeſſion of his foes, might ſo much the more diſable them from making reſiſtance againſt, or detaining the Empire from his next rightfull Succeſſors. For it is of all things the moſt fooliſh, both to loſe our Treaſure, and with it to enrich our Adverſaries. On which conſideration the Spaniards fired their Indian Fleet at Gades, and the Genoeſe theirs at Tripolis; that their lading might not come into the Poſſeſſion of their enemies, the Engliſh and Mahometans. After the death of this Sardanapalus, Arbaces took Media and Perſia with the confining Provinces: Belochus ſtrengthened himſelf in Aſſyria, Chaldæa, and the adjacent Regions, his Kingdome being called the Kingdome of Aſſyria.

The new Kings of Aſſyria and Chaldæa.

is called Tiglah Philaſſar in the holy Scriptures.

3217. 3. Salmanaſſar, who deſtroyed Samaria, and ruined the Kingdome of Iſrael, and carried the 10 Tribes to perpetual Captivity. This is the Nabonaſſar of the Chronologers.

3243. 6. Merodach Baladan, governour of Babylon, ſucceeded his Maſter in the Throne, conceived by ſome to be the Mardocempades of Ptolomy, by others to be alſo the ſame King who by his Captain Holofernes did ſo plague Judæa.

3304. 8. Nabopullaſſar, who vanquiſhed Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt. 25.

3339. 9. Nabuchodonoſor the Great, by ſome called the Hercules of the Eaſt: who conquered Egypt in the life of his Father, with whom he reigned for a time, and mightily enlarged the City of Babylon, he joyned alſo with Aſtyages King of Medes, in ſubverting the proud City of Ninive; and in the 18th. year of his reign deſtroyed Hieruſalem, and carried the People captive unto Babylon. But in the laſt ſeven years of his reign he was ſo diſtracted, that he lived not much unlike the Beaſts of the Field; according to the word of God ſpoken by Daniel, chap. 4. during which time his ſonne Evilmerodach, his daughter Nicocris with Nigliſſat her husband, and Laboraſaradach their ſonne, governed his Empires as Protectors; and therefore are by ſome reckoned as Kings. Finally Nabuchadnezzar having recovered his ſenſes, was again reſtored unto the Throne, and died, when he had reigned in all 44. years.

3583. 10. Evilmerodach; the ſonne of Nabuchadnezzar, ſlain by Aſtyages, King of the Medes. 26.

3409. 11. Balthaſſar, ſonne of Evilmerodach (the Nabonidus of Beroſus, a Prince of a diſſolute and cruel nature, was in the later end of his reign aſſailed by Cyaxares the Sonne of Aſtyages, (whom the Scriptures call Darius Medus,) and by Cyrus the Perſian; by whom he was ſlain in the 17th. year of his reign, and the Empire of the Babylonians was transferred to the Medes and Perſians. A. M. 3426.

That this was the end of Balthaſſar, is the common opinion. But Joſephus Scaliger in his learned and induſtrious work, De emendatione temporum, maketh him to be ſlain in a tumult by his own people: who elected into the Empire a Noble man of the Medes, called in prophane ſtories, Nabonidus; in divine, Darius Medus; who after a 17 years reign was ſlain by Cyrus King of the Perſians. But by the leave of ſo worthy a man, this cannot hold good. For the Lord by his Prophet Jeremy, had pronounced, (Chap. 27.) That all Nations ſhould ſerve Nabuchadnezzar, and his ſonne, and his ſonnes ſonne, whereas Nabonidus was a Prince of ſtrange blood, and ſo the Nations were not to ſerve him; and in Balthaſſar, the ſonnes ſonne of Nabuchadnezzar, was this word accompliſhed. But let us examine his arguments, and withall the ſcoffes, which very prodigally he beſtoweth on ſuch as maintain the contrary opinion: Natio Chronologorum, the whole rout of Chronologers; boni & diligentes viri, good ſimple meaning men; & addunt alia nihil veriora, are his firſt complements; Ut igitur, quod Chronologorum eſt, omnes reſipiſcant, &c. therefore that they may repent their ever being Chronologers, he bringeth in Beroſus, Cited by Joſephus, in his firſt book againſt Appion. But Beroſus there maketh Nabonidus (to whom he ſaith the Kingdome of Balthaſſar was by the people delivered) to be a Babylonian, and not as Scaliger would have him ſay, a noble man of the Medes: neither can the authority of Beroſus countervail that of Daniel, who in his 6 Chapter telleth Balthaſſar, that his Kingdome ſhould be divided among the Medes and Perſians. His ſecond argument is drawn from the nature of the word ἀναδέξαλο, καὶ Δαρεῖος ὁ Μήδος ἀναδέξαλο τὴν ἀρχὴν, as it is in the ſame Chapter, and Darius the Mede took the Empire: by which word took is implyed (ſaith he) not a forcible invaſion, but a willing acceptance of the Empire offered. To this we anſwer, that Darius indeed took the Empire quietly and willingly, being offered unto him by Cyrus, and his army conſiſting of Medes and Perſians: who according to the word of God, had taken it from Balthaſſar, Darius being then abſent. Quid ſi probavero (ſaith he) eum cognominatum fuiſſe Medum? he hath yet one trick more than all theſe; and Medus muſt not be the national name, but the ſurname of Darius, which he proveth out of a fragment of Megaſthenes, cited by Euſebius, in his work de præparatione Evangelica, where he is called Μήδος ἀπὸ Ἀστιάγους τοῦ Μήδου, &c. an argument of all others the moſt ſlight and trivial. For beſides that Μήδος may there as well be the name of his Nation, as of his Family; and beſides that it thwarteth the places of Jeremy and Daniel already quoted; it is diametrally oppoſite to another place of the ſame Daniel, in his ninth chapter; where he is called Darius, of the ſeed of the Medes. Of this Darius more anon when we come into Media. As for Nabonidus, queſtionleſs he was the ſame with Balthaſſar. For beſides that Joſephus, and Beroſus, attribute to either of them the reign of 17. years, the ſame Joſephus (who might beſt know the truth in this caſe) telleth us that Balthaſſar was by the Babylonians called Naboandel; a name not ſo great a ſtranger to Nabonidus, as Scaligers Darius, or Herodotus his Labonitus. But in this we muſt pardon Joſeph. Scorn and contradiction was a part of his eſſence. For had he not been in ſome things ſingular, in all, peremptory; he had neither been a Saliger, nor the ſonne of Julius.

But leaving Joſeph to the ſingularity of his own conceits; we find nothing done by the Aſſyrians or Chaldæans after this ſubjection, which might denote them to have been once the Lords of ſo great an Empire. Succeſſively inſlaved by the Medes, Perſians, and Macedonians; then by the Perſians again, afterwards by the Saracens, next by the Turks, a third time by the Perſians, once again by the Turks of the Ottoman Family, unto whom now subject: never endeavouring to assert in the way of war, or opposition, either their antient reputation, or their native liberties; but suffering themselves to be won, lost, fought for, and again recovered by their quarrelsome Masters, as if they had no title to their own Countrey, but were born to follow the fortunes of all pretenders. The reason of which is principally to be ascribed to the form of Government used amongst the Persians, which was so Despoticall and absolute, if not tyrannicall, that they held all the people conquered by them in the nature of slaves; not suffering any to grow great in a state of inheritance, or to enjoy any place of power and profit under them in the conquered Provinces, but at the pleasure of the Prince: as it is now used amongst the Turks of the Ottoman Empire. By means whereof, the great men having no alliances amongst themselves, and as few dependants amongst the people; were never able to take head against the Conqueror; but in the fall of the present Prince fell together with him: it being a good rule of Machiavel, that where the antient Nobility is in good regard linked in alliances with themselves, and well respected by the common and inferiour people, there it is difficult for the Invader, though a Conqueror, to win a Countrey, and harder to keep it being conquered. But on the other side, where Nobility is quite worn out, & the Prince doth hold his Subjects in the nature of slaves, there both the Conquest will be easie, and soon assured. For to what purpose should the Subjects resist the Conqueror, or stand any longer to their King, than he stands to himself, when they are sure the Conqueror can lay upon them no heavyer burdens, than they were accustomed to before; and have withal a flattering hope that their new Masters may be gentler to them, than their former were? It fares with them no otherwise than with Æsops Ass, which refused to make the opportunity of an escape from the hands of the enemie, by which he was taken, because he knew it was not possible they should lay more load upon his back, than his old Master made him bear. To which condition the Chaldeans and Assyrians being brought by the Persians, and never accustomed to the tast of a better fortune: have followed the same successes as the Persians did; falling together with them from one hand to another; the particular accompt of whose estate we shall find in Persia: taking this onely for the close, that when Solyman the Magnificent had discomfited Tamas King of Persia, and taken the great City of Bagdat; Caramit, Merdin, and the rest both in Assyria, Chaldaa, and Mesopotamia, submitted to him without any resistance, and received his Garrisons. And for a confirmation of his estate he received at the hand of the Caliph of Babylon, who by an old Prerogative had the nomination or confirmation at the least of the Kings of Assyria, and the Sultans of Ægypt, the Royall Ornaments and Ensignes, Anno 1534. incorporating by that means those Regions into his estates, and making them Provinces of his Empire; in which he left a Beglerbeg at Bagdat to command in chief; and divers Sanziacks in their severall and respective Provinces. And though the Persian Kings have since taken, and are still possessed of some places of importance in them; yet I account them in regard of the said investiture, and the long possession following on it, for Provinces of the Turkish Empire: as I do Media of the Persian, though Tauris and some other peeces of it be possessed by the Turks.

Ottoman

OF MOUNT-TAURUS.

MOUNT-TAURUS is a conſtant and continuall Ridge of hils, which extend from the Mediterranean to the Indian Seas; running thorow the whole length of Aſia from Weſt to Eaſt, and dividing it, as the Æquator doth the Globe, into North and South. It was called Taurus from the word Tur or Taur, which in the Syriack and Chaldæan ſignifieth a mountain, the common name of all high mountains being made peculiar unto this, by reaſon of its greatneſs and continued length; yet ſo, that it had other names alſo in ſome parts thereof, according to the Regions and Nations by which it paſſed, and on which it bordered. The courſe whereof is thus ſet down by Sir Walter Ralegh: premiſing onely, that it beginneth in the Province of Lycia, a Region of Aſia Minor, neer the Mediterranean. "Theſe Mountains (ſaith he) which "ſunder Cilicia from the reſt of Aſia the leſs, on the North thereof are called Taurus; and where they part "it from Comagena a Province of Syria, they are called Amanus. On the Eaſt ſide of the River Euphrates "(which forceth it ſelf a way thorow it) it ſometimes reſumeth the name of Taurus, as in Ptolomies "three firſt Tables of Aſia, and ſometimes taketh the name of Niphates, as in the fourth: retaining that "uncertain appellation, ſo long as they bound Armenia from Meſopotamia. After the River Tigris "hath alſo cut them aſunder, they continue the name of Niphates altogether, untill they ſeparate Aſſyria "and Media, but then they call themſelves Coatras: although between the upper and lower Media, "they appear not alwaies, but are ſeen diſcontinued, and broke in pieces; ſuch parts of it as are found "in the midle of that Countrey being called Orontes, thoſe which lie more towards the Eaſt being named "Coronus; out of the Southern parts whereof iſſueth the River of Bagradus, which divideth the antient "Perſia from Caramania. Continuing further Eaſt-ward by the name of Coronus, they give unto the "Parthians and Hyrcanians their proper Countries: and afterwards change themſelves into the Moun- "tains of Seriphi, out of which riſeth the River Margus. And now beginning to draw towards the end "of their courſe, they firſt make themſelves the South border of Bactria; and are then known by the "name of Paropamiſus: and after take unto themſelves the name of Caucaſus, where the famous Rivers "Indus, Hydaſpis, and Zaradrus, have their firſt beginnings. In this point do they hold their heads "exceeding high, to equal the Mountains of Imaus, whom they encounter within the 35, 36. & 37. "Degrees of Latitude, and the 140 Degree of Longitude: known by no other name than this, till finally "they terminate their courſe in the Indian Seas. So farre, and to this purpoſe, that noble Gentleman. It may be added hereunto, that though the antient Writers could trace the courſe of this Mountain no further than the meeting of it with Imaus; yet later obſervations follow it to the wall of China: the parts beyond Caucaſus being now known by the names of Delanguer, and Naugrocot. But this is to be underſtood onely of the main body of theſe Mountains, which hold on in an even courſe from Weſt to Eaſt; not of thoſe ſpurres and branches of it, which ſhoot either to the North or South: ſuch as are the Anti-Taurus in ſome parts of the leſſer Aſia; the Gordiæan hills, and the Montes Moſchici, with thoſe which Pliny calleth Pariedri, others Pariardes, in Armenia Major: and that of Caboras, which ſheweth it ſelf on the North-Eaſt of Aſſyria, with divers others.

In ſuch a continual courſe of Mountains it muſt needs be that many fierce Nations did inhabit in former times, not eaſily ſubdued, nor ſo ſoon reduced unto civility, as ſuch who were poſſeſſed of places leſs defenſible, and fitter for commerce and trafick with the reſt of mankind. And they continued in theſe late times the laſt which were brought under by the Turks, and Perſians, the mightieſt Monarchs of thoſe parts; though bordering on, or totally environed with their dominions. Two Kingdomes they afforded of long continuance: one towards the Weſt where it cloſeth with the Mountains of Anti-Taurus, and divideth Syria Comagena from Armenia Major; the other towards the Eaſt, ſeparating Media from Hyrcania. For want of other names to deſcribe them by, we will call the firſt the Kingdome of Aladeules, and the laſt the Kingdome of Bahaman; according to the names of the two laſt Kings.

1. The Kingdome of ALADEULES contained that part of this Mountainous tract, which beginning in or about Anti-Taurus, extended it ſelf as farre towards the Eaſt, as to the banks of the River Tigris, where they part Meſopotamia from Armenia Major. Inhabited by a people naturally very fierce and warlike, more famous for nothing than their want of all things, who as men dwelling in a rough and barren Countrey, could litle profit themſelves by husbandry, and therefore gave themſelves to grazing, breeding on their paſtures ſome ſtore of horſe and camels, which they ſold to others, but eſpecially maintaining themſelves and their families by hunting and ſtealing. Suppoſed to come originally from the Cappadocians, and Armenians of the leſſer Aſia, which by long and continual warres in the former Ages, were forced to forſake their dwellings, and for ſafety of their lives to flie to theſe unpeopled and deſolate Mountains. Where ſearching every hill and dale, and following the opportunity of Springs and Rivers, but chiefly chiefly the mildeſt Temperature of the Air, and moſt cheerfull aſpect of the Sunne: they built in many places poor villages, and afterwards ſome better Towns. The principal of which is named Marus, ſo called as it is conceived from the River Marſyas, which riſing out of the Mountain Cœlene, paſſeth by the ſame, and not farre off falleth into the River Euphrates.

When it was made a Kingdome firſt, it is hard to ſay, the Kings hereof being mean and inconſiderable in the eye of the world; not worth the conquering, and wanting power to conquer others and enlarge their territories: nor indeed worthy any King but one of their own, who could content himſelf with reigning over rocks and Mountains. The laſt was Aladeules ſo much ſpoken of in the Turkiſh Hiſtories, and by them called the Mountain King. Conceived by ſome writers to have been the Author of ſuch a Paradiſe, as we ſhall find deſcribed when we come to Drangiana, a Province of Perſia; and by that means grown formidable to his neighbouring Princes. But that which made him moſt really and truly known in the ſtories of the former times, was the ſtout oppoſition which he made againſt the Turks, in their warres with Perſia: He had before given no ſmall check to the proceedings of Bajazet the ſecond in his conqueſt of the Caramanian Kingdome; and no leſſe troubled Selimus the ſonne of Bajazet, in his Perſian warres, impeaching what he could the greatneſs of the Ottoman family. Fought with by Selimus, he made good his ground with a great deal of courage, till betrayed by Alus Beg, General of his horſe; and ſeeing his Army terrified by the ſhot of the Turks, he was fain to flie. But being at laſt taken, and put [illegible] by the command of Selimus, his Kingdome was converted to a Turkiſh Province, Anno 1515. and continueth to this day.

2. The Kingdome of BAHAMAN was ſituate more towards the Eaſt, amongſt the Mountains which divide Media from Hyrcania, as before was ſaid. The Mountains in thoſe parts ſo high, that Travellers at the end of a two daies journey, may diſcern the midle Region of the Air to be beneath them; exceeding troubleſome to aſcend, about 50 miles in height when once got to the top; but more dangerous by reaſon of the Rocks and precipices in the going down: full of inhoſpitable ſtreights, and ſo cold and barren, that were not Sovereignty a temptation above all reſiſtance, no man would take upon him the command of ſo poor a Kingdome. And yet in this extremity of height and cold, there is great quantity of Sulphur, which makes it ſparkle in the night, like the hill Veſuvius, in Italy: by means whereof here are many Hot-Bathes, three of them walled about, two open; to which reſort unſound & decrepid people in very great multitudes. The chief Town of it Larry-Joon, in the ordinary road or paſs betwixt Omoal the laſt Town of Hyrcania, and Damoan the firſt of Media. But the Kings Seat was in a village called Ryna, where he had a Caſtle ſo built upon the beſt advantages of art and nature, that it ſeemed invincible: adorned, above, with gardens, flowers, and moſt pleaſant fruits; and furniſhed beneath with a Rivulet of pureſt water, which pleaſantly paſſing thorow the Caſtle, fell into the Vallo. A Caſtle of ſo large a circuit, that beſides the Kings Family or Court, it was able to admit a garriſon of 10000. men.

The laſt King hereof was the foreſaid Bahaman, derived from a long deſcent of Royal Anceſtors, comparing for antiquity with the Perſian Sophies: who though ill-neighboured on both ſides, by the Tartarian on the one, and the Kings of Perſia on the other; yet had they with great fortune, policy, and valor, maintained their Royalties, againſt all pretenders. But Abas the late Perſian Sophy, having either conquered or reduced Hyrcania, picked a quarrel with Bahaman: pretending that by the opportunity of his ſituation he might rob his Caravans, hinder his progreſs towards the Hyrcanian Sea, and turn into other Channels all the Streams or Rivers, which riſing from Mount Taurus watered and enriched his Perſian territories. And though Bahaman never had attempted any of the things objected, yet it was cauſe enough of quarrel that he might ſo do: and therefore is beſieged in his Caſtle of Ryna, with an Army of 30000 men. Finding no poſſibility to prevail by force, the General of the Perſians proceeds by treachery: invites the old King into his Camp under colour of parley, and by his means drew his two ſonnes out of the Caſtle to the parley alſo. Whom having got into his power, he firſt cauſed their heads to be cut off; and after making uſe of their ſeales and ſignets, obtains a ſurrender of the place; and with it the poſſeſſion of this mountainous Kingdome, Anno 1601. or thereabouts, united ever ſince to the Crown of Perſia.

OF TURCOMANIA.

TURCOMANIA is bounded on the East with Media, and the Caspian Sea; on the West with the Euxine Sea, Cappadocia, and Armenia Minor; on the North, with Tartary; and on the South, with Mesopotamia and Assyria. So called from the Turcomans or Turks; who from hence made their first expedition for the conquest of Persia, and after spread themselves over all those parts of Europe, Asia, and Africk, now in their possession. A Countrey which consisteth of four several Provinces, each province having to its self its particular story; and therefore we must look upon it as it is now divided into those four parts, that is to say, 1. Armenia Major, or Turcomania properly and specially so called. 2. Colchis, now called Mengrelia. 3. Iberia, now named Georgia; and 4. Albania, which they now term Zuiria.

1. ARMENIA MAJOR.

ARMENIA MAJOR is bounded on the East with Media, and some part of the Caspian Sea; on the West, with the River Euphrates, which parteth it from Armenia Minor, in the lesser Asia; on the North, with Colchis or Mengrelia; and on the South, with Mesopotamia and some part of Assyria.

It was called Armenia, as some say quasi Aram-Mini or the Minni of Syria: but as others say, quasi Har-mini, that is to say Mons Mini, or Montana Miniadis: the Mini or Minni, being a region of this tract, mentioned by Jeremie the Prophet, chap. 5. ver. 27. and by him placed betwixt Ararat and Askenaz, which shew the situation of it to be hereabouts. Major was added to it for distinction sake, to difference it from Armenia Minor: and now it is called Turcomania, as the first seat in which the Turcomans or Turks did fix themselves, after their eruption out of Scythia.

The Countrey in the most part soverspread with hills, branches of those huge mountains of Taurus, and Anti-Taurus; but intermixt with fertile and delightful vallies, liberally furnished with Cattel, and good store of fruits, though much subject to deep snows, which do much annoy it. The Riches of it not to be better estimated than by the frankness of Tigranes, once King hereof. Who being fined by Pompey at 6000 Talents, not onely very readily laid down that summe, but added of his own accord to every Roman Souldier 50 Drachmas of Silver, 1000 Drachmas to each Captain, and to every Colonel a Talent. For though Tigranes had added some part of Media, and the whole Kingdome of Syria, unto his estate: yet those being new Acquests, and not fully setled, were not much likely for the present, to enrich his coffers: new conquered Provinces being for the most part more chargeable than beneficial to the Victor.

The people are generally great bodied, of comely personage, and patient of all kind of labour; good Archers, when put to it, but careless of honour got by warre; merry, desirous to be at ease, and apt to be soothed. The women tall, but homely, of a manly look, most of them skilfull at their bow, or some other weapon. Their families for the most part great, the Father and all his posterity to the third and fourth generation living under a roof, after whose death the eldest whether Sonne or Brother hath the chiefest Rule. In diet and clothing all alike: and in most places they are said to be very industrious, painful in tillage, and well seen in manufactures, especially rich tapestries, Grograins, and watred Chamlets: with which they trafick into most Cities of the Turks and other Mahometans, privileged as they say, by a Charter under Mahomets own hand, above other Christians; and upon that occasion more dispersed in the Eastern Countries, than any Nation in the world, the Jews excepted.

They have a language of their own which they call the Armenian, not onely used amongst them in common talk, but in sacred offices: the Scriptures being translated into that language also, and that as the people do affirm by the hand of Saint Chrysostome, at such time as (on the solicitation of the Empress Eudoxia, his most eager enemy) he was confined to the lesser Armenia, by the Emperor Arcadius, to whom also they ascribe the invention of the Armenian Characters, or letters, still in use amongst them.

They received the Christian faith by the preaching of Saint Bartholmew, and were antiently of the jurisdiction of the Patriarch of Constantinople, as a Province of the Pontick Diocese, which together with the Asian Diocese, and that of Thrace, were by the Council of Chalcedon laid unto that Patriarchate. But falling into the opinions of Eutyches touching one nature onely in CHRIST our Saviour, they withdrew themselves long since, from the communion of the Greeks, whom they hold in greater detestation than all other Christians; and those two Patriarchs of their own, of whom more anon. Other opinions which they hold besides those of Eutyches, which yet they labour to make capable of an Orthodox sense, and those wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, as 1. Denying Purgatory, and prayers for the dead dead. 2. Admitting none to be made Prieſts except thoſe that be maried. 3. Denying the body of Chriſt to be really under the ſpecies of bread and wine; and 4. Rebaptizing ſuch as come to their Communion from the Latine Churches; are theſe that follow: in which they differ alſo from moſt Churches elſe, viz. in receiving Infants to the Lords Table, immediately after Baptiſm. 2. In abſtaining from unclean beaſts. 3. In faſting on Chriſt-maſs day; and 4. In holding their children over the fire, as a neceſſary circumſtance in Baptiſm, becauſe John the Baptiſt told the people which followed him, that CHRIST ſhould baptize them with the Holy Ghoſt, and with fire; in which place he meaneth not materiall fire, but the lively purgation of the Holy Ghoſt, according to the nature of fire. The Church of this ſect is Governed by two Patriarchs, whereof the one hath under his juriſdiction this Turcomania; comprehending 150000 Families, beſides very many Monaſteries: and the other hath under him the two Provinces of Armenia the leſſer, and Cilicia, comprehending 20000 Families, or thereabouts. The firſt reſiding antiently in Sebaſtia, the Metropolis of the greater Armenia; the ſecond originally at Melitene, the Metropolis of Armenia Minor, but of late at Sis, a ſmall City, not farre from Tarſus in Cilicia. Both honoured with the title of Catholiques, and having under them to the number of 30. Biſhops.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Araxes, which riſing out of Mount Abos, an Armenian Mountain, firſt runneth Eaſtward as farre as Media, and then bendeth it ſelf towards the North, and after a long courſe is divided into two Branches; whereof the one falleth into the Caſpian Sea, the other into, 2. Cyrus, another great River of this Countrey. The fountain of this laſt in Mount Caucaſus in the furtheſt North of Turcomania; and falling into a Lake, there meeteth with 3. Cambyſes, another great River of theſe parts; and ſo together haſten to the Caſpian alſo. 4. Euphrates, by the Turks called Frat, by the Hebrews, Perah, famous in Scripture for its watering the garden of Eden, hath its fountain in the hills which they call Niphates, as is ſaid by Strabo. A River of great length and ſwiftneſs. For having forced it ſelf a paſſage through the Mountains of Taurus, it runneth in the Weſt of Meſopotamia, with a ſtream ſo violent, that they who go by water from Bir or Birra, a Town on the North-Weſt of Meſopotamia, to the City of Bagdat, are fain to come back again by land, ſelling thoſe Boats for eight crowns which they bought for 50. At Apamia, a City of Chaldæa it is joyned with Tigris, with which the greateſt branch of it paſſeth thorow the City of Babylon, and ſo into the Perſian Gulf: the reſt of it being cut into many Channels, for fear it ſhould overflow and drown the Countrey, are quite loſt in the Lakes of Chaldæa. 5. Tigris, a ſwifter ſtream than that, whence it had the name; the word in the Median tongue ſignifying an Arrow. A River of ſo ſtrong a courſe, that it paſſeth thorow the Lake Thonitis, without mixture of Waters, and affordeth the Armenians an eaſie paſſage to Bagdat: who on a few Rafts born up with Goat-skins blown full of wind, and boards laid upon them, make their voyage thither. It is called Heddekel in the Scripture, one of the four Rivers which watered the garden of Paradiſe; ſituate in an Iland made by the imbracement of this River and Euphrates, with their ſeveral Branches. Riſing originally out of the Lake of Thelpitis, in Armenia Major, where now we are; it is preſently almoſt ſwallowed by the gaping Earth; and paſſing under the huge bulk of Taurus, breaketh forth again; and compaſſing the Eaſt parts of Meſopotamia, which it divides from Aſſyria; meets with Euphrates, as before. Of which its firſt and ſecond birth, thus the Poet Lucan.

At Tigrin ſubito tellus abſorbet hiatu,
Occultoſq; tegit curſus; rurſuſq; renatum
Fonte novo flumen pelagi non abnegat undas.

That is to ſay.

Tigris, ſoon ſwallowed by the thirſty earth,
Finds there a buriall where it had its birth:
But breaking out at a new ſpring, vouchſafes
With the Salt Sea as to mixt it ſweeter waves.

Mountains of moſt note, are, 1. Abos, glorying in the fountains of the great River Araxes. 2. Periardes, or Periarges as Ptolomy, Pariedri, as Pliny calleth it, a branch or ſpurre of the great mountain Taurus. 3. Udaceſpes, another branch of that great Mountain. 4. Some part of Anti-Taurus. 5. The Mountains called Montes Moſchici, more towards the North, abutting upon Cappadocia, and the Euxine Sea: which name they took from Meſech, or Moſoch the ſonne of Japhet, preſerving the remembrance of his planting there. 6. Niphates, one of the ſpurres of Taurus, out of which the famous River Euphrates is ſaid to iſſue. 7. The Gordiæan Mountains, conceived by many learned men to be the mountains of Ararat, on one of the tops whereof called Baris, the Ark of Noah is moſt generally affirmed to reſt. Affirmed by many antient writers of the Chriſtian Church, and countenanced not onely by Joſephus and ſome others of the Elder Hiſtorians; but by the Septuagint themſelves: who in the 37 chap. of Eſay v. 38. and 2 Kings 19. 37. have rendred Ararat by Armenia. And be it ſo, let Ararat be Armenia, and conſequently the mountains of Ararat be Armenian Mountains: yet doth it not follow hereupon, that the Ark reſted on the Gordiæan mountains, or any others of this Countrey, as they would conclude. We may infer as Logically, for ought I can ſee, that the Garden of Eden muſt be looked for in Armenia alſo; becauſe ſituate in the circlings of Euphrates, and Tigris, two Armenian Rivers. Thoſe Rivers have indeed their fountains in Armenia Major, but compaſs not the Garden of Eden, till after a long courſe they encounter each other in the ſpacious plains of Babylonia. And ſo thoſe mountains, though they have the name of the Mountains of Ararat or Armenia, becauſe there firſt grown to a diſcernable and ſuper-eminent height above all the mountains of thoſe parts: became not the reſting place of the Ark, till after a further courſe towards the Eaſt, they were grown to their fulleſt height; which is in those parts of it betwixt Scythia, and Persia, which are called Mount Caucasus: not that Mount Caucasus, which lieth on the North of Colchis, and Iberia, out of which the River Cyrus is said to rise; but that which lieth on the East-side of the Caspian Sea, where Mount Taurus and Imaus do cross each other. But of this elsewhere.

is

It was divided heretofore into many Provinces, the principall whereof had (I grant) its name from the Gordiæan Mountains, called in some writers Cordiæi, from whence the Province had the name of Gordiene, but most commonly called Corduene, bordering on Assyria. The Kingdome once of Zarbienus, who siding with Lucullus against Tigranes King of Armenia, was by Tigranes murdered with his wife and Children; but honoured by Lucullus with a stately and magnificent funeral. 2. The 2d. Province of note is called Cotacene, neer the Montes Moschici. 3. Tosarene bordering on the River Cyrus. 4. Colthene on the banks of Araxes. 5. Sophene, neer the turnings of the River Euphrates; mistook by some industrious and knowing men, to be the Syria Soba of the Holy Scriptures. 6. Basisine, on the North-West, neer the springs of that River. But what Cities did belong to each, I find no where specified

Those of most consequence in the whole, 1. Artaxata, by Florus called Caput Gentis: of most esteem in those times, and the Seat-royall of the Kings of Armenia from its first foundation. Built by Artaxes, one of the Progenitors of Tigranes, at the perswasion of Annibal, whilest he abode in this Countrey: who liking the situation of the place, drew on it the model of a strong and gallant City, according to which Plat-form it was presently built. Taken and sacked by the Romans, as a daughter of Carthage, by Corbulo in the time of Nero, it never could revive again to its former splendour: in the middle ages called Esckia, and at this day Coy, or Coim; if not built rather out of the ruines of it. A City memorable for two great battells neer unto it; the first between Lucullus on the one side, against Mithridates and Tigranes on the other; wherein the Romans were victors: the second between Selimus Emperor of the Turks, and Hysmael the Persian Sophy; wherein the Turks were conquerors, Anno 1514. A victory which he bought with the loss of 30000 of his best men, and such a terrour to the whole Army, that the Turks to this day call it, the only day of doom. The fields adjoining to the Town wherein this cruel battel was fought, called the Chalderan fields. 2. Sebastia, now Suassia, seated on Euphrates, where it meeteth with the Mountain Taurus, the residence of the Patriarch of the Armenians, at their first separation from the See of Constantinople; the Metropolis at that time of all Armenia: so named in honour of Augustus, whom the Greeks call Sebastos. But of late divested of that dignity, the Patriarchall See, by reason of the fierce wars raging in this Countrey betwixt the Persians and the Turks, being removed to the Monastery of Ecmeazin, neer the City of Ervan in Persia, in the dominions of which King these Armenian Christians live in great abundance, by the name of Jelphelins. 3. Tigranocerta, beautified and inlarged, if not first founded, by Tigranes above-mentioned, by whom repleniished with people of severall Nations, whose Countries he had taken from them, and enriched in a manner with the wealth of all his Kingdome: there being no Armenian, either Prince or Paisant, who sent not somewhat towards the adorning of it. But taken by Lucullus without great resistance, those severall Nations not agreeing amongst themselves: and therein besides other Treasure, no less than 8000 Talents in ready money. The City situate neer a River, which Tacitus calleth Nicesorius. 4. Arsamosata, by Pliny called Arsimote, on the banks of Euphrates. 5. Cholna, so called in memory of Hul, or Chul the sonne of Aram, one of the first Planters of this Countrey, 6. Baraza, by the Emperor Leo much enlarged and beautified, dignified with the new name of Leontopolis; and for a while made the Metropolis of the Province. 7. Arsirata, by Strabo called Arxata. 8. Theodosiopolis, built on the foundation of some of the more antient Cities, by the Emperor Theodosius, and of him thus named. 9 Colonia, the strongest and most defensible City hereof, when possessed by the Romans. 10. Clumassun, a strong Town on the banks of Euphrates, taken by Selimus the first in his way towards Persia, and therewith livery and seisin of the rest of this Countrey, since wholly conquered by his Successors. 12. Chars, not far from the same River also, supposed to be the Chorsa of Ptolomy, of which not long since the ruins onely; but in three weeks so repaired and fortified by the Turks, Anno 1579. that it is thought to be impregnable. 13. Thespia, giving name of old to the Lake Thespitis, and to the Region called Thespites; but now not in being. 14. Arminig, now of greatest name, and esteemed the Metropolis of this Countrie: situate in that part of the Lake of Vastan (the Martiana palus of the antient writers) which lieth next to this Countrey; and by that well fortified; the onely City of Armenia possessed by the Persians, who are the Lords of all that Lake, of which more hereafter. 15. Van, both for natural situation, and the works of art, accompted by the Turks for their strongest Bulwark in these parts against the Persians; and for that cause well garrisoned, and as well munitioned.

This Countrey was first planted by Hul or Chul the sonne of Aram, and by Mesech one of the sonnes of Japhet, who with their families or Colonies possessed the same: the one leaving the remainder of his name in the Montes Moschici; the other in the Town called Cholna and the Region called Colthene by Ptolomy, Cholobatene by Stephanus. Advanced to the honour of a Kingdome assoon as any, that of Babel excepted, Ninus the third from Nimrod finding Barzanes King hereof, whom he forced to acknowledge his superiority, and to aid him in his warres against Zoroaster the King of Bactria. Kings of most note in times succeeding, for we have no constant Catalogue of them, were 1. Araxes, who being warred on by the Persians, was promised victory by the Oracle, on the sacrifice of his two fair daughters. Willing to satisfie the Gods, and yet spare his children, he sacrificed two of the daughters of Mesalcus, a noble man of this Countrey, by whom in revenge hereof his own daughters were slain, and himself so closely followed, that swiming the River then called Helmus, he was therein drowned, and thereby gave unto that River the name of Araxes. 2. Artaxa, the founder of the great City Artaxata; ſpoken of before. 3. Tigranes, the moſt mightie King that ever reigned in Armenia, to which he added by his proweſs Galatia, and a great part of Cilicia in Aſia Minor, the whole Countreys of Media, Syria, and Phœnicia. But ſiding with Mithridates, whoſe daughter he had maryed, againſt the Romans, he was by Lucullus overthrown in two grea: battels, and outed of the greateſt part of his dominions. Hearing that Pompey had ſucceeded Lucullus in command of the Army, and truſting more unto his goodneſs than a wiſeman would, he put himſelf into his power: by whom condemned in a great ſum of money for the charge of the war, and ſtripped of all the reſt of his eſtates; he was ſuffered to enjoy Armenia Maior, Syria being made a Province, Sophene given to Ariobarzanes King of Cappadocia, Media lefe unto it ſelf, and the leſſer Armenia conferred on one of his Sonnes, who being found guilty of ſome practice with the King of Parthia, was carryed Priſoner unto Rome, and his Countrey brought into the form of a Province. 4. Artavaſdes, circumvented by Mar. Antonie, who led him Priſoner to Rome, but (catenis, ne quid honori ejus deeſſet, aureis, as the Hiſtorian tells us of him) it was in chaines of Gold for his greater honour; giving Armenia to one of the ſonnes of Cleopatra. And though 5. Artaxias recovered his Fathers Kingdome, yet he and his Succeſſors held it but as Vaſſals of the Roman Empire: the Senate after that confirming and ſometimes nominating the Armenian Kings. Continuing in this eſtate till the time of Trajan, it was by him reduced to the form of a Province, (made after that a part of the Pontick Dioceſe) who adding Meſopotamia alſo unto his dominions, make Tigris the Eaſtern border of his Empire, which Auguſtus thought fit to limit with the banks of Euphrates. But long it held not in that form, being governed by its own Kings, as it was before Trajans time, in the reign of Conſtantius, Julian, and the Emperors following; whom they acknowledged and revered as their Lords in chief, till the time of Juſtinian the ſecond (he began his Empire Anno 687.) when ſubdued by the Saracens. Recovered by that Emperour, but ſoon loſt again, it continued ſubject to the Saracens, till the breaking in of the Turks, Anno 844. of whom more anon. The greateſt part of the Turks emptying themſelves into Perſia, and other Countreys which they took from the Eaſtern Emperors, the Chriſtians of Armenia began to take heart again, and to have Kings of their own, by whom governed, till again ſubdued by Occadan, or Hoccata ſonne of Cingis, the firſt Cham of the Tartars. Nor did the Tartars make ſo abſolute a conqueſt of it as to extinguiſh either Chriſtianity, or the race of the Kings: Haithon, ſurnamed Armenius, reigning after this, and going in perſon to Mangu, the great Cham of Tartarie, Anno 1257. And in our own Chronicles, in the reign of King Richard the ſecond, we find mention of one Leon an Armenian King, who came hither to ſue for aid againſt the Turks, by whom then diſpoſſeſſed of his eſtates. By Uſſan-Caſſanes, one of the Princes of this Countrey, (of whom more hereafter) who had the fortune to obtain the Crown of Perſia, Anno 1472. it was made a Province of that Kingdome: and ſo continued till the year 1515. when conquered by Selimus the firſt, and by him made a part of the Turkiſh Empire; more fully ſetled and aſſured in the reign of Amurath the third, who by cauſing many Forts and Garriſons to be planted in it, made the conqueſt abſolute.

The Armes of this Kingdom, when a Kingdom, governed by Princes of its own of the Chriſtian faith, were Gules, 3 heads of a Buck Argent, Crowned Or.

2. COLCHIS.

COLCHIS is bounded on the Eaſt, with Iberia; on the Weſt, with the Euxine Sea, and part of the Tartars Precopenſes; on the North, with Tartarie, from which parted by thoſe vaſt hills, which the Romans called Caucaſi; and on the South, with Armenia Major, from which ſeparated by the Montes Moſchici.

The reaſon of the name I find not. Nor can yield unto Bochartus, who fetcheth the original of the name and Nation, from Cuſluhim, one of the ſonnes of Mizraim, the ſonne of Cham: the Etymology of the name being too much wreſted, and Egypt too farr off to give a being to Colchis in thoſe early dates: though poſſibly in times ſucceeding, the Ægyptians hearing by the Greeks of the wealth of the Countrey, might ſend Colonies of their people thither, as to other places. It is now called Mengrelia.

The Countrey ſaid to be very fruitful if the care of the husbandman were not wanting. Their vines they plant at the feet of great trees, which twining about the armes thereof lade them full of Grapes: with which, and other fruits riſing from the Earth, they uſed of late times to furniſh the Store-houſes of their Kings, for want of ready money to fill his Coffers; their tributes being paid in ſuch commodities. Formerly of great fame for abundance of gold found in the ſands of their Rivers iſſuing from the Caucaſian Mountains. The thing affirmed by Appianus in his Mithridatica; χρυσοφορῶσι δ ἐν τῷ Καυκάσῳ πολλαὶ πηγαι ψῆγμα ἀφαλὲς, Many of their ſprings ſaith he, which come out of Caucaſus, carry veins of Gold. The like ſaith Strabo alſo, and ſome other Antients. With which, and out of their rich Mines both of Gold and Silver, the Kings hereof were ſo well furniſhed with thoſe metals, that the furniture of their Chambers were all of Gold, and the beams of their Lodgings were made of Silver. But now ſo deſtitute of both, that the people for want of money to buy and ſell with, are inforced to barter their commodities, and change one for another.

The people at the preſent very rude and barbarous; ſo inhumane and voide of naturall affection, that they ſell their children to the Turks. The better ſort of them much given to belly-cheer, dancing and ſinging looſe ſonnets of love and daliance; uſing much wine in their intertainments, which the more their Gueſts drink, the better welcome; inflamed wherewith they offer them for a cooler their wives or Siſters, with charge to yield them all content, esteeming it no small credit to them if it be accepted. Nor are the women much averse from the entertainment, whether to please themselves or obey their husbands, let them tell that can.

The Christian faith was first here planted in the time of the Emperour Justinus, by whose perswasion Taurus Prince of the Colchi, then at the Court in Constantinople, became a Christian, and being baptized, was returned back into his Countrey, with the title of King. But Cabades the King of Persia much offended at it, proclamed war against him: which hindred the further progress of the Gospell, till the year 860. About which time Methodius and Cyrill, two reverend men, were by the Patriarch of Constantinople employed in this service; which they successfully effected: in that regard they hold to the communion of the Church of Greece, and belong to the jurisdiction of that Patriarch. To whom conform in most dogmaticall points of their Religion, and in many practicall. And though they have a distinct language of their own, which hath no affinity with the Greek, yet do they celebrate their Divine Offices in the Greek tongue, and follow the Rituals of that Church; which few of them understand any better than the Vulgar Papists of France, Spain, or Germany, do the Latine service. Whether it be that they have no learned men amongst them, either to translate their old Liturgie, or to compose a new, or that they hold tall alterations in Religion to be matters of danger; or that ignorance is the best mother of devotion (as is thought by others) I am not able to determine.

The chief Rivers of this Countrey, are, 1. Hippus, 2. Cyaneus, 3. Charistus, all rising out of the Caucasian Mountains, and falling into the Euxine. 4. Phasis, the principall of all, rising out of the Montes Moschici, or Armenian Mountains, and there called Boas. Navigable with smaller vessels a great way up into the Countrey, and with great ships 18 miles from the Sea. Memorable amongst the Antients for the landing of the Argonautes, in the mouth thereof; and those delicate fowl called from hence Phasides, or Phasiani, (Pheasants,) which they brought with them into Europe.

As for this expedition of the Argonautes, being the most remarkable action in those elder ages of the world, when Piracy and depredations were accounted for Heroical vertues: it was no other than the adventure of some noble Grecians, for the gold of Cholchos. The Age wherein it hapned was about the 11 year of Gideon the Judge of Israel. The chief Adventurers, Jason, Orpheus the famous Poet, Castor and Pollux the Sonnes of Tindarus, Telamon and Peleus the Sonnes of Æacus, and Fathers of Ajax and Achilles; Laertes the Father of Ulysses, Amphiaraus the Sooth-sayer, Hercules, Theseus, Meleager, with many others of like note. These moved with the great noise of the wealth of Colchos, and the riches of King Ætus, then therein reigning, resolved upon a voyage thither, embarked in a ship called Argos (whence the name of Argonautes) whereof one Typhis was chief Pilot. Passing the Hellespont, Propontick, and Thracian Bosphorus, they came into the Euxine Sea: and after many difficulties and strange Adventures (which such Knights Errants could not chuse but encounter with) they landed in the River Phasis, and came to the Kings Coutt, and there were kindly entertained. But finding the Kings Treasures to be too well guarded to be took by force (said by the Poets to be kept by a Dragon alwaies waking) they practised with Medea, the daughter of Ætes, to assist them in robbing her Father. Who being in love with Jason, on promise of mariage with him, assented to it: by whose Artifices (which the Poets call Magicall charmes) the Guardians being circumvented, and the treasure gotten, they all, together with Medea, imbarked again, and after a long and dangerous voyage returned into Greece. This is the substance of the Story; which being the greatest and most notable voyage which the Grecians in those early daies had undertaken, occasioned the Poets to advance it to the highest pitch, and to disguise it with many fictions, and ingenious fancies. But not without some ground entituled to the Golden Fleece (which they make the end of the design). For the Rivers, as before was said, having Golden sands, which fell down from the mountains, (as in many other parts of the world they are found to have) it was the custome of the people to lay many Fleeces of wooll in the descent of those Rivers, in which the grains of Gold remained, though the water passed through, which Strabo witnesseth to be true.

But leaving these Adventurers to pursue their fortunes, let us go forward to survey the Colchian Cities; the principall whereof, 1. Dioscurias, a Town of great wealth and trade, founded by Amphitus, and Telchius two Spartans, the Charioters of Castor and Pollux, (and so named in honour of their Masters, whom the Greeks call Διόσκουροι) which two Spartans passing further East, were afterwards the founders of the Nation from them called Heniochi, or the Chariot-drivers. A Town of such resort by Merchants from most parts of the world, that here were spoken 300 different languages; insomuch that the Romans (as Pliny saith) were fain to maintain here 130 Interpreters, for dispatch of business, and negotiating with those Merchants. 2. Sybaris, the seat-Royal of the Colchian Kings, about nine miles from which was the Temple of Mars, to which Medea is reported to have brought the Argonauts. 3. Siganeam, neer the mouth of the River Cyaneus; as is also, 4. Æa, by Ptolomy called Æapolis, an Ægyptian Colony, planted there by Sesostris (in the time of Rehoboam the Sonne of Solomon) at what time he attempted but without success the conquest of Colchis. 5. Neapolis, so called from the newness or late foundation of it, when that name was given. 6. Phasis, so called from the River, upon which it is situate, retaining both the site and name to this very day: the ordinary residence of the Turkish Beglerbeg, by whom called Phassum. 7. Alvati, a well fortified place. More in the land are placed by Ptolomy, 8. Mechlessus, 9. Sarace, 10. Zadris, 11. Surium; &c. not much observable.

The first Inhabitants of this Countrey most probably came of out of the neighbouring Armenia, and there-therefore the posterity of Hul or Chul, from whence perhaps the name of Colchis: to whom in tract of time, some Colonies out of Ægypt (a seafaring people) moved with the great fame of the riches and wealth hereof, did adjoin themselves; the Colchians on that ground, (or from some part of his Army left there by Sesostris) being said by Ammianus Marcellinus to be the antient off-spring of the Ægyptians. The most antient of their Kings was Ætes spoken of before: who entertaining Phryxus flying out of Greece from the fury of his stepdame Ino, with great store of treasure, occasioned the Argonauts, as well in way of revenge, as in hope of booty, to make that famous expedition for the Gold of Colchos, disguised under the fiction of the Golden Fleece. Of most note after him, Selauces, and Esubops, who first discovered the rich mines of Gold and silver, of which metals they made all their Utensils, even the beams of their Chambers. The fame whereof drew thither Sesostris the great King of Ægypt, who being vanquished in the field was fain to lay aside all those hopes which he brought with him thither, and return back to Ægypt in worse state than he came; but that he left behind him an Ægyptian Colony in the City of Æa; which after occasioned others of that Countrey to repair hither also. Living in peace and unmolested from this time forwards, they were unhappily ingaged by Tigranes of Armenia, to side with him against the Romans; and in his overthrow gave such advantage to the Victor, that Orodes the King of Colchis was fain to submit himself to Pompey, to dismiss his forces, leave his fastnesses, and finally to redeem his peace, by sending to him a Bedstead of purest Gold, and many other rich presents. After this, the Romans had here their Agens, and received hence some annuall profits, but never brought it to the form of a Province. Distressed between the Persians and Constantinopolitans, they had much ado to stand upright; though betwixt both they kept themselves in a kind of liberty: as of late times, betwixt the Persians, Turks, and Tartars, their too potent Neigbours. But at the last Anno 1579. Amurath the third, to make the safer passage for his forces in Georgia, sent Uluzales his Admiral with a great Fleet into the Euxine Sea, who comming up the River Phasis took the City of Fassum, fortified it, and laid so certain a foundation of a future conquest; that though the Mengrelians did not long after demolish some of his fortifications, yet they were afterwards repaired, and Fassum made the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, as it still continueth.

3. IBERIA.

IBERIA is bounded on the East, with Albania; on the West, with Colchis; on the North, with the Caucasian Mountains; and one the South, with the Montes Moschici: by the first mountains parted from Sarmatia Asiatica, and by the last from Armenia Maior.

It was so called from the River Iberus, which running thorow it, falleth at last into the more noted River Cyrus: but is now called Georgia, and that as some say from Saint George the Cappadocian Martyr, whom here they have in very great reverence, as their tutelary Saint and Patron: as others say, from George a Cappadocian Bishop, by whose preaching they were brought unto Christianity; and some again will have them called properly Gordiaans, and corruptly Georgians, from their neer neighbourhood to those mountains. But the most probable opinion is, as I conceive, that they took this name from the Georgi, whom Pliny reckoneth amongst other of the Caspian nations. Though to say truth, the name of Georgia extendeth somewhat further than that of Iberia, as comprehending also that part of Armenia Major which lies next to Media, and the whole Countrey of Albania, if I guess aright.

The Countrey for the greatest part, is covered with Mountains, woods, and thickets, and in that regard unconquerable for the difficulty of the mountainous passages; yet notwithstanding it is very fruitfull in many places, having many fertile plains, and wealthy vallies; well watered, and of great increase to the husbandman, if he be not wanting to himself in care and industry.

Of the old Iberians it is written, that they were a very warlike nation, and used to set as many Pillars about the grave of a dead man, as he had slain Enemies in his life: as also that those of the same Tribe or family had all things common; he being the Ruler which was eldest: and that some of them did derive themselves from the Children of David begotten on the wife of Uriah, for that cause never marying out of their own kindred. The present Georgians very warlike, strong of bodie, and valorous in fight; for a long time defended themselves and Countrey from the Turks and Persians, with great prudence making use of the one against the other. But overpowred by the vast multitude of Turks breaking in upon them, they have lost many of their best Forts, and much of their liberty.

The Christian faith was first here planted in the time of Constantine the Great, by means of a Christian captive women (such extraordinary waies doth God find out to promote his Gospell): who being of a most devout life, and exemplary piety, had by her prayers to CHRIST restored a young child to health which was thought past cure; and healed the Queen hereof of a desperate maladie, when no help of Physick would prevail. Whereupon the King sent Ambassadours to Constantine, desiring Ministers and Preachers to be sent to Iberia, to instruct the people in the faith: which was done accordingly. Since that time, Christianity hath flourished in this Countrey without interruption; though by Mahometans, and Pagans, on all sides encompassed: agreeable in doctrinal points to the Church of Greece, whose Rituals also the People do to this day follow. Not subject for all that to the Patriarch of Constantinople, (though of his Communion) but to their own Metropolitan onely; who hath under him about 18 Bishops, and resideth for the most part in Saint Catharines Monastery on Mount Sinai. By means of which remote dwelling of their principall Pastor, Mahometanism hath got some footing, and Jesuitism began to creep in amongst them. The occasion of which last was this.

About the year 1614. the Persians making an inrode into this Countrey, took the City of Cremer, and therein Cetaba, the mother of Prince Teimurazes, whom leading her captive into Persia, and not able to prevail with her to turn Mahometan, they moſt cruelly murdered. Some of the Jeſuites then travelling in thoſe Countreys, and willing out of that ſad accident to advance the fame of their Society, together with the Catholique cauſe, cut off the head of a dead man whom they found in the way, anoined it with oyl and odours, brought it into Georgia, and ſignified unto the Prince, that they had with them the head of the bleſſed Martyr Cetaba, deſiring leave to live in ſome Monaſtery, and have the keeping of the holy Relique committed to them. This eaſily believed, and granted, the head was placed with great honour in the Church of Saint George at Aberdall; much reſort to it from all parts by diſeaſed perſons: whom if paſt cure, the Jeſuites ſent home again, preſcribing them in the way of preparation a long time of repentance; if curable by outward means which they applyed, the cure was preſently aſcribed to the holy Relique. Grown famous by this means, they gained many Proſelytes to themſelves; and had no ſmall hope of prevailing on Prince Teimurazes to ſubmit himſelf to the Pope, as the Vicar of CHRIST. When in the heat of all their glories, a letter cometh from Maacla, a Lady attendant on the Princeſs, (but then living in Perſia, as a ſlave or bond-maid) ſignifying that her Maſter by her perſwaſion, had got into his power the body of his mother Cetaba; which he might ranſome if he pleaſed; two Travellers withall, who came out of Perſia with the Jeſuites, reporting what they ſee them do with the dead mans head. By which means the Impoſture being diſcovered, the body of the Queen was ſent for, the falſe Relique was caſt out of the Church, and the falſer Jeſuites into priſon, and next out of the Countrey.

Rivers of note I find not any, either in Ptolomy or any of our modern writers, but what are touched upon before, except onely the River of Iberus ſpoken of before, from which the Countrey is thus named. The whole in general ſo deſtitute of waters, that Pompey in his march this way againſt the Albanians, was fain to carry 10000 bladders filled with water for the uſe of his Army.

Places of moſt antiquity and importance in it, 1. Artaxiſſa, 2. Vaſada, 3. Lubium, 4. Armaſtica, all named by Ptolomy; this laſt by Pliny called Harmaſtis. 5. Cremen, the chief City now poſſeſſed by the Georgians. 6. Cachete, honoured with a fair Church, the moſt beautifull of all the Countrey, dedicated by the name of Saint George. 7. Triala, where are to be ſeen the ruins of a large City, and many Churches; by what name antiently called, I find not. 8. Altuncala, or the Golden Caſtle, a ſtrong fortreſs, and the ordinary reſidence of the Georgian Princes, ſince the time of the wars betwixt the Perſians and the Turks. 9. Archichelech, a ſtrong Caſtle taken by Solyman the Magnificent in his wars againſt Tamas King of Perſia, and ever ſince holden by the Turks. 10. Teflis, a large and capacious Town, forſaken by the Georgians at the coming of Muſtapha, Generall of Amurath the third againſt the Perſians: who liking the ſituation of it, cauſed it to be repaired and fortified, planted thereon an hundred peeces of Ordinance, and left therein a Garriſon of 6000 Souldiers. 11. Lori, diſtant from Teflis about two daies journey of a Carriers pace, ſtrengthned with a lofty Caſtle, environed with deep ditches, and a thick wall, amounting to a mile in compaſs. Seiſed on by Ferat Baſſa, the Succeſſour of Muſtapha, who repaired the walls, planted thereon 200 ſmall peeces of Ordinance, and garriſoned it with 7000 Turks for defence thereof. 12. Tomanis, a ſhort daies march from Lori, the Countrey lying betwixt both full of rich fields and paſtures, abounding with corn, fruit, and cattel. Nigh unto which the ſaid Ferat raiſed a new Fortreſs for the better command of the Streights and paſſages, leading from thence to Lori, and ſo to Teflis (the Key of Media or Sirvan) the wall whereof being 1700 yards in compaſs, he cauſed to be planted with 200 peeces of Artillery; and with incredible diligence cut down a thick wood which lay before it; and otherwiſe would have been a receptacle of theeves, or Enemies. 13. Gliſca, 14. Baſcapan, &c. poſſeſſed and fortified by the Turks to make good their footing in this Conntrey. But poſſibly moſt of theſe ſtrong holds now poſſeſſed by the Turks may be within the bounds of Armenia Major, and Albania, though within the Countrey of the Georgians, that name not being limited to Iberia, as was ſaid before.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were ſuch who were brought hither by Tubal, the ſonne of Japhet, from whom this people at the firſt, as Joſephus hath it, had the name of Thobeli. But that name growing out of knowledge, the nations in it of moſt note were the Tibareni, Moſſynœci, Chalybes, and of leſs efteem the Biſeries, Sapires, Macrones, &c. united at the laſt in the name of Iberi, from the River Iberus, of which Pliny ſpeaketh, the principall of all this Countrey. Too fruitfull of increaſe for ſo narrow a dwelling, ſome of them put themſelves to ſeek their fortunes, where after long wandring they fell upon the Coaſt of Spain next the Pyrenees, where they ſtaid themſelves, giving the name of Iberus to the chief River there, and of Iberia to the Countrey. Of which more before. Such of them as remained behind continued an unconquered people, under the government of their own Kings, till the time of Tigranes King of Armenia. By whom invited to his aid againſt the Romans, they came in accordingly: and in his fall diſcomfited by Lucullus in three ſeverall battells, were fain to ſtand upon their guard as well as they could: firſt holding fair with Pompey who ſucceeded Lucullus in his charge. But breaking out again on a new temptation, they were incountred by him. In which battel 9000 of their men being ſlain and 10000 taken, they were conſtrained to ſue for peace, not otherwiſe to be obtained till Artaces the King of theſe Iberians, gave his ſonnes for Pledges. After this Feudataries to the Roman and Grecian Emperours, till the fatall inundation of the Saracens had ſo weakned that Empire, that the Kings hereof acknowledged no more ſubjection to thoſe of Conſtantinople, till Conſtantinople it ſelf became the Imperiall ſeat of the Ottoman Family; in whoſe quarrels with the Perſian Sophies, this Countrey began to ſuffer a new invaſion: ſome Towns and Forts of it being taken by Solyman, in his march or paſſage againſt Tauris. Afterwards in the time of Amurath the third, who ſet his mind moſt eagerly on the warre with Perſia, a great part of it was ſubdued by Muſtapha the Turkiſh Generall: who inviting the widow Princeſs and her two ſonnes to come to his tent, ſent the young Princes to Conſtantinople, and by that means had opportunity to affiue his purchaſes. And though the Perſians did their beſt to aſſiſt the Georgians, yet proved they but a kind of miſerable comforters; as much puniſhing or plaguing this poor Countrey with their aides, as the Turks by their armies. So that now it ſtands divided betwixt the Grand Signeur and its naturall Princes: the Georgian Princes holding the greateſt part, but the Turks being in poſſeſſion of the ſtrongeſt holds; kept by them under colour of ſecuring their way to Perſia, for which this Countrey is indeed but unhappily ſeated.

4. ALBANIA.

ALBANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the Caſpian Sea; on the Weſt, with Iberia; on the North, with the Caucaſian Mountains; on the South, with the Moſchici. So named from the Albani, who did once inhabit it; and of late called Sairia; but reckoned in theſe laſt ages as a part of Georgia.

The Countrey of ſo rich a ſoil, that without the leaſt labour of the husbandman, the Earth doth naturally and liberally afford her ſtore, and where it is but once ſown, will yield two or three reapings. But being ill husbands on it in former times, they occaſioned Strabo to give them this note for a remembrance, That they needed not the uſe of the Sea, who knew no better how to make uſe of the Land. The people antiently ſo ſimple that they could not reckon above an hundred; ignorant of weights, meaſures, and the uſe of money. Old age they had in high eſteem, but held it utterly unlawfull to make ſpeech of the dead. And of theſe Pliny doth report that they were gray-headed from their very youth, and could ſee as well by night as by day; the verity of which laſt may be ſomewhat queſtionable. But withall they are affirmed to have been a ſtout and couragious people, ſtrong bodies, patient of toil and labour, as they are at this day. And well the men may be couragious and ſtout, where the women are ſo truely maſculine. Of whom it is affirmed by Authors of undoubted credit, that they were excerciſed in Armes and martiall feats, as if deſcended lineally from the antient Amazons; whom Plutarch placeth in this tract, reporting ſome of them to be aiding to theſe Albanians in their war with Pompey: which poſſibly might be no other than ſome the more noble Albanian Dames.

Principall Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Soana, giving name to the Soani, one of the Nations of theſe parts mentioned by Pliny. 2. Caſius, 3. Gerrus, 4. Albanus, whence perhaps the name of Albani came unto this people. 5. Cyrus, (by Plutarch called Cyrnus) ſpoken of in Armenia Major, but more properly belonging to this Countrey, becauſe herein it hath its ſpring, and the greateſt part of its courſe alſo. For riſing out of the Mountain Caucaſus, which ſhuts up this Province on the North, it paſſeth thorow the middeſt of it, till it come to the borders of Armenia, where it beginneth to bend more towards the Eaſt: and having received into its Channel all the former Rivers, beſides many others of leſs note, falleth with twelve mouths into the Caſpian or Hyrcanian Sea. Mountaines of note here are not any, but what are common unto them with other Nations; the Montes Moſchici on the South, and Caucaſus upon the North, being rather common boundaries betwixt ſeverall nations, than peculiar unto any one; though from the laſt the Iberians, and theſe Albanians, be in ſome writers called Caucaſia Gentes.

Cities and Towns I find many in it, but little of them more than their very names. 1. Chabala, by Pliny called Cabalaca, and honoured with the Character of Inſignior Albana urbs, the moſt noted City of this Countrey. 2. Albana, ſo called from the River Albanus, upon which it was ſeated. 3. Teleba, 4. Namechia, 5. Thelbis, 6. Getarra, neer unto the influx of the River Cyrus. How theſe are called, or whether any thing be remaining of them, I am not able to ſay. The chief now being, and worthy to be ſo accounted, is the City of Derbent, ſituate neer the Caſpian Sea, from which to Teſſis a City ſpoken of before, remain the foundations of a high and thick wall, affirmed to have been built by Alexander the Great, to defend theſe parts againſt the irruptions of the Northen unconquered nations. The Town environed with two walls, and ſo defended by difficult and narrow paſſages of the rocks, that it is not eaſily acceſſible: but taken for all that by Muſtapha the Turkiſh General, Anno 1587 and made the ordinary reſidence of a Turkiſh Baſſa. Conceived to be the Caucaſia Porta of the Antients, which Pliny honoureth with the title of ingens naturæ miraculum: by Egeſippus for the ſtrength of it called Porta Ferrea; with reference to which by the Turks called Demir-can, the word ſignifying in their language, a gate of iron. The other places of this tract are either of no accompt and eſtimation, or elſe are ſpecified before amongſt the Cities and good Towns of the Georgians, of whoſe Country this is now a part: yet we may add 2. Subran, upon the borders of Media. 3. Santa Maria, north of Derbent; both of them on, or neer the banks of the Caſpian Sea.

The firſt Inhabitants of this Countrey, ſeem to have been of the plantation of Gether the Sonne of Aram, and Nephew of Japhet, whoſe memory was long preſerved in the City of Getara before-mentioned; So called by him or ſome of his poſterity in remembrance of him. The People living ſomewhat out of the common road, were little troubled with Invaders from forreign parts; neither the Perſians nor Macedonians looking ſo far North. Nor poſſibly had the Romans taken notice of them, had they not ingaged themſelves with Tigranes firſt, and afterwards with Mithridates. Falling on Pompey with an Army of 40000, and well beaten by him, they were content to ſue for peace. But finding that the Iberians alſo had took up Arms, they ingaged again, leavying an Army of 12000 horſe and 50000 foot, in which Oroezes their King, with his brother Coſis, were in perſon preſent. And though they had made good the banks of the River Cyrus; yet being ill armed, and for the moſt part only with skins of beaſts, they made but ſmall reſiſtance againſt the Romans; notwithſtanding the gallant charge of Coſis, who aſſaulted Pompey, and had the honour ſo be ſlain by him in the place. After this overthrow, and their giving pledges unto Pompey for their good behaviour, we find little mention of them in the Stories of the Roman Empire, till the time of Trajan. Who having conquered and reduced Armenia Major to the form of a Province, resolved to shew his power to these neighbouring nations: and to that end imposed a King on the Albani of his own appointment, and made the Kings of Colchis, and Iberia, do their homage to him. In times succeeding no news of them; either because remote from the stage of Action, or serving under the command of some greater nation, where their name occurs not. Conquered by Occadan, or Hoccata the Cham of Tartarie, together with Iberia, and Armenia, they were a while subject to that Empire: and passing in succeeding times by the name of Georgians, partook of the same fortunes with them. Now at the mercy of the Turk, who by reason of the strong footing which he hath gotten amongst them, is become a dreadful neighbour to them, if not acknowledged by them for their Lord in chief.

Thus having taken a survey of all the Provinces of the Turkish Empire both in Europe and Asia, and touched upon the means by which they are possessed of Ægypt, whereunto all the rest of their hold in Africk, serves but for an accessory; we will now look upon the story of this people, their first originall, the great success of their affairs, the Princes under whose command they have made these conquests. Which having done, we will proceed to a Description of the Persons, Manners, and Conditions of the Turks themselves, their power and policy, with other things considerable in so great an Empire.

And first for the original of the Turkish Nation, they were most probably the Descendants of those Turcæ, whom Pliny and Pomponius Mela place about the fennes of Mæotis. Of whom thus Mela, speaking of the Gelani a Scythian people. Juxta Thyrsagetæ Turcæque vastas sylvas occupant, aluntque venando, &c. Next unto them (saith he) live the Thyrsagetæ and the Turcæ, possessed of vast woods, and maintained by hunting; and then a rough and desart Countrey with continuall rocks, as farre as to the Arympheians. And Pliny mustering up the barbarous nations of those parts, joins the Tussagetæ (or Thyrsagetæ) with the Turks, and placeth them next the Arympheians, as Mela doth, usq; ad solitudines silvosis vallibus asperas, spreading themselves unto the rough desarts, and woody vallies. Not known by action (though by name) till the time of Tiberius the second, who began his Empire Anno 577. when pressing hard on the Avares, a neighbouring Nation; they compelled them to forsake their seats and pass into Europe, where they made themselves masters of Pannonia, now called Hungary. In the time of Heraclius, we find them with other barbarous nations at the siege of Constantinople, but under the command of the Persians. After which they began to set up for themselves, and in the year 763. made a road into those Countreys which we last described, and loading themselves with prey and booty, returned home again. But liking better of these parts than their own poor dwellings, in the year 844. they brake once more thorow the Caspian Streights, and passing through Iberia, seized on Armenia Major, and there fixed themselves; giving it the name of Turcomania: in which wide and spacious Countrey they roamed up and down, without any certain habitation, removing their heards and families from one place to another, as they had formerly been used to do in the fennes of Mæotis; and as the Tartars and wild Arabs do untill this day. And so they lived, a poor and contemptible nation, till Mahomet the Sultan of Persia, rebelling against his Lord and Master the Caliph of Babylon, called in these Turks unto his aid; and by their help obtained a signall victory. The victory obtained, the Turks desire their wages, and a fair dismission; but could speed in neither; the Sultan being loth to part with such a necessary mischief, till his affairs were better setled; and therefore shuting up the passages of the River Araxes, which he before had opened for them: Provoked wherewith, under the conduct of Tangrolipix, their principal Leader, they began to spoil and wast the Countrey, a multitude of needy people, and some of the discontented Souldiers coming daily to them. Assaulted by the Persians, in the first battel they not onely got a notable victory, but such store of Armour, horses, and other necessaries, as made them able to encounter with the Sultan himself: whom having overthrown and slain in the second fight, Tangrolipix is by both Armies proclamed King of Persia, in the year one thousand and thirty, or thereabouts.

There were at this time amongst the Turks two most noted Tribes, the Selzuccian, and the Oguzian. Of the Selzuccian, Tangrolipix, Cutlu Muses, Melech, and Ducat were the heades: of which Tangrolipix as the chief of that Clan or Family was setled in the throne of Persia; Cutlu Muses furnished with an Army against the Christians, possessed himself of a great part of Asia Minor; Melech and Ducat, by the like favour of their Cousen the Persian Sultan; were vested into the Cities of Aleppo and Damascus, with their severall Territories. But the line of Tangrolipix and the rest being all worn out, as hath been shewn in our descriptions of Syria and Anatolia; the man of most nobility amongst the Turks was Ottoman, the chief of the Oguzian family, Nephew of Solyman Prince of Macham, a small territory in the Realm of Persia. Which Solyman, flying the fury of the Tartars when they conquered Persia, was drowned in crossing the River Euphrates, as he passed with his few Subjects towards Asia Minor, the best place of refuge for his Nation; leaving the chief-ship of his Tribe to Ethrogul his sonne: who obtained of the last Aladine of the Selzuccian Family, the village of Sugut in Bithynia for himself and his small handfull of people. To him succeeded his sonne Ottoman, in the year 1280. who to revenge some injuries done unto his people by the improvident Christians, took from them Castle after Castle; and in the end possessed himself of the City of Nice, not long before the Imperiall Seat of the Grecian Emperors. Emboldned with such great successes, and hearing of the death of Aladine the second, whom he acknowledged for his Lord, he took unto himself the Title of Sultan, Anno 1300. from which before he had abstained. To this time, and these small beginnings, we must reduce the first foundation of the Ottoman Empire; increased unto its present greatness by the courage and good fortune of these Princes following.

The Kings of the Turks of the Oguzian or Ottoman Family.

1300. 1. Ottoman, the sonne of Ethuogul, the first Turkish Sultan of this line, added to his small territory the greatest part of Bithynia, and some part of Pontus. 28.

1328. 2. Orchanes, took the City Prusa, and made it his residence; and was the first that put footing in Europe, where he got Gallipolis, and other peeces.

1350. 3. Amurath, wonne the Thracian Chersonese, the strong City of Adrianople, with the Countries of Servia, and Bulgaria, where he was slain by a common Souldier in the fields of Cossova. 23.

1373. 4. Bajazet, made himself master of a great part of Thrace, Macedan, and Achaia. He was taken prisoner by Tamerlane; and brained himself in an iron cage, in which the insolent Conqueror used to carry him. 26.

1399. 5. Mahomet, united the dismembred Empire of his Father, and inlarged it with the more absolute conquest of Dacia, part of Sclavonia, and the rest of Macedon. 17.

1416. 6. Amurath II. subdued from the Constantinopolitan Empire, all Achaia, Thessaly, Epirus; he shaked the State of Hungary, and dyed before the Walls of Croy. 34.

The Ottoman Emperors.

1450. 7. Mahomet II. sumamed the Great, and first Emperor of the Turks, ruined the two Empires of Constantinople, and Trabezand, twelve Kingdomes, and two hundred Cities. 31.

1481. 8. Bajazet II. subdued the Caramanian Kingdome, and part of Armenia; and drove the Venetians from Morea, and their part of Dalmatia. 31.

1512. 9. Selimus, having poisoned his Father, subverted the Mamalucks of Egypt; bringing it, together with Palestine, Syria, and Arabia, under the yoke of the Turks. 7.

1519. 10. Solyman the Magnificent, surprised Rhodes, Belgrad, Buda, with a great part of Hungary, Babylon, Assyria, Mesopotamia. 48.

1567. 11. Selimus II. an idle and effeminate Emperour, by his Deputies took from the Venetians the Isle of Cyprus, and from the Moores, the Kingdome of Tunis, and Algiers. 8.

1575. 12. Amurath III. took from the disagreeing Persians, Armenia, Media, and the City Tauris, and the fort Guierine from the Hungarians. 20.

1595. 13. Mahomet III. took Agria in Hungaria, which Kingdome had likely bin lost, if he had pursued his victory, at the battell of Keresture. 8.

1603. 14. Achmat, who the better to enjoy his pleasures, made peace with the German Emperor, and added nothing to his Empire. 15.

1618. 15. Mustapha, brother to Achmat, succeeded; a novelty never before heard of in this Kingdome; it being the Grand Signeurs common policy to strangle all the younger brothers: howsoever this Mustapha was preserved, either because Achmat being once a younger brother, took pitty on him; or because he had no issue of his own body, and so was not permitted to kill him.

1618. 16. Osmen, succeeded his Unkle Mustapha; and being unsuccessful in his war against Poland, was by the Janizaries slain in an uproar, and Mustapha again restored; yet long enjoied he not his throne: for the same hand that raised him, plucked him down, and seated young Amurath in the place.

1623. 17. Morat (or Amurath the IV.) Brother of Osmen, of the age of 13. years, succeeded on the second deposition of his Unkle Mustapha; who proved a stout and masculine Prince, and bent himself to the reviving of the antient discipline. To the great good of Christendome, he spent his stomach on the Persians.

18. Ibrahim, the brother of Morat, preserved by the Sultaness his mother in his brothers life; and by her power deposed again for interdicting her the Court. He spent a great part of his reign in the warre of Crete, against the Venetians; but without any great successe.

1648. 19. Mahomet IV. sonne of Ibrahim, now reigning: Lord of all this vast Empire, containing all Dacia, and Greece, the greatest part of Sclavonia and Hungary, the Isles of the Ægean Sea, and a great part of the Taurican Chersonese in Europe; of all the Isles and Provinces, which we have hitherto described in Asia; and in Africk of all Ægypt, the Kingdomes of Tunis and Algiers, with the Ports of Suachem, and Erocco. Nor is their stile inferiour to so vast an Empire, Solyman thus stiling himself in his Letter to Villerius great Master of the Rhodes, at such time as he intended to invade that Iland: i.e. Solyman King of Kings, Lord of Lords, most high Emperour of Constantinople and Trabezond, the most mighty King of Persia, Syria, Arabia, and the Holy Land; Lord of Europe, Asia, and Africa;

frica; Prince of Meccha, and Aleppo, Ruler of Hieruſalem, and Soveraign Lord of all the Seas and Iſles thereof.

As for the perſons of the Turks, they are generally well-complexioned, of good ſtature, proportionably compacted, no idle talkers, nor doers of things ſuperfluous; hot and venereous, ſervile to their Prince, and zealous in their Religion. They nouriſh no hair upon their heads, except it be a Tuft on the top of their Crowns; by which they think that Mahomet will ſnatch them up into Paradiſe at the day of judgement. For which reaſon they keep on of all ſides, though never ſo poor, accounting it an approbrious thing to ſee any men uncover their heads; ſaying when they diſlike of any thing which they ſee, or hear, I had as liefe thou hadſt ſhewn me thy bare ſkull. In their familiar ſalutation they lay their hands on their boſomes, and a little incline their bodies; but when they accoſt a perſon of rank, they bow almoſt to the ground, and kiſs the hem of his garment. Walking up and down they never uſe, and much wonder at the often walking of Chriſtians. Biddulph relateth, that being at his ambulatory exerciſe with his companion; a Turk demanded them whether they were out of their way, or their wits? If your way (quoth the Turk) lay toward the upper end of the Cloiſter, why come you downwards? If to the neither end, why go you back again? Shooting is their chief recreation, which they alſo follow with much lazineſs, ſitting on carpets in the ſhadow, and ſending ſome of their ſlaves to fetch their arrowes. They prefer, as they paſs the ſtreets, the left hand before the right, as being thereby made maſter of his ſword with whom they walk. As they ſhave their heads, ſo they wear their berds long, as a ſign of freedome; but their ſlaves keep theirs ſhaven and cloſe cut.

The women are of ſmall ſtature, for the moſt part ruddy, clear, and ſmooth as the poliſhed Ivory; as neither afflicted with the weather, and often frequenting the baths: of a very good complexion, ſeldome going abroad, and then masked; laſcivious within doors, pleaſing in matters of incontinency, and they are accounted moſt beautiful, which have the greateſt eyes, and are of the blackeſt hue. Every Turk is permitted to have four wives, and as many ſlaves as he is able to keep, yet are they to meddle with none but their own, the offending women being drowned, and the man diſmembred. Theſe women live in great awe and reſpect of their husband, never ſitting with him at the table, but waiting till he hath done, and then withdrawing into ſome room. If their husband hath been abroad, at his comming in they all riſe from their ſtools whereon they ſate, kiſs his hand, and make an obeiſance, and ſtand as long as he is in preſence. The children which they have, they carry not in their arms as we do, but aſtride on their ſhoulders; they live immured from the ſight of the world: and permit not any male children, no not their own ſonnes, to come among them after they are twelve years old. From their husbands they cannot be divorced, but on ſpecial occaſion: but their husbands may put away their wives, or give them to their ſlaves, when and as often as they liſt. Far better is it with the ſiſters or the daughter of the Sultan; to whom when her Father or brother beſtoweth her on one of the Baſſas, giveth her a dagger, ſaying I give thee this man to be thy ſlave or bedfellow; if he be not loving, obedient, and dutiful unto thee, I give thee here this Canzharre or dagger to cut off his head. When they are ma ryed, their husbands come not to bed unto them, till they are ſent for, and then alſo they creep in at the beds feet. That ever any of their Ladies made uſe of their daggers, I could never read, onely I find, that Lutzis Baſſa, the chief man of the Empire next the Sultan himſelf, and of him very much beloved, having given his wife, which was ſiſter to Solyman the Magniſicent, a box on the ear, was upon complaint by her made, thruſt from all his honours, baniſhed into Macedon, and had doubtleſs been ſlain, if the Emperours love and his own merits had not pleaded for him. And this is all the Prerogative of the Sultans daughter: her ſonnes being accounted as meer and ordinary Turks onely, and never being preferred above the rank of a common Captain.

The better ſort of the Turks uſe the Sclavonian Tonque, the vulgar ſpeak the Turkiſh language, which being originally the Tartarian, borrowed from the Perſians their words of State; from the Arabick their words of Religion; from the Grecians their words or terms of war; and from the Italians, their terms of navigation.

They were formerly idolatrous Pagans, and were firſt initiated in Mahometaniſm, when they got the Soveraignty of the Perſian Scepter. The degrees in their Religion are, 1. The Saſſi or Novices. 2. The Calſi, or readers. 3. The Hegi, or writers of books, for printing they uſe not. 4. The Napi, or young Doctors. 5. The Caddi, whereof there is at leaſt one in every City, to judge of offences. 6. The Mudreſſi, who uſe to overſee the Caddis. 7. The Medlis, or principal Church Governour under the Muſti. 8. The Caldeleſcais, whereof there are onely three, one of Greece, the other for Anatolia, the third for Egypt and Syria: Theſe ſit with the Baſſas in the Divano, to determine of temporall ſuits. 9. The Muſti, whoſe ſentence in law and religion is uncontroulable. He abaſeth not himſelf to ſit in the Divano, nor affordeth more reverence to the Emperor than he doth to him.

His forces are either for the Sea, or the land. His Sea forces are great in regard of his ſpacious ſea-coaſts, vaſt woods, and number of Subjects: he never ſuffered but one memorable defeat, which was that at Lepanto; yet the next year he ſhewed his Navy whole and entire. Gallies are his onely veſſels, which being unable to cope with ſhips of any bigneſs, were not onely the occaſion of that overthrow, but alſo have hearmed the Florentine, onely with ſix great ſhips of war, to ſwager in the Seas; ſo that for more ſafety the tribute of Egypt is of late ſent to Conſtantinople by land. The Captain Baſſa, or Admirall, notwithſtanding with a Navy of 60 ſail, makes a yearly progreſs about the Seas, and Sea Towns, to annoy the enemy, ſuppreſs Pyrates, collect the tributes, and to redreſs the abuſes committed in the maritime Towns, belonging to the Admirallity: which annuall circuit is begun in May, and ended in October.

There

Their land forces are either horſe or foot, they which ſerved on horſeback are the Spahi and Aſapi: theſe latter ſerving to weary the enemies, and dull there ſwords with there multitudes; of whoſe bodies the Janizaries uſe to make mounts whereon to aſſault the wall of a beſieged Town: and are by them ſo contemned, that a Janizary once ſold 2 of them for a ſheeps head. As for the Spahi, they till they are inrold into pay, are of the ſame originall and education with the Janizaries; and called by the ſame name Azamaglans. Their pay is ten aſpers a day. The Turk is able and doth maintain 150000 Horſes at little or no coſt, which no other Prince can do with 14. millions of Gold; for whereſoever any Parcell of Land is conquered, it is divided into diveis parts, and committed to the manuring of divers men, whom they call Timariots. Theſe are to pay unto the Emperour certain rents, and at their own charges to ſend to his wars ſo many horſe, excellently appointed for the field: and which is the chief point of their ſervice to keep the ſubjects and all parts of his Empire in awe. For being as they are diſperſed in all quarters of his Dominions; the people can no ſooner ſtir, but theſe will be aſſembled and fall upon them. Theſe Timariots are in all accounted 719000 fighting men, whereof 257000 have their abode in Europe, and 402000 in Aſia and Africa. Were it not for theſe Timariots as the Turks ſaying is, no Graſs would grow where the Grand Signeurs horſe hath once ſet his hoof: for if the care of manuring the ground were commited to Paiſants and not to military men, the greateſt part of this Empire would grow waſt and deſolate. Theſe Timariots were inſtituted by Ottomon the firſt Turkiſh King of this Family, and a curſe by him laid on them that ſhould annihilate the inſtitution. The name is derived from the Turkiſh word Timar ſignifying a ſtipend.

But the nerves and Sinews of this warlike body, are the Janizaries; who by originall being Chriſtians, are choſen by the Turkiſh Officers, every five years, out of his Europaan dominions: and ſo diſtributed abroad to learn the language, cuſtomes, and religion of the Turks; afterward according to there ſtrength, will, or diſpoſition, placed in divers chambers. They of the firſt chamber are preferred ſome to be Chiauſies, ſuch as go on Embaſſies, and execute judgements; others to Sanziacks, or Governours of Cities; ſome to be Baſſas or commanders of horſemen; and others to be Beglerbegs (ideſt, Lord of Lords) to command the reſt in generall. They of the other chambers are the Janizaries or Pretorian Souldiers of the Guard, to whoſe faith and truſt the care of the Emperours Perſon is committed. The tithing of theſe young ſpringals is as we have ſaid every fifth year, and ofner ſometimes, as occaſions ſerve. By which means he not only diſarmeth his own ſubjects and keepeth them from attempting any ſtirre or innovation in his Empire: but ſpoileth all the Provinces he moſt feareth, of the Flower, Sinews and ſtrength of their People; choiſe being made of the ſtrongeſt youths only, and fitteſt for war. Theſe before they are inrold in pay, are called Azamoglans, and behave themſelves with much ſubmiſſiveneſs towards their Seniours and governours: but when once they are honoured with the title of Janizaries, they grow by degrees into an intolerable pride and haughtineſs: till of late they were not permitted to mary; neither now can any of their ſonnes be accounted any other than a naturall Turk, (whom of all the reſt they accoum the baſeſt) the eldeſt onely excepted: to whom this Pretogative was granted by Amurath the third when he came to the crown. They are in number 40000. of which 16000 are alwaies reſident in Conſtantinople. In this City they are diverſly employed, being as Conſtables to ſee the Peace kept; as Clerks of the Market to ſee to the weights and meaſures; as Officers to arreſt common offenders; as Warders to look to the gates, to guard the houſes of Embaſſadours, and to travel with ſtrangers for their more ſafety; in which charge they are very faithfull. There pay is but five aſpers a day, and two gowns yearly; neither are their hopes great, the command of 10, 20, and 100 men being their greateſt preferment; yet are they very obſequious to their Captain or Aga, who is inferiour to the meaneſt Baſſa, though in power perhaps above the chiefeſt. For the crafty Turks join not power and authority; and if they obſerve the Janizaries to love and reſpect their Aga, they quickly deprive him of life and office. The Founder of this Order was Amurath the firſt, Anno 1365. their greateſt eſtabliſher Amurath the ſecond: their name ſignifieth young Souldiers. Now concerning theſe Janizaries, we will farther conſider the ſway they bear in deſigning the Succeſſour. 2. There inſoleney towards the Emperour, and his Officers. 3. Their behaviour in the vacancy of the throne; and 4. Their puniſhments.

1. Concerning the firſt, I never find any particular ſway the Janizaries carryed in the deſignation of their Emperour, till the death of Mahomet the Great; when the Baſſas having choſen Corcut the ſonne of Bajazet, were overruled by the Aga and his Janizaries; who more inclined to Bajazet his Father and ſonne to Mahomet. Though I am not ignorant, that when this Mahomet ſucceeded in the Throne, the joyful acclamations made by the Souldiers was accounted the chiefeſt ſign of his ſecure and perpetuated eſtabliſhment. But the chief inſtance of their power herein, was the inthronizing of Selimus the firſt, who being but the ſeventh ſonne of this Bajazet, was not only preferred by them before his brethren in his Fathers life time, but by their aids alſo he ſeverally maſtered them, and in the end poiſoned his Father. To omit other examples, even of late Anno 1622. they ſlew the young Emperour Oſmen, drew his Unkle Muſtapha out of priſon, and eſtabliſhed him in the Royalty.

2. As for the next, the firſt example in which I find them peecant toward their Prince, was at the beginning of the reign of the abovementioned Bajazet; when hearing of the intended death of Achmet Baſſa whom they loved, they broke open the Court gates, and told the Emperour; They would teach him like a drunkard a beaſt and a raſcall as he was, to uſe his great place and calling with more ſobriety and diſcretion. Not long after conceiving further diſpleaſure againſt the ſaid Bajazet, they ſhook their weapons weapons againſt him, and refuſed to take him into the middeſt amongſt them; and were not, without great and vile ſubmiſſion on his part, appeaſed. Againſt Selimus the firſt, they alſo mutined, when being reſolved to winter in Armenia, for the better purſuit of his victories againſt the Perſian, he was by them forced to return home unto Conſtantinople. Againſt Solyman they mutined ſo violently, that they compelled him to diſplace Ruſtan his chief Baſſa or favorite. Againſt Amurath the 3d. for placing over them a new Aga, they ſo ſtrongly oppoſed themſelves; that firſt they ſet fire on Conſtantinople, and burnt therein, beſides ſhops and ware-houſes, twentyfive great Innes, ſeven Temples, and 15000 houſes, and in the end conſtrained him to give them money, and to yield alſo into their hands two of his chief Counſellors, by them ſuppoſed to be their adverſaries; whom they drew about the ſtreets. Finally, (to omit the tumult 1622 above-named) in the year 1600 they grew ſo diſcontented with Mahomet the 3d. that they not onely threatned to deſtroy the Principal Officers of the Court, and the baniſhment of the Sultaneſs his Mother, but the depoſing of himſelf alſo.

3. Now for the third, I find it to have been the cuſtome of theſe Janizaries, between the deaths of an old Emperor, and the beginning of a new, to commit divers inſolencies; as the rifling of the houſes of the Jews and Chriſtians, among whom they dwell; the murdering of the Baſſas, and principall men about the Court, whom they ſuſpected not to have favoured them; and a number of the like outragious miſchiefs. Of theſe we find frequent mention, as after the death of Amurath the 2d. and Mahomet the Great: at which laſt time the Merchants of Conſtantinople, being naturall Turks, eſcaped not their ravenous hands; neither could Mahomet-Baſſa avoid the fury of their ſwords. This ſpoil they took for ſo certain a due, that if they were diſappointed of it, they would preſently raiſe commotions both in Court, Field, and City, unleſs ſome preſent ſatisfaction were made them. To this end Ackmat diſtributed among them two millions and an half of Ducats; Selimus the firſt, two millions; others made an encreaſe of their dayly pay. But Selimus the 2d. diſtributing among them 100000 Sultanies onely, was by them prohibited to enter into his Seraglio, till he had inlarged his bounty: and the great Baſſaes were rapped about the pate with their callivers, for perſwading them to quietneſs. Now to prevent the dangerous and factious liberty, which in the vacancy of the Empire was uſually committed, the death of the old Emperour was with all ſecrecy concealed, till the arrivall of the new. To omit others, I will inſtance in the deaths of Mahomet the firſt, and Solyman onely. This Solyman died at the ſiege of Sigeth in Hungary, which was ſo cunningly concealed by Mahomet-Baſſa the ſpace of twenty dayes; that before the Janizaries knew of it, his ſonne Selimus had poſſeſſed himſelf of Conſtantinople, and came alſo to their Army then in retreat homewards. For this Mahomet privately ſtrangled the Phyſicians and Apothecaries which knew of his death, commanded the Souldiers to go on in their ſiege, and diverſe times ſhewed them the Emperor ſitting in his horſe-litter, as (being troubled with the Gout) he uſed to do: and when the City was taken, marched home with his dead body, ſitting ſtill in the ſame manner. So after the death of Mahomet the firſt, the Baſſaes of the Court called their Divanos, as formerly they uſed, gave order for the levying of an Army, as if ſome warre were intended, and the Kings Phyſicians went up and down with their Potions, as if they had him ſtill in cure. But the Penſioners and Janizaries miſdoubting the matter, with all egerneſs deſired to ſee him, which when the Baſſaes durſt not deny, they appointed the next day for their viſit. The next day the body was apparrelled in royall large robes, placed in a chair, at the end of a long gallery, and a litle boy cunningly ſet behind him to move the Kings hand to his head, as if he ſhould ſtroke his beard, as his manner was: which ſignes of life and ſtrength the Souldiers ſeeing, held themſelves contented, and ſo was his death concealed the ſpace of 41 dayes.

4. As for the laſt, Theſe inſolent and unſufferable pranks committed ſo commonly by theſe maſterfull ſlaves, ſo exceedingly ſtomached Bajazet the 2. that he ſecretly purpoſed with himſelf, for curing ſo dangerous a diſeaſe, to uſe as deſperate a remedy; which was to kill and deſtroy ſuddenly all the Janizaries. It is like that this Bajazet being a Scholar, had read how Conſtantine the Great had caſſed the Prætorian Souldiers, and deſtroyed their camp, as men that were the cauſes of all the ſtirres in his Empire, and whoſe pride was come to an intollerable height: and having the ſame cauſe to deſtroy his Janizaries, hoped to have done it with as much eaſe and ſafety as the other did; but they having notice of the plot, for the time continued ſo united and linked together, that he durſt not then attempt it; and afterward ſiding with his ſonne Selimus, caſt him out of his Throne into his grave. Since which time the Emperors never durſt puniſh them openly, but when any of them proveth delinquent, he is ſent privately in the night time to Pera over-againſt Conſtantinople, where by the way he is drowned, and a peece of Ordinance ſhot off, to ſignifie the performing of the Sultans command.

Now for the Emperors themſelves, we will conſider them in matters of pleaſure, in matters of ceremony, and in matters of State, the laſt being conſiderable in three main points, which are the murdering of their brethren, the removing of their ſonnes, their revenue, and therein a touch of their governenment. To theſe we will adde, what apparent ſymtomes may be obſerved to prognoſticate the ſtanding, decreaſing, and increaſing of this puiſſant Monarchy.

1. For the firſt, he hath not ſo few as 500. (ſometimes a 1000) choice virgins kept in a Seraglio by themſelves, all ſlaves born of Chriſtian Parents, and indeed the rareſt beauties of his Empire. When he is diſpoſed to take his pleaſure with any of them, they are all ranked in a gallery, and ſhe is by the Aga of the women prepared for his bed, to whom he giveth his handkercher. She that beareth him the firſt ſonne, is honoured with the title of Sultaneſs (Queen Mother we may call her) neither can he make any of them free, unleſs he marry them. When the Sultan dieth, all his women are carried into another Seraglio, where they are ſtrictly looked too, and liberally provided for, and not ſeldome times are beſtowed by the ſucceeding Sultan, on his great Baſſaes, and ſuch us he chiefly favoureth, which is a principall honour. They are attended tended on by women, and Eunuches; these being not gelded onely, but deprived of all their genitalls, and supplying the uses of nature with a silver quill: which in humane custome was brought in among them by Selimus the second, because he had seen a Gelding cover a mare.

2. These ceremonies are either performed by them, which is for the most part the building of a Mosche onely to help to the salvation of their souls: or towards them by others, which are most apparent in the entertainment of Embassadors. For when such come to his presence, they are led between two of his Courtiers, and comming before the Throne on both sides (whereof the Bassaes sit with admirable silence, resembling rather Statuaes than men;) they bow themselves to the ground with all humility, laying their hands on their breasts, but never uncovering their heads, which (as we before noted) is counted an undecency. When they are to depart, they go all backwards, it being accounted very irreverent to turn their back-parts towards a Prince so glorious. The reason why they are thus brought in between two, is said to be for their greater honour: but is indeed a fear that they have, lest the Grand Seignieur, under the pretence of a Salutation, or the delivery of an Embassie, should be stapped. Which wariness they have used, ever since the time that Miles Cobiletz, a Servian, scrambling from among the slain at the battel of Cassova, and being admitted to the speech of Amurath the first, the Author of that overthrow; stabbed him into the belly with his dagger.

3. Amongst all the jarres and discontents that be, none have been with more unkindness begun, or more eagemets prosecuted, than those of brothers: and that not only in private families, but in the stems of Princes; the multitude of Pretendants, being the originall of most civill wars. To prevent these publick emotions, the Emperors of Habassia use to immure up all their younger children in the hill Amaza; the Persians do put out the eyes of their younger brothers; and the Turks do murder them: strange and horrid courses, whereby to avoid the fear of a war in the State, they sturre up a war in their own bowels. The first amongst the Turks that began this barbarous cruelty, was Bajazet the first, on his brother Jacup; whom immediately after his Fathers death he strangled with a bow-string: this being the only instrument of their Fratricide, because thereby none of the blood-royall of Ottoman is spilt on the ground. After him, Mahomet the Great, caused his young brother then at nurse, to dy the death; and was not without much ado perswaded from being the executioner himself. Amurath the third, caused his five brethren to be at once strangled before his face; and Mahomet, his sonne, no fewer then nineteen in one day. By this course they imagine their own estate to be infinitely secured, as knowing that Mustapha a younger sonne, stirred a rebellion against Amurath; and Zemes against Bajazet, both the second of those names: that Solyman, Musa, and Isa, severally afflicted Mahomet the first, and Corcut, Selimus; the first of these names also. But yet they will not know, that nothing sooner putteth their younger Brothers into these acts of hostility, than an inevitable certainty of a violent and unnatural death: whereas were they but sure of life, and a liberall and Princely maintenance, it is more than probable, they would rest content, as in other Kingdomes the younger Princes do. And notwithstanding their barbarous policy, in particular, they are not quite free from fear, as knowing the counterfeits have heretofore much disturbed the quiet of their Predecessours: for thus we find Amurath the second to have been vexed by one that took upon him the name of Mustapha elder brother to Mahomet, then late deceased; who was much furthered and aided by the Greek Princes. This hath been one of the vulgar policies of Princes to kindle flames of sedition in their neighbours Countreys. In the infancy of the Roman Empire we find a counterfeit Agrippa, after that a counterfeit Nero, and before two counterfeit Alexanders in Syria. But never was Realm so often troubled with these Mock-kings, as England; a counterfeit Richard the 2d. being made in the time of Hen. the 4th. a counterfeit Mortimer, in the time of Hen. the 6th. counterfeit Duke of York, a counterfeit Earl of Warwick, under Henry the 7 h. and a counterfeit Edw. the 6th. under Q. Mary. To prevent these walking spirits, Mahomet the third, laid out the dead bodies of his Father and nineteen brethren, as a common spectacle for all that passed by, or would come to behold them. Of late indeed the Grand Signeur Mustapha, miraculously scaped the bow-string twice; 1. when his brother Achmat, and 2ly. when Osmen his young Nephew were made Sultans, and was the first that in this Empire did ever succeed in the collateral line: as Ibrahim the late Sultan was the second, on the death of Morat or Amurath the fourth, his elder brother.

4. The removing of the young Princes is done for three reasons: 1. to wean them from the pleasures of the Court, 2ly. to train them up in arms, and inure them to hardness, 3ly. and principally to avoid the danger of a Competitour, whereof old Princes are especially jealous. The common places destinated to this Princely exile, are Amasia in Cappadocia, Magnesia in Lydia, and such like Towns of Natolia. Neither do the old Sultans by such a great distance think themselves secure altogether; but carry a vigilant eye over their sonnes actions, and have intelligence of almost every particular thought, the least suspicion being cause sufficient to destroy them; so we find Mustapha, sonne to Solyman, the hopefullest branch that ever sprang from the Ottomon tree, to have been shamefully strangled by the command of his Father, upon a rumour onely of a mariage which he was said to have negotiated with the Persian Kings Daughter. When these Princes are once setled in their government, it is a crime meriting no less punishment than death, to depart thence and come unto Constantinople, before their Fathers death; or unless they are by their Fathers sent for. Of this we have a Tragical examplein Mahomet a Prince of great hope, sonne to Bajazet the second: who desiring to see the fashion of his Fathers Court, left Magnesia to which he was by his Father confined; and attended by two or three Gentlemen, came in the habit of a seafaring man to Constantinople, and having obtained his desire he returned to his charge. This strange action being quickly divulged abroad, and by divers variously entercepted, stirred such jealousies in the suspicious head of his old Father, that he took order not long after to have him secretly poisoned.

5. As

5. As for the ordinary revenue, it consisteth either in money received, or in money saved. The money saved, is first by the Tartars, of whom he commands continnally 60000 to attend him in his wars without any pay but the spoil of the Enemie. And second by the Timariots, who nourish and bring into the Field more horses than any Prince in Christendome can keep (as we have already said) for 14 millions of Gold. The money received (according to Botervs) is only 15 millions of Sultanies, which is nothing in respect of so great an Empire: the chief reason whereof is the Tyrannicall government of the Turk, which deters men from tillage, merchandize, and other improvements of their estates; as knowing all their gettings to lie at the Grand Signieurs mercy. His extraordinary revenue is uncredible; For besides that no Embassadour commeth before him empty handed; no man is master of his own wealth, further than it stands with the Emperours liking: so that his great Bassaes are but as spunges to suck up riches till their coffers swell; and then to be squeezed into his Treasury. These men, as he advanceth without envy, so can he destroy without danger: no man here hoping for Partakers, if he should resist, as not being ignorant that one mans fortune is built on the desired overthrow of another. Such riches as they gain, if they hap to die naturally, return to the Emperors coffers, who giveth only what he pleaseth to the Children of the deceased. These Bassaes have in their particular Provinces, their Divanoes, or Law-Courts, where justice hath bin administred formerly with great integrity; but now not a little corrupted; yet the comfort is, that such as miscarry in their right, shall without delay know what to trust to; and the Bassaes upon complaint to the Emperor are sure to die for it. Over these Bassaes (the chief of whom is the Vizier Bassa, or President of the Council) preside two Beglerbeggs; one for Greece, the other for Natolia.

6. Concerning the present state of the Empire, many judge it to be rather in the wane, than the increase, which judgement they ground upon good reasons, whereof these are the chief.

1. The body is grown too monstrous for the head: the Sultans since the death of Solyman never accompanying their Armies in person (except Morat, or Amurath the fourth) but rioting and wasting their bodies and treasures at home.

2. The Janizaries, who have been accounted the principall strength of this Empire, are grown more factious in the Court, than valiant in the Camp: corrupted with ease and liberty, drowned in prohibited wines, enfeebled with the continual converse of women, and fallen from their former austerity of discipline.

3. They have of late given no increase unto their Dominions: and as in the paths of vertue, non progredi est regredi; so in Empires, by violence gotten, when they cease to be augmented, they begin to be diminished.

4. Rebellions have in these latter times been in this Empire strangely raised, and mightily supported; which commotions the former Sultans were never acquainted with.

5. The greatness of the Empire is such, that it laboureth with nothing more than the weightiness of it self; so that it must in a manner needs decline Pondere pressa suo, overburdened with its own mightiness. For as in a naturall body, a surfeit killeth more than fasting; so in the body Politick also, too much extent doth sooner draw on a ruin, than either too little; or a mediocrity.

6. The Sonnes of the Grand Signieur, whose bravery of mind is ever suspected by their Fathers, are nursed up (contraty sometimes to their natural inclinations) in all effeminacy; which once rooted in them in their youth, doth alwayes after subject them to the softness and baseness of libidinous pleasure.

7. They have lost much of that fear and terror, which formerly their very name did carry with it: insomuch that not the Venetians onely have by Sea often mated, and once overthrown them; the Hungarians withstood their greatest forces, for the space of 200 years, by land; the Polonians forced them to dishonourable retreat and composition: but the poore Prince of Transylvania did divers times discomfit them, with the death of many of their Bassaes; the Florentines with six ships onely, intercepteth their trade; and the poor Emir of Sidon held it out against them many years together.

8. By the avarice and corruption reigning in the Court; all peace and warre, all Counsels and informations, all injuries and favours, being now made saleable. And

9. It is visible and apparent, that their Empire was long since at the highest: Et naturaliter quod procedere non potest, recedit, as Velleius hath it: when an Empire can ascend no higher, by the ordinary course of nature it must have a fall. All these are more than probable Prognosticks of a sinking Monarchy; and yet there is a greater than any of these, that is to say, the present State of Affaires. The young Emperor Mahomet the fourth, now reigning, is but a weak staff to support so vast an Empire: considering not onely the infinite casualties to which children are naturally subject; but the dangers which he may justly fear from a Rebellious Souldiery, and a Factious Court; Who by the murder of one Emperor, and the deposition of two, have made themselves so formidable, but withall so odious in the sight of the Imperiall house, that there is no way left to save them from a merited vengeance, but to translate the Empire to some other Family; though by the rooting out of this. Which whensoever it shall happen, either by the naturall death, or unnaturall destruction of the present Sultan, it will draw with it an extermination of the Ottoman race: which I look on as a matter not to be avoided, except by miracle. Supposing then the line of Ottoman to fail, (as it is most probable that it will) what will become of this vast Empire? Three there will be to offer at it, viz. the Crim-Tartar, the Janizaries, and the Bassas. And first the Crim-Tartar may plead a composition, made by his Ancestors, with the Princes of the Ottoman family; which is, that he supplying them with 60000 men at his own charges, should on the failer of the heirs males succeed in this Empire. Besides which, he may hope for no small succors, not onely from the rest of the Tartarian Princes, but even from the Great Cham himself, to recover his Estate herein, if with-holden from him: thereby to adde unto the Present greatness and renown of the Tartars, the access of such a spacious cious Empire. 2. The Bassars may conceive no small possibilities of dividing this great Empire among themselves, partly by the Example of Alexanders Captains, who after their maiters death (there being yet some of the blood Royall remaining) parted amongst themselves not onely the new-gotten Provinces, which they had conquered from the Persians; but even the Kingdome of Macedon, his old Inheritance: partly by an example in their own Histories, by which it appeareth, that after the death of Alidine the 2d. Caraman, Sarachan, Ædin, Caraſius, and the reſt of the more powerfull Commanders, divided among them the whole Turkiſh Kingdome in the Leſſer Aſia: and partly by the opportunity which they have as Governours in their ſeverall Provinces, and having ſo many bands of Souldiers under their command; which may eaſily inveſt them as Proprietaries in thoſe Eſtates, of which they have already ſuch a fair poſſeſſion. And ſo we find the Sultans or Provincial Governours of the Caliphs of Babylon, to have done before them. 3. The Janizaries may alſo build their hopes on as fair foundations, as being the Sword and Buckler of the Ottoman Empire; got, and maintained by their valour chiefly, who to excite them to the Enterprize have the Example of the Prætorian Guards of the Roman Empire (a body farre more Politique and better compacted than this is); who out of their own company created the farre greater part of the Roman Emperors, neither the Provinces or Senate daring to oppoſe them in it. But above all Examples that of the Mamalucks of Egypt doth make faireſt for them; who were born of Chriſtian Parents, as theſe are; appointed for the Guard of the Sultans, as theſe are; purpoſely entertained and inured to the warres, to take from the naturall ſubjects, the uſe of Armes, as theſe are; men of approved valour, and the chief Bulwark of that Kingdome againſt the Chriſtians, as theſe are: and then why may they not be like them in this laſt Attempt, for ſetting in their Maſters Throne, as theſe Mamalucks did. Adde hereunto, that they are already in (a manner) poſſeſſed of Conſtantinople, the head town and heart of the Empire; and their hopes are not vain. For my part I hold them to be the men moſt like, unleſs the Princes of Chriſtendome lay aſide private malice, joyn all in arms to ſtrip this proud Peacock of his feathers: and (upon ſo bleſſed an advantage) to break in peeces with a rod of iron, this inſolent and burdenſome Monarchy. A thing rather to be deſired than expected. But this by way of ſuppoſition, and as in a dream, I awake.

The enſign of this Empire (or armes of it) is the Croiſſant, or half moon; but how blazoned I cannot tell you: nor are the learned yet reſolved on the beginnings of that bearing. Some derive it to them, from the Eaſtern Gentiles, who worſhiped the Moon under both ſexes; as we learn in Spartianus. Some make it common to them, with the other Mahumetans; and they derive it from a pretended miracle of Mahomet: who to ſhew his power, is ſaid to have made the Moon fall into his lappe in two peeces; and to have reſtored her whole again to the heavens. Others are of opinion, that it was taken by the Grand Signeur at the winning of Conſtantinople; ut ſignum victæ gentis penes quam orientis imperium eſſet. And of this mind is Juſtus Lipſius, induced thereto as it ſeemeth, by the figure of the Croiſſant born in ſome old Byzantine coins. A pretty plauſible conceit; and therefore till we have a better, may paſs as currant as the money.

And thus much I thought convenient to inſert in this place, concerning the originall, proceeding, and continuance; the naturall diſpoſitions, policies, and forces of the Turks: this being as the onely Province which retaineth their name; ſo both the firſt they were poſſeſſed of, and the laſt which they have fully conquered of all their Dominions.

Ooo OF

OF MEDIA and PERSIA.

THese I have joyned together also, because the affairs thereof have been so united, in making up the second of the four great Monarchies, and running the same fortunes ever since, that they are hardly to be parted in course of story, though each must have unto it self a distinct Chorographie. First then, we begin with MEDIA.

MEDIA is bounded on the East, with Parthia, and some part of Hyrcania, Provinces of the Persian Empire; on the West, with Armenia Major, and some part of Assyria; on the North, with the Caspian Sea, and those parts of Armenia Major which now pass in the accompt of Georgia; and on the South, with Persia. So called from Madai the sonne of Japhet, by whom first planted and possessed, after that general dispersion made at Babel. Known by this name amongst the antients both Greeks and Romans; but at this time called Sheirvan by the Turks and Persians: the word signifying in the language of this Countrey, a Milkie-Plain.

The Countrey of a large extent, and of so different nature, as one would think it not the same. The North parts lying betwixt Mount Taurus and the Hyrcanian Sea, very cold and comfortless: so barren, that for the most part they make their bread of dried Almonds, and their drink of the juice of certain herbs. Fruit-trees they have but few, and those but of Apples; nor any droves of tame cattel, as in other places, their food being generally on Venison, or the flesh of wild beasts took in hunting. But on the South-side of the Taurus, the soyl is very rich, and the Countrey pleasant, plentifull both of corn and wine, and all things necessary: full of fat pastures, some of them so large in compass, that 50000 horses do graze upon it.

The people antiently great Warriers, as those who ruined the great Empire of the Babylonians; and laid upon themselves and their own vertue the foundation of the second Monarchy. But being not long after incorporated into the same Empire with the Persians, have not onely ever since followed the same fortunes with them, but participate of their nature also: and therefore we shall hear more of their Character when we come to Persia. Polygamie antiently amongst them, so farre from being esteemed a sinne or an inconvenience, that it was a punishment for the common Villager to have less than seven wives; or the woman, if of noble birth, fewer than five husbands. In their warres they use commonly to envenom their Arrows with an oyl or liquor, made of a bituminous water called Naphta, whereof there is great plenty both here, in Persia, and Assyria. The oyl called Oleum Mediacum, from this people only because their invention, and by them most mischievously used. The Arrow which was anointed with it, being shot from a slacker bow (for a swift and strong motion took away its vertue) did burn the flesh wherein it fastned with so great a violence, that nothing but dust could mitigate the fury of it, water increasing rather than diminishing that malignant flame.

The Christian Religion was first here planted by Saint Thomas, but never had the happiness to be so universally embraced as in other places; alwayes opposed and suppressed, either by Paganism in the time of the old Persian Kings; or by Mahometanism, since the first conquest of this Countrey by the power of the Saracens. Some Christians yet there be amongst them either of the Armenian or Nestorian Sects, (as in all other parts of the Persian Empire) the specialties of whose Religion have been elsewhere spoke of. Here live also very many Jews, indulged the free exercise of their Religion: many of which are the Descendants of those Tribes which were transplanted hither by Salmanassar. But the Religion generally embraced and countenanced is that of Mahomet, according to the Sophian or Persian Sects, the Language of which Nation they do also speak, though they had a language of their own, different from that of the Parthian, Elamite or Persian, as appeareth Acts 2. *v.*9. where they are reckoned as distinct.

Mountains of chief note, 1. Orontes, 2. Coronus, 3. Chaboras, the boundary betwixt Media and Assyria, 4. Jasonium, 5. Lagoas; all of them (except Chaboras onely) the disjointed branches of Mount Taurus: which is here more broken and divided than in any part of his course besides.

Out of these flow their principall Rivers, 1. Amandus, 2. Strato, and 3. Carindas; of greatest eminence in this Countrey, in the time of Ptolomy, but otherwise of no great account or observation. 4. Canac, the Divider of this Province from Armenia Major, but whether any of the former under this new name, I am not able to assign. Adde hereunto the great Lake, now called Argis (by the Persians, Kolsalan) but by Strabo named Marriana Palus, situate in the confines of Assyria, Media, and Armenia; of the fish whereof, dryed by the Sun and wind, and sold into divers other Countreys, the people of these parts raise a great commodity.

In former times it was divided into many Provinces, the principall of which 1. Tropatene, 2. Charomithrene, 3. Daritis, 4 Marciane, 5. Amariace, and 6. Syro-Media: these and the rest reduced to two in the later reckonings, viz. Atropatia, and 2. Media Major.

1. ATRO-

1. ATROPATIA is that part hereof which lieth betwixt Mount Taurus and the Caſpian Sea. So called from that Atropatus, Governor of theſe parts in the time of Darius, the laſt perſian Monarch, who ſo valiantly held out againſt the Macedonians. The Tropatene, (as I take it) of the antient Writers. A barren, cold, and unhoſpitable Countrey, as before deſcribed: and for that cauſe allotted for the dwelling of many of the captive Iſraelites brought hither by Salmanaſſar when he conquered that Kingdome: their numbers being found ſo great in this Northern Region, that Benjamin the Jew, reckoned no fewer than 50000 of them in one City onely, which he calleth by the name of Madai. And that great numbers of them were tranſplanted hither, appeareth by that paſſage 2 Kings 17. 6. where it is ſaid, that they were placed in Halah and Habor by the River of Gozan, and in the Cities of the Medes. Now Halah or Chalah ſeems moſt probably to be that Region of Aſſyria which Ptolomy calleth Chalatone, in the North of that Countrey towards Media; Habor, or Chabor, to be that Mount Chaberus, which parteth this Countrey from Aſſyria, in which Mountainous tract there was in thoſe times a City of the ſame name alſo. Betwixt which City and the banks of the Caſpian Sea, I find in Ptolomy the City Ganzania in the 40th. degree and 40 minutes of Northern Latitude: in which there are apparent footſteeps of the name of the River Gozan, upon whoſe banks it was moſt likely to be ſeated.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Hamadum, by Benjamin the Jew called Madai, repleniſhed in his time with families of the captive Iſraelites. 2. Gauraxania, another dwelling of thoſe Tribes, ſpoken of before. 3. Mandigarſis, of which nothing extant but the name. 4 Gelan, the Gelæ of the antients, whom the Greeks call Caduſii. 5. Bochn, more towards the the Caſpian Sea, hence called Mare de Bochn. 6. Eres, a place of great ſtrength, but poſſeſsed by the Turks, and made the reſidence of ſome of their principal Officers: taken by Muſtapha, Generall of the Turkiſh forces in the time of Amurath the 3d. and by him fortified as the Gate and entrance of this Countrey. 7. Sumachia, or Shamaki, betwixt Eres and Derbent, taken by Oſman Baſſa, at the ſame time, Anno 1578. and made the Reſidence of a Beglerbeg, Anno 1583. Conceived to be the Cyropolis of Ptolomy, by the Perſinas called Cyreckbata, bearing the name of Cyrus the great Perſian Monarch, by whom built or beautified. Remarkable at the preſent for a Pillar of flint-ſtones, inter-woven with the heads of many of the Perſian nobility, moſt barbarouſly ſlain by one of the late Sultans, and this Pillar here erected for a terrour to others.

2. MAJOR MEDIA, or MEDIA ſpecially ſo called, is that part hereof which lieth on the South of the Mountain Taurus. Commended by the Antients for one of the godlieſt Countries in all Aſia: the fields (ſaith Ammianus) yielding abundance of Corn and Wine, for their fatneſs and fertility very rich, and no leſs pleaſent for freſh Springs and cleer veins of water: where one may ſee plenty of green Meadows, and in them a breed of generous horſes, which they call Niſæi, mounted by as valiant and generous Riders, who with great jollity uſe to go unto the warres, and charge furiouſly upon the Enemy. The men commended by Polybius (καὶ τὰς ἀρετὰς ἀνδρῶν, &c.) as well as the Countrey.

Cities of moſt note in it, 1. Ecbatana, of as great antiquity as Babylon; for we find that Semiramis the wife of Ninus in a warre made againſt the Medes, who had then rebelled, taking an affection to the place, cauſed water-courſes to be made to it from the further ſide of the Mountain Orontes, digging a paſſage thorow the hills, with great charge and labour. Deſtroyed by the injury of time it was re-edified by Deioces the ſixt King of the Medes, and afterwards much beautified and enlarged by Seleucus Nicanor, Succeſſor unto Alexander in his Aſian Conqueſts. For beauty and magnificence litle inferiour to Babylon or Nineve, before deſcribed. In compaſs 180 or 200 Furlongs, which make about 24 Italian miles. The walls thereof affirmed in the book of Judith to be 70. Cubits high, 50. Cubits broad, and the Towers upon the Gates 100 Cubits higher; all built of hewn and poliſhed ſtone, each ſtone being ſix Cubits in length, and three in breadth. But this is to be underſtood only of the innermoſt wall, there being ſeven in all about it, each of them higher than the other, and each diſtinguiſhed by the colour of their ſeverall Pinnacles; which gave unto the eye a moſt gallant Proſpect. From which variety of colours it is thought to have the name of Agbatha, or Agbathana. In former times the ordinary reſidence of the Monarchs of the Medes and Perſians in the heats of the ſummer, as Suſa (the chief City of Suſiana) in the cold of winter. The Royall Palace being about a mile in compaſs, was built with all the coſt and cuuning that a ſtately manſion did require: ſome of the beams thereof of ſilver, and the reſt of Cedar; but thoſe of Cedar ſtrengthned with Plates of Gold. Said by Ioſephus to be built by the Prophet Daniel. Which muſt be underſtood no otherwiſe in the truth of Story, than that he over-ſaw the Workmen, or contrived the Model, appointed to that office by Darius Medus, to whom the building of the ſame is aſcribed by others. Neglected by the Kings of the Parthian race, it became a ruin. 2. Tauris, ſituate in or neer the place of Echatana, out of whoſe rubbiſh it was built. Diſtant a 150 miles from the Caſpian Sea, under the ſhadow of Orontes, now called Baronta, but opening Southwards towards a large and ſpacious Campagn: in compaſs about ſix miles, and beautified on the South-weſt within a large and pleaſant garden, the work of Sultan Tamas, who reſided here often; the buildings for the moſt part of brick, which flat Roofs (as generally in all the Eaſt) well peopled, as containing 200000 perſons of all ſorts and Sects. Of great trading, ſubdued by the Turks by whom it was thrice taken within very few years, viz. by Selimus the firſt, Anno 1514. by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1530. and by Oſman Baſſa, generall of Amarath the 3d. Anno 1585. But this laſt finding it too chargeable to be always garriſoned, and nototherwiſe tenable but by force, pulled down the walls, and built a large and capacious Citadel: both Town and Citadel recovered by Emir-Hamze Mirza, Prince of Perſia, and father of Sultan Soffy, Anno 1614. after it had been for a hundred years a continuall prey unto the Turks. 3. Arſacia, ſo named by Ptolomy, and by the name conjectured to be built by ſome of the Par- thian race. Ruined long since, but more beautifully revived than ever in the present. 4. Casbin, raised from the ruins of that Town. Situate in a fair and open place on the banks of a little River, which serveth it for houshold uses, but not for trafick. Exceedingly enriched by removall of the Court from Tauris hither, in the time of Tamas, partly invited thereunto by the richness of the soyl, and the commodiousness of the place, but chiefly that he might without danger attend the Turks, who began to incroach on his dominions. In compass about seven miles, beautified with a large market-place, many stately Mosques, and the Sultans Palace: this last adjoyning to the first, convenient enough, but neither of great state nor beauty. 5. Rages, or Raga, mentioned in the book of Tobit, so called from Ragas the sonne of Phaleg, the founder of it: situate neer the spacious Plain, so memorable for the great breed of horses spoken of before; and therefore in that book called the Plain of Rages. Repaired afterwards by the Greeks, it was named Europus, and so stands in Ptolomy. 6. Nassivan, supposed by some to be the Artasata, more probably the Nasmana, of the Antient Writers: a place much aimed at by the Turks in their Persian warres. 7. Ardoville, on or neer the banks of the great lake Argis, spoken of before: the birth-place and chief Seat of Guine and Aider the first Authors of the Sophian Sect, and the burrall place of Sultan Hysmael the first Persian Sultan of that line. 8. Sultania, about six dayes journey from Taurus, environed with high Mountains, the tops of which continually covered with snow, may be seen farre off: founded by Alyaptu, the 8th. King of the Sixt or Tartarian Dynasty; and by him made the Royall Seat of the Persian Sultans, whence it had the name. But ruinated by the Tartars, it retaineth nothing now of its former splendour, but the Mosques, or Temples (one of them, the fairest in the East) which the Tartars spared. 9. Tyroan, in the Territory of Sultania, situate in a large Plain, but not farre from the Mountains; beautified with a fair Market-place, many pleasant Gardens of private men, and one belonging to the King, environed with a wall of greater Circuit than the City. 10. Turcoman, in the midle way betwixt Tauris and Casbin. 11. Damoan, at the foot of Taurus, a Town of 200 houses, not here considerable but for the signification of the name; which is said to signifie a Second Plantation: and being situate at the foot of so high a Mountain, occasioneth some of the Jews to think that the Ark rested not farre off, as perhaps it did not. 12. Maran, in the Extremity of the Countrey, but of lesser note.

The first Inhabitants hereof were the posterity of Madai, as before was said; Ragau the sonne of Phaleg taking up those parts which lay next Assyria. Divided in long tract of time into several Tribes as the Coduſii, Amariacle, Margasi, Sagartii, Debryces, Tapyri, and some others. Governed by Kings immediatelly from the first Plantation: for we find that Pharnus King hereof was overthrown and slain by Ninus the grand-sonne of Nimrod. After this made subject to the Assyrians, their Kings were onely titular, at the best but Homagers, perhaps no better than Provincial Governours under that great Monarnarchy. Of most esteem amongst them was that Arsaus, who with an Army of 800000. men (if the number be not mistaken) incountred the Caduſii, by whom discomfited and slain. But the Caduſii so broken, that they were fain to put themselves under the power of the Persians, and so continued till the time of Arbaces, the last of these Provincials, and the first Monarch of the Medes. He living in the time of Sardanapalus, had the chance to see his Lord and Master in a womans dress, spinning among his Concubines, & otherwise behaving himself in a brutish manner, which so moved him, that he resolved to be no longer subject to so vile a Monster. Communicating his thoughts unto Belochus Governour on Babylon, and well seen in Astrology, he was incouraged to proceed; and sped so well, that having made themselves Masters of Ninive, the Imperial City (though Sardanapalus for a time put them shrewdly to it) they divided betwixt them his Estates. To Belochus fell Assyria, and Babylonia, with the Provinces of the West of Tigris: to Arbaces, Media and the rest, which now make up the Kingdome of Persia. But being a mild Prince, and desirous by fair and gentle means to assure his Empire, he confirmed the Persian Satrapaes in their former Governments; reserving nothing to himself but a titular Soveraignty. Of whom and his Successors more, when we have taken in the rest of the Provinces.

PERSIA.

PERSIA is bounden on the East, with India; on the West, with Media, Assyria, and Chaldea; on the North, with Tartarie; on the South, with the main Ocean. So called from Persis the predominant Province of it, that which gave law to all the rest: as that is said to do from Perseus, the sonne of Jupiter and Danae; affirmed by the Grecians to have conquered these Eastern Countries, and to have left his name to this. Of which thus Isidore, Persæ populi à Perseo Rege sunt vocati, qui à Græcia in Asiam transiens ibi barbaras gentes gravi diuturnoq; bello perdomuit, et victor nomen subactæ Genti imposuit. In the Scripture it is constantly called Elam, till the time of Daniel the Prophet, from Elam, the sonne of Sem, who was planted there. But after that the Medes and Persians had subdued Babylon, and transferred the supreme Monarchy to themselves, we find this people called by the name of Paras, (whence the name of Persian seems to come), the word Paras, (or Pharas) signifying as much as horsemen. Given therefore to this Nation, as it is supposed, from an Edict of Cyrus, who not onely taught them the art of horsemanship, but set forth a law, that it should be a repoach to any man to go on foot, sive multum sive parum itineris esset conficiendum, whether the journey that he had to go were long or little. Called sometimes also Achæmenis, from Achæmenes the sonne of Perses, one of the first known Kings hereof; and by that name, Non tot Achæmeniis armantur Susa Sagittis, they occurre in the second of Propertius. Where by Achæmenia Sagitta, he means Persian Arrows.

It is of very great extent, stretched out in length from the 82. degree of Longitude, to the 120. being 38 degrees in all; and in breadth from the 23. degree of Northern Latitude, to the 43. being 20 more; According unto which position, with reference to the heavenly bodies, we shall find it seated under the third, fourth, fourth, fifth, and sixt, Climates: the longest summers day in the Southern parts being thirteen houres and almost three quarters, and fifteen houres one quarter in the parts most Northwards.

The Countrey not alike in all places, as it is impossible it should in so great a compass. But generally it is of a pure and wholesome air, the high hills shading it on the one side from heat of the Clime under which it lieth; and the warmth of the Sea, wherewith encompassed, cherishing a great part thereof. And so it is affirmed to be by Quintus Curtius. Regio non alia in tota Asia salubrior habetur; temperatum cœlum, hinc perpetuum jugum opacum et umbrosum, quod æstus levat; illinc mare adjunctum, quod modico tepore terras fovet. Then for the Earth, it is by reason of the great heat of the Sunne, very dry and sandy, in many parts destitute of water, few Rivers, and not many Lakes; by consequence neither well peopled, nor manured, for the greatness of it: men loving to inhabit (and I cannot blame them) where they may have the use of water. Which notwithstanding, it is furnished with all necessaries both for life and pleasure; one part affording that which the other wanteth, as shall be shewed in the description of the several Provinces.

The people antiently were trained up to the warres, but chiefly unto Archerie from their very childhood. Indulged the liberty of having as many wives as they pleased, they never saw the children begotten of them, untill five years old. At that age sent unto their Fathers, they were taught presently to handle the Bow and Arrows. Upon this ground we find the Bow of Elam mentioned by the Prophet Jeremy chap. 4. and the Quiver of Elam by the Prophet Esaiah chap. 22. v. 6. as the Armes peculiar to that Nation, or most used amongst them. They were good horsemen also, and well skilled at their darts and slings, till wealth, and ease, and the pride of so great an Empire, made them wholly feminine: depriving them of those abilities both of mind and body, wherein they did excell most Nations in their harder times. In all their fortunes very obsequious, if not servile, to their Kings and Princes; in whose presence it was a crime to spit, but to deny obedience unto his commands an offence so heinous, as was not to be punished with less than the loss of life, and want of buriall. In this observance of their Kings, followed, if not out-stripped, by the modern Persian. A race of men, affirmed to be cunctorum hominum mitissimi, the most meek or patient of the world, especially compared with those of the same Religion, the Turks and Tartars. Not haters of learning, as the Turks; But studious, many of them in Physick, and Astrology; most of the better sort much delighted in Poetry, which they give their minds to. For the most part addicted to hospitality, magnificent in expence, Lordly in their complements, fantastical in their Apparell, maintainers of Nobility, and desirous of peace. Such as apply themselves to Trades, and Mechanick arts, prove excellent in the making of Silkes, and Cloth of Gold: those which betake themselves to warre, proving very good Souldiers, as the Turks have found unto their cost, who by their long warres against them have got nothing but blows. The women said to be neat and cleanly, truly loving, gorgeous in Attire, and delightfull in the sequestrations of pleasure.

Their Religion at the first was Paganism, wherein directed principally by their Priests or Magi; men of a strict austere life, forbidding outward ornaments, and the use of gold; making the ground their bed, and the Herbs their food: their whole time spent in offering to the Gods the prayers and sacrifices of the people, as if they onely might be heard; or else in divinations and foretelling of things to come, from whence the names of Magick and Magician are derived unto us. Studious in the knowledge of God and nature, and therefore called by Suidas, not onely Philosophi, Lovers of wisdome; but Philothei, the Lovers of God. Of such esteem that as Cicero telleth us, the Persian Kings were not admitted to the Throne, till they were trained up in the discipline of the Magi: and of such power and intimacy in the Royall Court, that one of those Magi, on the death of Cambyses, possessed himself of the Persian Monarchy. In a word, such as the Druides were to the Galls and Britans, the Gymnosophists or Brachmans to the antient Indians, and the Chaldæans in the Empire of Babylon, the same, if not of greater sway in affairs of moment, were the Persian Magi. And Persians they must be if Magi; none but the Natives of that Countrey being to be admitted of that Society: though by a Metaphor applied to the Professors of the same Arts, though of other Countries; as those which came from the East to worship Christ are by Saint Matthew called Magi (Mat. 2. 1.) though they came from Arabia.

The people then were Gentiles as to their Religion; and besides other Gods which the Gentiles worshipped, they were great Idolaters of the Fire; which they offered sacrifice unto in time of peace, and carried it with them as their Tutelar Deitie in the time of warre. At what time (especially if the King were there in person) it was born in the very front of their Army, attended on by their Priests, and followed by a train of boyes all clothed in Scarlet, to the number of 365. according to the number of the daies of the year. In this equipage, with a great deal of pomp besides, did Darius set forwards to fight with Alexander, at the battell of Issus in Cilicia. A superstition derived from them to the Medes and Assyrians, their next-neighbouring Nations, and not extinguished to this day in some parts of this Countrey; in which many of these Fire-worshippers are still remaining. But from a God, it grew in time to be a Gentleman-Usher, and to attend on Kings and persons of greatest eminence: used to be born before the Emperors of Rome, as a point of State. Insomuch that Commodus though fallen out with his Sister Lucilla, permitted her notwithstanding to enjoy her Seat in the publique Theatre, ἐν τῷ πρωτοκλισίῳ αὐτῆς, and fire to be born before her, as in former times; as we are told by Herodian.

The Christian faith was first planted in the Provinces of the Persian Kingdome by Saint Thomas the Apostle: and held in all points answerable to those of the Catholick Church, till Sapores to despight the Emperour Heraclius, a right Orthodox Prince, commanded that all the Christians in his Dominions should conform themselves to the opinions and tendries of the Nestorian Sect, by that means universally spread over all these Provinces. With whom here live now intermingled some Armenian Chriſtians, who with their Patriarch removed hither, when their own Countrey was made the ſeat of a long and miſerable war betwixt the Perſian and the Turk: but found not here ſo ſafe a dwelling as they did expect, 1200 of them being ſlain by Abas the late Perſian Sultan, on a ſuſpicion that they went about to reconcile themſelves to the Pope of Rome (whom he held to be more inclinable to the Turk than to him,) in the year 1609. Which notwithſtanding (ſo miſerable a condition do theſe Chriſtians live in) he ſuffered two Convents of Auguſtine and Carmelite Friers, to be ſetled at the ſame time even in Spaw-hawn it ſelf; and many Jeſuites to live peaceably up and down the Countrey, which ſerve for little elſe than to give intelligence. Here are alſo many Jews diſperſed over all the Provinces of this Empire; allowed their Synagogues, and publick places of aſſembly. But the Religion publickly authorized and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, impoſed on this Countrey by the Saracens, when by them ſubdued: differing in ſome points from the Turks, eſpecially about the true Succeſſour of that falſ Seducer (of which more anon) the cauſe of the long wars betwixt thoſe nations.

As for the Perſian language it is very antient, ſuppoſed to be as old as the Confuſion at Babell: ſome words whereof, by Daniel and Ezra which lived in the Perſian Court, have been made uſe of in ſome parts of the holy Scripture. A tongue which ſtill hath left ſome remainders of it, in the language of the modern Perſian (as thoſe of judgement in this tongue have delivered to us): notwithſtanding ſo long tract of time, and the conqueſt of this Countrey by the Greeks, Arabians, Turks, and Tartars. Not ſpoken onely in this Countrey, nor limitted within the Provinces of the Perſian Empire, but uſed alſo in the Court and Camp of the Great Mongul, and ſome parts of Zagathay: and where not vulgar unto all, ſtudied and underſtood by perſons of more eminent ſort, as the Latine by the Gentry of theſe weſtern parts. Inſomuch as he that hath this Language, may travell over all the Eaſt without an Interpreter.

Rivers here are but few, as before was ſaid, and thoſe few not navigable; by conſequence of little note or eſtimation. The principall of thoſe that be, are 1. Eulæus, the chief River of Suſiana, emptying it ſelf into Sinus Perſicus: a River of ſo pure a ſtream, that the great Perſian Kings would drink of no other water. 2. Ochus in Bactria, a River of the greater note amongſt the Antients, becauſe it was navigable; opening with a fair Channel into the Caſpian Sea, to which it haſteneth from Mount Taurus; and ſo doth alſo, 3. Oxus in Margiana, a fatall bound to theſe great neighbours. A River which the Perſians have ſeldome paſſed to inlarge their dominions, but they received ſome notable overthrow at the hand of the Scythians: and when the Tartars made over it under the conduct of Saba the Cham of Zagathay, for the invaſion of Perſia, they were ſhamefully beat back again by Hyſmael Sophie. Nor is it leſs memorable in old ſtories for the famous paſſage of Alexander over it, in purſuit of the murderers of Darius. For having followed Beſſus to the banks of this River, and not knowing how to paſs over his men, there being neither ſhips upon it, nor timber neer at hand to build them, he cauſed a great number of bags and bladders to be ſtuffed with ſtraw, and ſo in 3 daies tranſported his Army. So that I may truely ſay with his own Hiſtorian, Unum id Conſilium quod neceſſitas ſubjecerat, iniit; neceſſity is the beſt Author of fine inventions. 4. Zioberis in Hyrcania, which riſing out of the ſame mountainous tract (as the two laſt-mentioned) after a long courſe above ground, in the open light, hideth himſelf again for the ſpace of 38 miles, and then breaketh out at a new fountain; and falleth into 5. Rhadaga, another chief River of thoſe parts. And this Alexander the Great found to be true, by caſting two Oxen into the River Zioberis, which by the current of the ſtream were carryed under the ground, and brought to light where the River had its riſe again. 6. Hidero, by what name known unto the Antients I am not able to ſay, but of great note amongſt modern Travellers for the fall thereof into the Sea: ſo ſteep and ſtrong, that the people are ſaid to ſacrifice or banket under the fall thereof, the ſtream ſo violently ſhooting over their heads, that it never wetteth them.

Mountains of moſt note, are thoſe which paſs by the name of Taurus, which having left Media on the Weſt, paſſeth thorow the Northern Provinces of the Perſian Empire, dividing Parthia from Hyrcania, and Paropamiſus from Bactria, and Aria from Margiana. Known by the names of Coronus, the Seriphian hills, Paropamiſus, Caucaſus; whereof more as occaſion ſerveth in their proper places.

It is divided into the particular Provinces of 1. Suſiana, 2. Perſis, 3. Carmania, 4. Ormuz, 5. Gedroſia, 6. Drangiana, 7. Aria, 8. Parthia, 9. Arachoſia, 10. Paropamiſus, 11. Hyrcania, and 12. Margiana. Which we will ſeverally ſurvey in the Chorography and ſtory, till we have joined them altogether in the Perſian Monarchy; and then purſue the hiſtory as conjunct and faſhioned into the body of one Empire.

1. SUSIANA.

SUSIANA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Perſis; on the Weſt, with Babylonia or Chaldea; on the North, with Aſſyria; on the South, with a branch of the River Tigris, and ſome part of the Gulf of Perſia.

It was ſo called quaſi Cuſiana, or the Land of the Chuſites, from Chus the eldeſt ſonne of Ham, and the grandſonne of Noah; by whoſe ſonne Havilah, it was firſt peopled; and therefore called in Scripture the land of Havilah, this being that land of Havilah, which the River Piſon is ſaid to incompaſs, in the Book of Geneſis. The difference betwixt them is, that that land of Havilah lay on both ſides of the River Euphrates, Euphrates (which the Countrey of Suſiana doth not) and was the Eaſtern bound of the Iſmaelites, Amalekites, and other Nations intermingled in thoſe parts of Arabia. For whereas Saul is ſaid in the firſt of Sam. chap. 15. ver. 7. to have ſmitten the Amalekites from Sur to Havilah, that is ſay from the Red Sea to the gulf of Perſia: it muſt be underſtood of Havilah in the firſt extent; but neither of Havilah in the Eaſt Indies (ſo called from a ſonne of Jocktan) or of that part of Havilah which lay on the Eaſt ſide of Euphrates, and is that Suſiana, in which now we are: it being no where found that Saul was ſo great a Traveller as to ſee the Indies; or of ſuch puiſſance as to force a paſſage thorow the Countreys of the Chaldeans and Babylonians. But the name of Havilah being loſt, that of Cuſiana or Suſiana did ſtill remain; preſerved to this day in that of Chuſeſtan, by which now called.

The Countrey memorable in the Scriptures for Gold, Bdellium, and the Onyx-ſtone; which doth abundantly ſet forth the richneſs and commodities of it: Bdellium being a Tree (for of the other two nothing need be ſaid) about the bigneſs of an Olive, yielding a certain Gum very ſweet to ſmell to, but bitter of taſt; which in time hardneth to a Pearl, as Eugubinus and Beroaldus have delivered to us.

Divided antiently into many particular Regions, or at leaſt known by ſeverall names in its ſeverall quarters. For where it bordered upon Tigris, it was called Meliſene; Cabandene, where it touched upon Perſis; where it confined on the Elymeans, it had the name of Caſſia; and neer the wall or Ditch called Vallum Paſini, it was called Characene. Watered beſides Eulæus, and Tigris before ſpoken of; with the Rivers Orontes, and Maſæus, with that branch of the River Tigris which Ptolomy called Baſilius; Curtius, Paſi-Tigris; and the Scriptures, Piſon.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Aracca, ſpoken of by Ptolomy, the ſame which the Scriptures call Erech, and one of the four which Nimrod built in the firſt beginning of his Empire, Gen. 11. Remembred by Tibullus for the fountains of Naphtah (of which the Medians made their oyl ſpoken of before) a bituminous liquor, eaſily taking fire, but not eaſily quenched. Of which thus the Poet, Audet Areccæis aut unda perhoſpita Campis.

Where by unda perhoſpita, he meaneth that bituminous liquor called Napthta, iſſuing from the fields of Erech, as the learned Salmaſius hath obſerved in his notes on Solinus. 2. Suſa, the Shuſan of the book of Heſter, and Nehemiah, honoured with the reſidence of the Perſian Monarchs in winter, as Ecbatana in ſummer. Situate on the River Eulæus, by the Prophet Daniel called Ulai. Built, as ſome ſay, by Memnon the ſonne of Tithonus, ſlain by the Theſſalonians in the Trojan warres: the walls whereof as Caſſiodorus hath reported, cemented with Gold. But howſoever, it was doubtleſs a magnificent City, and of infinite wealth: Alexander finding in it 50000 Talents of gold uncoined, beſides ſilver wedges, and Jewels of ineſtimable value. Memorable for the great feaſt here made by Ahaſuerus of 180 dayes continuance for his Lords and Princes: imitated by the Perſian Sultans to this very day; who with a Royal Feaſt of the like continuance do annually entertain their Nobles. Now nothing but a ruine, and perhaps not that. 3. Elymais, the chief City of the Elymæi, by Ptolomy (unleſs his Copies be corrupted) miſtakingly called Eldimæi. Situate on the banks of Eulæus alſo, neer the border of Perſis (the Nation of the Elamites or Elymæi taking part of both Provinces). Of great note antiently for a ſumptuous Temple of Diana, ſacrilegiouſly ranſacked by Antiochus, of which ſee 1 Mac. 6. 2. and of ſuch wealth, by reaſon of the concourſe of Pilgrims thither, that Severus Sulpitius calleth it Oppidum opulentiſſimum, a moſt opulent City. 4. Sela, on the banks of Eulæus alſo; reckoned by Ammianus amongſt the moſt eminent of this Province: ſo named from Selah the ſonne of Arphaxad, who firſt planted there. To whom the building of the City of Suſa is aſcribed by Euſtathius in his Hexameron, Σελὰ ἀφ' ὃ Σουσίδος are that Authors words; perhaps more truly than to Memnon: and unto whom the Original of the Coſſæi, whom Ptolomy placeth in this tract, is referred by Euſebius. 5. Tarſiana, another of the Cities mentioned by Ammianus (who takes notice onely of the chiefeſt,) the ſame no doubt which Ptolomy calls Tariana, and joynes next to Sela. 6. Agra, upon the banks of Tigris, not farre from Erech. But there is litle left of theſe, but what is to be found in the antient Writers; now hardly viſible in their Ruins; The Towns of moſt note now remaining, being 1. Jaaroome, inhabited for the moſt part by Jewes, of which here are no fewer than a thouſand familes; ſuppoſed to be the deſcendants of thoſe whom Salmanaſſar tranſplanted out of the Kingdom of Iſrael. 8. Sanm. 9. Caſa; of which litle memorable.

The firſt Inhabitants hereof were the Chuſites of the houſe of Havilah, the ſonne of Chus; the Coſſæi and the Suſiani, deſcended from Sala the ſonne of Arphaxad; and the Elymæi, the poſterity of Elam the ſonne of Sem. Betwixt the two laſt Nations long and frequent warres, till the Kings of Babylon or Aſſyria compoſed the differences; by making both ſubject to their Empire. After this, nothing memorable in the ſtory of it, till the tranſplanting of the ten Tribes into the Regions of Aſſyria, and the Cities of Media. At which time, as many of the Iſraelites were removed hither; ſo many of this Nation were ſent out (with others) to poſſeſs themſelves of the void places of thoſe Tribes. Called Cutheans by the Jews, becauſe the moſt conſiderable number of them came from this Province, called in the Scriptures Cuſh, by Joſephus Cutha, and by him reckoned for a Region of Perſia, as indeed it was, the time wherein he lived conſidered: difference onely in the Dialect or form of ſpeech, that Countrey which the Hebrews called Chus, being named Cuth by the Chaldeans; by the Perſians Chuzeſtan: that name continuing to this day.

2. PERSIS.

PERSIS hath on the East, Carmania; on the West, Suſiana; on the North, Media; and on the South, ſome part of the Perſian Bay or Sinus Perſicus, which took name from hence. The reaſon of the name we have had before; this being the predominant Province which in fine gave both name and law to the reſt of this Empire. It had antiently been called Cephene, but now moſt commonly by the name of Fars, or Farſiſtan; more neer to Pharas, the old name of it both in the Arabick and Hebrew.

Such parts hereof as lie towards the North are cold and hilly, not apt to bear either fruit or corn, in any plenty. Some Emeralds they find there, but not very cleer. Thoſe parts which lie towards the Perſian Gulf, of as bad a nature, though of different quality, ſandy, and hot, and beareth little fruit but Dates, and few trees but Palm. But betwixt both there lieth a rich and pleaſant Countrey, abounding with corn, fruit, and cattell; great ſtore of Roſes, of Roſe-water conſequently, wherewith and with thoſe skins which we call commonly by the name of Cordovans from another occaſion, they uſe to furniſh all the adjoining Provinces. And to make up the Character of a happie Countrey, to which nothing wanteth, it is well ſtored with Lakes and Rivers; the chief whereof are 1. Bagradas, which divideth this Province from Carmania. 2. Rhogomanes, by ſome called Araxes, now Bindimir, on whoſe banks ſtood the renowned Perſepolis. 3. Orontes, dividing Perſis from Suſiana, where it falls into the Bay. 4. Briſoana, ending its courſe in the ſame Sea alſo.

Mountains of note I find not any but thoſe which part this Region from Suſiana; not known by any ſpeciall name (for ought I can find) but of ſufficient note for the difficult paſſages out of one Countrey into the other, called Pyla Perſidis, defended by Ariobarzanes, a Noble Perſian, againſt Alexander the Great, who was here very handſomely beaten, and forced to ſave himſelf by a cloſe retreat. And though Alexander was ſhewed a By-path afterwards, whereby he fell on Ariobarzanes ere he was aware; yet he was taught by this hard leſſon, that if thoſe who kept the ſtraits of Cilicia, and the banks of Tigris and Euphrates had made like reſiſtance, he had not bought the Perſian Monarchy in ſo cheap a Market.

It was divided antiently into Paraticine, bordering on Media. 2. Mardiene, joining on the Gulf or Bay of Perſia. 3. Miſdia, lying betwixt both. Each of which, with the ſeverall nations intetmingled here as in other places, had their ſeverall Cities. The chief whereof 1. Auſinza, ſeated on the Bay betwixt the mouths of Bagradas and Briſoana. 2. Jonacapolis, on the ſame Bay alſo, neer the influx of Rhogomanes, or Araxes. 3. Axima, more within the land, now called Lanſilla. 4. Marraſium. 5. Obroatis, or Orebatis, as ſome Copies have it. 6. Paſarracha, in the Greek text of Ptolomy called Paſacgadæ, and Paſagrada by Qu. Curtius. Memorable for the Sepulchre of Cyrus the firſt Perſian Monarch. Which violated by a Souldier of Alexanders, in hope of finding ſome rich booty, he met with nothing but this modeſt inſcription, Cyrus ego ſum qui Perſicum regnum conſtitui: quicunque ades mortalium, ne mihi tantillum telluris invideas, qua corpus meum obtegitur. The Sacrilegious Souldier though a Macedonian, put to death by Alexander. 7. Perſepolis, the chief City of this Province, and of all the East, called therefore Regia Orientis, by Qu. Curtius; ſituate neer the banks of the River Araxes, and built for the moſt part of Cypreſs wood, the walls of the houſes being made of Marble, digged out of an adjoining Mountain. Affirmed by Diodorus Siculus, who at large deſcribes it, to be the richeſt and goodlieſt City in all the world. And well we may believe him for the richneſs of it, Alexander finding here 120000 Talents, in ready money for his own ſhare, after the Souldiers had made what ſpoil they liſted of coin, Plate, Bullion, Images of Gold and Silver, and Jewells of unſpeakable value. But the chief beauty of it was the Royall Palace, built on an hill, environed with a treble wall, the firſt of 16 Cubits height, the ſecond of thirty, and third of ſixty; all of them of black poliſhed marble, with ſtately battlements, and in the Circuit of the whole Palace an hundred Turrets; which gave to the beholders far and neer a moſt goodly Proſpect. Nor was the inſide of leſs beauty, than the out-ſide of Majeſty: the Roofs thereof ſhining with Ivory, ſilver, gold, and Amber; and the Kings throne being wholly compoſed of Gold, and the richeſt Pearls. But rich and ſtately though it were, and one of the greateſt Ornaments of the Eaſtern world; it was by Alexander in a drunken fit conſumed with fire, at the inſtigation of Lais that infamous ſtrumpet; as in revenge for ſo many Cities of the Greeks, which the Perſians formerly had burnt in the Grecian warres. And though Alexander in his ſober ſenſe did repent him of it, and gave order that it ſhould be re-edified; yet did it never riſe to its former height; the Conquerour dying ſhortly after, and that purpoſe with him. So ruined in the age of Qu. Curtius, (who lived in the time of Claudius Cæſar), that he profeſſeth veſtigium ejus non inveniri niſi Araxes amnis oſtenderet, that no footſteps of it had been found, if not ſhewn and pointed out by the River Araxes, on whoſe banks it ſtood. But by the fall thereof roſe 8. Shyras, now the chief City of this Province, ſituate in a fair large plain hemmed about with mountains, under one of which it is pleaſantly ſeated; in compaſs about nine miles, well built and beautified with fair Gardens and magnificent Moſques: two of which larger than the reſt, are made more eminent by the addition of two Spires or Steeples covered with a painting of Gold and Azure; the fabricks for the moſt part of Moſaick work, as light almoſt by night as day, by reaſon of a thouſand Lamps burning nightly in them. A City (as is ſaid by a modern Traveller) which for good wine, pretty women, pleaſant fruits, and a gallant People, may hold compariſon with the beſt in Perſia. 9 Moyown, on the North-eaſt of Shyras, delightfully ſituate amongſt woods and fruitfull paſtures, and bleſſed not onely with good wine, but wholeſome waters; of which laſt, few parts of Perſia have much much cauſe to brag. 10. Bamaraw, on the Southweſt of Shyras towards Carmania, chiefly remarkable for the ruines of an antient Caſtle, ſituate on the top of a lofty mountain. 11. Goyaam, a Town of a thouſand houſes. 12. Berry, of no great bigneſs, but of moſt eſteem by reaſon of a fair Moſque, a School for the Arabick tongue, and the Sepulchre of one of their falſe Prophets; of which the Perſians, beſides Mahomet and Mortis-Ali, do acknowledge many.

The firſt Inhabitants here were of the poſterity of Elam the ſonne of Sem, and ſuch who under his conduct were ſetled here; called from hence Elamites in the uſual ſtile of holy Scriptures, by the Greeks and Latines, Elymai: who ſpreading themſelves into Suſiana, and by degrees alſo into other Provinces, became ſo conſiderable, that the name of Elamite and Elam were of great renown: having a language to themſelves diſtinct from that of the Medes and Parthians, as is apparent Act. 2. and comprehending under that appellation the adjoining Regions, as appears plainly in the eighth of the Prophet Daniel, where Suſa is ſaid to be in the Province of Elam. How the name was changed into that of Perſia, hath been ſhewn before. Such as continued in this Province, divided into the Tribes of the Meſabata, Rapſii, Hippophagi, Suzai, Megores, and Stabai, were at firſt under the command of their own Princes onely: amongſt which Cherdolaomer is of greateſt fame, who having the conduct of ſome Adventurers of this nation, aſſociated himſelf with Amramphel the leader of ſome Aſſyrian Troops: and by the name of the Kings of Elam and Aſſyria invaded Paleſtine, ſubdued the City of Sodom, took Lot priſoner, and in the end were overthrown by the forces of Abraham. Of no note after this expedition till the time of Perſes the Father of Achamenes, who being Provinciall Governour of theſe Countreys under Sardanapalus, joined with Arbaces and Belochus in the war againſt him: and by the victory, got for himſelf the dominion over thoſe eſtates, which he had formerly ruled for the Aſſyrians; with reference to the Kings of Media as the Supreme Lords; Whoſe Succeſſours, till the time of Cyrus, take in order thus.

The Kings of Perſis.

1. Perſes, from whom perhaps the name of Perſis may be more properly derived, than either from Perſeus the ſonne of Danae; or the ſonne of that Perſeus by Andromeda.
2. Achamenes, from whom the Perſians had the name of Achamenii, and the ſucceeding Kings were called Achamenides.
3. Cambyſes, in ſome places of Herodotus called alſo Darius.
4. Cyrus, from whoſe ſecond ſonne named Teiſpeus, deſcended that Darius, the ſonne of Hyſtaſpis, one of the ſeven Perſian Princes, who got the Kingdom on the expiration of the preſent line, and the extirpation of the Magi; of which more hereafter.
5. Cambyſes II. the ſonne of Cyrus.
6. Cyrus II. ſurnamed the Great, ſonne of Cambyſes and Mandane the daughter of Aſtyages King of Media: who joining with Cyaxares, or Darius Medus, overthrew the Babylonian Empire; and tranſlated thereby the Supreme power to the Medes and Perſians. Of which more hereafter.

CARMANIA.

CARMANIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Gedroſia, and ſome part of Aria; on the Weſt, with part of Perſis, and the Gulf of Perſia, from hence called alſo by the name of Sinus Carmanicus; on the North, with Parthia; and on the South, with the main Indian Ocean. So called from the Carmani, a chief People of it: but the reaſon of that name I find not. It is now generally called Chyrman; thoſe parts of it which lie next to Parthia, which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deſerta, being now named Mingia, and by ſome Dulcinde.

The Countrey for the moſt part barren, and but ill inhabited. That part which Ptolomy calleth Carmania Deſerta, being truly ſuch; a wildemeſs or very Deſart, having in it neither Town nor village, but ſome ſcattered houſes, and thoſe but ill provided of food and neceſſaries, full of unprofitable ſands, deſtitute of water; and of a very hot and unhealthy air. And though the other part hereof which lieth towards the Ocean, hath a Seacoaſt of above 200 leagues in length, and many Rivers emptying themſelves into it, yet are they not the richer by it: the ſhores being full of rocks, and the Rivers ſmall; ſo that they neither have good Port nor ſafe coming to it. The beſt commodities hereof (beſides their Manufactures) are Dates, Myrrhe, Arſenic, ſome few mines of ſilver, more of braſs and iron, and good ſtore of Alabaſter. In which regard, the Inhabitants hereof were antiently called Ichthyophagi, becauſe they lived wholly upon fiſh, the Countrey yielding little elſe for the life of man. Carmani ſine veſte ac fruge, ſine pecore ac ſedibus, piſcium cute ſe velant, carne veſcuntur, prater capita toto corpore hirſuti. The Carmans (ſaith Pomponius Mela) have neither fruits, nor rayment, nor houſe, nor cattel; but cloth themſelves with the skins, and feed themſelves with the fleſh of fiſhes; hairie not onely in their heads, but over all their bodies alſo. Where by the way, Ammianus Marcellinus muſt be out in his informations, who telleth us of theſe very Carmans, that their Countrey though far leſs than that of Arabia Felix, and far more obſcure, was as well repleniſhed with Rivers, and for fertility of ſoil not inferior to it. But we muſt underſtand the one of the beſt parts of Carmania; the other of Deſerta onely.

Amongſt

Amongst the Rivers which he reckoneth of greater name than the rest, he mentioneth 1. Saganis, 2. Sagareus, and 3. Hydriacus. Of which Saganis onely is named by Ptolomy, the other Rivers or the same under divers names, being 1. Dara, 2. Andanius, 3. Cathrappus, 4. Achindana, 5. Salsus (the Sagareus as I take it of Ammianus) 6. Candriaces, 7. Zoromba, and 8. Samidace, most of them falling into the Gulf of Persia, few navigable, or of any use in the way of trading.

Mountains of most note 1. that called Semiramis, from some exploit of that great Lady. 2. Strongelus, so named from the roundnes of it; and 3. a continued ridge of hills, dividing this Countrey from Gedrosia.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Cantharis, 2. Agris, 3. Tisa, honoured by Ptolomy with the names of Cities. 4. Cyrza, and 5. Gocharta, two Port-Towns. 6. Alexandria, bearing the name of that great Conquerour, who here or hereabouts kept his Bacchanalia, whereof more anon. 7. Portospani, by Ammianus called Ortospana, and by him reckoned amongst the faireſt and richeſt of all the Countrey. 8. Armuzi, (or Armuzium as Pliny calleth it,) on the shore of the Gulf, giving name to a Promontory neer-adjoining, and to the Noble Isle of Ormus, of which more anon. 9. Gunbroone, not long since a poor village; but since the fall of Ormus (from which not above nine miles distant) grown a populous Town, consisting at the least of a thousand houses. 10. Jasques, at the opening of the Persian Gulf into which it looketh, whence the Promontory of it called Carpella, is of late named Capodi Jasques. 11. Carmania, the Metropolis or mother City of the Province, in former times of good esteem; and now of passing good repute both for cloth of gold, and the making of the best Scymitars. A weapon of such value amongst the Mahometans, and so esteemed of by the Turks, that at the overthrow of their Navy at the battle of Corfu, Anno 1574. most of them who were taken Prisoners threw their Scymitars into the Sea, for fear the Christians should be masters of such excellent weapons. It is now called Chyrmin, by the name of the Province, as in former times; with very little difference from the antient name. 12. Lar, more within the land towards Persis, seated in a barren and inhospitable Countrey, full of huge heaps of sands, both loose and dangerous, moved and removed as the wind sitteth into plains and Mountains; without grass, water, herbs, or any other necessary for the use of Travellers, the City being served with rain-water only, entertained with great joy when it falleth, and kept in cisterns. The City notwithstanding large, and of good capacity, containing not long since to the number of 5000 houses; of which the greatest part, in the year 1590. were thrown down by an earthquake: now most remarkable for a fair Market-place of about 180 paces square; a goodly Mosque, adorned with Masaick work, and a strong Castle seated on the top of an hill, furnished with great plenty of Ordinance brought hither from Ormus. This once a Kingdome of it self, or the head City of a Kingdome, acknowledging no subjection to the Persian Sophies: till conquered to that Crown by Emangoli Chawn Duke of Shyras, who sent hence as much treasure as was said to load 700 Camels; and put to death the poor King with his whole posterity, Anno 1604. or thereabouts. 13. Tecoa, or Dea-chow, a Town of the jurisdiction of Lar, not far from which is a huge wall cut out of the solid rock by incredible labour, which served formerly both for the boundary and defence of that sandy Kingdome against the Persians.

The antient Inhabitants hereof, were the posterity of Sabta, the sonne of Chus, who wanting room on the coast of Arabia Felix, where they were first planted, passed over into Sophta (from them so named) an Island of the Persian Gulf, and afterwards into the main land of Carmania, where they built and gave name to the City of Sabis, which we find in Ptolomy. Divided in some tract of time into the severall Nations of the Sazotæ, Aræ, Charadræ, Chelonophagi, Cabadinæ, and Pasagardæ.

Neither the People nor the Countrey memorable in the way of story; but by Accident onely: it being here that Alexander being returned out of India, kept his Bacchanalia, in imitation of Bacchus, who first conquered that Nation. Night and day he was continually feasting with his friends, on a scaffold drawn with eight horses; his Companions following in their Chariots: some adorned with Purple and Silk; others with Flowers and Green Boughs; themselves wearing Garlands on their heads, and carrying their Carowsing Cups in their hands. In this Army there was neither Helmet, Sword, Arrow, or Buckler seen: all their Armour, was Cups, Barrells, and Flaggons; their Skirmishing Eating, Drinking, Laughing, and Singing. Attended they were by Minstrells, playing on their Fluits; by Women, dancing; Boyes, shouting; all playing the drunken Foolls most naturally. Thus march they through the Countrey of Carmania, in as great dissoluteness, as if BACCHUS himself had indeed been there, and led the Mummery; and for seaven whole daies this sottishness continued. So that Curtius well observeth, Si quid victis saltem adversus comessantes animi fuisset, mille hercule viri, modo & sobrii, septem dierum crapula graves in suo triumpho capere potuerunt: a thousand Persians, sober and well provided, had their hearts been answerable to so good an opportunity, might have destroyed this drunken Army, and redeemed at once the honour of their Countrey, and their own liberty.

4. ORMUS.

ORMUS, not so much memorable for the greatness, as the wealth, the conveniency of the situation of it, is an Iland situate in the entrance of the Persian Gulf: commanding not long since over some part of the Continent of Carmania, and some few Towns of Arabia Felix, and most of the Ilands of the Bay. And therefore before we come to speak of the Isle it self, we must take a brief survey of the Sea or Bay called Sinus Persicus, according to our method in other places.

SINUS PERSICUS, the Gulf or Bay of Persia, so famous, so full of Ilands, and so much frequented (I use the words of Ammianus Marcellinus) beginneth at Harmozonta, (the name which Ptolomy calls Armuza) a Cape or Promontory of Carmania, from which unto a Cape or foreland of Arabia Felix, which the Inhabitants call Muces, the passage is so strait and narrow, that one may very easily see to the opposite shore. The Strait once passed, the Bay beginneth to open and inlarge it self, as farre at the City of Teredon (now called Balsora) where Euphrates after many downfalls is lost in the Sea. The whole Gulf measured by the shores of Orbicular form, in compass 20000 Furlongs, (or 2500 Italian miles) in all the coasts and sides whereof the Villages and Towns stand exceeding thick, affording frequent passage to and fro for shipping. So farre, and to this purpose he. To which description of his, so exact and punctual, our late Navigations have not added much; but the change of names: the whole Bay being now called Mare Elkatiffe, and the entrances thereunto the Streits of Balsora; these last so called because they opened the way to the Town of Balsora the most noted Empory of those parts in the times foregoing.

Chief Isles hereof, besides those on the Arabian shore, of which we have already spoken, are, 1. Taxiana, on the coast of Susiana. 2. Tabiana. 3. Sopththa, and 4. Alexandri, or the Isle of Alexander, on the shores of Persis. Of which that which is called Sopththa, seems to take name from Sabta the sonne of Chus, planted upon the opposite shore of Arabia Felix, and therein giving name to the City of Sapthta, which we find in Ptolomy: And finally joyning to Carmania, there are the Ilands called 5. Sugdana, the chief Town whereof was anciently named Miltus; and 6. Vorochtha, situate at the very mouth of the Straits, now called ORMUS, by the name of the Town and Promontory of Armuza, in Carmania, neer adjoyning to it, and unto which it did in former times belong.

This Iland situate as is said at the mouth of the Gulf or Bay of Persia, is in compass about 20 miles, stony, and full of rocks, in a manner barren of all necessaries except salt, wherewith their very Rocks are covered, and of salt-stones many houses built. So destitute of all things fitting for the life of man, that the Inhabitants had all their victuals, even the very water which they drank, from some of the adjoyning Countries. The air so hot in time of Summer, that the people rest themselves in caves, covered over with wood, where they stand or sit in water up to the chinne: and have loop-holes in the tops of their houses to let in the wind. Which notwithstanding, in regard of the situation, it was of late one of the richest Empories in all the world, the wealth of Persia and East-India being brought hither, and conveyed hence up by water to the River Euphrates, and so by boats or on camels backs, to Aleppo, Alexandretta, Tripolis; from whence dispersed into all the Countries on the Mediterranean, and to some beyond.

The people hereof in their persons, habit, and Religion, participate somewhat of the Arabians, but most of the Persians. Mahometans for the most part of the Suphian Sect: the rest, but few in number, of the Christian faith, to which converted by the preachings of Father Gasper, a Portugal Jesuite; since the setling of that Nation there.

The chief and onely City was of the same name with the Iland, founded some seven hundred years a goe by one Mahomet Dranka, descended from the Kings of Suba, in Arabia Felix, who with many families of the Sabaans passed over the Straits into Carmania, and the Isles adjoyning, and liking the situation of this Iland, built this City in it, which he called Ormus, or Armuzium, according to the name of the Town and Promontory upon which it lieth. The City seated at one end of the Isle; about 2 miles in compass: well built, and adorned with a fair market place, some Churches, and a well-fortified Castle furnished with all necessaries to maintain a Siege. By reason of its wealth and resort of Merchants, grown to such esteem, that it gave occasion to this Distich,

Si terrarum Orbis unaquia patet, annulus esset,
Illius Ormusium gemma locaretur ibi, foret.

That is to say,

Were all the World a Ring, this Isle alone
Might of that Ring be thought to be the Stone.

It was first under its own King, whose dominion extended also into some part of the Continent on either side, and over all the rest of the Ilands within the Gulf. His Revenue of no great yearly value till the coming of the Portugals hither, by whom it was discovered under the conduct of Albukerque, Anno 1506. Who having fortified some part of it for their own defence, and made it the Staple of their trade for the Indian Merchandise; so enriched the same, that the Revenues of those Kings (though Vassals and Tributaries to the Portugal) amounted to 14000 Serafs yearly. In this flourishing state it stood till the year 1622. when Abas the Sultan of Persia having received some affront at the hands of the Portuguese, or desirous to remove the trade of Ormuz to some Port of his own, gave order to Emangoly Chawn, the Duke of Shiraz, to lay siege unto it, with an Army of 15000 men. Who seeing no hopes of mastering it by his land-forces only, furnished himself with the ships and Cannon of some English Merchants, to whom he promised many things which he never performed. For being once master of the City he destroyed it utterly, removmoving the Ordinance to Lar, the wealth thereof to his own treasurie of Shiras, the materials of the houses to Gombroon spoken of before: the Portugueze, and Christian natives passing over unto Muskahat in Arabia Felix. Since which time though the English Captains that adventured in it, were disappointed of the spoyl which they did expect: yet so much honour hath been given by the King of Persia to the English Nation, that their Agent who resideth at Gombroon takes custome of all strangers which do trafick thither.

5. GEDROSIA.

GEDROSIA is bounded on the West, with Carmania; on the East, with Cambaia or Guzarat a Province of India; on the South, with the main Indian Ocean; on the North, with Drangiana and Arachosia. The reason of the name I find not. Now by Mercator, called Gest; by Castaldus, Circan.

The Countrey desolate and barren, like the worst part of Carmania, much destitute of fresh water, and covered over with loose sands, dangerous to the native and stranger both. Some rain they have, but not sufficient to allay the heat and drouth which they suffer under, and yet by reason of that heat it affordeth in some places Nard and Myrrhe, with some other spices. Some Brooks here are, or rather Torrents, which falling from the hills do somewhat qualifie the indisposition of the soyl, and make it habitable, The chief of which was called Arbius antiently; the chief Mountain Batius.

Towns of most name in it, 1. Rhagiana, honoured by Ptolomy with the name of a City; and 2. a Port or Harbor called Mulierum portus, or the Haven of women. 3. Arbis, upon the banks of the River Arbius, presented to us also by the name of a City. 4. Musarna, the chief of the Musarna, a chief tribe of this Countrey. 5. Parsis, or rather Easis, as the Greek text hath it, the Metropolis of the whole Province in the time of Ptolomy. 6. Gest, the chief City at the present; but for nothing memorable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Masarna bordering on Arachosia, the Parsira towards Carmania, the Rhamna on the banks of Indus, and the Orbita, or Arbituri; on the shores of the Ocean. The Countrey of no note in preceding times, till made famous by the follies of Alexander. Who finding by the hard bout which he had with Porus that there was litle hopes of the Conquest of India, would needs make a fruitless voyage to see the Ocean. And having satisfied himself with the sight of that furious Element (as if his very seeing it had sufficiently subdued it to him), landed his Army on this coast. Where in his march for want of victuals, water, and other necessaries, he lost more men in the vast and uncomfortable Desarts of this Countrey, than in all the military services he had put them too: the Army which he carried with him into India, amounting 15000 Horse, and 120000 Foot, whereof hardly the fourth part came back to Babylon. So dearly did he pay for his indiscretion.

DRANGIANA hath on the South, Gedrosia; on the North and West bounded with Aria; on the East, with Arachosia; So called from Drangus, now Ilment, the chief River of it: the modern name thereof being Segestan, from Sige, the now principall City.

The Countrey very hilly, and so closed with Mountains, that the River above named is scarce able to force its passage thorow them. Of no great beauty to invite or reward a Conqueror; yet with the rest, brought under the great Persian Monarchs; the fortunes of which Crown they have alwaies followed. So meanly planted that Ptolomy findeth in it but ten Towns of name: the chief whereof, 1. Ariaspe, mistook perhaps for Agriaspe; and if so, then the mother City of the Agriaspa, whom Curtius placeth in this Tract. 2. Propthasia, by some of the Antients called Phradag, the Metropolis of this poor Province; much boasted of by the old Inhabitants hereof who had seen no better, (as Countrey-villagers use to brag of the next market-Town) and said by Ammianus to be rich, and of high renown, the quality of the place considered. Still of some note amongst the Natives, by whom called Sistan. 3. Arivada. 4. Pharazana, of which nothing memorable. 5. Sige, now of most credit in this Countrey, from hence called Segestan. 6. Timocani. 7. Mulebet, the chief seat of the Kindome of Aladine, or Aleadine, who had here a Fooles-Paradise of his own, of which more anon.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Barii, and the Daranda, from which last, the greatest of the two, the Countrey might perhaps be called originally Darandiana, abbreviated to Drandiana, and at last corrupted easily into Drangiana. But I offer this onely as conjecturall. They were called also by some Writers by the name of Arabians, and that as Ammianus thinks, because they descended from that people: but I think rather from a branch of the River Arabius, which parteth this Countrey from Gedrosia. For I conceive the Arabians were too wise to forsake their own Countrey, and go so farre, to get so litle by the bargain. Together with the rest of the Persian Provinces, subdued by Alexander, who being in this Countrey, hapned on the discovery of the treason intended against him by Philotas, the sonne of Parmenio, the most renowned of all his Captains. After this litle memorable till these later daies, when it grew famous by means of Aladine a seditious Persian, Lord of the vally of Mulebet, spoken of before, who there made a terestrial Paradise, which he promised to all his Partizans: but the company growing too great for the safety of the Kingdome, they were quickly dispersed: and Aladine, with his Fools-Paradise, both taken away together, Anno 1262. Some attribute this fiction of Paradise to Haidarules, the Mountain King of Taurus, vanquished by Selim the first. The whole story is this, out of Paulus Venetus. Aladine Ladine inhabited a valley in this Countrey, the entrance into which he fortified with a strong Castle called Tigado. Hither he brought all the lusty youths and beautifull maidens of the adjoyning Provinces. The women were confined to their chambers, the men to prison; where having endured much sorrow, they were severally cast into dead sleeps, and conveyed to the women: by whom they were entertain'd with all the pleasures, youth and lust could desire, or a sensuall mind affect. Having injoyed this happiness a whole day, they were in a like sleep conveyed to their irons. Then would Aladine inform them how they had been in Paradise, and that he could seat them there eternally; if they durst hazard themselves in his quarrels. This when they had sworn to do, they were destinated to the massacre of such Princes as were like to prove his bad neighbours; and they accordingly did execution. But neither he nor Aladeules were the first who trained up their followers in the Arts of murder. One there was before either of them, whom the Writers of those times call the Old man of the Mountains, inhabiting the mountainous parts of Tyre and Sidon; and from thence sending his Disciples in the like Temptations, to make away the Western Princes whom he stood in fear of, during the course of the Holy warres. For out of his School came those Wretches, who murdered the Count of Tripolis, being in the Church at his Devotions; and desperately slew Conrade Marques of Montferrat, walking openly in the market-place at Tyre; and with like carelessenes of their own lives dangerously wounded Prince Edward (after King of England) sitting in his Tent. These the Italians call Assassines, (whence the word to Assassinate) intimating thereby a desperate Cut-throat, but the reason of that name is not yet agreed on: mistakingly by some Latine Writers of the darker times called Arsacidæ, and their commander Rex Arsacidarum, as if descended from Arsaces, the founder of the Arsacidan race of the Kings of Persia.

7. ARACHOSIA.

ARACHOSIA hath on the West, Drangiana; on the East, the great River Indus; on the South, Gedrosia; and Paropomisus on the North. So called from Arachosia the chief City of it; but now best known by the name of Cabul, the name of the chief City at this present.

Of the Countrey I find little spoken, but that it is watered with a branch of the River Indus, or rather with some nameless River which falleth into it. By the overflowings whereof is made a Lake which Ammianus calleth Arachotoscrene, by Ptolomy called Arachotos, after the name of Arachotos the chief Town of it, neer to which it is.

Towns here were once thirteen, whose names and situation we find in Ptolomy, but little or nothing of them in other Writers. The principal, 1 Arochotos, on the Lake so named, said to be built by Semiramis in her march towards India, and by her to have been named Cephene. 2. Alexandria, or (for distinctions sake) Alexandria Arachosiæ, the work of Alexander the Great, in his like march against the Indians: built at the foot of one of the branches of Mount Taurus shooting towards the South, and peopled with a Colony of 7000 old Macedonian Souldiers, foresent with age, and with the travel of the wars, whom he left there to inhabit it: his Army being here recruited with the forces which had served under Parmenio, consisting of 12000 Grecians and Macedonians. It is now called Cabul, accounted the cheif City of it, in that capacity gives the name of Cabul unto all the Province. 3. Arbaca, seeming by the name to be the work of one Arbaces, but whether of Arbaces the great King of the Medes, I am not able to say. 4. Choaspa, neer some River of that name, as I conjecture; there being besides Choaspes the chief River of Media, another of that name also in India; and probably another hereabouts to give name to this Town. 5. Phoclis, 6. Sigara, 7. Dammana, of which I find nothing but the names. 8. Sin, now a Town of name amongst them, but not much observable.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Pargyetæ, called also Arimaspæ, and Euergetæ, a powerfull Nation of themselves, brought under the command of Alexander by means of Amenides, sometimes the Secretary of Darius, whom he made their Governour. And besides them the Syeri, Rophitæ, and the Eoritæ, which three made up the main body of the Arachosians, committed by Alexander to the government and command of Menon. Following after this the fortunes of the Persian Empire, they changed their Masters as that did, till the comming in of the Tartars. Since that time governed for the most part by a King of their own, especially since the dividing of the Kingdome of Persia amongst Tamerlanes children: some of which held it as a distinct estate, by the names of the Kings of Cabul; till growing great by the conquest of some parts of India, they took unto themselves the name of the Great Mongul; Now Lords not onely of this Countrey, but of the greatest part of India on this side of Ganges: of whom we shall speak more when we are in India, that being the chief Seat of their Power and Empire.

8. PARAPOMISUS.

PAROPAMISUS is bounded on the South, with Arachosia; on the North, with Bactria, from which parted by the main body of Mount Taurus, which is here called Paropamisus, by the name of the Countrey: on the East, with some part of India; on the West, with Aria. So called quasi Paropanesus, from the resemblance which it hath to an Island, begirt on all sides almost with Rivers: in which respect by Ptolomy called Paropanisus, and not Paropamisus; by which last name the Latins for the most part call it, some of them Paropamissus, with a double ss. But that name being loſt long ſince, it is now by ſome called Dache, by others Candahor, but moſt commonly Sableſtan.

The Countrey mountainous and hilly, here and there intermixt with Valleys: the Mountains of great height, and exceeding barren; the Valleys indifferent fruitful, but ſo over-ſhadowed with thoſe hills, that the cleereſt day in ſome places ſeems but like a twilight. The people as obſcure as their Countrey, ſcarce known to any of their neighbours in the time of Alexander; the barbarous nations neereſt to them eſteeming them unworthy of their acquaintance. Agreſte hominum genus, & inter Barbaros maxime incognitum, as it is in Curtius.

Rivers of moſt note herein, 1. Oxus, (of which before) which riſing out of Mount Caucaſus, paſſeth Northwards, and afterwards divideth Bactria from Sogdiana. 2. Dargamanis, 3. Coacus, both owing their original to ſome of the branches of Mount Taurus. Which chain of hills, beginning hereabouts to draw towards their end, are towards the Weſt called Paroetes, where they give being to the River Dargamanis, before named; more Eaſtward they have the name of Paropamiſus; and Caucaſus they are properly called where they are thwarted by Imaus, in the very point, as it were, where Scythia, India, and the Perſian territories do encounter Each other. The hills in that place mounted to ſo great an height, that from the tops thereof the Stars appear much greater than in other places: the riſing and ſetting of which are from hence eaſily diſcerned: made memorable by the fable of Prometheus, who is ſaid to have been bound here by command of Jupiter; on which, viſtum Promethea fuiſſe antiquitas tradit, ſaith the Hiſtorian. Prometheus is indeed by the Poets feigned to have ſtoln fire from heaven, and to have made a man of clay: for which preſumptuous fact, Jupiter bound him on the hill Caucaſus; where a vulture continually fed on his his Liver. But according either to the truth of Story, or their gueſs at leaſt, who make ſome Story the ground of Every Fable; Prometheus being a very wiſe man, inſtructed the dead and clayie carcaſſes of others with wiſedome; and that being very deſirous to learn the nature of the ſtarres, (which is the fire he ſtole from heaven) he made the higheſt part of Mount Caucaſus his ſtudie, where the inward care he had to accompliſh his deſire, might juſtly have been compared to a Vulture gnawing on his entrails; and of this opinion is Saint Auguſtine. But far more memorable is it made for being the reſting place of the Ark of Noah, whereof we have already ſpoken in our Generall Preface.

Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1. Naulibis, and 2. Ortoſpana, both named by Ptolomy, and reckoned by Ammianus for the moſt famous of this Countrey. But in what their fame conſiſted I cannot find. 3. Parſiana, 4. Gazaca, 5. Doreacana, 6. Bagarda; all named by Ptolomy; but not elſe obſervable. 7. Candahor, now the Metropolis of the Countrey, a Town of great trade, by reaſon of the ſituation of it on the borders of India; in that reſpect giving to the whole Countrey the name of Candahor. By which name reckoned for a Kingdome, and uſed amongſt the many titles in the Stile Imperiall. Nothing conſiderable of it in the courſe of Story, but that being once brought under by the Perſian Monarchs, it followed the fortune of the reſt till theſe latter times; when the Perſians being overlaid by the Tartars, it became ſubject to ſome Kings of the race of Tamerlane, reigning in this Province, till brought under by the Kings of Cabul, of the ſame extraction. Finding thoſe Kings intent on the conqueſt of India, they freed themſelves from all ſubjection to that Crown, and had Kings of their own, till the year 1600. or thereabouts, when the laſt King, unable to defend himſelf againſt Abdura King of the Usbeques (a Tartarian people, but ſubject in ſome ſort to the Crown of Perſia) ſurrendred his Kingdome to Eſtobar the Great Mongul (deſcended from the old Kings of Cabul) whoſe dominions border cloſe upon it. Recovered to the Perſian Crown by Mirza the ſonne of Abas, and father of Saffie the now Sultan; a Prince of much gallantry, but of more misfortunes: the Perſian Sophies, ſince that conqueſt, uſing the title of Kings of Candahor, in the Regal ſtile.

9. ARIA.

ARIA is bounded on the Eaſt, with Paropamiſus; on the Weſt, with Parthia; on the North, with Margiana; and on the South, with Drangiana, from which laſt parted by the mountain Bagoas. A name in old times given to the Province of Media, eſpecially by the Grecians, till changed (as they ſay) into Media, on the comming thither of Medea. For ſo Pauſanias, amongſt others, Παραγενομένη ἐς τὴν ἣ λεγομένην τότε Ἀρίαν, τότε ἀνδρὸς ἴδιον τὸ ὄνομα καλοῦσι Μήδους ἀπ' αὐτῆς, i. e. comming into the Countrey then called Aria, ſhe cauſed it after her own name to be called Media. But the name of Aria was not loſt, though it were removed; remaining proper to this Countrey till theſe later ages; now changed with little alteration into that of Eri.

The Countrey much ſubject unto heates, environed with deſarts, beaths, and forreſts; yet neer the mountains which defend them from the heat of the Sun, they have ſome fruitful Champagnes; bearing very good fruits, and amongſt others, a ſtrong wine, and of long continuance; keeping both taſt and colour above 80 years. They have alſo here a Drug ſomewhat like to Myrrhe, and a kind of Saphyr, but not right.

Rivers of note I meet with none but that which Ptolemy calleth Arias, by the name of the Province, making a Lake of the ſame name. The fountain of which River he maketh to be in Paropamiſus, and the fall thereof in the ſaid Lake: the waters of it firſt increaſed by a nameleſs Streame falling from the Mountains called Seriphi, being that part of Taurus which divideth this Countrey from Margiana.

Antiently it was populous and well-inhabited, containing above 30 Towns of name and note. Thoſe of moſt conſequence, 1. Aria, on the banks of the River Arias, the ſeat of the Arii, whom Pliny ſpeaketh of in this Tract: but whether they received this name from the Province, or beſtowed their own nam:

name upon it, I determine not. 2. Bataxa, 3. Sotera, 4. Orbitana, 5. Sarmagana, 6. Artacanda, by Strabo called Artacana, 7. Nisibis, mentioned both by Ptolomy and Ammianus, 8. Alexandria, bearing the name of the Great Conqueror, by whom planted and made a Colony of his Macedonians, for the better awing of the Countrey, which by some former rebellions had been troublesome to him. But these, and most of those remembred by Ptolomy, being grown out of knowledge, there remain now of speciall note, 9. Heri, or Eri, seated not far from the place of the antient Aria, but much superiour to it in strength and greatness. Said by Maginus to be in compass thirteen miles, and so plentifully stored with Roses, that the inhabitants of the Countrey call it the City of Roses. Naturally of a strong situation, compassed about with a very good wall, and watered with deep Channels, conveyed unto it by Tamerlane, that most puissant Tartar, by whom either founded or repaired. 10. Sasuar, a place of good importance, and the second in esteem next to Heri it self.

The old Inhabtants were the Masdarani, Nisæi, Astareni, the Cassirotæ, Obares, Drachamæ, Borgi, Paranti, &c. united altogether in the name of Arians, by that name subject to the Persians, and subdued by Alexander. Against whom when they had rebelled, and were worsted by him, they were compelled to betake themselves to the strength of a Cave, seated upon the top of an inaccessible Rock, and with small force easily defended. But to Alexander nothing was impossible. For piling up a great mass of timber, equall unto the mouth of the Cave, when the wind served opportunely, he put fire unto it, and by that means so filled the Cave with fire and smoak, that some of them were stifled, some half-burnt, and the rest forced to yield to the Victors mercy. Nor was this the onely action of note during that Rebellion, though it was the greatest. The common Souldier also had his honour in it. Sarlibarzanes, a Persian, whom Alexander had trusted with the command of this Province, had drawn them unto this Revolt, and became their head. Who to express his courage in the sight of the Arians, challenged the proudest He of the Macedonians to a single combat. The challenge cheerfully accepted by one Erignis, one of the most aged in the Army: and saying aloud, ostendam quales milites Alexander habet, he valiantly charged upon the Rebell; and at the second venew slew him. The Arians after this triall of their disabilities, remained in quiet, taking the same fortunes as the rest of the Persians did, in their change of Masters. Of late, by Mahomet Codubanda, it was aliened for a time from the Crown of Persia, and given to Sultan Abas, his second sonne, who took unto himself in his Fathers life-time the title of the King of Heri. But comming to the Crown by the murder of his elder Brother, and the death of his Father, he united Heri once again to the Regal Diademe, but kept as a distinct title in the Royall stile.

10. PARTHIA.

PARTHIA is bounded on the East, with Aria; on the West, with Media; on the North, with Hyrcania; and on the South, with that part of Carmania, which by Ptolomy and others of the Antients was called Deserta. The reason of the name we shall see anon. But that name being laid aside it is now called Arach.

The Countrey walled as it were round with Mountains, and in most parts overgrown with woods; by which defended from those heats to which otherwise it would be subject, it produceth many things of necessary use for the life of the people; but nothing for riot and excess. In other places where the shade of the wood is wanting, the whole Countrey is in a manner but a sandy Desart, dangerous to Travellers, and impassable even with the help of Guides, the sands continually driven from one place to another, taking away all tracts of a beaten way. For which cause there be certain Castles at each three miles end, built at the Kings charge, as well for the direction as the reception of Passengers; and Cawseys of many miles in length, in some other places, for their better travelling; the sands on each side of them so loose and light, that if a man should fall aside, he were lost remedilesse.

The people antiently were very couragious and stout, as commonly they are in all barren Countries, and were withall of a Scythian extract and originall. Exceeding spare of diet, and good reason for it, the Countrey not affording any superfluities; but otherwise much given to pleasures, allowing themselves plurality of wives and Concubines. Good horsemen, and to that so used, that they consulted of all business both private and publique, when they were on horse-back. Such lovers of the warres, that they accompted no man happy after his decease but who died in battell; esteeming of all others but as fooles or Cowards. Their Souldiers for the most part Slaves, whom they trained up unto their weapons, and to manage horses: insomuch as of 50000 horse which the Parthian King had in the field against Marcus Antonius, there were not above 800. Free-men. But their greatest fame consisted in the handling of their Bow and Arrows, esteemed the best Archers in the world, and not undeservedly; having the Art of shooting backwards, and making their Retreat or flight more terrible, than their charge or onset. Whence that of Seneca.

Terga conversi metuenda Parthi.
The Parthians flight
Doth most affright.

Which, with the manner of their fight, more copiously described by Lucan thus.

Pugna levis, bellumq; fugax, turmæq; fugaces,
Et melior cessisse loco quam pellere miles.
Illita terra dolis, nec Martem cominus unquam

A usa pati virtus, ſed longè tendere nervos.

Which I find thus Engliſhed to my hand.

Light skirmiſh, fleeing warre, and ſcattered bands,
And better Souldiers when they run away,
Than to cut off an enemy that ſtands.
Their crafty Gall-craps on the ground they lay,
Nor dares their courage come to down-right blows,
But fight beſt furtheſt off, moſt truſting to their bows.

From hence it was that M. Craſſus, in his expedition againſt them, being told by an Aſtrologer, that his enterpriſe would prove unproſperous, by reaſon of ſome ill aſpect which he had found in Scorpio; Tuſh (ſaid he) I fear not Scorpio, but Sagittarius. And to theſe warlike exercíſes of horſe and Archery, the temper of the Air and Soyl, gave no ſmal advantages, the dry Air ſeaſoning their Bow-ſtrings, and their large fields affording them ſufficient room to train their horſes. Cœlum enim quod ſiccum eſt, nervos intentos facit; Regio tota plana eſt, et ob eam rem equis accommodata, as it is in Dion. But this is to be underſtood not of Parthia onely, but the whole Countrey of Perſia; ſubject at that time to the power of the Parthian Kings. Next to theſe Parthians, the Engliſh have been looked on formerly, as the ableſt Bow-men, having gotten by their bow and arrows as many notable victories over the French, as the Parthians ever did obtain upon the Romans. But at this time Archery both here, and elſewhere, is quite laid aſide, the Gun ſilencing all offenſive weapons: how juſtly I determine not. The point hath been long ſince debated betwixt Sir John Smith, and Sir Roger Williams; many great wits appeared upon either ſide; and the ſumme of their ſeverall Arguments drawn up together by Sir Clement Edmunds in his judicious obſervations upon Cæſars Commentaries, to which the Reader may repair for his ſatisfaction. All I ſhall ſay is only this, that victories as great as any in thoſe elder daies have been obtained with farre leſs bloodſhed, ſince the Gun came up, than in any of the times before it.

The Religion of this People hath ſuffered under the ſame changes with the reſt of Perſia, but they have a language of their own, mixt of Mede and Scythian. For which beſides the teſtimony of humane Authors, we have the Authority of Scriptures; where the Parthians, Elamites, and Medes, are named as Nations of a ſeverall language, or a different Dialect at the leaſt, Acts 2.

Rivers of note I find not any, nor any Mountains proper and peculiar to them: Coronus, part of the great Mountain Taurus, lying in common betwixt them and Hyrcania; as Maſdoramus doth betwixt them and Aria, and the hills called Parchoatras, betwixt them and the Deſarts of Carmania. So that for want of ſuch known Landmarks, the finding out of their antient Cities would be very difficult, if any learned Antiquary ſhould undertake it.

The Countrey antiently more populous, the towns and villages thicker ſet, than they be at the preſent: many Cities, and 2000 villages having been overthrown with Earth-quakes. In Ptolomy we find the names of 25. of their Cities diſtributed into the 4 Provinces or Tetrarchies of Camiſene towards Hyrcania; Parthiene, bordering on Media; Paracanticene, confining on Aria; Tabiene, neighbouring Carmania. The principall of which, and of thoſe that are now in being, 1. Genonia. 2. Charax. 3. Arſacaria. 4. Apamia, which by the name ſeems to have been of the foundation of Seleucus. 5. Dardamana. 6. Syndaga. 7. Paſacarta. 8. Hecatompyle, the Royall City, ſo called from the number of an hundred Gates in the walls thereof, by which we may conjecture at the antient greatneſs: the Parthians, which had ſeen no greater, calling it by the glorious name of Half the world. 9. Hiſpaan, commonly called Spahan, or Spawhawn, raiſed out of the ruins of Hecatompyle, and as that was, the Regal City for theſe parts. In compaſs about nine miles, of figure round, and ſeated in the middeſt of a large and capacious Plain, beautified with many pleaſant Gardens, goodly Bathes, and handſome Moſques. But the greateſt glory of it lieth in the market-place or Midan, quadrangular in form, but the ſides unequal; cloiſtred about, and well ſtored with merchandiſe of all ſorts, but drugs eſpecially: the Court or Quadrangle, ſerving for horſe-races, and other warlike exerciſes which are done on horſe-back. On the weſt-ſide a magnificent Moſque, built of white Marble five yards high, and the reſt above that of brick; curiouſly interwoven with Arabick Poeſies. In the middeſt a fair Conduit, wherewith they purifie themſelves when they go to their prayers. On another ſide the Royall Palace, wrought in the Front with Antique works; the Floors on the inſide covered with rich Perſian Carpets; and the Roofs chargeably embоſſed with Gold and Azure. 10. Jelphea, on the other ſide of the River on which Spawhawn is ſeated, as the Burgh of Southwark is to London; wholly inhabited (at this time) by Armenian Chriſtians, from hence called Jelpheliues, who live here in great freedome, both for perſon, and conſcience, but that their Poll-money is taxed at an higher rate. 11. Croom, a right pleaſant and healthy City, well built, of large ſtreets, and ſeated on the banks of a ſmall but delightfull River, iſſuing out of the Coronian Mountains, neer to which it ſtandeth. Conſiſting at the preſent of 2000 Families, but antiently, as may be gathered from ſome ruins, of farre greater compaſs. Much honoured by the Perſians for the Sepulchre of Fatima, the daughter of Mahomet, from whom the Sophian Sect and Princes do derive their Pedegree. 12. Cuſham, a rich and pleaſant City, about 60 miles from Spawhawn, well-built, and peopled by a number of Artizans, who for the making of Silks, Sattens, and cloth of Gold, are in great eſteem. Beautified amongſt other things with a ſtately and magnificent Caravans-Raw, built by Sultan Abas, for the reception of Strangers, whether Merchants or other Travellers, but fit to entertian any Prince of Asia. The City of no great age, the work either of Ussan-Cassanes, the Armenian, who got the Crown of Persia, in the year 1470. or at the highest of Cassam, the sonne of Axan and Grand-sonne of Tangrolipix, the first Turk here reigning; from one of which it had this name. 13. Tawgebawt, where the Persian Kings have a house of pleasure, of no great receipt, but for the cost and ornaments of it, and the delectablenes of the Gardens adjoyning to it, not yielding to any in this large Empire: and for Grots, Ecchos, Labyrinths, and the other excellencies of Art, perhaps not fellowed in the world, especially considering that it standeth in the midle of a sandy Desart.

for

The Parthians were originally a Scythian Nation; banished their own Countrey, and glad to plant themselves in this barren Region, calling themselves by the name of Parthians, which in their language signifieth as much as Exiles. A People so obscure and poor, either not knowing or not caring for the use of money, that none of Alexanders great Captains would vouchsafe to be their Governour; but let it lie as an Appendix of Media, to the Kings whereof it had originally been subject, till one Philip, a man of small regard, took the place upon him. Falling at last, with the rest of Alexanders Asian purchases, into the hands of Seleucus, it was governed by the Lieutenants of the Syrian Kings, till the time of Seleucus Callinicus, the fourth of that house. During whose reign, Arsaces a noble Parthian, provoked by some indignities, slew the Governour, and took the estate upon himself, perswading all the rest of the Provinces to do the like: and thrived so well in his design, that he not onely gained the Kingdome of Parthia, but united to it all the Provinces lying on the East of Euphrates. Of whom and his Successors more, in the story of Persia. After this nothing singular which concerns this Province, but that as this Arsaces did recover the Persian liberty from the power of the Greeks; so Gempsas, one of the Sultans of this Province also, redeemed (though but for a little time) this Parthia and the parts adjoyning, from the yoak of the Tartars; as shall be shewn in prosecution of the Persian History.

II. HYRCANIA.

HYRCANIA is bounded on the South with Parthia; on the North, with the Hyrcanian or Caspian Sea; on the East, with Margiana; and on the West, with Atropatia, or Atropatene (as Ammianus calleth it) the North part of Media. Divided from Parthia by the interposition of Coronus, part of the main body of mount Taurus. The way thorow which, said by the Persians to be cut out at one blow by the Scymitar of Mortis Haly, their second Mahomet, as not above fourty yards in breadth, in the broadest parts of it, the hills on both sides towring to the very clouds. With small strength easily defended against mighty Armies, and possibly may be the same which the Antients called Porta Caspia, before described.

It took the name of Hyrcania, from Hyrcana, a large and spacious forest betwixt it and Scythia; sometimes called Caspia also, from the Caspii, a chief People of it; of whom it is reported, that when their Parents came to the age of 70 years, they used to shut them up, and starve them, as being then no longer usefull to the Common-wealth. But both those names growing out of use, it is by Mercator called Diargument; by some late Travells Mezendram; by some others Corcam.

Those parts hereof which lie towards the South are said to yield abundance of wheat, wines, figges, and fruit: those towards the Caspian Sea, as plentifull of Grass and pasture. But betwixt both, nothing in a manner but continual forests, and those so intricate and thick, that it is a matter of no small difficulty to find passage thorow them. Full, as most other Forests are in those Eastern parts, of Panthers, Leopards, Lions, Tigers: these last of such an horrible fiercenes, that it grew into a common Proverb used of cruel men, that they had sucked an Hyrcanian Tiger; Hyrcanaq; admorunt ubera Tigres, as it is in Virgil.

Principall Rivers of this Countrey, 1. Zioberis, spoken of before. 2. Maxera, or Mazeras, mentioned by Pliny, Ptolomy, and Ammianus; and 3. Secanda; all falling into the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. A Sea which had the names of Caspian, and Hyrcanian, from the Caspii and Hyrcani, bordering next unto it; now from the Town of Bochu, in Atropatia, called Mare di Bochu. Fashioned in an Ovall form, the length thereof from North to South 700 miles, and 600 miles from East to West. Stormy, and troublesome, by reason of those many great Rivers which fall into it from all the Provinces adjoyning; which notwithstanding it hath no visible commerce with the Ocean, nor doth it at any time overflow its banks: finding some passage under ground to discharge it self of those vast streams of water which are powred into it. Well traded by the Moscovite Merchants, who having the command of the River Volga (which with 70 mouths doth open into this Sea) sail over it, and land at Farabant, or some other of the Port-Towns, where they trade for silks. Some Ilands here are in it, but not many, or of any great fame but onely that they served the Nations which lay neer it for a place of retreat, in time of the Tartarian tempest under Tamerlane; as the Isles of Venice did to the Italians at the comming of Attila.

Places of most consideration; 1. Hyrcania, once the Metropolis of the Province, and so called by Ptolomy; still extant, but of less esteem, and still called Hyrcan. 2. Tambrace, in old times of the greatest streng.h, and most defensible, but taken by Antiochus Magnus in the warre against Arsaces the Parthian for the recovery of those Countries then revolted from him. 3. Adrapsa; 4. Masaca, 5. Anarosa; of which we find the names, amongst others, in the antient Writers. 6. Asharaffe, two miles from the Sea, in a spacious Plain, containing about 2000 houses; and now of most reputation of all this Province, by the long Residence therein of Abas, the late Persian Sultan; who built there a magnificent Palace, & another two miles off at a place called Abassebant. The furniture whereof, besides costly Carpets, in Plate and Jewels, at such time as Sir Dodmore Cotton was there Ambassadour, is said to have been valued by a knowing Merchant, at 20 millions of Pounds. But I fear the Merchant had more skill in silks than Jewels; such a vast summe to be expended on the furniture of one Palace onely, being beyond the possibility of the Revenue of the Persian Sophies; hardly amounting towards all charges to five millions of Crowns. 7. Farabant, on a navigable Arm of the Caspian Sea; for beauty, wealth, and greatness, of most note in this Countrey. Well traded from all parts of this Inland Sea, especially by the Russian Merchant, as before is said; whose ships come hither in March, and return in July; it being from hence to Astrachan but ten daies sail. Beautified with goodly Gardens, a Royal mansion of the kings, and a spacious Market-place. 8. Chiacoporo, neer the Sea also, but on the banks of a River; the water whereof is said for eleven moneths to be fresh and sweet, and for the twelf month very salt. 9. Barfrushdee, twelve miles from the Sea, well furnished with wood and water. 10. Omoall, a Town of about 3000 houses, seated on the North side of the Taurus, in a pleasant and fruitfull soyl; resorted to by the people of so many Nations, that seven languages are there commonly spoken. Once larger, as appeareth by some ruins, than it is at the present; by some conceived to be the Nabarca of the Antients, honoured in those times with an Oracle. 11. Strava, a town of great trafick, for raw silks especially. 12. Mesandre, whence the whole Province (or rather the parts adjoyning to it) hath the name of Mezendrum.

The old Inhabitants hereof, besides the Caspii, were the Maxeræ, Astabeni, Chrindi, and the Arsitenses; united in the name of Hyrcans in the time of the Persians, and by that name well known at the comming of Alexander. Against whom they so defended themselves by tying the boughs and twigs of their Trees together, that it was impossible for him to come at them till with incredible pains and labour he had caused their woods to be cut down: at sight whereof the People, who supposed the King had too much other business, and of more importance, than to put himself unto that trouble, did submit unto him. Falling to the share of Seleucus, they were the first people that were gained by Arsaces, and joined with him in recovering their former liberty, though they got nothing by the bargain but the change of their Master. In all times since, they have been looked upon as Members of the Persian Empire, till the conquest of it by the Tartars; in the distractions of whose great Empire after Tamerlanes death, it fell to some Princes of his house; who governed here under the vassallage and protection of the Tartars of Zagathay. Recovered not long since to their old obedience by Sultan Abas: who for the better setling the affairs hereof, removed the Seat Royall from Spawhawn, to which before he had transferred it from the City of Casbin, to Ashiraffe, then a small town, now the chief of this Countrey.

12. MARGIANA.

MARGIANA is bounded on the West, with Hyrcania; on the East, with Bactria; on the North, with part of Tartary, from which severed by the River Oxus; on the South, with Aria, divided from it by the Mountains. So called from the River Margus which runnes thorow the Countrey: but is now named Fremigen.

The Countrey environed with Mountains, and in most places of it full of sandy Desarts. But where it is watered with the Rivers, Arias, and Margus, it is very fruitfull, stretching it self into a large and spacious plain, containing in the circuit neer 200 miles. The Plain once compassed with a wall by Antiochus Soter, King of Syria: more memorable for the huge stocks of Vines which are said to be in it, as big in bulk as two men can fathom, and sometimes bearing branches of grapes two Cubits long. The more to be admired in regard there is no other place neer unto it where the vine will grow. And if the Ark rested on the top of Mount Caucasus, as it is most probable it did; why may not this be some of the remainder of that first Vineyard which was planted by Noah, when he descended from these Mountains, as is affirmed by the constant tradition of the people which inhabit here.

The people mixt of Scythian and Persian breed, partaking of the fierceness of the one, and the behaviour of the other. Conform unto the Persians, in Religion, language and apparell; distinguished from them in the colour of their Turbants onely, which are commonly Green; and therefore by the Persians called Jeselbas, or Green-caps; the Turbants of the Persian being alwayes Red.

Chief Rivers of this Countrey are, 1. Margus, the peculiar River of it, which rising out of the foot of the Mountains, and passing thorow the middest of the Province, receiveth into its channell the River, 2. Arias, hasting out of Aria; and so together lose themselves in 3. Oxus, dividing the Margians from the Tartars. Out of the joint streams of which several Rivers is made a large Lake now called Sabucamber, but antiently Palus Oxiana, from the principall River.

Places of most observation in it, 1. Alexandria, or Alexandria Margiana for distinction sake; one of the six towns built by Alexander for defence of this Countrey; called afterwards Seleucia from Seleucus; next Antiochia from Antiochus Soter King of Syria, by whom fortified with a very strong wall. It is now called Indion, and esteemed for the chief of the Countrey. 2. Jasonium, seated on the confluence of Margus with a nameless River issuing from the Seriphian Mountains. 3. Nigæa, as the printed books of Ptolomy call it; but mistook for Nissa, or Nysea. 4. Argadina. 5. Rhea; of which nothing memorable. 6. Marin, neer to which Ismael the first of the Sophian race, discomfited the forces of Sabas the Cham of Zagathay.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Massagetes, and the Parni, taking up the midlands; the Dorbicæ, bordering upon Oxus; and the Tapyri, dwelling towards the East. United by the name of Margians they were subdued by the Kings of Persia, from whom won by Alexander to his Empire: who to assure himself hereof built six Cities in it, two towards the South, and four towards the East, all situate on the tops of hills, and built at ſuch convenient neerneſs that they might afford ſuccour to each other, as occaſion ſerved. After this nothing ſingular in the ſtory of them; involved in the ſame fortunes with the reſt of Perſia, till Perſia was conquered by the Tartars. Since which time, though the reſt of the Perſian Provinces were freed from the Tartarian yoak by Gempſus, the Soldan of Parthia, and King of Perſia for a time, yet part of this Province, and of Bactriana, are ſtill ſubject to them.

on

13. BACTRIA.

BACTRIA or BACTRIANA, is bounded on the Weſt, with Margiana; on the Eaſt & North, with the River Oxus, dividing it from Sogdiana; on the South, with Paropamiſus, from which parted by the hills ſo named, and the Mountain Caucaſus. It took this name from Bactra, the chief City of it; and is now called Choraſſin, but by ſome named Batter.

The Countrey towards the River Oxus, is for the moſt part well manured, and affordeth plenty of Wheat, and all ſorts of fruits excepting Olives; rich metals, and ſome precious ſtones, as Emeralds, Chriſolites, and Jacinthes. Plenty of paſtures there be alſo, well ſtored with Cattell, and thoſe of bigger bulk than in other places. But the greateſt part hereof to the South and Weſt is nothing but a ſandy Deſart; and by reaſon that the ſands are driven up and down by contrary winds, no tract or beaten way is to be diſcerned: inſomuch as Travellers reſt all day, and take their journey in the night, that they may guide themſelves by the courſe of the Stars, as upon the Sea, not without great danger of being loſt or buried, whilſt alive, in that ſandy Ocean.

The people heretofore a puiſſant and warlike nation, not without great difficulty conquered by the Aſſyrians, not with leſs by the Perſians; alwaies in armes, cruel, and reſembling the Scythians, whoſe neer neighbours they were: and (which may very well paſs for their greateſt vertue) multum a Perſarum luxu abhorrentes, abhorring naturally from the Perſian luxuries. But withall unnaturall to their Parents, whom when old they caſt unto their dogs, kept for that purpoſe, and called Canes Sepulchrales, or buriall dogs. The women gorgeous in apparell, and proud of geſture, but prodigall of their bodies to their meaneſt ſlaves. The men to this day do retain their antient ſtoutneſs; but hard beſet betwixt the Perſians and the Tartars, who ſeverally pretend a dominion over them.

No Province of the Perſian Empire hath ſo many Rivers. The principall of which are 1. Artamis, and 2. Zariaſpes, mingling ſtreams together, as do alſo 3. Ochus, and 4. Orgomanes; all four contributing their waters to the River Oxus. Of Oxus, being rather a boundary betwixt the Perſian and the Tartar, than rightly proper unto either, we have ſpoke already.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Bactra, the Metropolis or chief City of it, ſituate at the foot of the Mountains Sogdii; giving the name of Bactria unto all the Province. It is now called Bochor, and ſtill keeps the dignity of the Metropolitan: the ſeat of the Chief-Prieſt or Biſhop of the Mahometans of Zagathay (to which this City, and great part of the Countrey alſo, doth now belong) having here his reſidence, in power and reputation equall to the King himſelf. Well fortified, and ſtored with all military proviſions: the birth-place (as Maginus ſaith) in theſe latter Ages of Avicenna, that learned Philoſopher and Phyſician; and in the firſt Ages of Zoroaſter the more learned Aſtrologer. 2. Ebuſus, once the Regal ſeat, and therefore honoured by Ptolomy with the name of Regia. 3. Zariſpe, or Chariſpe, the chief City of the Chariſpe, a great Tribe of this Countrey. 4. Charracharta, mentioned by Ptolomy and Ammianus: theſe two, upon the River Oxus. 5. Encratidia, built or repaired by the Macedonians; as the name, being meerly Greek, doth ſeem to intimate. 6. Alicodra, as antient as the reſt, but of no great note in the courſe of buſineſs. 7. Iſtigiat, of a later date, but of greater beauty than any of thoſe before ſpoken of: ſuperiour to Bochor in elegancy, ſtate and greatneſs, though not in dignity; and held by ſome to be the pleaſanteſt of the Eaſt.

This Countrey was as ſoon peopled as any ſince the generall Deluge. It had not elſe been poſſible that Zoroaſter King hereof in the time of Ninus, and by him aſſaulted, ſhould bring into the field an Army of 400000 men of this, and perhaps ſome other of the neighbouring Provinces, as moſt credible writers ſay he did. Encountring Ninus with this Army he prevailed at firſt, and ſlew of the Aſſyrians neer an hundred thouſand. But Ninus having better opportunities of recruiting his forces, invaded him a ſecond time with an Army of 1700000 foot, and 200000 horſe (the greateſt on record in all ages ſince that time, except that of Semiramis) with which he overcame Zoroaſter, ſlew him in the field, and united Bactria to his Empire. Unto this Zoroaſter is aſcribed the invention of Aſtronomy, but on no good ground: that Art or Science being ſtudied before the flood, (if Seths Pillars mentioned by Joſephus be of any credit): and therefore probably no otherwiſe to be aſcribed to Zoroaſter, than as to the Reviver of it; or becauſe he firſt committed that unto writing, which he had received by tradition; or becauſe he brought thoſe confuſed notions which he had received from others, into rule and method. He being ſlain, and Bactra his chief City taken by the wit of Semiramis, then the wife of Menon (but on the merit of that ſervice made the wife of Ninus) the Bactrians became ſubject unto the Aſſyrian Kings, after to the Monarchs of the Medes and Perſians; in the ſpring of which great Monarchy, Beſſus a falſe and cruell Traitor, did command this Province: and having villainouſly ſlain Darius, his Lord and Maſter, aſſumed unto himſelf the title of King of Perſia, under the name of Artaxerxes. But being betrayed by Spitamenes one of his Confederates, by him delivered unto Alexander, and by Alexander put to a cruell death: the Bactrians became ſubject to the Macedonians, and in that right unto Seleucus and the Kings of Syria. But long it held not in obedience, one Theodotus, who formerly had the Government of it for the Syrian Kings, taking unto himſelf the title of King, and the poſſeſſion of the Countrey, about the the ſame time that Arſaces and the Parthians made the like revolt. Wreſted from his poſterity by one Enthydemus, the recovery of it was attempted by Antiochus Magnus: and the whole cauſe put to the trial of a battel. In which, though Antiochus had the better, and ſhewed more perſonal valor in it than any time after: yet he was glad to come to a compoſition, and left to Euthydemus both the Crown and the Countrey. Made not long after an acceſſion to the Parthian Kingdome; it continued part thereof whileſt that Kingdeme ſtood: and in the time of Ptolomy (as long time before) had for the chief tribes or nations of it the Salataræ, and Zariaſpæ towards the North; the Comani, or Coamoni (as Pliny calleth them) dwelling in the South; the middle parts being taken up by the Thocari, ſaid to be gens magna; the Scordæ, Savadii, Maricæ, Tambyzi, Amariſpæ, and others of as little note. In the often changes and alterations of the Perſian State, one of the laſt Nations which ſubmitted to the new Pretenders: and at this time ſo neutrall betwixt the Perſians, and the Cham of Tartary, that it is wholly under the power of either. More averſe from the Perſian government ſince the alteration of Religion made there by Hyſmael, and the reſt of the Sect of Mortis Hali: theſe Bactrians being of the old race of Mahometans which adhered to Haumar, Oſmen, and Abubecher, as the true Succeſſours of their falſe Prophet: and therefore ill-affected to the Sophian faction, whom they call commonly Caphars, or Hereticks, for the innovations by them made in the Law of Mahomet.

Thus having taken a ſurvey of thoſe ſeveral Provinces which conſtitute the Perſian Empire, and ſhewn by what means they were firſt united into one eſtate: we muſt next look upon the names and actions of thoſe mighty Monarchs, who have ſucceſſively, and from time to time enjoyed the Soveraignty. By what good chance Arbaces from a Deputy or Lieutenant of Media, obtained the Diademe for himſelf, we have ſhewn before: and we have ſhewn how liberally he enfeoffed the Vice-Roys of the ſeverall Provinces (which in the diviſion made betwixt him and Belochus, fell unto his ſhare;) in the propriety and command of thoſe Countreys, which before they held. Nothing reſerved unto himſelf, and his poſterity, but the title onely; and perhaps ſome acknowledgments made to them, as the Lords in chief. Nor left he leſs liberty to his own Medians, than to the reſt of the Provinces: which turning to licenciouſneſs was ſo hurtful to them, that they were glad at laſt of that wholeſome ſeverity, which Deioces, a more Lordly King, began to exerciſe: who taking to himſelf a guard, building the Royall City of Ecbatana, and fortifying ſome other places of importance, firſt brought the people under the command of law: in that regard not unfitly called by Herodotus, the firſt King of the Medes.

Kings of the Medes.

A. M.

3174. 2. Mandanes, the ſonne of Arbaces.. 50.

3224. 3. Siſarmus. 30.

3254. 4. Medidus, by ſome called Artyræ. 25.

3279. 5. Cardiceus, whom ſome call Arbianes. 13.

3292. 6. Deioces, the founder of Ecbatana, and the Legiſlator of the Medes, whom he firſt brought under the command of Law, and a Regal Government, the former Kings having left the reigns ſo looſe on the necks of the peopl, that they ſeemed to reign by curteſie only; and had no more authority amongſt their Subjects, than any of the mean Lords had upon their Vaſſals.

3303. 7. Phraortes, a man of great proweſs and fortune; he made all Aſia ſtand in fear, and compelled the Perſians to be his tributaries; but was after overtopped by the Scythians. 22.

3331. 8. Cyaxares, united to his Empire the Saracens, and the Parthians. The King was ſo overlaid by the Scythians, who in the reign of Phraortes, had broke into Media; that he was little better than their rent-gatherer. But having endured them for above two years, he plotted their finall extirpation, and committed his deſign to the Nobles, who willingly gave ear to it. One night they invited the chief of the Scythians to a banquet, where having well liquored them, and put them all to the ſword, the baſer ſort willingly returned homeward. 40.

3371. 9. Aſtyages, the ſonne of Cyaxares, who having maried his Daughter Mandane, to Cambyſes the Tributary King of Perſia; dreamed that ſhe had made as much water as drowned all Aſia: hereupon he commanded Harpagus, one of his Noble men, to ſee the Child killed; but he loathing ſo cruel a fact, committed the charge of executing the Kings commandment, to Mithridates the Kings heard-man. He preſerved the life of the young infant, to whom he gave the name of Cyrus, whoſe fortune at laſt lifted him up to the Kingdome of Perſia: when abhorring his Grand-Father for that intended cruelty, he both bereft him of his Kingdome, and confined him to Hyrcania, when he had reigned thirty five years. A. M. 3406.

3406. 10. Cyaxares II. in the Scripture called Darius Medus, ſonne to Aſtyages, of the age of 52. years ſucceeded his father. For Cyrus pretending no quarrel to his Unkle who had never wronged him; left him the Kingdome of Media; and took unto himſelf the Soveraignty of Persia, which before was tributary to the Medes; not making any other alteration in the State of Media.

Perſia

At this division of the Median Empire, as Torniellus in his Annalls, (and that not improbably) is of opinion, it was also agreed on, that Cyrus should take the daughter and only child of Cyaxares to wife; that they should both join together, in subduing of their neighbours; that whatsoever they won, should belong to Cyaxares, (who was even then an old Prince) during his life; and that Cyrus should be his heir. In the twentieth year of their severall reigns, they took Babylon, slew Baltazar, and destroyed the Empire of the Chaldeans. This action, the Scriptures attribute wholly to Cyaxares, who is by them called Darius Medus; whereof Saint Hierome allegeth three reasons: 1. Ordo ætatis, 2. Regni, 3. Propinquitatis. 1. Darius was the elder; 2. the Empire of the Medes was more famous than that of the Persians; and 3. the Unkle ought to be preferred before the Nephew. We may adde to these three, the composition above-mentioned, made between these Princes, at the beginning of their reigns or the death of Astyages. The Greek Writers attribute the victory onely to Cyrus, and that on three reasons also. The Persians desirous to magnifie Cyrus their own Conntrey-man, gave him all the glory of the action; and from the Persians the Greeks had it. Secondly, Cyrus was only imployed in the siege, (Darius then being absent) and by his valour and conduct was the Empire of the Chaldeans ruined. And thirdly, Darius lived not fully two years after the great victory; so that before remote Nations had taken notice of the conquest, Cyrus was actually in the Throne. Josephus onely in the 11 Chapter of his Book, cutteth the thread even between these two Princes, and telleth us that Darius, with his ally Cyrus, destroyed the estate of the Babylonians. That this Darius Medus of Daniel, is the Cyaxares of the Greeks, is more than manifest. For Josephus in the place above-cited telleth us, ὃς ἦν Ἀστυάγους υἱὸς ἕτερον παρὰ τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ἐκαλεῖτο ὄνομα: That he was Astyages sonne, and is otherwise called by the Greeks: now ask the Greeks what was the name of the sonne of Astyages, and Xenophon will tell you, that it was Cyaxares. As for the name of Nabonidus, which Joseph Scaliger in spight of reason, and the whole world of Chronologers, would thrust upon this Darius Medus; we have already refelled it, though we are not ignorant that Helvicus and Calvisius, two most worthy Writers, have followed him, as in all his Canon, so also in this particular Error. But to proceed unto the course of the Persian history, after the death of this Cyaxares, Cyrus succeeded in his Throne, and the Empire of the Medes was incorporated in that of the Persians, as it hath ever since continued, if not subject to it.

The first Dynasty, or Race of the Persian Monarchs, of the house of Achamenes.

3406. 1. Cyrus, who having vanquished Astyages, united to the Empire of Persia the whole Kingdome of Media; the Countreys of Armenia, Phrygia, Lydia, some part of Arabia, and all the Provinces possessed by the Babylonian and Assyrian Monarchs. After which victories, he was slain by Tomyris a Queen of the Scythians, as some Writers say: others affirming that he escaped alive (but wounded) out of the battel, died in his own Kingdome, and was buryed at Pasagarda, a Town of Persis. This Cyrus is magnified by Xenophon, as Æneas is by Virgil, and Ulysses by Homer. 29.

3434. 2. Cambyses, the sonne of Cyrus, subdued Psamniticus King of Ægypt, which Countrey he united to his Empire. Having a mind to marry his own Sister, he was told by his Lawyers that they knew no law which admitted such mariages, but that there was a law, that the Persian Kings might do what they listed. This King was a very bloudy Tyrant.

The Inter-regnum of the Magi.

Cambyses at his expedition into Ægypt, constituted Patizithes, one of the Magi, Vice-Roy in his absence. He hearing of the Kings death, conferred the Kingdome on his own sonne Smerdis, making the people beleeve, that he was the brother of Cambyses: A matter of no difficulty, considering, how retirement from the publique view was a chief point of the Persian majesty. But the Nobles either knowing the true Smerdis to be slain, or suspecting the overmuch retiredness of the new King; began to search out the matter. Otanes had a daughter, which was one of the Kings Concubines; her he commanded when the King took next his pleasure with her; to feel whether he had any ears: for Cambyses (in I know not what humour) had cut off the ears of this Magus. This commandment she obeying, found out the falshood. The seven Princes informed of this imposture, join together, and slew this Pseudo-Smerdis, in the eighth moneth of his reign. This done, to avoid contention, they agreed among themselves, that the seven Princes meeting on the Palace green, should acknowledge him for King, whose horse before the rising of the Sunne, first neighed. The evening before the day appointed, the horse-keeper of Darius the sonne of Hystaspis, brought his masters horse into the green, together with a mare, which the horse then covered. In the morning the Princes met; and Darius his horse knowing the place, and longing for his mare, neighed lustily: on which the Princes presently acknowledge Darius for their King.

The

PERSIA.

The restoring of the Kingdome.

3443. 3. Darius Hystaspis, one of the seven Persian Princes, descended from Cyrus the fourth King of the Persians, thus elected King, took Babylon (which had revolted) by the ingenious fetches of Zopirus; and over-ran all Asia and some part of Greece. 36.

3479. 4. Xerxes, to revenge the overthrow at Marathron, attempted to subdue the Greeks: by whom he was overthrown in the navall battle of Salamis; and that famous and honourable exploit of the Græcians, at Thermopylæ. 21.

3500. 5. Artaxerxes Longimanus, was he who sent Esdras to re-build the Temple of the Lord; and received Themistocles, being banished from Athens. This also was he, as some would have it, whom the Scriptures call Ahasuerus, the Husband of Hester; though others choose rather to place that story in the time of Xerxes. 44.

3544. 6. Darius II. surnamed Nothus, in whose time the Ægyptians revolted and chose a King of their own. 19

3563. 7. Artaxerxes II. from the greatness of his memory surnamed Mnemon; under whom hapned that famous retreat of Xenophon with an handfull of Græcians thorow most of the Provinces of this Empire; by which they shewed the way to the Macedonians.

3599. 8. Ochus, a great Tyrant, but a valiant Prince, recovered Ægypt, subdued Syria, Cyprus, and some part of India; and was at last slain by Bagoas, one of the Eunuchs of his Chamber.

3625. 9. Arses, the sonne of Ochus, most villanously murdered by the same Eunuch, for fear he should revenge the death of his Father.

3629. 10. Darius III. Governour of Armenia, and Cousin German of Ochus, before his comming to the Crown named Codomannus; by the means of the said Bagoas made sole Monarch of Persia. But being vanquished by Alexander the Great in the three battels of Granicus, Cilicia, and Arbela, the Empire of the Persians was transferred to the Græcians, A.M. 3635.

The certain Revenues of this great Monarchy, seem to have been 14560 Talents; for so much the last Darius received yearly. But what the casuall and extraordinary Intrado was, is not easie to say, though manifest it is, and demonstrable by many strong and evident reasons, that they farre exceeded the certain. For first, the Persian Monarchs were Kings of 127 Provinces; Secondly, Darius offered to Alexander for the ransome of his mother and two daughters, 30000 Talents of Gold; Thirdly, Alexander found in the Treasury of Damascus, 2600 Talents; in that of Susa, 50000 Talents of Gold uncoyned; in that of Pasagardis, 60000 Talents; in that of Ecbatana, 26000 Talents; in that of Persepolis, 120000 Talents; in all 204600 Talents: besides the infinite riches of the Treasury of Babylon, yielded into his hands by Bagophanes, and other places of note, not particularly specified; an huge and most unspeakable summe. Fourthly, in that the gold and riches which Alexander, now a Conqueror, sent from Persia to Macedon and Greece, (besides that which every Captain and common Souldier had provided and laid up for his own maintenance) loaded ten thousand Mules, and five thousand Camels.

After this overthrow of the Persian Monarchy, this Nation lay obscure 535 years, viz. from the 3635 year of the world, to the 228 year of CHRIST: of which time they were 83 years under the Syrian Successors of Alexander; and 452 years under the Arsacidan Kings of Parthia Μετὰ γὰρ Δαρεῖον, &c. as Herodian. "For after Darius had lost his Kingdome to Alexander the Macedonian, and after "the Victor himself was dead also; the more potent Captains divided Asia among them. But discords "often arising, and the Macedonions puissance, by these often broiles, not small broken; Arsaces one of "the Parthian Nobility, perswaded the barbarous people of the East, and among them the Persians, to "cast off the Greek yoak, and stand for their liberty: he himself taking upon him the title of King, and "investing himself with a Diadem, A.M. 3718. The Persians by this revolt, got little or nothing, having indeed not changed the Tyranny, but the Tyrant onely: these Parthian Princes lording it with as high an insolencie, as ever the old Persian Monarchs, or the Kings of Syria, did before. From this Arsaces, all the rest of his Successors, and those too of the family of Artabanus, or the second race of Parthian Kings, took that name upon them: as the Roman Emperors that of Cæsar, or the old Ægyptian Kings the name of Pharaoh. Their usual stile was Rex Regum, or King of Kings: and by that stile with arogance and insolence inough, Vologeses thus inscribed his letters to Vespasian the Roman Emperor, Arsaces, Rex Regum, Flavio Vespasiano: giving himself the title of Kings of Kings; but the other nothing but his bare names onely. To which, Vespasian without taking notice of the Parthians pride, returned his answer to him with this superscription, Fl. Vespasianus Regi Regum Arsacidi: whether with more scorn, or modesty, it is hard to say. They also called themselves the Brethren of the Sun and Moon, which were the chiefest Gods they worshipped. Great Princes questionless they were, and kept the Romans harder to it, than all the Kings and States in the world besides: whose names and acts occurre in these following Catalogues of

2. The Arſacidan or Parthian race of the Kings of Perſia.

A. M.

3718. 1. Arſaces, the founder of the Parthian family.

3741. 2. Mithridates, or Arſaces the 2d. aſſaulted by Antiochus Magnus with an Army of 120000 men, but without ſucceſs.

3761. 3. Pampatius.

3773. 4. Phraartes, the ſonne of Pampatius.

3783. 5. Mithridates II. brother of Phraartes, ſubdued the Medes, and extended his Empire to Euphrates.

6. Phraartes II. ſlain in a warre againſt the Scythians.

3857. 7. Artabanus Uncle to Phraartes the 2d.

8. Pacorus, the ſonne of Artabanus.

9. Mithridates III. brother of Pacorus.

3903. 10. Herodes, brother of Mithridates, whom he overcame, and cauſed to be ſlain in his own ſight. He alſo vanquiſhed M. Craſſus, and ſlew 20000 Romans: and becauſe Craſſus was reported to be wondrous covetous, he cauſed molten gold to be powred down his throat. A miſerable death, but in reſpect of the divine Providence a moſt juſt revenge upon him for his ſacrilege, in robbing the Temple of Hieruſalem, as he marched towards the Parthians. The overthrow, and the diſgrace which thereby hapned to the Romans, was not long afterwards recompenſed by Ventidius, one of the Lieutenants of Mark Antony the Triumvir, who ſlew great numbers of them in a pitched field, and amongſt others Pacorus the Kings ſonne; the day of the battell being the ſame, in which Craſſus had before been vanquiſhed. After this victory, for which Ventidius had the honour of a Triumph (and the firſt Triumph that ever the Romans had beheld for a Parthian victory) he was in a fair way to have ruined this Kingdom, to have ſhrewdly ſhaken it at the leaſt, had not Antony in an envious humour called him from that ſervice. Finally, Herodes was ſlain by his ſonne Phraartes.

11. Phraartes III. a valiant Prince, but wicked and cruell. Againſt him marched Marcus Antonius with a populous Army, which wanted little of an abſolute overthrow, of 16 legions, ſcarce ſix returning home in ſafety. This King ſubmitted himſelf and Kingdome unto Auguſtus, reſtoring the Roman enſigns, and freeing the Captives taken at the defeat of Craſſus. The onely mark of the Parthians ſubjection, was their receiving Kings at the appointment of the Senate and Emperours of Rome: which alſo was of no long continuance.

12. Phraartes IV. ſonne of Phraartes the 3d. whom he ſlew and ſucceeded.

13. Orodes II. ſonne of Phraartes the fourth, ſlain in a conſpiracy.

14. Vonon, ſubſtituted in the place of Orodes, but outed by

15. Tiridates who was alſo diſpoſſeſſed of his life and Kingdome by Artabanus, a ſtranger to the blood of the Arſacida, the family of Arſaces giving place to that of this Artabanus; of which family we have the names of twelve Kings ſucceſſively reigning: the moſt conſiderable of them being Choſroes, the 8th. King of this line, from whom the Emperor Trajan gained Armenia and Meſopotamia, adding them to the Roman Empire, members whereof they did continue till regained to the Perſian Crown by Sapores the 9th King of the next Perſian Dynaſty. But for thoſe twelve Kings of this houſe they are theſe.

10 Vologeſes II.

12 Artabanus III. the laſt King of this new race of the Parthians, whoſe overthrow by the valour of Artaxerxes the firſt Perſian King of the 4th. Dynaſty, occaſioned the tranſlation of the Diadem to the naturall Perſians; after it had continued in two Parthian families for the ſpace of 470 years. Which Tranſlation as it was wrought by the unreſiſtable power of God, who onely hath the diſpoſing of Crowns and Scepters; ſo in the way of ſecond cauſes it may be principally referred to the barbarous maſſacre of this people by Antonius Caracalla the Roman Emperor. Who having negociated a mariage with the daughter of this Artabanus, and going (as he gave it out) to ſolemnize the nuptials; was met by the old King accompanied with the flower of his Nobility, and the choiceſt of his Souldiers, and other Subjects in Triumphall Ornaments. Which honourable train was no ſooner come neer his Army, but he commanded his Souldiers, (on a watch-word given) to put them all to the ſword, the King himſelf hardly eſcaping with his life. Caracalla being dead, and Macrinus ſucceeding in the Throne, the Parthians ſet upon him to revenge that ſlaughter. But underſtanding after a long fight of three daies continuance, that Macrinus had ſlain Caracalla, they made peace with him: but were ſo weakned and unable to hold their own, that it made the Persians once more think of recovering to their own Nation the Regall power. For Artaxerxes, a noble and generous Persian (his name perhaps suggesting some high thoughts unto him) did so much husband the opportunity, that he slew Artabanus the last King of the Parthians, and once more brought the royall seat into Persia. Yet was not this so easilly effected, the Parthians notwithstanding their former losses, maintaining a cruell fight for three dayes together: so difficult was it to vanquish that Nation, when their forces were broken; impossible when they were whole. Artaxerxes, proud of this success, sent a peremptory embassie to Alexander Severus, the then Roman Emperor, to have all the Provinces of Asia, which had formerly belonged to the Persian Monarchy, redelivered to him: a matter not so easily granted as demanded. For Severus to suppress so insolent an enemy, marched towards Persia with an Army Romanly appointed; which, to find his enemy more work, he divided into three parts: whereof the first was to march into Media; the second into Persia; the third himself led in the mid-way between both, to succour both as occasion required. But his device succeeded not happily: for his two Armies being by the Persians broken, he with much danger and hast retired back with the third. This was a good beginning for the Persian Empire, the establishment followed not long after: Valerianus the Emperor being vanquished and taken prisoner by Sapores the second King of this race. So that now the name of the Persian grew so terrible to the Romans, that Constantine the Great, transplanted many of the Colonies and Garrisons of the North-west part of the Empire, into the East; to keep the Persian from growing to farre upon the Roman Provinces; and removed also the seat of the Empire nigher unto them, from Rome to Constantinople. And thus having shown the beginning and establishment, the foundation and building of the new Kingdome of the Persians: take along with you the Catalogue of their Kings, untill they once more lost the soveraignty of their own Nation, and became slaves again.

race of Artaxerxes, or the fourth Dynasty: of whom besides the two first Kings, whose Acts are spoken of before, the most remarkable were, 1. Vararanes the second, in whose time Carus the Emperour passing over Euphrates, and laying sieige to Ctesiphon, was there slain by a thunderbolt. 2. Narses, the son of Vararanes, who first discomfited Galerius, one of the Cæsars, in the Empire of Diocletian, and totally ruined his Army: for which Galerius being forced to lacquey it by the Emperors Chariot in his purple Robes, was so highly shamed, that to recover his credit he set upon Narses once again, routed him, and took Prisoners his wives and children. 3. Sapores the second, the sonne of Misdates, who began his reign before his birth. For his Father dying without issue, left his wife with Child: which Child the Magi having signified by their art to be a male, the Persian Princes caused the Crown and Royall Ornaments to be set upon his Mothers belly, acknowledging him thereby for their future King. A great and puissant Prince he proved; holding continuall warr with Constantine and his Successours till the death of Valens, and gaining from them the best part of Mesopotamia: but withall a great Persecuter of the Christians, of whom no fewer than 20000 are said to have suffered in his time. 4. Isdigertes, a Prince so esteemed of by Arcadius the Eastern Emperor, that he made him Protector of his Empire during the minority of his sonne Theodosius: which trust he Royally performed, and was a great friend unto the Christians in his own dominions. 5. Cabades, first outed of his Kingdome by Zamaspes, and restored again, was the first Persian King who permitted the free exercise of the Christian Religion. He slew Zeliobes a King of the Hunnes comming to his aid against the Romans, because he had before promised to assist the Emperour; and rooted the Manichean Sect out of his estates. 6. Cosroes the sonne of Cabades, surnamed the Great, a Constant enemie of the Romans, from whom he conquered a great part of Syria, and took and sacked the City of Antioch. But finding the war brought home to his own doors by Mauritius, who was afterwards Emperour, and his own Countries in a flame, he took such thought of it that he died of a feaver. 7. Cosroes the second, as great an enemie to the Emperor Heraclius, from whom he took all that was left of Mesopotamia, Syria, and the Holy Land, with the City of Hierusalem it self: most of it recovered by Heraclius; in despight of whom he caused all the Christians in his Kingdome to turn Nestorians. 8. Hormisda the second, the last of this Dynasty, who being first weakned by Civill and Domestick dissensions, was vanquished by Haumar and his Saracens, Anno 634. burying so the glory of this renowned Nation, in the grave of oblivion and infamy.

The

The Saracen icall Caliphs, having added this Kingdome to their huge Empire, appointed here their Deputies, whom they honoured with the name of Sultans: not one Supreme for the whole Kingdome, but severall Governours or Sultans for each several Province; called by new names, and moulded into many Toparchies, as Chorazan, Manzenabar, Usbeck, and I wot not what; the Sultans acting of themselves, and warring upon one another, as their humours led them, without relation to the Caliph, or Lord in chief. During which bustles it so hapned that Mahomet, the Sultan of Persia (so called because he was the chief in command and power) picking a quarrell with his neighbour the Sultan of Babylon, (Pisiris he is called in some Christian writers, by whom taken or mistaken for the Caliph himself) made warre upon him. But finding him countenanced and supported by the power of the Caliph, invited the Turks, then possessed of some part of Armenia Major, to come in to his aid: by whose means he overthrew the Caliphs forces, and might have got the Soveraignty of Persia unto himself, if he had used his victory and his friends with any tolerable discretion. But denying to pay these Turks their wages, and send them home, he occasioned them to make head against him under the conduct of Tangrolipix their principall leader; to whom being once in armes, severall discontented persons of the naturall Persians did unite themselves. Encouraged with which additions, and being furnished with Horse and Armour, and other necessaries, by the spoil of the Countrey; they give battell to the Sultan himself: whom having vanquished and slain, Tangrolipix by the joint consent of both Armies is made King of Persia; the Founder of

The fift Dynasty, or the Turkish Race of the Kings of Persia.

1030. 1. Tangrolipix, of whom sufficiently before.
2. Axan, the sonne of Tangrolipix; by whom Cutlu Muses, his neer Kinsman, was sent with great forces against the Christians, whom he dispossessed of a great part of Asia Minor.
3. Balak, Sultan of Persia, in the begining of the warres in the holy land, undertaken by the Western Christians; against whom he is reported to have sent his forces. Of whose Successors I find nothing till the time of 1198. 4. Cassanes, the last King or Sultan of the Turks; vanquished in the year 1202 by the Cham of Tartary. Which makes me very apt to think, that after the death of Axan, or his next Successor, the Turks lost the Soveraignty of Persia, though they kept the possession of some parts of it; the Soveraingty thereof being recovered by the Caliphs of Babylon: and that it was so held by both, till the Tartars dispossessed the one, and destroyed the whole progeny of the other, as before was noted. And this I find to be the opinion of Beniamin Tuledensis, a learned Jew, which had travelled most part of the East; to whose judgement herein I subscribe as most sound and rationall.

The Sixt Dynasty, or the Tartarian race of the Kings of Persia.

1260. 1. Haalon, or Ulah-Kuhkan, by Occata the great Cham, made King of Persia, exterminated the whole race of the Caliph of Bagdet.
1266. 2. Habkakaihon, the sonne of Haalon.
1282. 3. Nicador Oglan, by Haiton called Tangador, who made himself a Mahometan, and was named Hamed, the brother of Habkakaihon.
1284. 4. Argon-Khon, the eldest sonne of Habkakaihon.
1292. 5. Geniotukhon, brother of Argon-Khon.
1295. 6. Badukhan, the Unkle of the last, of which three there is little memorable.
1296. 7. Gazun, the sonne of Argon-Khon, who made Casbin his Imperial seat.
1305. 8. Alyaptu, who transferred the Court to Tauris, and is said to have been the founder of Sultania, a chief City of Media; the brother of Gazun.
1317. 9. Abusaid, sonne of Alyaptu, that reigned in Persia. After whose death, Anno 1337. (being the 736. of the Mahometan Hegira) the more potent Princes of the Tartars seized on the severall parts and Provinces of it, every one calling himself King of that part or Province which he was possessed of. And amongst them Gempsas the Sultan or Soldan of Parthia (though a Persian born) put in for a share, and made himself master of his own Province, and some parts adjoining: made on that ground by some of our Christian writers (who very imperfectly have transmitted to us the affairs of this Countrey) the sole King of Persia. In this confusion it continued till the comming of Tamerlane, who like a furious Whirlwind driving all before him, composed the differences, by getting all unto himself. But as Philosophy doth teach us, that no violent motion is of long continuance, so the course of business, and the successes of actions may instruct us also, that a Kingdome forced to bow under the command of a prosperous Army, is not so well assured to the Victor, but that the fury of the war once past, it may return again to its former liberty, or open a more easie passage to some new Invader. And so it fared with the conquests and successes of Tamerlane, whose issue quickly lost this Kingdome, and almost all the rest of his other purchases: leaving but little memory of their names and actions. For partly by his own imprudence in cantoning his Estates amongst his Children, and partly by the weakness of his Succeſſours in the Realm of Perſia: this Kingdome did relapſe immediately to the ſame confuſions in which he found it; having almoſt as many Soveraign Kings, as Provinces. Moſt of them Homagers perhaps to the Kings of the houſe of Tamerlane, and thoſe who afterwards ſucceeded in the Title of Kings of Perſia of the Turcoman or Armenian Dynaſty: not yet reduced unto this Crown, notwithſtanding the great and proſperous ſucceſſes of the Sophian Family. But for the Kings of the race of Tamerlane, who only in their times had the honour to be called Kings of Perſia (and well enough content with that): ſuch as they were we find them in this order following.

1405. 10. Mirza Charok, the fourth ſonne of Tamerlane, ſucceeded by his appointment in the Realm of Perſia.
1447. 11. Oleghbeg, ſonne of Mirza Charok, vanquiſhed and ſlain by his own ſonne.
1450. 12. Abdalatife, ſlain not long after by his own Souldiers.
1451. 13. Abdula, the ſonne of Oleghbeg, and brother of Abdalatife, vanquiſhed by 1453. 14. Abuſaid II. deſcended from Moroncha, the third ſonne of Tamerlane, ſucceeded on the death of Abdula.
1461. 15. Zeuzes, whom ſome call Jooncha, others Malaonchres, diſcomfited and ſlain in battel by Uſſan-Caſſanes, Anno 1472. which was about 70 years from the death of Tamerlane.

The ſeventh Dynaſty of the Turcoman, or the Armenian race of the Kings of Perſia.

1472. 1. Uſſan-Caſſanes, by ſome called Aſymbeius, by others more truely Ozem-Azembec, was the ſonne of Tracheton, one of thoſe poor Armenian or Turcoman Princes diſpoſſeſſed by Bajazet the firſt, and reſtored by Tamerlane. Encroaching on his neighbours, he was warned to deſiſt by Zeuzes the Perſian King, with whom encountring in a pitched field he overcame him, and got that Kingdome by the victory.
1478. 2. Jacub, the ſecond ſonne of Uſſan-Caſſanes, having put by his elder Brother, attained the Throne; and repulſed the Mamalucks out of Meſopotamia and Aſſyria, which they had invaded: He was after poiſoned by his wife.
1490. 3. Julaver, a Kinſ-man of Jacubs, ſucceeded him in the eſtate, which he held only three years, and then left it to 1493. 4. Baiſinger, a Prince of the ſame blood, who living in adultery with the wife of Jacub, had conſpired his death. 2.

Mahomet the Impoſtor and firſt Emperour of the Saracens, by his laſt Will and Teſtament, bequeathed the ſucceſſion into that Eſtate, to Hali his neer Kinſ-man, and the Husband of Fatime, his Eldeſt Daughter. But Abubezar, Haumar, and Oſmen, three powerfull men, and the Chief Commanders of the Army in the time of Mahomet, ſucceſſively followed one another in the Supreme Dignity. After their death, Hali enjoyed that honour for a little while, ſupplanted firſt, and afterwards vanquiſhed and ſlain by Muhavias a great man of warre, who ſucceeded in it; and to ſecure himſelf therein, ſlew Haſem or Oſſan, the ſonne of Hali, and eleven of the ſonnes of that Oſſan; the twelf called Muſa Ceredine eſcaping with life. From him deſcended lineally one Guine the Lord of Ardoville in Media; who conſidering that their had been no Caliph in long time before, began to plot the eſtabliſhing of that high honour in his own family, as the right Heirs to it. A man of ſo great reputation amongſt the people, that Tamerlane having made a conqueſt of Perſia, thought it no diſhonour to his greatneſs, to beſtow a friendly viſit on him. Dying, he left his hopes and projects to his ſonne called Aider, who afterwards for the purity of Religion pretended by him, had the adjunct of Tzophy; the word ſo ſignifying in that language: who alſo proved of ſuch eſteem and power with all ſorts of men, that Uſſan-Caſſanes, the firſt King of the Armenian or Turcoman race thought fit to make him Husband unto one of his Daughters. But on the contrary, Jacub the ſonne of Uſſan, and ſome of his Succeſſours, ſeeing him grow unto ſuch power and eſtimation with the common people; and fearing what he could do, and not what he would do, endeavoured to depreſs him by all means that might be. Which he not able to remedy, as the Caſe then ſtood, practiſed to adde unto his party under the popular pretence of reforming things that were amiſs in their Religion: and grew ſo powerfull in the end, that he gave battel unto Ruſtan and Alamat, the two laſt Kings of the former race. But Alamat having got the victory, cauſed him to be ſlain; and delivered Hyſmael and Solyman his two ſonnes, into the hands of Amazar, a chief Commander of his own, by him to be kept in perpetual priſon. But Amazar a man of a more ingenuous diſpoſition, afforded them not only liberty, but alſo good education: inſomuch that Hyſmael Sophi, a towardly young Gentleman, undertook revenge for the death of his Father, which work he ful-fulfilled, having overcome and ſlain King Alamat, and his ſonne Elvan. After this victory, he being crowned King, or Shaugh of Perſia, altered the form of Religion: making Hali, and himſelf the true Succeſſors of Mahomet; but condemning Abubezer, Haumar, and Oſmen, with the Turks, as rebells and Schiſmaticks.

Hence proceeded the divers warres, which to the Perſians loſs, have hapned between them and the Turks: the Perſians burning whatſoever book or Monument they find concerning thoſe three; and the Turks holding it more meritorious to kill one Perſian than ſeventy Chriſtians. Surius in his Commentaries, writing purpoſely of the Acts of Hyſmael, ſaith, that the Jews on ſome fond conceit were perſwaded that he was the Meſſiah they had ſo long looked for: But it proved quite contrary, there never being Prince that more vexed and grieved them.

The eighth Dynaſty, or Sophian race of the Kings of Perſia.

1505. 1. Hyſmael Sophi, the founder of this Family, overthrown by Selimus the firſt, in the Calderan fields. 20.

1525. 2. Tamas, the Sonne of Hyſmael, vanquiſhed by Solyman the Magnificent, who took from him the Countries of Chaldæa, Aſſyria, and Meſopotamia, with ſome part of Media. 53.

1578. 3. Aider, the ſecond ſonne of Tamas, obtained the Kingdome, impriſoning his elder brother; but his cruelty being much feared, he was made away by the practice of Periancona, his own Siſter, having reigned only 15 daies.

4. Hyſmael II. eldeſt ſonne of Tamas, reſtored unto his Fathers Throne; but murdered with the privity of his Siſter alſo, who found him of too rough a nature for her to govern; having reigned neer two years.

1579. 5. Mahomet Codabanda, advanced unto the throne by his Siſters faction, (as being of a milder and more tractable nature) at his firſt entrance cauſed her to be beheaded for the former murders. During his time, not fully ſetled in the State, Amurath the 2d. by his Lieutenants won from him almoſt all Armenia, Media, and great part of Georgia. 7.

1585. 6. Abas, the ſecond ſonne of Mahomet, having treacherouſly practiſed the death of Mirze, his elder brother, ſucceeded his Father, recovered almoſt all which the Turks had gained, and added the Kingdomes of Ormus, Heri, Candahor, and Hyrcania, to the Crown of Perſia.

7. Soffie, the Nephew of Abas by his ſonne Mirza, (whoſe eyes he cauſed to be put out on a falſe ſuſpition) at the age of fifteen years ſucceeded: committed by his Grand-father during his minority to the protection of Emangoly, Chawn, or Duke of Shyras. A Prince, who ſince he came to age, hath had a good hand againſt the Turks, attempting the recovery of Bagdel and other places, which had been taken from them in the time of Abas.

The Government of theſe Perſian Kings, though it be deſpoticall and ſevere, hath a great deal leſs of the Tyrant in it than any other of the Mahometan Kings or Princes: theſe cheriſhing their Brethren, maintaining Nobility amongſt them, and incouraging induſtry; which makes them to be better ſerved than the Turk or Tartar; to both whom they are farre inferiour both in power and treaſure. Their Officers of of State, and men of principall inployment, for the moſt part Eunuchs (as generally in all the Empires of the Eaſt): ſuch Perſons being thought moſt truſty; becauſe abſtracted from the obligations of wife and children, they ſtudy more the Princes ſervice than their own advantages. Their forces conſiſt moſt of Horſe, to which they are inclined more generally than to ſerve on foot: and yet the greateſt hoſts of horſe which they have brought at any time into the field, came not to above 30000; but thoſe well furniſhed and appointed; maintained on Lordſhips and Eſtates after the manner of the Turkiſh Timariots. The Foot-Souldiers of his own Countries, but poor and raw, and very ſeldome ſtand their ground. That defect being for the moſt part ſupplied by Mercinaries. The inconvenience of which being found by Sultan Abas, he ſerved himſelf of children bought of Chriſtian Parents, neer the Euxine Sea (from whence the Egyptian Sultans had their Mamalucks) whom they call by the name of Cozel-Baſſas, or Red-caps, ſo named from the colour of their Turbans, trained up by them in their Religion, and warlike Diſcipline; as the Turks their Janizaries; yet farre inferiour to the Turk, againſt whom if they have prevailed ſince the time of Abas, they may aſcribe the greateſt part of their good fortune to thoſe diviſions and Rebellions which in theſe late times have been frequent in the Turkiſh Empire. And as for their Sea-forces they are inconſiderable: For though they have a large Sea-coaſt both on the Perſian Bay, the Caſpian Sea, and the Southern Ocean, yet are they very poor in ſhipping; ſuffering the Moſcovite to ingroſs the trade of the Caſpian Sea; the Portugals to manage that of the Southern Ocean; as formerly that alſo of the Perſian Bay, till the taking of Ormuz.

The Revennes of this Kingdome in the time of Hyſmael the firſt Sophy, were exceeding great: inſomuch that Tamas his Succeſſor to ingratiate himſelf with all ſorts of people, releaſed them of all kinds of Cuſtomes impoſed on Merchandiſe either imported or exported. And this they ſay amounted to the ſumme of 90000 Tomans yearly: which, reckoning every Toman at 20 Crowns, made up a million and 800000 Crowns of annuall income. Which notwithstanding, his Revenue was computed at four or five millions of Crowns yearly; raised out of Domain lands, the tenth of fruits, the profit of mines, and the fine payed by every subject when he sets up shop. But Tamas finding this not to be sufficient to maintain his Royalty, doubled the value of his money, and thereby for the present his Revenues also. Since that they have been much empaired by the Conquests made upon them by the Turks, who had got from them so much land as maintained 40000 Timariots, and yielded to the grand Signeur one million of yearly income: whether improved again or not to their former height, I am not able to determine.

And so much for Persia.

OF TARTARIA.

TARTARIA is bounded on the East, with China, the Orientall Ocean, and the ſtreights of Anian, by which parted from America; on the West, with Ruſſia, and Podolia, a Province of the Realm of Poland; on the North, with the main Scythick or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of China, from which ſeparated by a mighty wall; the the River Oxus, parting it from Bactria, and Margiana, two Perſian Provinces; the Caſpian Sea, which ſeparates it from Media and Hyrcania; the Caucaſian Mountains interpoſing betwixt it and Turcomania; and the Euxine, which divideth it from Anatolia and Thrace. So called from the Tartars, a puiſant and mighty people now poſſeſſed hereof; the reaſon of whoſe name we ſhall ſhew hereafter.

It containeth all thoſe great and ſpacious Provinces which the antients called Seres, Scythia extra Imaum, Scythia intra Imaum, Sacæ, Sogdiana, the greateſt part of Sarmatia Aſiatica, and part of Sarmatia Europæa: extending it ſelf the whole length of Aſia from the River Tanais to the Eaſtern Ocean, taking in Taurica Cherſoneſus, and ſome other parts of Europe alſo. So that if we meaſure it by miles, it is ſaid to contain 5400 from East to West, and 3600 from North to South: a greater quantity of ground than the Turkiſh Empire, but of leſs fertility and accompt.

In meaſuring by the way of degrees, it reacheth from the 50. degree of Longitude, to the 195. which is 145. degrees from West to East: and from the 40th. degree of Northern Latitude, unto the 80th. which is within ten degrees of the Pole it ſelf. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the ſixt Clime, where the longeſt day in ſummer is 15 hours; till they ceaſe meaſuring by Climates, the longeſt day in the moſt Northern parts hereof being full ſix moneths; and in the winter-half of the year, the night as long.

The Countrey lying under ſuch different Meridians, and ſuch diſtant Climes, muſt needs be ſuch as no generall Character can be given of it, and therefore we ſhall deferre that, with the names of the Rivers, and chief Mountains, to the deſcription of the ſeveral and particular Provinces. But for the people, being much of the ſame nature in every part, we may take the meaſure of them here. Aſſumed to be of ſquare ſtature, broad faces, hollow eyes, thin beards, thick lips, flat noſes, ugly Countenances; ſwart of complexion, not ſo much by the heat of the Sunne, (which keeps farre enough off) as their naturall ſluttiſhneſs. Barbarous every where in behaviour, eſpecially in thoſe parts which they call Aſiatica, and Antiqua: but withall very ſtrong of body, ſwift of footmanſhip, vigilant in time of ſervice, and patient of all extremities both of cold and hunger. The women ſuitable to the men, ſcorning or wanting ornaments to ſet themſelves out, or when they do, they ſeldome go beyond copper, feathers, or ſuch precious gew-gawes.

In behaviour they are rude and barbarous, as before was ſaid; eating their Enemies when they take them, as in way of revenge, firſt letting out their blood which they receive into Cups, and uſe it as wine unto their feaſt. Though ſwift of foot, yet generally they love to ride though it be but on Oxen; about whoſe necks, as about their horſes, when they travell, they uſe little bells, with which muſick they are much delighted. Their ſpeech, even in their common talk, is a kind of whining; and their ſinging little better than the howling of wolves. They eat commonly with unwaſhed hands, the durt and greaſe about their fingers ſerving as a ſawce for their meat, which they devour greedily, and with little chewing; and for their ordinary drink uſe mares milk. Homely of habit, made of the courſeſt ſtuff, and reaching no lower than the knee: and if they go to the charge of furrs, contrary to the cuſtome of other people, they wear the hairy ſide outwards, and the skinne next their own bodies; onely to ſhew the richneſs of their Apparell. And yet ſo proud in this beggery, that they account the Chriſtians but as dogs, contemn all the reſt of the world, and think their Cham the onely conſiderable Prince, by whoſe name they ſwear, as by their Gods.

In matter of Religion it is hard to ſay whether Mahometaniſm or Paganiſm be of moſt extent: ſome parts hereof being wholly Pagan, ſome wholly Mahometan, and ſome mixt of both. But of the two the Pagan is the better Gentleman, as being of the elder houſe, and of more Antiquity: the Sect of Mahomet not being entertained amongſt them till the year 1246.

And yet theſe have not ſo prevailed, as to extinguiſh the remainders of Chriſtianity, of which there are amongſt them many ſeverall Churches. The Chriſtian faith firſt planted amongſt the Scythians by the preaching of Saint Andrew, and Saint Philip, two of the Apoſtles. Overgrown in theſe later Ages by the Sect of Neſtorians, either by the diligence of their Preachers, or for want of others to inſtruct them in more Orthodox Tenets. Before the prevailing of the Tartars, beſides the Circaſſian Chriſtians of whom more anon, there are in the moſt remote parts of Tartary, whole Kingdomes of that Religion; as namely that of Texduc, then the chief of all; besides some numbers of them in Tangath, Cauchinteles, Cassar, Samarchan, Karthim, Suchair, Ergimul, and Caraiam, where in the time of Paulus Venetus, who surveyed these parts about the year they lived intermingled with the Pagans. Not so diminished since the conquest of those Countries by the Tartars, but that they are of a considerable number, especially in Cathay it self: where they are said to have a Metropolitan in the City of Cambalu (the principall City of that Empire) and he so honoured by the Great Cham, that they receive their Crowns successively from no hands but his.

As for the Tartars, they are by the Chronologer Genebrard, said to be the off-spring of the Ten Tribes, whom Salmanassar led away captive, and that especially for three reasons. The first is, that the word Tatari, by which name (saith he) they ought rather to be called, than by that of Tartari, signifieth in the Syriack and Hebrew tongues, a Remnant. But unto this it is answered, that the name of this people is derived from the River Tartar, as some; or from the Region called Tartar, where they first dwelt, as most think: and again, that though the Hebrew word שארית signifie a remnant, yet can it not properly be applyed to the Tartars; who so infinitely exceed the Jews, that they cannot be thought to be a remainder of them. Secondly, he allegeth for proof thereof, that this people use circumcision, the character of the Jewish Nation. And hereunto it is replyed, that circumcision was common to many people, besides the Jews, as to the Ægyptians, Æthiopians, &c. and that rather as a national custome, than a religious ordinance; and again, that the Tartars cannot be proved to have received circumcision, before they received Mahometanism. Thirdly, there is brought to confirm this opinion a place of Esdras, cap 13. lib. 2. where it is said, that the Ten Tribes (that they might the better keep Gods Statutes) passed over the River Euphrates, and after a journey of an year and a half, came into a Countrey called Arsareth. To refell which, those of the contrary opinion find no better course, than by shewing the impossibilities of it. For the Tartars (when their name was first known) were meer Idolaters, had no remembrance of the Law, observed not the Sabbath, nor any other point of Jewish religion: and so the Ten Tribes retired not hither to keep Gods Statutes. Secondly, Euphrates lyeth quite West from Assyria, and those places to which Salmanassar transplanted the Israelites; and so it could not be passed over in a journey towards the North. And Thirdly, it is very improbable, that the ten Tribes should either be so simple, as to leave Assyria, where they were peaceably setled; or so valiant, as to force a passage thorough those Countries of Scythia; which neither Persians, Greeks, or Romans were able to withstand in the best of their fortunes.

To let pass therefore all imaginations of a forein Pedegree, the truth is, that they were no other than a Ruder and more Northern brood of Scythians, who pressed by want, or otherwise oppressed by the King of Tenduch unto whom they were subject, armed themselves against him, obtained a memorable victory, and setled Cingis their chief Captain in the Royall Throne. Anno 1162. After which growing of more power, and inlarging their dominions further, they united in the name of Tartars all the Scythian Nations: as Mahomet did those of the three Arabias in the name of Saracens; or as in former times, the many severall Tribes of the German Nations, were united in the names of Franks or Alemans. Not known in Europe by this name till their many great and signall victories had made them formidable, which was about the year 1212. within very little of which time they had made themselves Masters of a larger Empire, than that of Macedon or Rome, in their greatest glories. But being of a hasty growth it decaied as suddenly; the greatest part of their European purchases being conquered from them by the Dukes of Moscovy, and the Kings of Poland; as their acquests in Asia, and Africk, by the Turks and Persians. Yet still they are possessed of so large a territory, that were they not distracted into severall States; or did those severall states depend upon one Supreme; that one Supreme might very easily give law unto all his Neighbours; and make the Turks and Persians tributaries, as in former times. But laying aside these speculations of what they might do if united under one command: let us now look upon them as they are divided into these five parts, that is to say, 1. Tartaria Precopensis, 2. Asiatica, 3 Antiqua, 4. Zagathay, and 5. Cathay.

1. TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS.

TARTARIA PRECOPENSIS is bounded on the East, with the River Tanais, now Don; on the West, with the River Borysthenes, now called Nerper, by which last parted from Podolia, a Province of Poland; on the North, with part of Russia; and on the South, with some part of the Euxine Sea: and by this accompt lying totally within Europe.

It had the name of Precopensis, from Precopia a chief Town thereof. By some called Tartaria Minor, to distinguish it from the greater body of that people: the Inhabitants hereof most commonly passing by the name of Crim-Tartars, from the Town of Crim, in which their Cham or Emperor doth reside most usually. The Countrey by them now possessed, part antiently of Sarmatia Europea, was inhabited by a warlike nation called the Tauri; from whom those parts hereof which lie betwixt the Empire of Russia, and the two Rivers Tanais and Borysthenes, were called Tauro Scythia; that which shooteth out into the Sea, encompassed with the Euxine on the one side, and Palus Mœotis on the other, being called Taurica Chersonesus. In the description whereof at this place and time, as formerly I made bold with some part of Asia to lay together the estate of the Russian Empire: so now to satisfie for that trespass, I shall make bold with part of Europe, to lay together the discourse and affairs of Tartary,

The whole Countrey plentiful of fruits, and the soyl indifferently disposed to tillage and grazing, though more accustomed unto the last: the people more delighting in their heards of cattel, than in the fulness of their their Garners. Camels, Horſe, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats they have plenty of; great ſtore of delicate fowl, and abundance of fiſh, bred in the large Fennes of Mœotis: and in their forreſts plenty of all ſorts of Veniſon. Which (character as it belongeth generally to all the Countrey, ſo moſt eſpecially to the Cherſoneſe or Demy-Iland. United to the main land with ſo narrow an Iſthmus, that the Tartars once went about to dig it thorow: from whence ſome ſay they had the name of Precopenſes, Precoph in the Sclavonian tongue ſignifying a deep trench, or a digging thorow. In length not above 24 German, or 96. Italian miles; in breadth but 60 of the one, or 15 of the other. Bleſt with a very temperate Air, and a gentle winter: which beginning with the laſt of December ends the firſt of March. Never extreme, and when the froſts are at the ſharpeſt, but of ſhort continuance. Divided in the middeſt with a chain of hills extended from the Eaſt to Weſt, the boundary of the Dominions of the Turk and Tartar.

The people of the ſame complexion and compoſition, as the reſt of the Tartars; and not much different in manners. Their diet, Roots, Cheeſe, Garlick, and of the poorer ſort, for the moſt part horſeflesh (none but the better ſort preſuming upon Beef or Veniſon, though of both abundance) which they eat without bread or any thing elſe: and therefore when they go to the wars every Souldier takes two horſes with him, the one to ſerve upon, and the other to kill. And yet for all this havock which they make of horſeflesh, there are few years in which they ſell not 40 or 50 thouſand in the fairs of Moſco. Towns they build none, ſcarce willing to maintain thoſe which were built to their hands. Nor have they (except men of trades and manufacthures) any ſtanding houſes, removing up and down with their Droves of Cattel, moving their houſes with them, (which they build on wheels) from one place to another. Of money they make no eſteem, preferring braſs and ſteel before other metalls, becauſe more uſefull to them for Swords and Knives. Good Souldiers for the moſt part, eſpecially at the Bow and Arrows; to which ſo accuſtomed from their child-hood that they can ſhoot as readily backward as forward. Trained alſo of late times to the Harquebuſe, well skilled in handling the Turkiſh Scymitars, and their horſemens Staves. Not to be vanquiſhed but by death, as men that are reſolved rather to die than be taken Priſoners: and if victorious, more intent upon taking Captives (eſpecially young Boys and Girles, whom they ſell to the Turks) than upon any other Booty or ſpoils of war.

The Religion moſt embraced and countenanced is that of Mahomet, mingled with ſome of their old Principles of Chriſtianity: for they confeſs that CHRIST ſhall be the Judge both of quick and dead in the day of judgement, and puniſh thoſe that ſpeak irreverently of him. In that regard more favourable to the Chriſtians than other Mahometans, which makes great ſtore of Grecian and Armenian Chriſtians to dwell amongſt them. The language which they ſpeak is their own Tartarian, but intermixt with much of the Arabick, and Turkiſh Tongues, and when they write, they uſe either Chaldean or Arabian Characters.

Rivers of moſt note in it, are 1. Boryſthenes, & 2. Tanais, which though they have their ſpring-heads in the Empire of Ruſſia (as was there declared) have their falls in this: the firſt in the Euxine Sea, in the 57th. the other into Palus Mœotis in the 67th. Degree of Longitude; by which we may conjecture ſomewhat of the length of the Countrey. 3. Hipanes, 4. Carcimitis, falling into the Euxine. 5. Agaris, and 6. Byces, which loſe themſelves in the Fennes of Mœotis; As do alſo 7. Paſiaſcus, 8. Gerus, 9. Lycus, from the mainland, and 10. Iſtrianus from the Taurican Cherſoneſe. By the confluence of which waters, and many others falling from the Aſian ſide, the lake or Fennes of Mœotis are of great extent, in compaſs at leaſt a thouſand miles, well ſtored with fiſh, and ſtill retaining ſomewhat of the ſweetneſs of thoſe many Rivers which are emptyed into it. So called from the Mœotæ who formerly inhabited on the banks hereof, and giving name to an excellent kind of fiſh which were called Mœotides by the Antients. At this day generally called Mar delle Zabahe, by the Italians commonly Mar della Tana, the ſea of Tanais, and ſometimes alſo Mer Bianco, or the White Sea, to difference it from the Euxine, which they call the Black, for the reaſons formerly delivered. Paſſing directly towards the South, it is ſtreightned by a narrow Channel not above four miles in breadth though about 24 in length, called antiently by the name of Boſphorus Cimmerius. Boſphorus, becauſe Oxen did uſe to ſwim over it; Cimmerius from the Cimmerii who poſſeſſed the adjoining Countrey on the Aſian ſide: but known at this day by the name of Stretto di Caffa; from the City Capha neer unto it; and by the Inhabitants Voſpero, more neer the originall. Out of this Streight that confluence of waters which do meet in the Mœotick Fennes do make their way into the Euxine. According to that of Lucan.

Where the Mœotick Pools at laſt
Thorow a narrow Streight makes haſt.

Chief Cities of it at the preſent, 1. Capha, or Caffa, in the Cherſoneſe not far from the Streight called hence Stretto di Caffa; a flouriſhing Empory, and furniſhed with a large and capacious Haven. Heretofore poſſeſſed by the Genoeſe, who by the benefit of this Port, and the plantation which they had in Perah on the North ſide of Conſtantinople, engroſſed into their own hands the whole trade of the Euxine. Taken by Mahomet the Great, Anno 1475. it became ſubject to the Turks, and drew into that thraldome all the Southern parts of the Cherſoneſe which depended on it: deprived thereby of the greateſt part of its former luſtre, the Chriſtian Churches being deſtroyed, the Towers and publique buildings razed, the houſes of the Genoa Merchants which were fair and beautifull deſtroyed and ruined; yet ſtill the principall of this biland, or Demy-Iland; and antiently better known by the name of Theodoſia, and by that name remembred in Ammianus. 2. Precoph, in Latine called Precopia; a Town and Caſtle ſituate in or neer the place where ſtood the Eupateria of the Antients: called alſo Pompeiopolis, Heraclea, and Achillis Curſus. 3. Corſunum, the Cherſoneſus of Ptolomy, antiently a Greek Colony; & then accompted for the chief of the

the whole Peninsula: rich, populous, and well-traded, by reason of the Haven which was safe and large; and of great beauty and magnificence, as the ruins testifie. By the Turks at this day called Sari-Germanum, or the yellow Tower, the soyl about it being of a Saffron colour. 4. Cremam, or Crim, the antient Seat of the Chams or Princes of these Tartars; and at that time the fairest and greatest of this Island. Situate in the middest thereof, and fortified with a strong Castle, for the height of the walls, and depth of the ditch esteemed impregnable; supposed to be the Taphra of Pliny, or the Taphros of Ptolomy. Mentioned by Florus, as then lately taken by some Roman Emperor, and so most likely to be Trajan, the first that ever extended the Roman Empire beyond Danubius and the Euxine. Situate in the very Isthmus, and so commanding both the Euxine and the Lakes of Mœotis; as Corinth betwixt the Ægean and Ionian Seas. 5. Panticapæum, situate on the very Bosphorus, and now called Vospero by the natives: the antientest City of this Peninsula, and said by Ammianus to be the mother of all the Greek Colonies which were planted in it. 6. Tanais, the Tanais of Ptolomy and other antients, because situate on the mouth of that River, or rather betwixt the two mouths of it, distant from one another a degree of Longitude. A town of great trade, and well frequented by the Merchants of all those Countries which border on the Euxine Sea: but subject to the Turks who hath there a Garrison, and by them called Azac. 7. Ingermenum, situate on a large and lofty Mountain, and fortified with a Tower or Castle of stone, under which there is a Church, with great charge and Art cut out of the Rock: formerly of great wealth and fame, now decaied and ruinous. 8. Jamboli, by some called Balachium. 9. Mancopia, by the Turks called Mingutum, 10. Circum; all boasting of their severall Castles. 11. Oczakow, or Oczacovia, situate neer the influx of the great River Borysthenes into the Bay of Cancimitis; and so most like to be built in the place of that which Ptolomy calleth Olbiah, Pliny, Olbiopolis. Honoured of late times (since the taking of Taurica by the Turks) with the residence of the great Cham: from whence these Tartars are by some called Olsanenses. 12. Metropolis as Ptolomy, or rather Miletopolis as Pliny calleth it; a Colony in old times of the Milesians, not farre from Olbia. Besides all which, and many others mentioned by the antient Writers of which there is nothing now remaining; the Court of the great Cham in Summer time makes a moveable City; built upon Wheel-houses, and transported from one place to another, as occasion serveth: which houses at every station are orderly disposed of into Streets, and lanes, and by the Tartars are called Agwa, or a Town of Carts.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were of Scythian race; for by that name some elder writers call not onely the true and proper Scythians lying on both sides of Imaus; but even the Sauromatæ or Sarmatians also; and those not onely of Sarmatia Asiatica bordering next unto them, but even such Europæan nations, as lived on the Northern banks of Ister, and the Euxine Sea. And so they are affirmed to be by Ptolomy himself, though otherwise more exact than any in distingnishing Sarmatia Europæa from Asiatica; and Asiatica from the Scythian. For speaking of the Nations of Sarmatia Europæa, inhabiting on the Palus Mœotis, he ranks them thus. Καὶ παρ' ὅλων τ πλευρὰν τῆς Μαιώτιδ@, &c. i. e. And all along the coasts of Mœotis, dwell the Iazyges (distinct from those called Metanastæ) and the Rhoxolani; and more within the land, the Hamaxobii and Alani, Scythians. More towards the banks of the Euxine, and in the Chersonese it self, dwell the antient Tauri, subdivided into the severall Nations of the Sinchi, Napæi, and Arinchi, by the said Ptolomy included in the general name of Tauro Scythæ. To none but these of all the Europæan Sarmatians doth he give this name. And therefore I conceive them to have been those Scythians against whom Darius King of Persia made his fruitless warre. Picking a quarrell with this people, because their King had denied to give him one of his daughters to wife; or to revenge, as others more improbably say, the inrode which the Scythians formerly had made into Asia; he drew together an army of 700. thousand. Passing over the Thracian Bosphorus, he came at last to the banks of the Ister, where it parteth Moldavia and Bulgaria; and there for the passage of his men caused a bridge to be built; to the keepers whereof he left a Cord of 60. knots: commanding them every day to untie one knot, and if he came not back before all were united, to return to their houses. This done he marched towards his enemies, who still fled before him; leading him into the most desert and unhabitable parts of their Countrey: and when they had brought him into a streight, sent Ambassadours to him with a bird, a mouse, a frog, and an handfull of Arrows; willing the Persians, if they could, to expound that Ridle. Darius willing to hope the best of his design, conjectured that the Scythians did submit unto him, by delivering into his hands their Air, Earth, Water, and Arms, Hierogyphicall signified in their present. But Gobrias, one of the seven Princes made this exposition, that if the Persians could not flie like a bird thorow the air, or like a mouse creep under the earth, or like a frog swim over the water, they could by no means scape the Persian Arrows. And to say truth this Commentary best agreed with the Text. For these Scythians following close upon him, or rather driving him before them, and vexing him with continuall skirmishes, forced him to make such hast to get over the River, that he lost 80000 of his men in the fight and flight. This was the onely memorable Action of these Europæan Scythians in those elder ages: more memorable in the times succeeding for their horrid cruelty, than any argument of their valour. For it is said of these Tauri, or Tauro Scythæ, that for the pleasing of their Gods, especially of Diana, whom they called Orsiloche, they used to sacrifise all such strangers as they could lay hands on, and with their heads most barbarously adorned the walls of her Temples. An inhumanity with which the Christian Advocates of the Primitive times, did much use to upbraid the Gentiles; taunting them with the sacrifices of Diana Taurica (so named from hence) as inconsistent with the nature of a God or goodness: most rightly giving them this brand or censure, that they were not sacra, but Sacrilegia. Et præstat profanus esse quam sic religiosus. Better it was to be of no Religion, than of one so cruel.

But to go forwards with the story, in the actions of the Greeks and Romans we hear nothing of them, unless unleſs it were that the Emperour Trajan (as Florus ſeems to intimate) took the City of Taphre. Which if he did, he added by that action ſomewhat to his own honour, but nothing to the Roman Empire: this people being never reckoned amongſt their Provinces. Nor hear we any thing by name of their infeſting the Roman territories (as the other barbarous Nations did) except they paſſed in the account of the Gothes, Alani, Hunnes, Avares, or other of the Scythian or Sarmatian people, by which the majeſty of that Empire was trod under foot. But what the Perſians, Greeks, and Romans were not able to do, was with eaſe effected by the Tartars: who in the time of Joccatha, or Hoccata, the next to Cingis, under the conduct of Bathu, or Roydo, one of their moſt renowned Commanders, ſubdued all theſe parts, together with Ruſſia, on the North Bulgaria, and Hungarie on the East. Subject at firſt to the command of the Great Cham of Cathaia, as the reſt of the Tartarians were, they came at laſt to have a Prince of their own; one Lechtan Cham, deſcended from the aforeſaid Bathu, and (as it was pretended) of the blood of Cingis. They grew at laſt of ſo great power by conquering the Aſiatick Tartars which lay neereſt to them, that Mahomet the Great thought fit to keep them down before grown too ſtrong for him: and therefore under colour of taking in the City of Capha, then poſſeſſed by the Genoeſe, made himſelf maſter of the greateſt part of the Taurican Cherſoneſe, and the Port of Tanais; thereby commanding both Mœotis and the Euxine Sea. In the time of Selimus the firſt, who had maryed a daughter of this Crim-Tartar (for ſo they call him) and was aided by him with an Army of 15000 men againſt his Father; the Turks and theſe Tartarians grew into a League. The chief conditions of it were, that the Tartar ſhould aid the Turk upon all occaſions, with 60000 horſe, if it were required; that they ſhall not make war with any of their neighbours, (except the Moſcovite) without leave of the Turk; that they ſhall pay yearly to the Grand Signieur in the way of tribute 300 Chriſtians; that the new Cham, upon the death or depoſition of his Predeceſſor, ſhall receive from the Great Turk a Royall Banner in token of his Confirmation in that eſtate: that in reward of theſe ſervices the Crim-Tartar ſhall have yearly from the Grand Signieur 5500 Ducates in the way of penſion; and ſucceed finally in the Turkiſh Empire, if ever the male iſſue of the houſe of Ottoman ſhould chance to fail. According unto this agreement the Tartars have been aiding to the Turks from time to time againſt the Perſians, Polanders, Hungarians, Moldavians, and indeed whom not, and that with great and puiſſant Armies, the Great Cham ſometimes arming 150000 of his own Subjects (leaving but one man in an houſe to attend their cattel) and ſometimes adding 50000 Circaſſians, and others of the Aſian Tartars. And for the Moſcovite, whom he is left at liberty to aſſault by this Capitulation; he hath had ſo hard an hand upon him, that in the year 1571 they pierced as far as to the City of Moſco, and ſet fire on the Suburbs: which flaming into the City built moſt of wood, and then reckoned to be 30 miles in compaſs, within the ſpace of four hours burnt the greateſt part of it, and therein no fewer than 800000 of all ſorts of people: A quartel not to be compoſed, the Tartar not only laying claim to the Kingdomes of Caſan and Aſtrachan, which the Ruſſe poſſeſſeth; but even to Moſcovie it ſelf, as hath there been ſhewn. Nothing ſo punctuall is the Turk on his part, to perform the contract, who not content to have the Tartar for his friend, or at the worſt his Homager, hath of late times attempted to make him his ſlave or Vaſſall. For Amurath the third, quarrelling Mahomet the Crim-Tartar for a deſign to intercept Oſman Baſſa in his way from Perſia to Conſtantinople; authoriſed the ſaid Oſman to war upon him: by whom the poor Crim and his two ſonnes, betrayed by ſome of his own Counſellers (corrupted with Turkiſh Gold) were ſtrangled with a Bow-ſtring; Iſlan a brother of the Crims, firſt ſworn a Vaſſall to the Turk, put into the place; and over him a Turkiſh Begler-beg or Baſſa to command in chief. What hopes he hath of ſucceeding in the Turkiſh Empire, if the houſe of Ottoman ſhould fail, hath been already taken into conſideration, in our diſcourſe upon that ſubject.

What the Revenue of this Prince is, it is hard to ſay; his ſubjects having little money, and living moſt upon the bartery of their Cattel. But beſides what he hath in Lands or cuſtomes, and the 5500 Ducats yearly which he receiveth from the Turk; he hath the tenth of all the ſpoils which are got in the warres, and a Cheekire for every Captive, for ſome two or three (whoſoever taketh them) according unto their eſtates.

As for his power, what he can do in horſe we have ſeen already; And as for foot, and Ammunition, and other neceſſaries, he is ſupplied with them by the Turk, (who doth ſometimes eſpouſe his quarrels) by whoſe aſſiſtance they have brought the Moſcovites to ſome extremities. And upon confidence of the favour and protection of the Grand Signieur, the Cham then being, upon the death of Stephen Bathori (whom Amurath the 3d. commended to the Crown of Poland) ſent Ambaſſadours to negotiate his election to that Kingdome: and to induce them thereunto promiſed them in his letters amongſt other things, that their Pope ſhould be his Pope, their Luther his Luther; and that rather than put them unto any charge to find his Table, he could live with Horſe-fleſh. His Embaſſie entertained with Laughter, as it well deſerved.

2. TARTARIA DESERTA.

TARTARIA DESERTA is bounded on the Weſt, with Precopenſis, and the Empire of Ruſſia; on the Eaſt, with Antiqua and Zagathay, from which laſt parted by the River Spane, which falleth into the Caſpian Sea about the middle of it, and the great Lake of Kitay, from Eaſt to weſt; on the North, with the Scythick or frozen Ocean; and on the South, with part of the Euxine Sea, the Caucaſian Mountains, and ſome part of the Caſpian.

It took this name from the many Deſarts which are in it, and is called alſo Aſiatica, to difference

it

it from Precopensis, which is wholly in Europe: or because it taketh up the whole Continent of Sarmatia Asiatica, according to the bounds thereof laid down by Ptolomy, except some part hereof incorporated to the Russian Empire.

The Countrey of it self sufficiently fruitful, if well mannured; and were it in the hands of a laborious and industrious people, would yield large increase: as appears by the ill husbandry of the Tartars, who sow nothing on it but Mill and Panicum (grains unknown to us) and that without giving it any tillage, receive very plentiful returns of both. But the Tartar being a Nation that hateth Agriculture, and laugheth at Christian for living on the tops of Reeds, (so they call our bread) neglect all that which is not of a rank pasture for their Herds and Cattell; moving from one place to another as the grass faileth them; which maketh it so full of Deserts, and so empty of Towns, as to deserve the name of Tartaria Deserta.

The people or Inhabitants of it are of severall sorts; derived from three severall Originalls, and disposed of in three severall parts. 1. The Samoyeds, dwelling towards the Northern Ocean, who are wholly Idolaters. 2. the Circassians, bordering on the Euxine, for the most part Christians; and 3. the Tartars, planted betwixt both, being all Mahometans. These again subdivided into severall Tribes, which they call their Hordes, of which the most considerable are, 1. the Nagaian Tartars, 2. the Zavolhenses, 3. the Thumenenses, 4. the Kirgessi: besides the Hordes or Kingdomes of Casan and Astrachan added unto the Empire of Russia, where described already; and others of inferiour note, not here considerable.

But before we come to speak of these people in their severall places, we must first look upon the whole Countrey as presented to us under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: bounded by Ptolomy as before, save that it did extend more Westwards, and was unknown to him in the Northern parts of it; now possessed by the Moscovite. So populous in the time of that Author, that he giveth us the names of fourty severall Nations which did then inhabit it, and of about as many Towns of good estimation. Of which there are few or none remaining: and for the names of some of the principall of them, we shall have them presently.

Rivers of most note in it, 1. Marabius, 2. Rhombitus the Greater, and 3. the Less; 4. Anticus, 5. Theophanius, 6. Psathis, 7 Thesyris, 8. Corax, and 9. Vardanes; all of them falling into the Euxine, and Mœotick Fennes. 10. Udonis, 11. Alnuta, and 12. Rha, paying their tributes to the Caspian or Hyrcanian Sea. Of these the principall is Rha, by the modern Latines called Volga, by the Tartars Edi, rising in Russia, not far from the City of Mosco, (where we have described it). Most memorable, besides the seventy mouths or Channels, wherewith it openeth into the Caspian, for a medicinable and wholesome root growing on both sides thereof, which the Physicians call Rha, by the name of the River, and for distinctions sake Rha Pontick, to difference it from Rhubarb, or Rha Barbarum, as of a different nature from it, this last being purgative, and the other more apt to bind. 13. Ob, a River unknown to Ptolomy, rising out of the lake of Kitay, a Lake in bigness like the Sea, and full of many little Ilands (most of them inhabited). Which River at its first parting from this Lake is said to be of 8 miles breadth; and growing still bigger and bigger, emptieth it self at last in the Northern Ocean, the present boundary betwixt the Russian and the people in the North of this Countrey.

Principall Mountains of this part, 1. Corax, giving name unto the River issuing out of it. 2. Montes Hippici, extended towards the Caspian Sea. 3. Montes Ceraunii, lying in the furthest parts hereof (then known unto my Author) to the North and East. 4. Caucasus, or Caucasii Montes, extended from the Euxine to the Caspian Seas, and parting Sarmatia Asiatica from Colchis, Iberia, and Albania. A chain of hills of which Aristotle saith, acumine & latitudine omnium maximi, &c. that for height and breadth they are the greatest of the East, the tops whereof are lightned by the Sunbeams in midnight till almost day-break, when it is dark-night in the valleys beneath. Not passable for horse or foot (except they creep along by the Euxine shore) but at one place onely, called Sarmatiæ Pylæ, or the Gates of Sarmatia; by others named Caucasiæ Portæ, from the hills adjoining. Situate in the 81 degree of Latitude; and not far from the Caspian Sea: but that so intricate and narrow, that very small force may keep it against strong Armies. So carefully did Almighty God in his heavenly Providence, shut up this fierce and barbarous people, from the rest of Mankind, by such unfordable Waters, and impassable Mountains: not to be freed out of their prison, till he thought good to use them, as the executioners of his wrath and vengeance, for the punishment of sinful and impenitent Nations. This said, we will consider those particular Nations, which before we named, and are now possessed of it in their several places.

1. Opposite to the Precopenses lie the CIRCASSIANS, extended from the Cimmerian Bosphorus and the Fennes of Mœotis, towards the Eastern shores of the Euxine Sea, for the space of 500 miles, and reaching 200 miles towards the North. The name imposed on them by the Tartars; whereas before, they were called by Pliny, Zigæ, by some writers Zychi, conceived to be the Zinchi of Ptolomy.

The Countrie very fitly seated for trade and merchandise, as having a fair and large Sea-coast, with many Rivers opening into it (nine of those spoken of before passing thorow these tracts) and not a few capacious Baies, and commodious Havens. Of which the principall were Sinus Cerceticus, or the Bay of Cercetis, Syndi, and Buta two known Havens, and specified by my Author with the adjunct of Portus. But these conveniences not much looked after by the present Inhabitants, who are more inclined to the warres, than to trades, or merchandise. A stout and military people, trained to their weapons from from their child-hood; and sold as soon as trained to it by unnaturall Parents. For from these parts did the Mamalucks of Egypt fetch their first Originall; from hence supply themselves with a perpetuall Seminary of slaves and Souldiers, raised by degrees unto the highest dignities of that slavish Empire. And from these parts the Persian Sophies are supplied with their Cozzel-Bassas, disciplined and instructed by them like the Turkish Janizaries.

The Christian faith was here planted in the yeat 860 or thereabouts, by the Ministry of Cyrill (or Chiarill) and Methodius, employed in that service by the Patriarch of Constantinople. In which respect their Churches are of the Greek Communion, conform thereto in rites and doctrine, and of the jurisdiction of that Patriarch: but differing from them very much in matters practicall. For it is ordinary with these half Christians not to baptize their children till eight years old; to hear divine service standing without their Churches, into which they very seldome enter (especially the Gentlemen) till the 40th. or (as some say) the 60th. year of their age: dividing the whole course of their life betwixt God and the Devil, in dedicating their youth unto theft and Robbery, their old Age (when they can no longer commit those villanies) to the difficult business of repentance.

Places of most observation amongst the Antients, 1. Cimmerium, a Town and Promontory, so called from the Cimmerii, once the chief people of these parts; of whom more anon; situate on the very shore of the Bosphorus, from hence denominated. 2. Phanagoria, in old times a well-traded Empory; situate on a litle Iland raised out of the Sea by the care and industry of the Greeks, who had here a Factory. 3. Apathurgus, by Pliny called Apaturum, memorable for a Temple of Venus surnamed Apaturia (which name she gave unto this place) because (saith Strabo) when the Giants assaulted her, she craved help of Hercules, who slew them all one after another. 4. Gerusa, by Ptolomy honoured with the title of Civitas; the Gargaza of Diodorus, now called Saint Georges. 5. Oenuntia, neer the mouth of the River Thesyris. 6. Arazi, more within the land, which with 7. Ampsacis, hath the name of a City also. The name of their chief Havens we have seen before. But few of these or any other mentioned by the antient Authors, being now visible in their ruins: the chief of those which are now extant are 1. Locoppa, 2. Consoco; but of no great note.

The people antiently though divided into the severall Tribes of the Thyrsageta, Ziga, Turca, the Hunnes, Avares, and Mœota, all noted Nations; besides the Coaxtra, Zinchi, Tyrambæ, Pselii, and others as obscure as they: were better known by the name of Cimmerians, in which those several tribes concentred. Descended in the right of that common originall from Gomer the sonne of Japhet, first planted in the mountainous places of Albania: his posterity known by the name of Gomerii, afterwards Cimmerii, left there a memorial of themselves in the mountains called Cimmerini. But that Country proving both too barren, and too narrow for them, some of them passed into Phrygia Major, where they built the City Cimmeris, not unknown to Pliny, in whose time it was extant: and others in some tract of time keeping the Euxine on their left hand fixed themselves in these parts, here giving name to the Town and Promontory Cimmerion, to the Cimmerian Bosphorus, and generally to all the people descended of them. From these particularly as the stout and valiant Nation of the Cimbri do derive their Pedegree; so from these and the children of Mesech, Magog, and Tubal, the Sarmatians both of Europe and Asia, the Moscovites, and perhaps the Scythians, are to fetch their Originall: all of them great and puisant Nations, and all involved promiscuously in the name of the Scythians. Renowned for no other action more than the memorable expedition which they made into Media in the Greater, and Lydia in the Lesser Asia: the Cimmerians by themselves alone, or by them as principall the rest of these Sarmatians in a body together as a Scythian People. Distressed with want, or to disburden their small Countrey of superfluous multitudes, these Cimmerii in the time of Nabulassar, or Salmanassar King of Assyria, communicating their design with the rest of the Scythians to enlarge their quarters, holding along the course of the Euxine Sea, and passing thorow the Countrey of Colchis, first seized on some parts of Pontus and Paphlagonia. Where having fortified the Promontory on which Sinope was after built, and leaving there their carriages and the weakest of their train with sufficient guards, they marched into Lydia, reputed (as it was indeed) for a wealthy Region. There they possessed themselves of Sardis, the royall City, and after of the rest of the Countrey or the most part of it; Ardis, the sonne of Giges, who then reigned in Lydia, not being able to withstand them. Both besides being wearied with long warre, and grown more pliant by degrees unto one another (as in like case betwixt the Saxons and the Danes) it proved no difficult matter for Halyattes, the grand-child of Ardis, to compound the business: assigning to the Cimmerians all those parts of his dominions which lay beyond the River Halys, and setling his Lydians in the rest. By this transaction there were so good correspondences betwixt the Nations, that when Cyaxares, King of the Medes, invaded the Countrey of these Cimmerians, under colour of the invasion which the Scythians had made in Media; Halyattes did espouse the quarrell, and appeared in their aid. In following times, growing into confidence of one another, and mixt in mariages and blood they became one people; or at least passed not under the accompt of strangers, or the name of Aliens. Such end had this most notable expedition of these Cimmerians; not much remembred after this for the like undertakings. Yet here they held their own, though in other names, governed by many petit Princes, but all associated with Mithridates against the Romans: that King being so great amongst them, that his sonne Machares, having maried into some of their families, was made King of Bosphorus. But Machares having made his peace with Lucullus, the Romans never looked this way. Nor hear we much of them in succeeding times till the invasion of the Tartars, by whom subdued, they acknowledged at first the Great Cham for their Soveraign Lord: whose power declining, they have successively been subject to the Crim-Tartar, the Turk, and Moscovite, but most commonly to the Crim-Tartar as their neerest neighbour and most able to hurt them.

them. And him they furnish on command with 50000 horse for the Grand Signeurs service: yet so that they supply the Persian with his Cozzel-Bassas, and sometimes serve under him for pay, as they do under any which will entertain them. Governed like the Suissers, by their severall Commonalties, yet so, that every Commonalty hath some principall man (which the Switzers have not) whom they call Morseys, (that is Dukes) to direct and order them.

2. Betwixt these and the River Volga dwell the ZAVOLHENSES, one of the greatest Hords or Tribes, of all the Tartars; and therefore called Horda Magna. Of these the Crims, or Precopenses were a Castling onely, proceeding out of this great Swarm or Nest of Hometts, though afterwards they became their masters. Of the Countrey or the People we say nothing here: having sufficiently spoken of both already. Their chief Town hath the name of Bolgar, situate on the River Volga, and from thence so named: Volgar, and Bolgar differing but litle in Orthographie, and not much in sound.

This Countrey, as I take it by the situation, should be that which Ptolomy calleth Mithridatis Regio: whether so called in honour of him by the Princes of the neighbouring Cimmerians, with whom he had contracted alliance; or that he had made any conquests there; or from some other Prince of the same name; I determine not. And in this tract were those two Pillars advanced unto the honour of Alexander, in Ptolomy called Columnæ Alexandri, in whose time they stood without defacement: there being also Altars erected to him, or in memory of him, neer the Banks of Tanais; occuring in the same Author by the name of Aræ Alexandri. Which probably occasioned the error of Qu. Curtius, who brings Alexander in pursuit of the Scythian warre, as farre as Tanais: whereas it is apparent by the course of his actions, that he never got beyond the River Iaxartes; distant from Tanais no less than 2000 miles.

This Tribe first governed by its own King, whom they called Ulu-Cham, or the Great Cham, was in the year 1506. subdued by the Crim-Tartar, and made subject to him. Afterwards conquered by Basilius the Great Duke of Moscovy, who thereupon assumed the title of King of Bolgar, which his Successors still preserve, with the Town it self; well garrisoned to keep open the whole course of the River Volga, by which they mannage the great trade of the Caspian Sea. But for the main body of this people, they returned again to their obedience to the Crim, as being a limb of the same body with him, and are subject unto his commands: though by reason of their neighbourhood to the Moscovite, and commerce with that Nation, they frame themselves both to their language, habit, and behaviour.

3. East of the Zavolhenses, on the other side of the Volga, dwell the NOIHACENSES, or NAGAIANS, spreading as far as the borders of Zagathay, and declining Southward towards the Caspian Sea, and the Montes Hippici. Accompted the best men of war of all the Tartars, but more fierce and cruell than the rest: void of all Arts, not having, or contemning, money, or the use of Corn. Horse-flesh and Mares Milk, their best diet; the flesh either rosted by the Sun, or heated by continuall hanging at their sadle-bow. And with such cheer (nor worse nor better) did Azim Can, one of the Princes of this Tribe, entertain Jenkinson and other English men in their travells to the Caspian from the River Volga. Their chief Town, if possibly it deserve that name, is called Scharayirzik, the Residence of one of their Princes; and the next, Sellistare, where the said Jenkinson found the Cham, as in the prime place of his abode. The Government is by severall Morseys, the Heads or Chiefs, no doubt, of their severall Clans: agreeing well enough together against the Moscovite, whom they infest with frequent inrodes, and put him to the charge of continual Garrisons, at Casan, Astrachan, and Wiatra. Their warres for the most part only prædatorie, rather to get some present booty, than out of any hope to enlarge their dominion: and therefore commonly pacifyed, and sent home with presents. The Great Duke is so good a Statesman, as to think the expence of money cheaper than that of blood; especially when he hath to deal with such an Enemy, who hath neither any Town of consequence, or fixt place of dwelling, and consequently nothing to be got but blowes. Their Morseys, formerly more in number, were of late times reduced unto three; of which he of Scharayick was the Chief; to whose direction, and appointment (especially in matters which concerned the publick) the other two do commonly submit themselves.

4. Betwixt these Nagaians, and the Circassians, lie those Tribes which they call the KIRGESSI, spreading as far as to the mouths or influx of the River Volga: but intermixt with the Heselites, and Baschurides, two other of the Tartarian Tribes, but of less power. Their life, for the most part in continuall motion, removing with their wives and families from one place to another; and governing themselves in their removes, by the sight of the Pole-star. Partly Mahometan, partly Gentile; but the Gentiles make the greater number, not burying their dead bodies, as in other places, but hanging them upon a tree, though they stink again: certain enough that they will be devoured or sweetned, before they return back to the same Station. Much reverence yet they give their Priests, by whom sanctified & besprinkled in their publick meetings with a certain mixture compounded of blood, milk, earth, and Cow-dung. A most sweet confection, but good enough for them that desire no better. And yet with these the Moscovite is fain to hold faire compliance, and to send them every year some presents, for fear they should joyn with the Nagaians, or otherwise disturb him in his Caspian Trade down the River Volga.

5. The THUMENSES or THUMEN TARTARS lie more North than any of these Tartarians; having on the South, the Zavolhenses, and the territory of Viatka in the Empire of Russia. A warlike people, and living neer a dangerous neighbour: for which cause they do not straggle so abroad in petit companies, as the others do, but keep together in great bodies. For the most part much delighted in Negromancy and conjurations. In which the devill so befools them, that he suffereth them to raise tempests, and sometimes by Diabolicall illusions to defeat their enemies.

The

The only Hord of all Deserta, which still continue in obedience to their natural Lord the great Cham of Cathay. And unto these we may adjoin the Molgomozans, all Gentiles, and the most barbarous of all; living in Caves, and feeding upon worms, and mice, and Serpents, and such other Vermine, as would be poison unto any but such Molgomozans, who are more poisonous than those creatures.

These Hords, together with the Kingdomes of Casan, and Astrachan, and such of the Russian Provinces as lie on the East of Tanais and the River Duina, make up that Countrey which antiently passed under the name of Sarmatia Asiatica: inhabited originally, by the Descendants of Gomer, Mesech, Tubal, Magog, the sonnes of Japhet, spreading themselves more Northwards as they grew in numbers, out of Aloania, Iberia, Colchis, and the Pontick or Cimmerian Nations. Divided into the Tribes or Families of the Olandæ, Gerri, Samocolchi, Socani, Seci, Scimitæ, Agritæ, Merdi, Conapseni, Chanides, Basilici, Hyperborei, Hippophagi, and others of as little note: these last so called from their eating of horses, which dyet they have left unto their Successours. So like in manners and conditions to the neighbouring Scythians, that they passed commonly by that name: and by that name are memorable for the expedition by them made into Asia the Greater, at such time as the Cimmerians fell into Asia Minor. For passing without opposition thorow the Sarmatian Streights, where they might have been easily kept out, and leaving behind them the more barren Countrey of Albania, they fell into Media, where they were incountred, but victorious, by Phraartes, then King of the Medes. Who finding that he was not able to remove them by force, assayed it by cunning; and first perswaded them to look towards the South, as into richer Countries, and more like to yield them full content. Hereupon, full of prey and presents, they marched towards Ægypt, but were met in Syria by Psamniticus the Ægyptian King, who had heard of their comming, and thought it best to entertain them on the way, and not to bid them welcome at home to his greater cost. Out-vying the Median (as of the two the richer Prince) he loaded them with gifts and treasure, and so sent them back again into Media; from whence they came: where for many years they afflicted that people and the neighbouring Provinces, doubling their tributes, and using all kind of insolencies: till in the end, Cyaxares, the sonne and Successour of Phraartes, acquainting some of his most faithful subjects with his design, caused the better part of them to be plentifully feasted, made them drunk, and slew them; recovering thereby the possession of his whole estate. Afterwards, imitated by the English in their Hock-tide slaughter. Such of them as escaped this blow, and were not willing to be subject to the Kings of Media (as many of them were) were suffered to return home by the same way they came, where at their coming, they found foul work made by their wives and their slaves, the story whereof we had when we were in Russia. After this we hear nothing of them in the stories of the Greeks and Romans, unless those Amazons, who attended their Queen Thalestris, when she bestowed a visit on Alexander, were rather of these Sarmatian Amazons, than of those of Pontus and Thermodon, as I think they were: the neerness of their dwelling to Hyrcania, in which place they found him, inducing me to this opinion. But possible enough it is, (though it be not certain) that some of these Sarmatian tribes, though by other names, hearing of the successes of the Hunnes, Avares, and other barbarous nations which made havock of the Roman Empire; might join themselves unto them, and make up their numbers: those nations being else two small to compound such Armies, as by them were brought into the field against the Romans, with out such like helps. What their estate hath been since subdued by the Tartars, hath been shewn already.

3. ZAGATHAY.

ZAGATHAY is bounded on the East, with the Mountain Imaus, by which it is parted from Cathay; on the North, with the main Scythick or Frozen Ocean; on the West, with Tartaria Deserta, from which separated by the River Soane, and the Lake of Kitay; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea, and the River Oxus, by which divided from the Empire of Persia. So called from Zagathay, a brother of one of the Great Chams, on whom it was conferred for his better maintenance; the Scythia intra montem Imaum, of the antient writers.

The Countrey spreading but so far, on all sides; as before appeareth, comprehendeth all those Provinces and tracts of ground, which antiently were called 1. the Countrey of the Sacæ, 2. Sogdiana, 3. Zagathay, specially so called, 4. Turchestan; included antiently in the name of Scythia intra montem Imaum; and 5. the Terra incognita which Ptolomy makes to be the Northern boundarie of that part of Scythia. By taking a survey of all which particulars, we shall find the temper of the whole.

1. SACÆ, or the Countrey of the Sacans, is bounded on the East, with the mountain Imaus; on the West, with Sogdiana; on the North, with Zagathay, properly and specially so called; on the South, with the River Oxus, by which parted from Bactria. So called from the Sacæ, the Inhabitants of it; but the reason of their name I find not.

The Countrey antiently either barren, or ill manured; full of vast Forests, wide Desarts, and the like unhabitable places. Few or no Cities in it, and not many villages (civitates autem non habent, as my Author hath it) the people living for the most part in Caves, or otherwise wandring up and down with their droves of cattel. Called for that reason Nomades by some antient writers. The name not proper to these onely, but common to all those who followed the like roving life, as the Sarmatians, wild Arabians, Saracens, and the Inhabitants of Libya and Numidia in Africk. Onely one fortified place they had, which from the materials of it had the name of Turris Lapidea, (Λιθινὸς πύργος, in the Greek) or the Castle of Stones; Part hereof being peopled for the most part by Camels, or travellable onely with those Creatures, had the name of Camelorum Regio.

Divided it was antiently into many Tribes, the Carate, and Comari, neer the River Jaxartes; the Massageta, and Comeda, neer the hills called Ascatanas; the Bylce and Grynæi, more within the Country. All joined in one by the name of Sacæ; and by that name made a very fortunate Progress into Armenia (to which they had an easie passage by the Northern banks of the Caspian Sea) and therein gave name unto the Province called Sacasena. But proceeding into Cappadocia, and there slain by the Persians in the middest of their Feastings, they left there also some resemblance of their name, in an annuall festivall called Sacea, celebrated by the Persians in memoriall of their good success in the warre against them. Such as stayd here, being overcome by Cyrus the first Persian Monarch, did so good service to that Prince, that Amorges the King of these Sacæ, is said to have rescued him from the hands of the Scythians, by whom otherwise he had been slain, or taken Prisoner. In the declining of that Kingdome, they were subdued by Alexander at the end of his Scythian, and Sogdian warres; who hereabouts, by Cobertanes a noble Persian, was presented with a Bevy of beautifull Ladies, one of the which was that Barsine whom he made his wife, and had by her that Hercules, whom Polysperchon and his faction proclamed King of Macedon. Not memorable in the following times for any thing which they did or suffered; as they have been made by the opinion or mistake of others. Who building Castles in the Air, will needs derive the Saxons (our famous Ancestors) from this Originall: as if they were called Saxons, quasi Sac-sonnes, or the sonnes of Sacæ. A fancy in my poor conceit, of no ground at all. For either the number of these Sacæ, when they left these parts, must be great, or little. If little, how can we conceive it possible they should force their way thorough those valiant Nations of both Sarmatias; who to the last maintained their liberties and estate against the Romans. If great enough to force their passage (for stout and provident Nations use not to give passage to great Armies, but they pay dear for it) how can we think it possible they should be shut up in a corner of Germany, betwixt the River Albis and the Cimbrick Chersonees. The Saxons then, whatsoever they were, were no sonnes of the Sacæ; and what in likelihood they were hath been elsewhere shewn.

2. SOGDIANA hath on the East, the Sacæ; on the North and West, Zagathay specially so called; on the South, the River Oxus, parting it from Margiana. So called from a chain of Mountains named Montes Sogdii, being the chief of all this Countrey, though of themselves a spurre or branch of the Mountain Caucasus.

The Countrey indifferently fruitfull, and very rich in pasturage, because very well watered. For besides Oxus and Jaxartes, which are common unto them and others; they have many Rivers of their own. The principal of which, 1. Dymus, and 2. Araxates, both navigable and capable of very good ships; both also running down the hills with a headlong course, and passing thorough the champain Countrey, empty themselves at last in the lake called Oxiana; as is affirmed by Ammianus, but as Ptolemy saith, into Jaxartes.

Places of most consideration it, 1. Drepsa, the Metropolis or mother-City of this people. By Pliny called Panda, by Solinus Darapsa: situate on the River Oxus. 2. Oxiana, on the same River, and from thence denominated. 3. Marnca, on the same River also. 4. Alexandria, called for distinctions sake, Alexandria Oxiana; which name declareth both the founder and the situation. 5. Alexandria, for the same cause of distinction, named Alexandria ultima: either because the last City which he built in these parts, or because it lay furthest off on the borders of the Scythians; against whose invasions or irruptions it was said to be built. 6. Tribarra, one of the chief hereof in the time of Ammianus Marcellinus. 7. Cyroschata, more memorable, and not less antient, than any of those named before, by Qu. Curtius called Cyropolis, built by Cyrus, to fortifie his borders against the Scythians. It held out against the great Macedonian, a long time: and he himself comming nigher to the wells, than discretion would permit an ordinary Generall, had such a blow on the neck with a stone, that he fell to the ground, his eyes swimming in his head, and his whole Army giving him for slain. But reviving he took the Town by a mine, and levell'd it with the ground, in revenge of so great a danger.

The antient Inhabitants hereof were the Oxydracæ, and Candari, dwelling at the foot of the Sogdian mountains; the Oxiani, and Cheraſmii, neer the banks of Oxus; the Jasii, and Tachori, neer the River Jaxartes; the Drepsiani in the East parts bordering on the Sacæ; whose chief City was Drepsa: descended from their severall roots, but all called Sogdians. Conquered by Alexander, not without danger to his own person, as before was said, at the sollicitation of Spitamenes a noble Persian, it rebelled again. Who being suppressed, and the Countrey in some measure quieted, Arimazes, a native of the Province, renewed the war. Who followed with 30000 men, encamped upon the top of an hill, in a place of such notable advantage, that Alexander, neither by force not fair words, could get him out of it. He therefore dealt with 300 of his youngest and most active men, on the promise of great reward, to climb the hill, and without any noise to shew themselves at the back of the Enemy. Which having performed with the loss of 30 of their company, Alexander sent one Cophes to Arimazes, to let him know that the whole Army of Macedon was at his back: who terrified with what he saw, more with what he feared, gave up the place, and was scourged and crucified for his labour. So necessary in the Art of warre-fare is a peece of wit. After this time, it ran the same alterations and change of fortunes, as the Persians did; till they were conquered by the Tartars, unto whom still subject.

3. ZAGATHAY specially so called, is bounded on the East, with Cathay; on the West, with Turchestan, and part of the Caspian Sea; on the North, with the Countrey of the Samoyeds, the Terra Incognita of the Antients; on the South, with the Sacæ, and Sogdiana. Antiently part of Scythia intra montem Imaum, and took this new name from Zagathay, the first Prince hereof since the time of the Tartars.

The

The Countrey reasonably fruitfull, but not so rich in the naturall temper of the soyl, as the industriousness of the people, more civill farre than any other of the Tartars; studious of good letters, lovers of Arts as well ingenious as Mechanick; well skilled in manufactures, and very seldome without the confluence of forein Merchants. Populous, and well-stored with towns and villages; both for their own more handsome dwelling, and the entertainment of others.

Chief Rivers of it, 1. Jaxartes, now called Chesel, the principal of all this Countrey: great of it self, but made much greater by the waters of 2. Daix, another River of good note, rising out of the mountain called Norosus, and falling with many others into Jaxartes; mixt with whose streams they are dischannelled in the Caspian Sea. 3. Jartus, and 4. Polytimetas, falling into Oxus. Others there are whose names I find not in my Authors, descending from the mountains of this Northern Region, which are great and many. As viz. 1. Norosus, spoken of before. 2. Asphisii, on the North of that. 3. Toporus, more unto the North. 4. The mountains called Sychi, more Northward still. 5. Those called Anarei, besides 6. Imaus, of most name, but common unto Cathay as well as to Zagathay.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Aspabota, the only Town ascribed by Ptolomy to this Countrey, and by him honoured with the title of Civitas. 2. Zabaspia, of less antiquity, but of greater estimation at the present time. Situate on the mouth of the River Oxus (now called Abias) on the brink of the Caspian, and much frequented by the Merchants of forein Countreys, chiefly from India, and Cathay. 3. Marachanda, antient, and of fame, but placed by Ptolomy, (why I know not) amongst the Cities of Bactria: differing herein from the common and received opinion of other Authors, by whom this City is affirmed to be on the North side of Oxus, and consequently not within that Province. Made good by Spitamenes, (who having delivered the Traitor Bessus into the hands of Alexander, revolted from him) against the Macedonian Army; by which besieged under the command Menedemus. But Menedemus being slain, with some of his Souldiers, Spitamenes escaped hence to Bactria, where he was slain by his own wife, and his head presented to the Conqueror. Here was it also that Alexander, being then Master of the Town, in a drunken fit slew his dear friend Clytus, who at the battel of Granicus had saved his life, by receiving a blow which was aimed at him. It was afterwards called Samarchand, the seat-Royall of Tamerlane, by whom enriched with all the spoils and treasures he got in the wars; there being brought hither from Damascus only (and by that one instance we may guess at the rest) 8000 Camels laden with the choicest moveables. Still the chief Residence of the Chams of Zagathay, but farr short of that magnificence which once it held. 4. Bichend, of no Antiquity, nor of such great name as the Regall Samarchand, but at this time of greater wealth; situate somewhat in the midland, but populous, and a well-traded Town. 5. Azara, memorable for being made the Rendezvous of that mighty Army which Tamerlane raised against the Turks, consisting in the totall of 1200000 fighting men when it was at the biggest. 6. Maranis, from which place the said Tamerlane, having received his aids from China, began his march.

These Tartars, called Zagathayans, by the name of their Countrey, are of a different government from that of the Great Cham of Cathay, though subject to him at the first: and have so been ever since the time of Zaicham or Bathu, the third great Cham; who gave it unto Zagathay, a younger sonne, whence it had the name. To Zagathay succeeded Og, by some called Zain-Cham, (the Father of Tamerlane) a peaceable and quiet Prince, who rather studied to preserve than enlarge his Empire. But Tamerlane being of a fiercer and more warlike nature, made the first proof of his valour and good fortune against the Moscovite (for spoyling a City which had put it self under his protection) whom he overthrew with the slaughter of 25000 foot, and 15000 of his horse. Moved with this notable exploit, and the hopes of greater, Gino Cham, the great Emperor of the Tartars gave him to wife his onely daughter, and therewithall declared him his heir apparent. Incouraged and inabled with this advancement he first brake down the wall of China, encountred with the King thereof, overcame him in battel, and imposed on him the summe of 300000 Crowns of yearly tribute. Having left things quiet at his back, and taking with him a great part of the forces of China, he advanced forwards against Bajazet, the fourth King of the Turks; of the greatness of whose growing Empire he began to be jealous. Passing along the left-hand shores of the Caspian Sea, and so through Albania, and the rest of the Provinces which lay in his way (which he took and conquered as he went) he came at last into Asia Minor, where neer the City of Sebastia, he encountred with Bajazet, vanquished him; slew 200000 of his men, and carried him away captive in an iron Cage. Restoring those Princes dispossessed by Bajazet unto their estates, and taking to himself all the Turkish Provinces in Anatolia; he bestowed a private visit on Constantinople, which seen, he marched towards Syria, subdued both that Province and the Kingdome of Egypt, then possessed by the Mamalucks; visited Hierusalem, and did honour to the holy Sepulchre; returned by Babylon, and won it, and with it the whole Countries of Babylonia and Assyria. And taking Persia in his way, impatronized himself of that Kingdome also; and such parts of India, as either lay neer Persia, or his own dominions: now made the Soveraign Lord of all the Regions and Kingdomes in both Asias, excepting the chief India; for which the rich Kingdome of Egypt may be put in balance. Come home at last to Samarchand, he there died in peace. A Prince of strong body, but lovely lineaments, his eyes bearing in them such raies of majestie, that ordinary men could scarce endure to look upon them. His hair long, contrary to the custome of the Mahometans, (for the most part shaved on their heads) for which he pretended a descent from Sampson. Perfect in the Arabian learning, and a lover of all learned men, a hater of Idols, and Polytheism, and a great friend to the Christians. More fortunate in the conquering of so many Kingdomes, than in laying any sure foundation to maintain his conquests. For by holding his seat Royal in Samarchand, Cambalu, and other the chief Cities of Cathay, he gave the remote Provinces the opportunity of returning to their former Governours: and by parcelling his estates amongst his Children, and kindred, this mighty flood which had so quickly overflown both Asias, returned in very little time within its own proper and originall banks. Even Zagathay it self, divided from the Empire of Cathay, had its King apart (hardly acknowledging the great Cham for the Lord in chief) the most considerable of whom was that Saba, who in the new beginnings and unsetledness of the Sophian Empire, invaded Persia: but instead of recovering that Kingdome into the power of the Tartars, he lost some Provinces of his own. Hyrcania, Margiana, and some part of Bactria, being since subdued by Abas the late Sultan. Nothing since memorable, that I meet with in the affairs of this part of the Empire of Tartary.

4. TURCHESTAN is bounden on the East, with Zagathay specially so called; on the West, with the River Soane, parting it from Deserta; on the North, with those desarts which Ptolomy blindeth under the name of Terra incognita; and on the South, with the Caspian Sea. So called from the Turks, some of which people when they left their first Seats neer the Fennes of Mœotis, setled in this Country, and here still continue.

The Countrey as desert and ill planted, as the rest of Tartary, not so much out of any defect in the soyl it self, as in the humour of the people: who though originally Turks, do yet compose themselves unto the lives of the Scythian or Tartarian Nomades, neglecting tillage, and abiding in no place longer than that place affords them pasturage for their Cattell: huge herds of which they keep as their greatest treasure, but more to cloth their backs with the skinns, than to fill their Bellies with the flesh.

Amongst the Rivers of most note we may reckon, 1. Rhymnus, mentioned by Ptolomy, which by the position of it in the 91 degree of longitude, seems to be of this Tract. It riseth out of the mountains called Montes Rhymnici, giving name to the River, or taking name from it. 2. Ardock, not known by that name amongst the Antients, and whether known at all or not, I am not able to say. Shaping its course towards the North, and weary of so cold a clime, and such barbarous people, after a long and swift course of a thousand miles, it hideth it self under the ground for five hundred more: but breaking out again, and finding little or no hope of a better fortune, loseth it self for ever in the great Lake of Kitay.

To look for Towns amongst a people which delight not in settled houses, were a labour lost: yet some I find ascribed unto them. The principall, but of no great note, 1. Calba, and 2. Ocerra; Then there is 3. Crastina, situate on or neer the Lake of Kitay, never without the company of Russian and Tartarian Merchants: the Russians sailing to it by the River Ob; and the Zagathaian Tartars travelling to it by land. By these two nations more peopled, to maintain their traffick, than by the Turcomans themselves, in whose land it standeth.

These Turcomans are of the posterity of some of those Turcæ, who wanting room, or otherwise oppres'd with want, forsook their antient dwelling neer the Fennes of Mœotis, and the coasts of the Euxine Sea, to seek new dwellings, Anno 844. That their whole body settled here, and from hence made their conquest of Persia, as some very industrious men are of opinion, I by no means grant. For when the Sultan of Persia, having by the means of Tangrolipix and those Mercinary Turks whom he invited to his aid, obtained the victory; and thought it fit for his affairs to detain them longer in his service: it is said he shut up the passages of the River Araxes, to hinder them from returning to their habitations. The shutting up of which River, and fortifying against them all the passages and bridges of it, had not served his turn, if the Turks had come from this place: for then he must have manned against them the River Oxus, and such as lay betwixt them and him in the common rode. Nor is it probable, that the Turcomans dwelling in this Province, on the East side of the River Volga, would undertake the fording of that dangerous and violent Water, and force themselves a way thorow Albania, and Armenia, with no greater numbers than 3000 men, which was the whole strength that they carryed with them. So that it is not to be doubted but that they came first into Persia out of Turcomania, and not out of Turchestan: and probable enough, that when they first left their own abode, and came unto the Northwest shores of the Caspian Sea, they might there divide themselves; Some of which leaving that Sea on the left hand, and passing thorow the Sarmatian or Albanian Streights, made their way into Armenia, and those parts of Iberia, which from them are now called Turcomania. The residue keeping that Sea on the right hand, and crossing the Volga, where they found the passage most easie for them, settled themselves in these parts of Scythia which they found less peopled, now from them named Turchestan. Some of which hearing of the good success of their Countrey-men in the Conquest of Persia, might afterwards join with them to assure that purchase. Governed since their first comming hither by the Chiefs of their severall Clans, whom they honour with the title of Chams; but all of them tributaries, and vassals to the Cham of Zagathay.

5. That part of the Kingdome of Zagathay, which antiently passed under the name of TERRA INCOGNITA, and was accompted the Northern limit of Scythia intra Imaum, hath on the South, Turchestan, and part of Zagathay, strictly and specially so called; extending Northwards to the Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and bounded on the West, with the River Ob.

The Inhabitants of this Northern Tract are now called by the name of Samoyeds; neither the people nor the Countrey known to the antient Romans: and indeed neither of them worth the knowing. The men black haired, naturally beardless, and not to be discerned from women, but that the women wear a long lock down to their eares. Clad from the head to the feet in Deer-skins, or Seil-skins, with the hairy side outwards; (nothing more wise in that than the other Tartars). Their kind of life more rude than theirs, if more rude may be, ranging from place to place without any propriety of house or dwelling; the leader of each company their Priest, whom they call their Popa, who at every one of their Removes is to offer sacrifice. Idolaters they are all, and most of them Witches, especially such as live most towards the East, and furthest off from the Moscovite, who many times destroy their Idols, and rob them of the skins of Bevers, black Foxes, and Sables, wherewith those Idols are set forth to the publick view, but beſtow on them greater heats in a good Fire; into which they commonly uſe to caſt them.

Theſe Zagathaian Provinces, with thoſe of Margiana, and Bactria, before deſcribed, made that part of Scythia, which antiently was called Scythia intra montem Imaum: though in the time of Ptolomy, when Margiana, Bactria, Saca, and Sogdiana, were reckoned of as Provinces of the Kingdom of Perſia; this Scythia was reſtrained within narrower bounds, and comprehended onely Turcheſtan and the Speciall Zagathay. Inhabited beſides the ſeveral Nations dwelling in the four Perſian Provinces, by many fierce and ſavage Tribes, as the Alani, Alanoeſi, Saubeni, and Maſſai, towards Terra incognita; the Tectoſages, and Aſiotæ, neer the Mountain Imaus; the Jaxarte on the banks of the River ſo called; and the Mologeni, not farr off; the Zarataæ, and Saſones, neer the Mountains Alani; the Galactophagi, or milk-eaters, more towards the Eaſt; the Taporei, and the Sychi, by the hills ſo named; and many others not material to be here remembred. All now united under the general name of Tartars, by whom firſt ſubdued.

And now we are at laſt come to Scythia, truely ſo named; Sarmatia Europæa and Aſiatica being called ſo onely by way of participation and reſemblance; becauſe the inhabitants thereof had ſo much in them of the manners and conditions of theſe natural Scythians. Here therefore we intend to ſpeak ſomething of them, their name, Antiquity, diſpoſition, cuſtomes, and the moſt memorable actions relating to them, as far as we can go by the light of ſtory.

Firſt, for the name, the Gracian Fablers have derived it from one Scythes the ſonne of Hercules, begotten by him on a Monſter, half woman, halfe Viper. The Gramarians, ἀπὸ τῆς σκύζης ſignifying to be fierce and angry; whence it is ſaid of the Jewiſh Puritans, who faſted to be ſeen of men σκυθρωποὶ ἀφανίζουσι that they looked with a ſowr, ſevere, and a disfigured Countenance. Goropius Becanus doth derive it rather from the Dutch word Schutten, ſignifying to ſhoot: agreeable enough to the cuſtome and exerciſe of the Scythians, who are obſerved by Herodotus, Pliny, Lucian, and other of the antient Writers, to be very good Archers. But that the word Schutten ſignifieth the ſame in the antient Scythick; or that the High-Dutch was originally the tongue of the Scythians, will not ſo eaſily appear.

Letting that paſs therefore as a matter not to be defined, let us look on the Antiquity of theſe Scythian Nations: and we ſhall find it to be great, if not greateſt of all. Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima, That the Scythians were of all others, the moſt antient people, was received for an Oracle, in the elder ages of the world: and ſo reſolved by way of verdict, when the great controverſie touching the Antiquity of thoſe Nations was to be determited betwixt the Ægyptian and the Scythian, who contended for it. And this hath paſſed with ſuch a generall approbation, that it is, now to be diſputed. In which regard I am ſo far of the judgement of Becanus in that particular as to conceive that the Countreys lying on the North of Mount Caucaſus (on which the Ark is thought moſt probably to have reſted) were peopled by the ſonnes of Noah before they travelled towards the Weſt, or ſet themſelves on building the Tower of Babel. We had elſe no doubt heard ſomewhat amongſt our Antiquaries, of the ſettling of ſome of thoſe Adventurers in theſe Northern Regions, when giving off that enterpriſe, and falling upon new plantations, they either went themſelves, or ſent forth their Colonies, into all places of the world. But of any ſuch plantations, negry quidem, not one word ſay they. Nor can it probably be ſuppoſed that Zoroaſter the King of Bactria could have raiſed 400000 fighting men out of that one Province (though ſome of the adjoining Provinces were took into the reckoning) in thoſe early daies, in which he did encounter Ninus the great Aſſyrian; had the Bactrians, and the reſt of theſe Scythian nations been but a Caſtling as it were of ſome ſecond ſwarm, and not coævall with the firſt. But beſides theſe preſumptions we have other proofs: viz. an old and conſtant tradition on this ſide the Mountains, that the great Vineyard of Margiana was of Noahs planting; and 2. the affirmation of Porcius Cato, (though one of the writers of Frier Annius) in Scythia Sagarenatum mortale genus, that mankind was repaired in theſe parts of Scythia, ſo called from Sabatius Sagi, an Armenian King, whoſe Dominions did extend thus far. So that I look upon it as a matter of ſtrong preſumption, if not demonſtrably concludent, that theſe People were of the firſt plantation which was made after the flood; before the reſt of the world was peopled by the Confuſion of Languages: Scytharum gens ſemper antiquiſſima, could not elſe hold good.

As for their diſpoſitions, and naturall inclinations, they are ſaid by Trogus, or his Epitomator Juſtine, to be Gens & laboribus & bellis aſpera, "A Nation patient of labours, and fierce in warr; of bodily "ſtrength immenſe and vaſt; yet ſo much maſters of their affections, that they made no further uſe of their "greateſt victories, than the augmentation of their fame. Theft they eſteemed the greateſt crime, and "that they puniſhed ſo ſeverely, that their Flocks and Herds might and did ſafely wander from one place to "another, without fear of ſtealing. In them they placed their greateſt wealth, feeding themſelves with "the milk thereof, and making their rayment of the skinns. Silver and gold they contemned as much "as it was coveted by others: there being no deſire of riches, where there was no uſe. Meum, and Tu-"um, thoſe common Barretours, and authors of debate amongſt other men, were not known amongſt "them: and therefore did not care for tillage, or made any incloſures, nor troubled themſelves with the "care of building. But putting their wives and children upon wains, or wagons, covered with hides a-"gainſt the weather, they removed from one place to another, no longer ſtaying upon one, than they found "graſs and herbage to ſuſtain their Cattel. So juſt in all their actions, that they needed not the "reſtraint of lawes; and had attained to ſuch an eminent degree of humane perfection, as not to covet. In "a word, that moderation which the Greeks endeavoured to attain unto by the help of learning and Phi-"loſophy, was to theſe ſo natural: that the ignorance of vice did as much contribute to their welfare, as " the knowledge of vertue. Such are the antient Scythians affirmed to be. And being such, it was a wonder that the great Monarchs of the world who had wealth at will, should make warre upon them, amongst whom there was nothing to invite an Army, or reward a Conquerour. Yet either on desire of glory, or to add unto the former multitudes over whom he reigned, they were first invaded by Cyrus the great Persian Monarch, who quarrelling with Tomyris Queen of the Massagetes, a warlike Nation, inhabiting on both sides of the River Oxus, discomfited her Army, and slew her sonne Spargapises, who commanded it. In revenge whereof, the Queen having in a second battail obtained the victory, and took Cyrus prisoner, is said to have cut off his head, and cast it into a boul of blood, with this scornful taunt, Satia te sanguine quem sitisti, now drink thy fill of blood which thou hast so thirsted. But others tell us otherwise of the success of this fight. By whom it is reported that the horse of Cyrus being disordered on the sight of some Elephants which came from India to her aid, and himself dangerously wounded, the Scythians had won the victory, but for the comming in of Amorges King of the Sacans, (who of a conquered Enemy was become his Confederate) by whom he was rescued, and b the 20000 fresh men which he brought with him, obtained the honour of the day; though long he lived not to enjoy it, dying not long after of the wounds he had received. With Alexander they are said to begin the war, as loth to be behindhand with him; arming themselves upon the building of Alexandria ultima, so neer their borders, which they conceived rather intended for a curb to hold them down, than for a bridle to keep them in. But being repulsed, and wise enough to suffer what they could not hinder, they sued for peace, and had it granted; Alexander being called away by the revolt of the Bactrians, a matter of more consequence than these Scythian brables. With Alexanders Successours they had nothing to do, nor with the Persian Kings of the Parthian race: the Parthians being their Allies, and of Scythian breed. And for the Romans, it is well observed by the Historian, Romanorum arma audivere magis quam sensere, that they had heard much of their valour, but never felt it: Remaining undisturbed in their honest poverty, till the Tartars an obscure and beggerly people brake out of their Prison, and carryed the whole World before them.

As for their Kings, I find some of their names laid down, but without any note of time in which their reigns might be supposed to begin or end. Nor can I think that the Kings occurring in that Catalogue, did either reign in the same place, or over the same Nations, or that they succeeded one another. Howsoever we will take their names as they come before us in this list of

The Kings of Scythia.

1. Scythes.
2. Napis.
3. Phitra.
4. Sagillus.
5. Targitana.
6. Plinus.
7. Scholypethus.
8. Panaxagora.
9. Tanais.
10. Indathyrsus.
11. Saulius.
12. Spargapisis.
13. Tomyris.
14. Aripethes.
15. Seiles.
16. Ostimasdes.
17. Lanthinus, the last of all those Scythian Kings who are conceived to have the government of these warlike Nations. But for my part I dare not say that ever any one King did command the whole people generally; each Tribe or Nation having their particular Kings, as in other places not reduced into form and order. And therefore for those Kings, if such Kings there were (as for some of them I durst venture to swear the contrary) they must be such as in their severall Countries were of greatest fame, most taken notice of in the world, or imployed in the conduct of their joynt and united forces; and so conceived to be the Kings of the whole Scythian Nation; as Cassibeline, King of the Trinobantes, and perhaps not that, is by some writers said to be the King of the Britains, because he had the conduct of their forces against Julius Cæsar.

CATHAY.

CATHAY is bounded on the West, with Zagathay, from which parted by the Mountain Imaus; on the East, with the Orientall Sea, and some part of China; on the North, with the Scythick, or Frozen Ocean; and on the South, with China onely. So called, as some think, from the Chate, an old Scythian people.

The Countrey, notwithstanding the cold Clime under which it lieth, is said to be abounding in wheat, rice, woll, hemp, silk, and musk: Great store of that medicinall root called Rhubarb, or Rha-barbarum, to difference it from the Rha-Ponrick growing on the banks of Volga. They have also very great herds of Camels, of whose hair they make those stuffs which are hence called Camelets, or Chamlets: and such an infinite breed of horses, that the great Cham feedeth yearly 10000 white mares, which he keeps for their milk. Some of their Rivers are reported also to yield golden sands. But whether it be so or not, certain it is, that it is so well provided of all things both for necessary use, and the pleasures of life, that it is thought to be inferiour to few Countries of Europe. The Air indeed not so temperate, as in many places; in summer-times extremely hot, and in winter miserably cold: the thunders and lightnings being here so terrible, that in summer many men die for fear, when they hear it. The winds no less violent than the thunder, do sometimes tear up trees by the roots, and beat men from their horses; but seldome bring with them any storm of rain: the greatest showers which they have, hardly wetting the ground.

The

The people are generally very warlike, ſtrong of body, quick of action, fearleſs of the greateſt dangers, patient both of want and labour: of mean ſtature, little eyes, ſharp-ſight, and thin beards. Induſtrious they are in ſeverall manufactures, of a good wit for diſpatch of buſineſs: more honourable than the reſt of the Tart ars, as loving to dreſs themſelves gorgiouſly, to fare ſumptuouſly (if there be occaſion) to live in handſome houſes, and to frequent the moſt populous and beſt-traded Cities. They accompt not any for a wife till ſhe bear them children, nor till then do medle with their dowries; but repudiate them at a certain time, if they find them barren. They reverence their Cham, or Emperor, even to adoration: not ſuffering any ſtranger to come in his preſence, except he be firſt purged: if any any otherwiſe preſume, it is preſent death.

The Religion publiquely allowed and countenanced, is that of Mahomet, but ſo that they obey the Pentateuch of Moſes, and obſerve many things there commanded. It was much laboured by Pope Innocent, and King Lewis of France, that they ſhould receive the Chriſtian faith; and they found ſome inclinations in the people, and chief Princes to it. But finding by the Mahometan Agents, who then laboured to bring them to their ſuperſtition, that Mahomet allowed of many wives, and other things more agreeable to their fleſhly luſts, they conformed to that: Yet ſo, that there are many Idolaters in Cathay it ſelf (I mean Cathay ſtrictly ſo called) and ſome Chriſtians alſo; the ſtate of whoſe affairs we have ſhewn before.

Chief Rivers of the whole, 1. Paliſanga, navigable up to the City of Cambalu, to which it is a means of conveying great ſtore of merchandiſe. 2. Caromoran, ſo broad and deep that no bridge can be made over it. 3. Quiam, one of the greateſt in the world; in length about an hundred dayes journey; for breadth, in moſt places ſix miles, in many eight, and in ſome ten. 4. Quiantu, about half a mile over, and well ſtored with fiſh. Here are alſo very many Lakes, both large, and uſefull, as 1. the Lake of Camiclu, in which are ſaid to be ſo many pearls as would make them of no value, if every man might have leave to fiſh for them: which is therefore interdicted (without ſpeciall licence) upon pain of death. 2. the Lake of Caraim, about an hundred miles in circuit, and ſo full of fiſh as might ſuffice for all the Countrey, did they love to eat of it. Their mountains we ſhall climb over in their ſeverall places.

It comprehendeth thoſe two large and ample Provinces which the Antients called Serica, and Scythia extra montem Imaum: the firſt conceived to be Cathay eſpecially ſo called; the laſt now named Altay, and ſubdivided into ſeverall Regions, of which more anon.

1. SERICA, hath on the Eaſt ſome part of China; on the South, the reſt of China, and ſome part of India; on the North, Altay, or Scythia extra montem Imaum; on the Weſt, the mountains of Imaus. In which I follow not the bounds laid down by Ptolomy, who for want of that knowledge in theſe remote Countries which theſe latter ages have afforded, is fain to ſhut it up on the North and Eaſt, with a Terra incognita. At the preſent it is called CATHAY, and that moſt probably from the Chata a Scythian People, who ſubduing the old Inhabitants, became maſters of it.

But for the name of Serica, it was derived originally from Sera, the chief City of it; whence the people had the name of Seres; very induſtrious in their times, and amongſt other things in the making of ſilks (made of a fine wooll growing on the leaves of trees) from hence named Serica. Of great eſteem amongſt the Romans, as is ſaid by Pliny, Tam multiplici opere, tam longinquo orbe petitur, ut in publico matrona tranſluceat; being farre fetch'd, and dear-bought, they were good for Ladies. Nor were they induſtrious onely, but chaſt and temperate. The names of Theeves and whores were not known amongſt them. They eat not any unclean fleſh, nor uſed the company of their wives, either after conception, or during their menſtrual purgations. So moderate of diet, that they lived commonly to the age of 200 years; the quietneſs and mildneſs of their diſpoſition helping much thereto. Of yellow hair, watchet or Sea-green eyes, and good compoſure. Men of few words, but very juſt in all which they ſaid or did. Governed by a common Councell of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the uſe of the State.

If you will take the character both of the Countrey and People from Ammianus Marcellinus, he will give it thus. "Firſt of the Countrey, that it is plentifull and large, circled about with a chain of "mountains, the two famous Rivers Oechardes and Banthiſis with a ſtill and ſlow ſtream running thorow "the midle of the incloſed plain, ſpatiouſly ſtretched out to the ſides of the precipices; in one place large "and open, in another lying flat and low with an eaſie deſcent; in which regard they have abundance of "corn, ſtore of Cattel, and plenty of Orchards. The temperature of the Air pleaſant and wholeſome, the "conſtitution of the weather cleer and pure, the blowing of gentle winds moſt commodious, and the woods "with a pretty glimmering of light, both within and under them: from whence the people with much "ſprinkling of water, ſoften that which the trees bring forth like a kind of Fleece, kemb a moſt fine "and tender matter, which they ſpin into ſilk, ſerving in former times for the nobility and gentry, now "become common to thoſe alſo of inferiour rank. Then for the People, he ſaith that they are a frugall "Nation, lovers of quiet, not troubleſome unto their neighbours, without the uſe of Arms, and the "knowledge of battels, declining the company of Strangers, and ſo farre from covetouſneſs, or curio-"ſities, that when any Merchants come unto them to buy their ſilks, without much bearing of the price, "they let them have ſuch things as are bred amongſt them, without looking after the commodities of o-"ther Countries. So he. And if he did not over-act the Panegriſt (as I ſee no reaſon why he ſhould) n-ever were people happier in the place of their dwelling, nor Countrie happier in its people.

Chief Mountains of it (and mountains they had very many) were 1. the Montes Caſii, and 2. Auzacii towards the Eaſt. 3. the Annibæ, environing a great part of the Countrey. 4. the Aſmiræi, 5. and thoſe called Serici, neer the City Sera. 6. Tagurus. 7. Ennodorus, and 8. Ottorocorus. But by by what names now called it is hard to say. Out of which flowed these principall Rivers, 1. Oechardes, by Pliny called Cambris, rising out of the montes Auzacii; 2. Psitara, issuing out of the Asmiri; 3. Bautisus, whose fountain is in the montes Casii; and 4. Lanos.

Towns of chief note amongst them, 1. Sera, which gave the name of Serica, and Seres, to the Province and people. 2. Ottorocora, neer the hills so called; whence it had the name. 3. Issedon, for distinctions sake called Issedon Serica, to difference it from another of that name in Scythia, called Issedon Scythica; the chief City of the Issedones, gens magna, one of the greatest Nations in all the Countrey, as is said by Ptolomy. 4. Orosana, 5. Drosache, 8. Daxata, of which little memorable. But these and all the rest (about nine more named by Ptolomy) being all decaied, let us next look on the chief Cities, as it stands at the present, by the name of Cathay: The principall whereof, 1. Cambalu, supposed to be the Issedon Serica of the Antients; Built of free stone, and situate in the middest of the Countrey, as the heart and center to the rest. It is seated on the River Polysanga, honoured with the great Chams residence, and enriched with a mighty confluence of Merchants of all sorts. Besides other merchandises, there are every year 10000 Carts loaded with silk, sent thither from China. This City is in compass 28 miles, besides the suburbes: in which, besides other inhabitants of all sorts, are 50000 Astrologers, or rather fortune-tellers. 2. Xandu, the Royall Palace of the Emperor, is of a soure square figure, every side extending 8 miles in length. Within this quadrant is another, whose sides are 6 miles long: and within that another of four miles square, which is the Palace it self. Betwe n these several Walls, are Walks, Gardens, Orchards, F shponds, places for all manner of exercise; and Parks, Forrests, Chases for all manner of game. 3. Carian, where the women are said to guild their teeth. 4. Gouza, a fair City and a great, adorned with many Idol-Monasteries. 5. Careanfu, neer which there groweth an herb called Chiay-Cathay, of admirable effect against many diseases, and so esteemed of by the natives, that they value an Ounce of this, at a Sack of Rhubarb. 6. Segui, the residence of a Nestorian Bishop.

The old Inhabitants hereof, in those parts which lay next the Scythians, are said to have been Anthropophagi, or man-eaters, most probably a Scythian Nation, that custome being so abhorrent from the mildness of the Serican temper. Or else, we must correct the Copies of Ptolomy, by the History of Ammianus Marcellinus, who instead of Anthropophagi, placeth the Alirrophagi in the self same tract. The other Nations not distained with the like reproaches, are the Sizyges, and Anabi, not farre off the Auzacian mountains; the Pisa neer the River Oechardes; the Geranei, and Rhabbanei, their neerest neighbours; the Throani dwelling towards the East, the Bata and Ottocorora more towards the South. These with the residue, governed by a Common Councel of 5000 men, every one of which was to find an Elephant for the service of the Common-wealth, as was said before. And more than this we hear not of them in the way of story: the natives never going abroad to vent their wares, and having little speech with Strangers, when they come amongst them. Being vanquished by the Chatæ, a Scythian Nation, from whom it is likely that it took the name of C A T H A Y; (for in this I go but by conjecture:) they continued under Kings of their own, till subdued by the Tartars; against whom they made such stout resistance, being besieged by Cingis in their principall City, that when they wanted stones to cast out of their engines, they supplied that want with molten silver, and held it out so long, that Cingis finding victuals to grow short in his Camp, commanded that every tenth man should be eaten. But at the last being undermined, the Town was taken, the Citizens massacred, and their King or Emperor (as some call him) slain: after whose death, and not before, Cingis assumed the title of Cham, or Emperor. The residue of their story we shall have hereafter.

ALTAY, called also SCYTHIA EXTRA IMAUM, is bounded on the South, with Cathay; on the West, with the mountain Imaus; on the North, with Tartaria Antiqua; on the East, with the Ocean. Called Scythia, because planted by a brood of the Scythians. Extra Imaum was put to it, to difference it from that part of Scythia which lay on the West side of that mountain, neerest unto the Greeks and Romans. But now the Mountain, and the Countrey, have the name of Altay.

To look upon it as it standeth by the name of Scythia extra Imaum, we find not any thing delivered of the Rivers or Mountains of it, but what is common unto them with the neighbouring nations: the mountains called Auzacii, Casii, and Ennodorus, being common unto this with Serica, as Imaus jointly to both the Scythia's, which it divided antiently the one from the other: though now this last be reckned to belong to Cathay alone, because the Tartars on both sides of it profess themselves subjects to that Cham. This the most famous mountain in the East of Asia; beginning at the shores of the Scythick or Frozen Ocean; and extending thence directly Southwards unto Cape Comari, a Promontory of the Southern or Indian Seas. By which account it divideth the Greater Asia into East and West, as Taurus doth into North and South, which Mountain it crosseth in right Angles, about the Longitude of 140. as before was said. That part hereof which lyeth on the South of Taurus, was by the Antients called Bitigo; and by the modern is named Gates: of which we shall speak more when we come to India. That on the North of Taurus, called Imaus properly, was antiently most memorable for dividing the vast Countreys of the Scythians into Scythia intra Imaum, and Scythia extra Imaum; a division much observed by the old Geographers: now chiefly memorable for being the Sepulchre of some of the Chams of Tartary; most generally known by the name of Altay, but by some called Belgion.

Chief Towns hereof were 1. Auzacia, at the foot of the hills so named. 2. Chaurana, the chief City of the Chauranai. 3. Sata. 4. Issedon Scythica, so called to difference it from the other of that name name in Serica. Theſe with the reſt, and all the Countrey, as far as it was known in the daies of Ptolomy, inhabited by the Abii, Hippophagi, or horſe-eaters, a diet ſtill uſed by the Tartars or modern Scythians. 2. The Iſſedones, who are ſaid by Pomponius Mela to make Carouſing Cups of their Fathers heads, firſt trimed and gilded. 3. The Chamranei, and 4. the Chata; who being (as it ſeemeth) the moſt potent Nation, cauſed all the reſt to be called by the name of Cathay; communicating that name alſo to the conquered Seres. Beſides the poſſeſſions of which Tribes, there were alſo the Regions of Acbaſſa, Caſia, and Auzacitis, theſe laſt ſo called from the Mountains upon which they bordered.

More than this we have not to ſay of this Countrey by the name of Scythia, there being nothing memorable of it in the courſe of ſtory, or worth the obſervation in the way of Chorography. Let us therefore look upon it, as preſented to us by the name of ALTAY: though therein I ſhall trouble my ſelf no further than by giving a brief touch on the ſeverall parts of it. Of which the moſt that can be ſaid, will be but little for the information of the judicious Readers; who are not to be bettered by the names of places, if there be not ſomething in them of further uſe. Now for theſe Provinces the principall of them are, 1. Caſcar, 2. Cheſmur, 3. Lop, 4. Camul, 5. Tainfu, 6. Caindu, 7. Carazan, 8. Cardandan, 9. Erginul, 10. Tanguth.

1. CASCAR, bordering upon China, a Mahometan Countrey, but admitting of ſome Chriſtians alſo. In ſome parts both ſexes do indulge themſelves this mutual privilege, that if the husband or the wife be abſent above twenty daies, the other party is at liberty to mary again.

2. CHESMUR, the inhabitants whereof are generally both Idolaters, and Inchanters, cauſing the dumb Idols to ſpeak, the winds to riſe, and the ſun to be darkned. For ſtudying which black Arts (if they come to them by ſtudy) they have many Monaſteries, in which their Hermits or Monaſticks live a ſtrict kind of life, and are very abſtemious.

3. LOP, memorable for a great Deſart of thirty daies journey: ſo true a Deſart, that whoſoever doth not mean to be ſtarved muſt carry all his victuals with him. Dangerous to travellers, if not beforehand made acquainted with their danger; the evill ſpirits uſing to call men by their names, and make them go aſtray from their company, where they periſh with famine, or are devoured with wild beaſts. The chief Town hereof called Lop, giving name to both.

4. CAMUL, an Idolatrous Countrey, the people whereof accompt it a great honour to them to have their wives and ſiſters at the pleaſure of ſuch as they entertain. From which brutiſh cuſtome when reſtrained by Mango Cham, they petitioned him at three years end to be reſtored again to their former liberty; proteſting they could never thrive ſince they left that cuſtome. Which deſire of theirs was at laſt granted, and is ſtill in uſe.

5. TAINFU, more civil than the reſt, the people being very induſtrious and good Artificers, making the moſt part of the Arms which are uſed by the Cham; and ſome alſo which they ſell to Merchants.

6. CAINDU, with a Town in it of the ſame name, of great reſort by Merchants (ſuch as we commonly call petit Chapmen) for the Womens veils here made, with very great Art, of the barks of Trees. And it is well that they have veils to hide their ſhameleſsneſs, the women of this Tract being proſtituted unto every Traveller.

7. CARAZAN, inhabited by a barbarous and ſavage people, who in the day-time live in dens for fear of Serpents, with which (and ſome of them ten paces long, and ten ſpans in thickneſs) they are much infeſted; and in the night go forth to prey upon Wolves and Lyons. They have an uſe, that when any ſtranger cometh into their houſes, of an handſome ſhape, to kill him in the night; not out of deſire of ſpoil, or to eat his body, but that the ſoul of ſuch a comely bodie, might remain amongſt them.

8. CARDANDAN, neer Carazan, and as ſavage as that. The people whereof draw black lines on their bodies, which they count for the greateſt Ornament. In caſe of ſickneſs they ſend not to the Phyſician, but the next Inchanters: who taking Counſail of the Devil, apply ſome remedy; or if they think the man paſt cure, they tell him that his offences are grown too great to admit of help; and ſo put him off.

9. ERGINUL, poſſeſſed by an Idolatrous people, but mixed with ſome Mahometans, and Neſtorian Chriſtians. In which Countrey they have certain Bulls as big as Elephants, with mains of fine white haire like ſilk, ſome of which they tame; and betwixt them and their Kine engender a race of ſtrong and laborious Beaſts, not inferiour in that kind to Oxen. Here is alſo found a beaſt of an exquiſite ſhape, but not bigger than a Goat, which at every full Moon hath a ſwelling under the belly, which being cut off by the Hunters, and dryed in the Sunne, proveth to be the beſt Musk in the World.

10. TANGUT, the greateſt and moſt potent of all the reſt, inhabited by an induſtrious and laborious people, amongſt whom the Art of printing is ſaid to have been extant a thouſand years. Bleſſed heretofore with a great increaſe of Chriſtianity; but now the Gentiles or Idolaters make the greateſt part, with ſome Mahometans amongſt them. And for the ſerving of thoſe Idols, they have not onely many large and beautifull Temples, built in the manner of Chriſtian Churches, and capable of 4 or 5000 perſons; but alſo many fair Monaſteries for the uſe of their Votaries and Recluſes. They are poſſeſſed of many Towns, moſt of them well fortified, and planted with good ſtore of Artillery. The chief of which, 1. Sachian, bordering on the Deſart of Lop, inhabited by ſome of all three Religions; in which it is affirmed that they firſt uſed the Art of printing. 2. Campion, the Metropolis, or Mother City of this this Countrey: where the Christians in the time of Paulus Venetus had three fair Churches: now overnumbred by the Gentiles. who have here many Monasteries for the use of their Idols, and many Religious persons dedicated to their service only. Who though they live more honestly than the rest of their Order, and hold it an impiety to tempt a woman to the act of lust; yet if the woman make the offer, they hold it no small sinne to refuse her curtesie. 3. Succuir, situate amongst Mountains clothed with Rhubarb, from whence conveyed by Merchants over all the world, but so neglected by the natives, that did not the forein Merchant bring it into request, they would scorn to gather it. This once a Kingdome of it self, but subject now, with Targuth, to the Cham of Cathay, or the Great Cham of Tartary.

5. TARTARIA ANTIQUA.

TARTARIA ANTIQUA hath on the South, Altay; on the West, and North, the main Scythick Ocean; on the East the Streights of Anian, by which parted from America. So called, because the first habitation of the Tartars, who from this den or Jail, made their first eruptions, and have since over-grown so much of Asia.

The Countrey cold, and comfortless, as lying under the Polar Circle, and in part beyond it: not fit for any but for such as can live no where else: yet heretofore a receptacle of many Christians (though those of the Nestorian Sect) who here enjoyed that liberty of their Religion, which the Persians and Saracens denyed them in more pleasing Countries. It containeth many Regions, some not considerable. Those of most note, are 1. Thebet, 2. Tabor, 3. Tenduc, 4. Bargu, 5. Anian, and 6. Tartar.

1. THEBET, a fenny Region, and full of woods, rich in Corall which they find on the Sea-shore, and use it instead of money. So named from the chief City of it, the ordinary Seat of the Abassi, or Pope of this Idolatrous people; much reverenced, and having in his power the disposing of all Offices which concern the service of their Idols; They have also some good store of Musk; and abundance of wild beasts which are bred in their Forests. But no beasts wilder than the people, who in times past (if not at the present also) used to bury their Parents in their own bowels, and to make drinking cups of their skuls; for fear lest in the midst of their jollity they should forget their Progenitors. Yet not more barbarous than immodest; it being contrary to their custome to take a wife that is a Virgin. And therefore the Mothers use to prostitute their daughters to the Merchant-Strangers, who having had their pleasure of them gratify them with a Jewell or some other present; which they wear on their wedding day: she being the most acceptable Bride to her husband, who bringeth the greatest Dowry with her of those base rewards. It contained once eight petit Kingdomes, (Homagers to the Kings of Tenduc) with many Cities: but now laid desolate by the Tartar.

2. TABOR, once a distinct Kingdome also. One of the Kings whereof in the year 1540. came to the Courts of Charles the fift, and Francis the first; where he found Princely entertainment. But upon proof that he was a Factor for the Jews, and secretly solicited many unto that Religion, by the command of Charles, he was burnt at Mantua.

3. TENDUC, a populous Kingdome of it self, but greater in name and power, the Kings hereof commanding all these North-East parts, as far as the borders of Cathay. Christian in Religion, till the Conquest of it by the Tartars, though according to the Nestorian tendries: but now Mahometan for the most part, with some remainders, and but few, of Christianity. Divided into many large and spacious Provinces, as Chinchintales, Cerguth, Egrigaia, Cercham, others of less note, so called according to the names of their principall Towns, or having some Towns in them of the name of the Provinces.

Those of most note in Tenduc it self, 1. Coras, the ordinary sepulture of the Kings of Tenduc, before it was subdued by the Tartars, and since that also. 2. Caracoras, where Cingis was first honoured with the Title of King. The Kings hereof bearing the port of Kings, and the office of Priests, were antiently called by the name of Presbyter Johannes, or Prester John: a title now erroniously conferred by some on the Emperour of the Abassines or Æthiopians in Africk. Concerning which it is a wonder, that Joseph Scaliger, a man of such infinite reading, should be so deceived: and by the authority of his judgement deceive so many. For finding that there was a Presbyter Johannes in the North of Asia, and hearing vulgarly that title given unto him in Africk; he fell upon a fancie that this Abassine Emperour was formerly of so great power, as to extend his empire over India, and the North of Asia; and in this last, for the assurance of his conquests, to hold his residence. A monstrous, and undefensible fancy. For besides that all histories, even those of the Abassines themselves, are silent in it: how improbable is it, that a King reigning in the heart of Africk, should subdue the most remote parts of Asia; and there keep his Court: so many great States and most puissant Nations, being interposed? or that so memorable an exploit should be buried in silence, and found in no record but in Scaligers head? Besides it is well known, and generally granted, that the Presbyter John of Asia, was by Sect a Nestorian; but he that is so called in Africk, of the Sect of the Jacobites: and further, that the Christians of Æthiopia are circumcised, which never was reported of those of Asia.

Letting this pass therefore as an unwarrantable, and ill-grounded fancy, we are to know that formerly this Province of Tenduc, was under the old Kings of Cathay, till the time of Cin-Cham, the King thereof. After whose death a certain Nestorian shepheard (that is to say, the master of great flocks of sheep) being Governour of the Naymans, a People of Tenduc, took to himself the title of king of Tenduc; whom they called by the name of Praest John, or Prince John (the same word in their language, as in the Hebrew, sigſignifieth both Prieſt and Prince.) Dying he bequeathed his eſtate and flocks to his brother Unt-cham, (commonly called in one word Uncham) a greater ſheep-maſter than he, whoſe flocks ranged over all the paſtures of the Moles, or Monguls and Tartars, though dwelling fourteen daies journey off, whom he had in ſubjection: the title of Prieſt John, or Presbyter Johannes, going along with the dignity and Royall eſtate. And though afterwards this Uncham was ſubdued by the Tartars, yet his poſterity for long time were ſuffered to enjoy the title of Kings and Presbyters; (but Vaſſals, and Homagers, to the Great Cham): the Great Chams, in regard of their nobility, and royall parentage, beſtowing their daughters on them in marriage; as is ſaid by William de Rubraquis, who travelled in theſe Countries, Anno 1253. the King hereof being then named George (the fourth from Uncham) but commonly called Presbyter Johannes, as his Fathers were

4. BARGU, on the extreme North-weſt, bordering on both thoſe ſides the cold Scythick Ocean ſituate under the North-ſtarre; of the ſame nature, both for the ſoyl and people, as that of the Tartars. And

5. ANIAN, on the North-Eaſt, oppoſite unto it, giving name unto the Streights of Anian, lying betwixt Tartarie and America, which Streights the Tartars, and ſome other of theſe Northern nations, are thought to have paſſed over, and to plant that Countrey.

6. TARTAR, ſo called of the great River Tartar, the principall of this Northern Traſt, and giving name unto the Tartars: this being their Originall Countrey, where they lived like beaſts, having neither faith, nor letters, nor habitation, nor the uſe of Arms, nor any reputation amongſt their neighbours. In matter of Religion, the worſt ſort of Gentiles, worſhipping the Sunne, Moon, Fire, and the very Earth: to which they offered in the morning faſting, the firſt of their meats and drinks.

Their Idols made of Felt, and placed on both ſides of the doors of their tents or booths, as the preſervers of their Cattel, and the Authors of milk. Divided into five Clans, or Tribes, denominating ſo many Towns and territories in which they dwelt, that is to ſay, 1. Mongul. 2. Teke-Mongul, or the Great Mongul) 3. Sommongul, or the water-Mongul. 4. Mercat. 5. Metrit: each of them Governed by its Chief, as commonly it is amongſt barbarous Nations; though all thoſe Chiefs ſubordinate to ſome higher power. Oppreſſed by Uncham, or Unt-cham, the King of Tenduc, who invaded their paſtures, and compelled them to pay unto him the tenth of their Cattel, with joint conſent they removed ſomewhat further off, and denied their Tribute. This opportunity was taken by Cingis, one of the Tribe of the Teka-Monguls, and ſo well husbanded, that they admitted him for their King. For publiſhing abroad amongſt the Credulous people, that an armed man appeared to him in his ſleep, with a white horſe, and ſaid, O Cangius, or Cingis, it is the will of immortall God, that thou be Governour of the Tartars, and free them from bondage, and paying tribute; he found, a generall belief; eſpecially amongſt thoſe of his own Clan, who joyning themſelves to him, followed him, as their Ring-leader, in all his actions. Thus backed and ſtrengthned he made warre againſt the Sommonguls, ſlew their Commander, and ſubdued them: and by their help, ſucceſſively aſſaulted the Mercats, and Metrits, whom he alſo vanquiſhed. And having thus ſubdued all the Clans of the Tartars, and added the eſtates of Thebet, and Tanguth, unto his Dominions, he was by the conſent of the ſeven Princes, or Chiefs of their Clans, (Thebet, and Tanguth being added to the former number) placed on a ſeat on a peece of Felt, (the beſt throne they had or could afford) and ſalured King; with as great reverence and ſolemnity as their ſtate could yield. And firſt to make triall of his power, and their obedience, he commanded the ſeven Chiefs or Princes to ſurrender their places, and each of them to cut off the head of his eldeſt ſonne: which was done accordingly. Had John of Leiden been a Scholar, as he was but a Botcher, I ſhould think he had ſtudied the Acts of Cingis, and proceeded by them. Aſſured by this of their fidelity and obedience, he ſet upon the Naymans, a people of the Kingdom of Tenduc, whom he overcame. And now conceiving himſelf fit for ſome great alliance, he ſent to Uncham, and demanded one of his daughters for his wife, Which Uncham with ſome threats, but more ſcorn, denying; he marched againſt him, ſlew him in the field, and poſſeſſed his daughter, and with her alſo his eſtate. Proud with this good ſucceſs, and encouraged by ſo great an increaſe of power, he invaded the Kingdome of Cathay; pretending for that alſo the authority of an heavenly viſion, in the name of the immortall God: in which attempt, diſcomfited at firſt with a very great overthrow, but at laſt victorious; conquering the ſeveral nations of it by one and one, till in the end he brought the warre to the chief City of that Kingdome, which at laſt he took, and therewithall the title of Cham or Emperor. Continuing in this dignity for the ſpace of ſix years, and every year adding ſomewhat to his dominions, he was at laſt wounded in the knee at the Caſtle of Thaygin, of which wound he died, and was honourably buried in Mount Altay.

This is the beſt accompt I am able to give of the beginning of this great Empire, the originall of this ſpreading Nation, and the deſcription of the Country of their firſt habitation. They that have chriſtned ſome of the moſt Northern parts of it by the names of the Tribes of Dan, and Naphtalim, and accordingly placed them in their Maps, might with more credit have ſupplied thoſe vacant places, which they knew not otherwiſe how to fill, with the pictures of wild beaſts, or monſtrous fiſhes: which might well enough have pleaſed the eye, without betraying the judgement of the looker on. Of his Succeſſors I am able to make no certain Catalogue, their names being doubtfully delivered, and the ſucceſſion much confounded amongſt our writers: the names of the Provincial Sultans being many times impoſed upon us, inſtead of thoſe of the Chams themſelves. But we will wade through thoſe difficulties as well as we can, and exhibit as perfect a Catalogue of them, as the light of ſtory will direct me: firſt adding (what ſhould have been before remembered) that it is recorded, that Cingis before he joyned battel with Uncham, conſulted with his Diviners and Aſtrologers of the ſucceſs. They taking a green reed, cleft it aſunder, writ on the one the name of Cingis, and Uncham on the other; and placed them not farre aſunder. Then fell they to reading reading their Charms, and conjurations; and the reeds fell a fighting in the ſight of the whole Army, Cingis Reed overcomming the other: whereby they foretold the joyfull news of victory to the Tartars, which accordingly hapned. And this was the firſt ſtep by which this baſe and beggerly Nation began to mount unto the chair of Empire and Soveraignty; whereas before they lived like beaſts, having neither letters, nor faith, nor dwelling, nor reputation, nor valor, nor indeed any thing befitting a man, as before was ſaid.

The great Chams of Tartars.

A.C.

1162. 1. Cingis, Cinchius, Zingis, or Changius, was made King or Cham of the Tartars; he ſubdued Tenduch, and Cathaia, changing the name of Scythians, and Scythia, to Tartartans, and Tartaria. 6.

1168. 2. Jocuchan Cham, or Hoccata, ſucceeded. In his time the name of Tartar was firſt known in Europe, Anno 1212. in which year they drove the Polſockie from the banks of the Euxine Sea. By his Captain Bathu, or Roido, he ſubdued Moſcovia; planted his Tartars in Taurica Cherſoneſus; waſted Hungary, Boſnia, Servia, Bulgaria; and by his other Captains, took Perſia from the Turks.

3. Zaincham, Bathu, or Barcham, ruined the Turks Kingdom of Damaſcus, and Aſia the leſſe.

4. Gino Cham, whoſe daughter conveyed the Empire unto her husband Tamerlane or Tamberline.

1370. 5. Tamir-Cutlu, Tamir-Cham, or Tamerlane, a great tyrant, but withall an excellent Souldier. It is thought, that he ſubdued more Provinces in his life-time, than the Romans had done in 800 years. Of whoſe acts we have ſpoke at large. Dying, he divided his great Empire amongſt his Children, as Perſia to Mizi Charok his fourth ſonne, Zagathay to another, (perhaps unto Sautochus his eldeſt ſonne) and ſo to others.

1405. 6. Lutrochin, the ſecond ſonne of Tamerlane, ſucceeded in Cathay, though the eldeſt was before proclaimed, which his Father had before prognoſticated: who when his ſons came to him before his death, laid his hand on the head of Sautochus who was the eldeſt, but lifting up the chin of Lutrochin, who was the ſecond. He lived not long, ſucceeded to by

7. Ailan, who added little to his eſtate.

8. Mungo Cham, to whom Haiton an Armenian Prince (and the chief Compiler of the Tartarian Hiſtory) went for ayd againſt the Caliph of Bagdat. By whoſe perſwaſion the ſaid Mango Cham is ſaid to have been chriſtned, with all his houſhold. and many nobles of both ſexes.

9. Cublay Cham, the ſonne of Mango.

10. Tamor Cham, the Nephew of Cablay by his ſonne Cingis.

11. Demyr Cham, the great Cham of Cathay in the year 1540 or thereabouts. What the names of the Chams are, who have ſince reigned, we cannot learn; nor what memorable acts have been done among them. The great diſtance of Countries, and difficulty of the journey have hindred further diſcoveries. For the great Cham, and his next neighbour the King of China, will neither ſuffer any of their ſubjects to travell abroad; nor permit any foreiners to view their dominions, or enter into them; unleſs either Embaſſadours or Merchants, and thoſe but ſparingly, and under very great reſtraints, to avoid all giving of intelligence touching their affairs.

The government is tyrannicall; the great Cham being Lord of all; and in his tongue, (beſides which they have almoſt no laws) conſiſteth the power of life or death. He is called by the ſimple vulgar, the ſhadow of ſpirits, and ſonne of the immortall God: and by himſelf is reputed to be the Monarch of the whole world. For this cauſe every day aſſoon as he hath dined, he cauſeth his trumpets to be ſounded; by that ſign giving leave to the other Kings and Princes of the earth, to go to dinner. A fine dream of univerſal Monarchy. At the death of the Cham, the ſeven chief Princes aſſemble to crown his ſonne; whom they place on a black coarſe cloth; telling him, if he reign well, heaven ſhall be his reward; if ill, he ſhall not have ſo much as a corner of that black cloth to reſt his body on: then they put the crown on his head, and kiſſing his feet, ſwear unto him fealty and homage. And at the funerall of theſe great Monarchs, they uſe to kill ſome of his guard-Soudiers, whereof he hath 12000 in continuall pay; ſaying unto them, Ite & domino noſtro ſervite in alia vita. Paulus Venetus reporteth, that at the obſequies of Mango Cham, no fewer than 10000 were ſlain on this occaſion.

Theſe Chams are for the moſt part ſevere juſticers, and puniſh almoſt every ſmall fact with ſudden death; but theft eſpecially. Inſomuch that a man in Cambalu taking a pail of milk from a womans head, and beginning to drink thereof, upon the womans out-cry was apprehended; and cut a ſunder with a ſword, ſo that the blood and the milk came out together. Nor are Adultery or lying puniſhed with leſs than death, and ſo ordained to be by the lawes of Cingis. their firſt Emperour, a wiſer man, than poſſibly could be expected from ſo rude a Countrey, and of ſo little breeding in the knowledge of books or buſineſs: the Tartars being utterly without the uſe of letters, till the conqueſt of the Huyri, a Cathaian nation, but of Chriſtian faith.

What forces the Great Chams, in the height of their power, were able to draw into the field, may be conjectured at by the Army of Tamerlane, conſiſting of 1200000 horſe and foot, as was ſaid before. And looking on them as confined within Cathay, we ſhall find them not inferiour to the greateſt Princes. For Cublay Cham, long after the diviſion of this great eſtate, which was made by Tamerlane, had in the field againſt Naian his Unkle, and one Caidu, who had then rebelled, an Army of 100000 foot, and 360000 horſe; there there being 500000 horſe on the other ſide. Which made almoſt a million of men in both Armies. And this is probable enough, if report be true touching the Chams of Zagathay and thoſe of Turcheſtan, (before reduced under the obedience of the other) of which the firſt is ſaid to have been able to raiſe 300000 horſe, and the laſt an hundred thouſand more. For ſtanding forces, he maintains 12000 horſe, diſtributed amongſt four Captains, for the guard of his perſon: beſides which he hath great forces in every Province, and within four miles of every City, ready to come upon a call, if occaſion be: ſo that he need not fear any outward invaſion, and much leſs any homebred rebellions.

Of the Revenues of the Cham, I can make no eſtimate, but may conclude them to be what he liſt himſelf: he being the abſolute Lord of all, the Subject without any thing he can call his own. But that which ordinarily doth accrew unto him, is the tenth of wooll, Silk, hemp, corn, and Cattel. Then doth he draw into his own hands all the gold and ſilver which is brought into the Countrey, which he cauſeth to be melted, and preſerved in his treaſurie: impoſing on his people inſtead of money, in ſome places Cockle-ſhels, in others a black coin made of the bark of trees, with his ſtamp upon it. And beſides this, hath to himſelf the whole trade of Pearl-fiſhing, which no body upon pain of death dare fiſh for, but by leave from him. So that his Treaſury is conceived to be very rich, though his Annual in-come be uncertain, or not certainly known.

And ſo much for Tartary.

OF CHINA.

CHINA is bounded on the East, with the Orientall Ocean; on the West, with India; on the North, with Tartary, from which separated by a continued chain of hills, part of those of Ararat; and where that chain is broken off, or interrupted, with a great wall extended 400 Leagues in length: built as they say, by Tzaintzon, the 117th King hereof; and on the South, partly with Cauchin-China, a Province of India, partly with the Ocean.

It was called antiently Sina, or Sinarum Regio, by which name it is still called at the present by our modern Latinists; and from whence that of China seems to be derived. By Paulus Venetus called Mangi, by the neighbouring Countries Sanglai, by the natives Taine, and Taybinzo, which last, signifies no other than a Realm; or by way of excellence, the Realm. By the Arabians it is called Tzinin; and the inhabitants call themselves by the name of Tangis.

It is said to contain in circuit 69516 Diez of China measure, which reduced to our European measure, will make a compass in the whole of 3000 Leagues: the length thereof extended from the borders of India, to Colim, one of the Northern Provinces of this Continent, 1800 Leagues. But they that say so, speak at randome. For besides that 1800 Leagues in length, must needs carry a greater compass than 3000 Leagues; they make it by this reckoning to be bigger than Europe, which I think no sober man will grant. And answerable to this vast compass, it is said also to contain no fewer than 15. Provinces, every one of which is made to be of a greater Continent than the greatest Realm we know in Europe: Yet not a Continent of waste ground, or full of unhabitable Desarts, as in other places; but full of goodly Towns and Cities. The names of which Provinces, and the number of their Towns and Cities, I have thought fit once for all to lay down in this Diagramme following.

The Provinces, Cities, and Towns in China.

By which it doth appear, that in these fifteen Provinces there are 591 Cities; 1593 walled Towns; and besides them 1154 Castles, 4200 Towns unwalled, and such an infinite number of Villages, that the whole Country seems to be but one City onely.

It reacheth from the 130th, to the 160th Degree of Longitude: and from the Tropick of Cancer, to the 53d degree of Latitude. So that it lyeth under all the Climes from the third to the nineth, inclusively: the longest Summers day in the Southern parts, being thirteen hours and fourty minutes; increased in the most Northern parts, to 16 hours, and 3 quarters. Enjoying by this site an air somewhat of the hottest, especially in those parts which ly neer the Tropick; but withall very sound and healthy, and fit for the production of the choisest fruits.

The Countrey very rich and fertile insomuch that in many places they have two, and in some three harvests in a year; well cultivated, and sowed with all manner of grain, and planted with the best kind of fruits; which do not onely come to a speedy maturity, but to more excellencie and perfection than any of these Western parts. The like is also said of their Pearls, and Bezoar; fairer and of greater vertue than those of America, or any other part of the world besides. Particularly it aboundeth with Wheat, Barley, Rice, Wooll, Cotton, Olives, Vines, Flax, Silk, all kind of metals, Fruits, Cattle, Sugar, Honey, Rhubarb, Camphire, Ginger, all kinds of Spices, medicinall woods called China-wood, by the name of the Countrey, Musk and Salt: the custome for which last in one City onely, which is that of Canton, amounteth to the yearly value of 180000 Crownes. It yieldeth also an Herb, out of which they press a delicate juice, which doth not onely serve them instead of wine, but preserveth their health, and freeth them from many of those inconveniences which the immoderate use of wine doth breed to others. Such store of Poultry of all sorts, but of Ducks especially, that in the Town of Canton onely before mentioned mentioned, it is thought there are 12000 eaten every day, one day with another.

The people are for the most part of swart complexion, but more or less, according to their neerness to the heats of the Sun; short-nosed, black-eyed, and of very thin beards. They wear their garments very long, and are so much delighted with their own fashion and composure, that as the Negroes use to paint the devil White, as a colour contrary to their own: so when these Chinois use to draw the picture of deformed persons, they set him forth in a short coat, broad eyes, long nose, and a bushy beard. They are much given unto their Bellies, and eat thrice a day, but then not immoderately: drink their drink hot, and eat their meat with two sticks of Ivory, Ebonie, or the like, not touching their meat with their hands at all, and therefore no great foulers of linnen. The use of silver forks with us, by some of our Spruce gallants taken up of late, came hence into Italy, and from thence to England. Their mariages they celebrate most commonly in the New-Moon, and many times put them off till March, when the year beginneth with them as it doth with us: in which solemnity they spare for no cost or charge, musick, and Stage-plays, and good cheer many daies together. Yet doth not this take them off a jot from their natural industry, and their proficiencie in Manufactures and Mechanick Arts. For the sonne is bound to follow his fathers occupation: which law preventing the roaving about of idle people, and exciting in each breast an emulation of every Art; maketh the Inhabitants excellent Artificers. In giving almes they are bountiful to the maimed, and the lame; but reject the blind, as being sufficiently able to get sustenance for themselves by corporall labour; as grinding of Corn, &c. They have long enjoyed the benefit of Printing, before it was known in Europe: but print not as we do, from the left hand to the right; nor as the Jews, from the right hand, to the left; but from the top of the leaf, downward to the bottom. Gunnes also have been used among them time out of mind: whence they are so well conceited of themselves, that they use to say, They themselves have two eyes, the Europæans one, and the rest of the people of the world, not one. A pretty flourish of self-praising. Now Gunnes were in use in these Eastern Countries, and consequently also amongst them, even when Bacchus made his expedition into India (which was some three or four years before, or after the departure of Israel out of Ægypt,) Sir Walter Rawleigh seemeth to affirm: because Philostratus in the life of Apollonius Tyanæus, telleth us how Bacchus was beaten from a City of Oxydracæ, by thunder and lightning; which he interpreteth to be the Cannon. But certainly himself in another place of his most excellent book, acknowledgeth this Philostratus to have written fabulously: and therefore no fit foundation for a conceit so contrary to probability, and the opinion of all times. Besides, whereas Dion telleth us, that by the benefit of thunder and lightning from Heaven, Severus discomfited Pescinnius Niger; and by the same means, was himself repulsed from the wall of Petra in Arabia; we may (if this interpretation hold good) as easily maintain, that Severus had great Ordnance in his Camp, and the Arabians, in their Town. As for Printing, whether John Gertrudenberg learned it of the Chinois; or whether good inventions, like good wits, do sometimes jump, I dare not determine: sure I am that he first taught it in Europe; and as some say, in the year 1440. At Halam a Town of Holland, it is first said to be practised; and at Mentz, perfected. Now whereas it is by some doubted, whether the Art of Printing be available to the proficiency and advancement of Learning, or not; I must not herein be both a Judge, and a party; but must leave the decision of the point to men unintereſſed. Onely this I dare boldly say, that this most excellent invention hath been much abused, and prostituted to the lust of every foolish and idle paper-blurrer: the treasury of learning being never so full, and yet never more empty, over-charged so with the froth and scumme of foolish and unnecessary discourses. In which (though all Nations have their share therein, and we of late as much as any) the Dutch have been accompted the most blame-worthy: who not content to scatter their poor conceptions onely amongst themselves, and print them in their own tongue onely (as our English Paper-Blurrers do) publish them in the Latine to the eye of others, and send them twice a-year to the publick Marts, though neither worth the Readers eye, nor the Printers hand. Scriptorum plus est hodie quam muscarum olim cum caletur maxime; the complaint once of an old Comedian, was never truer than at the present.

But not to dive too deep into this dispute, the people, as before was said, are good Artificers, ingenious and excellent in all things which they take in hand: the porcellan dishes, curious carvings, and the fine painted works which we have in Tables, Leathers, Stuffes, being brought from thence. A politick and judicious Nation; but very jealous of their women, and great tyrants over them, not suffering them to go abroad, or sit down at the Table if any stranger be invited, unless he be some very neer kinsman. A tyranny or restraint, which the poor women give no cause for, being said to be very honest, and much reserved; not so much as shewing themselves at a window for fear of offence: and if they use painting, as most of them do, it is rather to preserve themselves in the good affections of their husbands, than for any other lewd respects. For the most part of a fair hair, whereof very curious: binding it about their heads with Ribbands of silk, garnished with pearles and pretious stones. Neat in their dress, and very costly in their apparel, with reference to their estates, and the degree of their husbands: the richer sort wearing Sattin striped with Gold, and interlaced with very rich Jewels; the poorer in Serge, and razed velvets. They have most of them little feet, which they take great pride in, and for this cause bind them up hard from their very infancy: which they endure patiently though it be very painfull, because a small foot is accounted for so great a grace. And yet it is conceived that this proceedeth not so much from their own curiosity, as from the jealousy of the men, who have brought it in; to the end that they should not be able to go but with a great deal of pain, and that going with so ill a grace, and so little ease, they should have no desire to stirre much abroad. A custome so antient and received, that it hath got the force of law; and if any mother should do otherwise in breeding their daughters, they would undergo some censure or mark of infamy. If a desire to see their Parents get them the freedome of a visit, they are carryed to them in close chairs, and attended by so many waiters, that it is not possible that any man either so see them, or hold any discourse with them.

Of both Sexes it is thought that this Countrey containeth no fewer than 70 Millions. Which though it seem to be a number beyond all belief; yet it is knowingly averred, and may be thought probable enough, if we consider the spaciousnes of the Countrey; 2. The secret goodnes of the stars, and temperature of the air; 3. The abundance of all things necessary to life; 4. That it is not lawful for the King to make any war, but meerly defensive, and so they enjoy perpetuall peace; 5. That it is not lawfull for any Chinois to go out of the Countrey; and 6. That here the Sea is as well peopled as whole Provinces elsewhere. For the ships do resemble a City; in which they buy, sell, are born, and die. And on the River which watreth thewalls of Nanquin, up to Paquin, which is no les than 300 leagues, the ships are said to be so thick ranked, that it seemeth to be a continuall street.

The people hereof in matters of Religion, are generally all Gentiles, and conceive thus of the creation: That there was one Taine, who created Panzon, and Panzona, whose posterity remained 90000 years; but they for their wickednes being destroyed, Taine created Lutitzem, whohad two horns; from the right came men, from the left came women. When any of them dieth, they cloath him in his best apparell, all perfumed, set him in his best chair, and there all his neerest kindred kneeling before him, take their leave with tears. When he is coffined, they place him in a room richly furnished, and set by him a table full of viands and good cheer, with candles continually burning on it. Not much unlike to which ceremonies, we find, how whilst the funerall was preparing for Francis the French King, his Statua apparelled in royall robes, with the Crown, Scepter, &c. was laid on his bed; whither dinner and supper was daily served in, with the like state and solemnity as when he was living. But to return again to my dead Chinois; when he had lain, as is above said, fifteen dayes, he is carried forth to his funerall, the place whereof is in the fields: for to be buried within the walls, were a thing of all others the most wretched. Hither, when they are in the manner of a procession, come; they burn his body, and with it men, cattell, and other provision, for his attendance and sustenance in the other world: as they use in the funeralls of Tartary. As great Idolaters as any, sacrificing to the very devil, and that upon the same reason, as the most ignorant sort of the Gentiles do, because forsooth he is a wicked and mischievous creature, and would otherwise hurt them.

Yet in the midle of this darknes there appeareth some light, whereby we may perceive that Christianity had some footing here in the times foregoing; For they believe, that God is an immortall spirit; that by him the first man was made of nothing; that the soul dieth not with the body, but is capable of reward and punishment in another life, according to the works it hath done in this. Which lest they should be thought to be onely some remainders of the light of nature, the learned men amongst the antient Greeks and Romans, having so much divinity as this, without the Gospel; we may here add, that the Idol most generally worshipped by them, is painted with three heads looking one on another, signifying, as themselves affirm, that they have all but one will: which makes some think they had been antiently instructed in the doctrine of the holy Trinity. They have also the picture of a very fair woman holding a Child in her Arms, who as they say, was daughter of some great King, and that she was delivered of that Infant when she was a Virgin. And as some add, they have portraitures, of the fashion, and with the marks or Characters of the twelve Apostles (as usually painted in some part of the Christian Church): of whom they are able to say nothing, but that they were great Philosophers who lived vertuously here, and were therefore made Angels in Heaven. And finally they hold that there is a great number of Saints, or men estated in an eminent degree of happines, who in their times exceeded others in knowledge, industry, or valour, or lived an austere life without wronging any man, or otherwise deserved nobly of the common-wealth, as the Authors of some signall benefit unto their Countrey. These I conceive to be some evident remainders of Christianity, or the Remembrances rather of that Christianity which formerly was known amongst them: First planted here (as may be probably collected) by Saint Thomas, or some of his Disciples, an antient Breviary or Liturgy of the Indian Churches, giving good hint to it; Where it is said, Per D. Thomam regnum cœlorum volavit et ascendit ad Sinas: i. e. that by Saint Thomas the Kingdom of Heaven was preached unto those of China. Some Characters here were also of it in the time of the Tartars, though now obliterated, and not visible but in these defacements. And in this state it stood till the time of our Fathers, in which the Jesuites (commendably industrious in the propagation of the Christian faith) not without great danger to themselves, have endeavoured, and in part effected, their conversion. For though they have gained but few Proselytes, (in regard of those infinite numbers of people which are said to live here) yet some Converts they have made amongst them, and thereby sown those seeds of that saving truth (though mingled with some Tares of their own) which may in time increase and spread over all the Countrey.

Hills of great note here are not many, here being but one Mountain touched upon by Ptolomy, in his description of the Countrie called Sinarum Regio, which we conceive to be this China: agreeable unto the observation of modern writers, by whom it is affirmed to be so plain and levell, and so unswelled with hills at all, that they have Carts and Coaches driven with sayles, as ordinarily as drawn with horses, in these parts. Not the les destitute of Rivers for this want of mountains, Ptolomy naming in it, 1. Asptchura. 2. Semus. 3. Ambastus, and 4. Cotiaris; all which had there their fount and fall: and yet he knew the out-skirts of the Country onely. Here are also many great Lakes, not inferiour to some Seas in bigness; so plentifull in fish, as if they contended with the soyl, which should be most profitable: and yet so little swelled with winds (though the winds many times blow strongly) that both upon these Lakes, and on the Rivers and Sea-coasts, they pass up and down in small barks, with no other sail than a bough set up an-end in the middeſt of them; by the help whereof they make good ſpeed in their navigations. Nor do theſe Lakes or Rivers uſe to overflow their banks, or endamage the Countrey: but when they do, it brings ſome fatall ruine with it; as in the year 1557 when the Lake of Sancey breaking out overwhelmed ſeven Cities, many Towns, and of Villages, and Countrey people, almoſt infinite numbers.

Towns of moſt note amongſt the Sinæ, though nothing but the names be remaining of them, 1. Bramæ; and 2. Rhabana, honoured with the title of Civitates. 3. Aſpithra. 4. Achatara, more within the land; but all four under ſome degree of Northern Latitude. 5. Thine, the Metropolis of the Countrey, by ſome called Sinæ. 6. Sarata. 7. Catoranagara; theſe on the South-ſide of the line. But in this Ptolomy was miſtaken, it being found by the more certain obſervations of our later writers, that no part of China comes within 20 degrees of the Æquinoctiall; and ſo not capable of having any Towns or Cities of a Southern Latitude. Here was alſo a large bay called Sinarum Sinus; a Promontory named Notium, in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude; and another named Satyrorum, lying under the Æquinox. More than this, of the Cities of the antient Sinæ, I have nothing to ſay, which I dare offer to the Reader.

But to behold them as they are preſented to our view in the modern China, it hath been ſaid, that for number there are no fewer than 591 Cities, and thoſe ſo uniformly built, ſo conformably to one another, that they differ not in form, and faſhion, but in quantity onely. Much like the Cities of Utopia mentioned by Sir Thomas More, Idem ſitus omnibus, eadem, quatenus per locum licet, rerum facies; ſo neer reſembling one another, that he who knoweth but one of them, may conjecture at all. And this is the manner of their building. Moſt of their Cities have the benefit of ſome navigable River neer which they ſtand: the waters whereof ſerve them both for navigation, and domeſtick uſes. Two great Streets croſſing one another in the very middeſt, ſo broad, that ten horſemen may ride a breſt in the narroweſt of them; ſo ſtrait, that a man ſtanding in the middle, may ſee either end: each end being ſhut up with a Gate of great ſtrenghth and beauty; and thoſe Gates fortified and ſtrengthned with thick plates of iron. Generally greater and more ſtately than thoſe of Europe, but defective in that point of elegancy which the Magnificent Churches, and more ſumptuous buildings for the diſpatch of publique buſineſſes, in theſe parts abound with. Their private houſes for the moſt part are alſo low, and deſtitute of Porches, Windows, Galleries; the principall ornaments and graces of Architecture. Nor are their Cities built onely for reſort, or trade, but for ſtrength and ſafety, environed with deep and broad ditches, the wal's of brick or ſtone, ſtrong above belief, planted with Ordnance and Artillery in convenient places: and every night the Gates not only locked but ſealed; not to be opened till unſealed by the principall Magiſtrate.

But not to reſt our ſelves on this generall Character, let us take a more particular veiw of ſome of the principall. And in that liſt we find 1. Quinſay, called Suntien by the natives, containing once in circuit an hundred miles, and having in the middeſt of it a Lake of 30 miles compaſs, in which Lake are two goodly Ilands, and in them two magnificent Palaces, adorned with all neceſſaries, either for majeſty, or convenience; in which are celebrated the publique feaſts, and the mariages of the better ſort. The Lake is nouriſhed with divers Rivers, the chief being Polyſango, and Cacamucan; on which Rivers 12000 bridges lift up their ſtately heads: and under whoſe immenſe Arches, great ſhips, with ſails ſpread abroad, and top and top-gallant, may and do uſually paſs. It was alſo ſaid to have had ten market-places, each of them four miles aſunder, and every one in form quadrangular, the ſides thereof half a mile in length. Here were ſaid alſo to be twelve Companies of tradeſmen or Artizans, each company having 12000 ſhops; and in all a million and 600000 Families. But now on the removall of the Court from hence to Cambalu by the Tartars; and ſince to Nanquin and Paquin by the Princes of the houſe of Hombu, ſeconded partly the fury of the warres, and partly by the violence of Earth-quakes; it hath loſt no ſmall part of her antient beauty, and renown. 2. Unguen, famous for the abundance of ſugar there made. 3. Nanquin, ſeated 9 leagues from the Sea, on a fair a d navigable River, whereon ride for the moſt part no fewer than 10000 of the Kings ſhips, beſides ſuch as belong to private men. The Town in compaſs 30 miles, being girt with three fair brick walls, having large and ſtately Gates: The ſtreets in length two leagues, wide, and paved; the number of houſes is about 200000. ſo that it may equall four of the faireſt Cities of Europe. 4. Paquin or Pamia, where the King continually reſideth; and that, either becauſe the air hereof is more healthfull and pleaſant, than any of the other, or becauſe it lieth neer unto the Tartars, with whom the Chinois are in perpetuall warre: ſo that from hence the dangers which may by their invaſions happen unto the Countrey, may with more convenience be either prevented, or remedied. The City ſaid to be inferiour to Nanquin for bulk and beauty, but to exceed it in multitude of Inhabitants, Souldiers, and Magiſtrates, occaſioned by the Kings abode. Environed on the South, with two walls, of ſo great breadth that twelve horſemen may runne abreſt upon them; on the North, with one wall onely, but that ſo ſtrong and vigilantly guarded, that they fear as little annoyance on that ſide as they do on the other. But the greateſt Ornament hereof is the Royall Palace, compaſſed about with a triple wall, the outwardmoſt of which would well inviron a large City: within which ſpace, beſides the many lodgings for Eunuchs and other Courtiers, are Groves, hills, fountains, Rivers, and the like places of pleaſure: larger in circuit, but not comparable for the Arts of Architecture to the Royall Palaces of Europe. 5. Canton, ſuppoſed to be the Caligara of Ptolomy; by the Chinois called Quamchen, the leaſt of the Metropolitan Cities of this Countrey, but beautified with many triumphant Arches, a navigable River, large ſtreets, and many goodly bridges. Fortified with deep trenches, 83. Bulwarks, and ſeated in ſo rich a ſoyl both for Fowl and Catteil, that here are ſaid to be eaten dayly 6000 hogs, and 12000 Ducks, beſides proportionable quantity of other victuals. If this be one of the leaſt of their Metropolitans, what may we fancy of the greateſt? A Town in which the Portugals drive a wealthy trade, being permitted in the day-time to come within the City it ſelf; but at night excluded, and forced to find lodging in the Suburbs. By reaſon of which restraint, they have settled their Mart at Macaan, the Port-Town to this, where they have their Factor, and many Families, the Town being almost wholly peopled by them. 6. Sucheau, seated in the marishes like Venice, but more commodiously, because those marishes are of fresh water; the streets and houses founded upon piles of pine-tree; with many bridges, and conveniencies for passage both by land and water. Well traded, as the fittest Center for dispersion of merchandise from all the other Ports of the Kingdome: by the multitude and frequency of ships, almost denying faith to the eyes, which would think all the ships of China to be here assembled. So infinitely rich, that the small Region whereof it is the head containing but eight Cities more, payeth 12 millions to the king of yearly income. 7. Hamseu, the Metropolis of the Province of Chequian, about two dayes journey from the Sea (of which distance from the Sea is Sucheau also) in compass less than Nanquin, but better builded: no place in it taken up with gardens, Orchards, or other pleasures; but all employed for shops, houses, and other edifices. So beautified with Triumphant Arches, erected to the honour of deserving Magistrates, that in one street there are 300 of great mass or workmanship. The Temples magnificent and many; the bank-sides of the Channels watering every street, beset with trees of shade, and most excellent fruits: and in the midle of the City a round high mountain, which gives the eye a gallant prospect into every street. And not farre off a pleasant Lake, of great breadth and length, the banks whereof are beautified with groves and gardens, and the Lake it self even clothed with vessels of all sorts, on which the Citizens use to feast, and entertain their idle time with plaies and spectacles. Two Cities so repleni shed with all kind of pleasures, that the Chinois use it for a Proverb, Thien Xam, thien thum, ti Xamsu hum, that is to say, look what the Hall or Presence Chamber is in heaven, that Hamseu and Sucheau are on earth. 8 Focheo, beautified amongst many other Stately structures, with a magnificent Tower erected on 40 marble pillars of great elegancy, cost, and bigness, every pillar being 40 spans in height, and 12 in breadth: not to be parallelled, as some say, by any the like work in Europe. 9. Lochiau, in which are 70000 families. 10. Colant, famous for the best Porcellane. 11. Xaiton, whose Harbour is never without 500 ships. 12. Scianhay, within 24. houres sail of the Isle of Japan, and therefore defended with a strong Garrison and a Navy. Situate in a pleasant and wholesome soyl, the whole Countrey so set forth with trees, as if it were one continued Orchard. So populous, that it conteineth 40000 households, most of which get their livelihood by weaving Cottons: it being supposed that here are 200000 persons which attend that maintenance. 13. Chinchiamsu, whence by a River made by hand there is a passage to Sucheau; the water of which never freezeth, and for that cause so clogged with ships in time of winter, that the passage is stopped with the multitudes of them. 14. Cergivan, of the same fashion with the rest, though of lesser note. So like they are to one another, that we may say with Ovid on the like ocasion.

——— Facies non omnibus una,
Nec diversa tamen, qualem decet esse sororum.

Which I find thus English'd by George Sandys.

Amongst them all no two appear the same,
Nor differ more than Sisters well became.

The antient Inhabitants of this Country, in the time of Ptolomy, were towards the North, the Semantini, bordering a mountain of that name, and the only one remembred in all this Countrey; more Southward, the Acadræ, and Aspithræ; Towards the Sea the Anabastæ, and Ichthyophagi (these last so called from living wholly upon fish.) From what Original they came it is hard to say, whether from the Indians, or the Scythes: or that it was primitively planted by some of the posterity of Noah, before the enterprise of Babel; which last may propably be concluded from the extreme populousness of the Country, the many magnificent Cities, their industry and ingenuity in all Arts and Sciences, not to be taught them by their neighbours, more ignorant in those things than themselves. And hereunto the Chronicles of China seem to give some ground, which tell us of 340 Kings, which for the space of four thousand years have therein reigned. For as their Chronicles inform us, (if they may be credited) the Countrey being without Rule or settled government, was first reduced into order by one Vitey, the Sonne of Ezolom, by whom the people were instructed in Physick, Astrology, Divination, and the art of tillage: to which this Vitey, having found out the way of cutting or sawing timber, added the use of Ships and Houses, and many other the effects of mechanicall hands. Having by the valour of Lincheon one of his Commanders, subdued a great part of the Countrey, he drew them into Towns and villages, distributed them into Offices, and severall trades, disposing those of the same trade into Streets by themselves, and commanding that no man without leave from himself, or his Officers, should follow any other trade than that of his Father. He prescribed them also the fashion of their Garments, taught them the art of making and dying Silks: and having reigned an hundred years, left the Kingdome well established unto his posterity. Of this race there are said to have been 217 Kings, who held the State 2257 years. The last of them was that Tzaintzon, who being ill-neighbored by the Scythians (not yet called Tartars) built that vast wall spoken of before, extended 400 Leagues in length, and at the end of every League a strong Rampart or Bulwark, continually garrisoned, and well furnished with all warlike necessaries. He being slain by some of his Subjects, burdned and wasted with this work, the race of Vitey ended; and that of Anchosan succeeded, a Prince of much prudence, but greater courage; In his line it continued under 25 Kings, but shrewdly shaken towards the close by a civil war, betwixt Trunthey the 23 of this house, and his Nephew Laupy. Hardly well settled under Quiontey the last of this house, when Tzobu, a great Tyrant of the other faction, set upon him, and slew him. And so the majesty of the blood-royall being trod under foot, the Crown was also tossed from one hand to another, and made a prey unto the strongest: there being of the race of this Tzobu, eight Kings, reigning 62. years. Of the race of Dian, five Kings, who who reigned thirty one. Of the race of Tzoy, three onely, who reigned thirty seven. Of the race of Tenco, one and twenty, who held the Crown 294 years: and eight there were who reigned 120 years, of the house of Tautzom. Of other upstart families to the number of five, were fourteen Kings also, who governed onely for the space of 66 years: And then one Zaitzon, deriving himself from Vitey, the first King of this Countrey, obtained the Kingdome; which he, and seventeen of his posterity, for the space of 320 years, governed with much peace and honour. Forfar, the last King of that Royall Family, foretold by prophecy that he should be deprived of his Kingdome by one who had an hundred eyes, neglected the Advertisement, as unworthy credit; but it fell out agreeable to that prediction, when vanquished by Chisan-baan (which word signifieth an hundred eyes) Lieutenant unto Uzan, a Tartarian Prince, but Feudatarie and Vassal to the Great Cham. China thus made a Province of the Tartarians, was governed for the space of 93 years, under nine Tartar-Kings, Tributaries to the Great Cham: and when it did revolt in the daies of Gino-Cham, the fourth from Cingis, it was reduced again by the valour of Tamerlane. For though Hombu, or Combu, the new elected King of China, having expelled the Tartars, and repaired the breaches of the wall by them thrown down, had brought into the field an Army of 350000 horse and foot: yet nothing could withstand the fortune of Tamerlane, who obtained the victory, with the slaughter of 60000 Chinois. But wisely moderating his prosperity, he thought it the best and safest way, to let that Nation have a King of their own; imposing on him the fine of 300000 Crowns of ready money, and such other conditions as were most pleasing to the victor, and yet not destructive to the vanquished. Before this time the Chinois were possessed of a great part of that Countrey which we now call by the name of Cathay; which lying without the wall of China, was taken from them by Tamerlane, and made by him part of the Empire of Tartary. Which possibly might be the reason, (part of Cathay being antiently a member of the Kingdome of China, and still retaining somewhat of their customs and ingenuity) that by some writers, easily misguided by such probability, Cathay and China have been reckoned to be one and the same. Nor did the Empire of the Chinois extend in those times onely over part of Scythia, but also over part of India, and most of the Oriental Ilands. But the Princes of the house of Hombu finding their own Kingdome large enough to content their desires, abandoned all the Accessories and Out-parts of their Dominions: prompted thereunto, not onely by their own moderation, but by some misfortunes which befell them. For as we find that the Romans having by the fury of two violent tempests, lost no fewer than 206 of their ships and gallies, resolved to abandon (and for a long time did forbear) the Seas, which had used them so unkindly: So the Chinois having received a great overthrow, and loss of 800 ships, nigh unto Zeilan, they freed all the Ilands from obedience unto them, and contented themselves with the bounds which nature had bestowed on them. And of their moderation herein, we have a late example. For when the people of Corea, a small Iland abutting on the confines of China, were invaded by the Japonites, they submitted themselves unto the King of China: who having repulsed the enemy, and thereby cleared his own Countrey from danger, presently redelivers over unto the Coreans, their Town and liberty. A rare fact of a contented people. Which whether it savoured of greater moderation or magnanimity, I am not able to determine. In this family hath the Realm continued under twelve Kings for the space of 200 years and upward, reckoning from Hombu unto Boneg: who being the twelfth of this line, succeeded his elder brother, unfortunately slain with a fall from an horse. Reported for a Prince of good disposition, great judgement, and a severe Justiciary. But whether still alive, or who hath since succeeded, if he be deceased, I am yet unsatisfied: though whosoever he be that now sits in the throne, or at least pretends a right unto it, he hath but little joy in this great estate; the Tartars being called in to abet some differences touching the succession: who finding their advantages, and the unwarlikeness of the People, are said to have lately broken down the Partition-wall, and let in infinite numbers of their Country-men, and made themselves Masters in short time of the best parts of the Countrey. In which estate it now standeth, for ought I have heard unto the contrary.

The Government of this Kingdome is meerly tyrannicall; there being no other Lord but the King; no title of dignity or nobility ever known amongst them; nor toll or duty paid unto any but to him: the younger Princes of the blood being mantained by stipends, and annuall pensions, large enough to support their trains, but without any Lands or Tenants, for fear of drawing on them any great dependances. The King alone is the generall Landlord, and him the subjects do not onely reverence as a Prince, but adore like a God. For in the chief City of every Province, they have the Kings portraiture made of gold, which is always covered with a veil: and at every New-moon, the Magistrates and other inferiour Officers use to kneel before it, as if it were the King himself. By these and other artifices of the like contrivement the Common-people are kept in such awe and fear, that they are rather slaves than subjects: calling their King the Lump of the world, and Son of the evershining Sun, without whose light they were able to see nothing. In every Province, except Paquin and Tolenchia onely, he hath his Deputies or Vice-Roys, maintained by liberall stipends from the publique treasury: but those he governeth by himself. Some laws they have, and those affirmed to have been written 2000 years since, as is like enough they were. So strongly do they savour of the ignorance and Atheism of the darkest times: the manner of life by them allowed, most obscene and shameless, their idolatries most gross and palpable, their exorcisms ridiculous, and the prostitution of their Virgins most abhominable, and the variety of sensuall prophanations, to an illuminated mind most base and contemptible. In a word, nothing commendable in their course of life (notwithstanding the brags which they make of themselves) but their Arts and industry.

The forces which this King is able to draw into the Field must needs be infinite, considering that incredible number of subjects under his command. For whereas France is thought to contain 15 millions of people people; Italy, with the Iſles, as many; Germany, with the Switzers and Belgick Provinces, about that proportion; Spain not above ſeven Millions, and the Kingdome of England about four: this Countrey one is computed at 70 millions; which is more by 15 millions than all together. Proportionably his Levies muſt be ſo much greater than can be ordinarily raiſed out of thoſe Countries. But becauſe it may be thought that his ſubjects, though more in number, may be leſs trained to the warres than thoſe of Europe; the contrary is affirmed by ſuch as have taken an eſtimate of the forces which every Province is bound to entertain in continuall readineſs. And by that eſtimate it appeareth, that in the year 1557 (though a time of peace) there were diſperſed in the fifteen Provinces of this Realm, to the number of five millions; 846500 Foot, and 948350 Horſe. Nor is he leſs powerfull for Sea-ſervice, having continually great Fleets for the guard of his coſts in continuall attendance; and many more ready to ſet out when there is occaſion: inſomuch that the Chinois uſe to ſay in the way of a Proverb, that their King is able to make a bridge of ſhips from China to Malaca, which are 500 leagues aſunder. Some of theſe ſhips (whereof the King hath above a thouſand of his own, beſides thoſe of his ſubjects) of great magnificence and beauty: the Officers and Souldiers in all which are exceeding well paid, and rewarded anſwerably to their merits. And as this King is able to raiſe greater forces than any, from his own eſtates; ſo doth he alſo de facto do it, when the urgency of his affairs do require it of him: his ordinary ſtint being 300000 foot, and 200000 horſe, without which compleat number (not onely in the muſter-rols, but in bodies of men) he vouchſafes not to go into the field.

Anſwerable unto theſe great Levies of men; muſt be his Revenue: which they who have travelled in this ſearch, (if they tell us true, and do not build upon an hope of not being confuted, as for my part I fear they do) affirm to be 120 millions of Crowns; anſwered unto him out of the profit of the mines of Gold, Silver, and other metalls; the tenth of all commodities which the Earth brings forth; the tolls impoſed on that uſpeakable quantity of merchandiſe, which paſſeth on ſo many navigable Rivers from one Town to another; the cuſtomes taken of all thoſe rich wares which are brought into Europe, and the Gabell laid on Salt in all parts of his Kingdome. Out of which ſumme, the payment of his Fleet diſcharged, the entertainment of the Souldiers ſatisfied, and his Court defraied; there remaineth 40 millions of Crowns de claro to be diſpoſed of, either in his treaſury, or private pleaſures, or the works of magnificence, and oſtentation.

And ſo much for China.

OF INDIA.

INDIA is bounded on the East, with the Orientall Ocean, and some part of China; on the West, with the Persian Empire; on the North, with some branches of Mount Taurus, which divide it from Tartary; and on the South, with the Indian Ocean. So called from the River Indus, the neerest of esteem and note in all the Country, towards these parts of the world.

It is conceived to be the largest Country of any one name in the world, except China and Tartaria; affirmed by Pomponius Mela, to be of such a great extent on the Sea-coasts of it, that it was as much as a ship could sail in 40 daies. Extended from 106, to 159 Degrees of Longitude; and from the Æquator to the 44th degree of Northern Latitude. By which accompt it lieth from the beginning of the first, to the end of the sixt Clime: the longest Summers-day in the Southern parts being 12 hours only, and in the parts most North, 15 hours and an half.

Concerning the monstrous Fables which the ages foregoing have delivered to us of this Countrey, give me leave to say, that as the Poets used of old to fill up the times of which they were ignorant, with strange fictions, and prodigious metamorphoses; or as our modern Geographers, in the Maps of the world, fill up those unknown parts thereof, of which they can give us no certain description, with strange pictures and uncouth shapes of beasts and trees: so also the writers in former ages have filled the more remote Countries, of which they knew little, with such impossible and incredible relations. Hence there have been attributed to this India, the fables of men with dogs heads; of men with one leg only, yet of great swiftness; of such as live by sent; of men that had but one eye, and that in their foreheads; and of others, whose ears did reach unto the ground. It is reported also that this people by eating a dragons heart and liver, attain to the understanding of the languages of beasts; that they can make themselves, when they list, invisible; that they have two tubs, whereof the one opened yields wind, the other rain, and the like. But these relations, and the rest of this strain, I doubt not but the understanding Reader knoweth how to judge of, and what to believe. For my part I am of the same mind with Curtius, Plura equidem transcribo quam credo; nec enim affirmare ausus sum quæ dubito, nec subducere sustineo quæ accepi: I may perhaps relate some things which I do not credit, but shall not let them pass without some censure; that so I neither may impose any thing on the Readers belief, nor defraud him any thing conducible to his contentation.

The Country, to report no more of it than it doth deserve, enjoyeth an exact temperature of the air; two Summers, (or one as long as two,) and a double encrease: blest with all things which are either necessaryto the life of man, or of convenience and delight; particularly with mines of Gold and Silver, and with precious stones; with spices of all sorts, and Civets; with the best medicinable drugs; metals of all kinds, except Copper and Lead; abundance of all sorts of Cattel, except horses. Somewhat defective also in Wheat and Vines, that so this Countrey might be beholding unto others, as well as others to this. Famed also for abundance of Camels, Apes, Dragons, Serpents, Rhinoceros, Elephants. These last more savouring of reason and humane ingenuity, or else more tractable and docile, than any brute Creature whatsoever. Of this we have a fair instance in the story of the Acts of Alexander. The Elephant which King Porus sate on, finding his Master strong and lusty, rushed boldly into the thickest of the Enemies Army: but when he once perceived him to be faint and weary, he withdrew himself out of the battell, kneeled down, and into his own trunk received all the Arrows which were directed at his master.

The greatness of the Creature makes it yet more admirable, that either he should have soul enough of his own, to actuate so vast a body; or being of such strength and bigness should submit himself to the instructions of another: some of these Indian Elephants, as Ælianus hath affirmed, being nine Cubits high, and as many long, and in breadth or thickness about five Cubits. Nor doth the Sea afford less plenty or variety, than we find on shore: yielding abundance of the richest and fairest Pearls, huge shoales of fish, and amongst them the Whale or great Leviathan; exceeding the proportion of that land-monster the Elephant. For though the ordinary dimension of the Whale be but 36 Cubits in length, and eight in thickness: yet Nearchus in Arianus is said to have measured one in these Indian Seas, which was of the length of 50 Cubits, and of breadth proportionable: not to say any thing of that incredible report of Plinie, who speaketh of some Indian Whales which were nine hundred and threescore Foot, or four Acres long.

The people are of five sorts, and as many Religions, that is to say the Naturall Indians, derived from the Original Inhabitants of it; 2. Moors, or Arabians, who more than two hundred years ago possessed themselves of some Sea-Towns driving the Natives up higher into the Country; 3. Jews, scattered tered and disperſed (as in other places) into all parts of it; 4. Tartars, in thoſe parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mogul; and 5. Portugueze, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Iſlands; but brag as if they had made a conqueſt of all the Countrey. Which notwithſtanding, conſidering that the Naturall Indians are by far the greateſt number, we muſt relate to them only in the Character, which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of ſtature, ſtrong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negroes: of manners Civill, and ingenuous, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The Common ſort but meanly clad, for the moſt part naked, content with no more covering than to hide their ſhame. But thoſe of greater eſtates and fortunes (as they have amongſt them many antient and Noble families) obſerve a majeſty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; ſweetning the laſt with oils, and perfumes, and adorning themſelves with Jewels, Pearls, and other Ornaments befitting. They eat no fleſh, but live on Barley, Rice, Milk, Honey, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and looſe, but covered with a thin vail of Calicut Lawn. Their ears hung with many rings, ſo great and heavy, that they are torn, and ſtretched to much diſproportion; their noſes alſo ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their eſtate and quality. Servilely obſequious to their husbands, whoſe affections they divide amongſt them without jarre or jealouſy: the men allowed here, as in all the Eaſt, the uſe of many wives, whom they buy of their parents for a yoke of Oxen; and may mary as often as they liſt. In which they have too great a privilege above the women, who after the deceaſe of their common husband, do either burn in the ſame flame with him, or elſe are forced to doom themſelves to perpetuall Widow-Hood. But of this we may ſpeak more hereafter when we come to the particulars.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted in theſe Countries by Saint Thomas, from whom the remainders of Chriſtianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Miniments of that Church do aſcribe their converſion. For in one of their Treviaries written in the Chaldæan tongue, and tranſlated into Latine by Father John Maria Campani a Jeſuite, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam evanuit error Idololutriæ ab Indis, &c. i. e. By Saint Thomas, the errors of Idolatry vanquiſhed out of the Indies; by Saint Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptiſm, and the Adoption of Sonnes; by Saint Thomas, they believed and confeſſed the Father, the Son, and Holy-Ghoſt; by Saint Thomas, they kept the faith received of one God: And finally by Saint Thomas, the ſplendour of ſaving doctrine did appear to all India. His body as they ſay, intombed in the City of Maliapar, upon the Coaſt of Choromandell; the truth of which tradition I diſpute not here. But this plantation of the Goſpel by the hand of Saint Thomas was not univerſal over all the Countrey; but in ſome parts and Provinces only; or elſe was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heathenim. For in the reign of Conſtantine, we read how the Indians living on the further-ſide of the River Ganges (for ſo I underſtand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the miniſtery of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre, who having ſpent the greateſt part of his time amongſt them, was employed in that ſervice, and conſecrated the firſt Biſhop (for thoſe Churches) by the great Athanaſius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by Saint Thomas, the remainder of Chriſtians here being, aſcribe the whole work to him; called therefore Chriſtians of Saint Thomas. Governed originally by their own Biſhops, ſubordinate to an Archbiſhop of their own alſo, reſiding at Augamale fifteen miles from Cochin, one of the chief Cities of this Countrey: who for long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Muſul, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by theſe Chriſtians of India he is ſtill termed. The number of theſe Chriſtians computed at 15 or 16 thouſand families; or at 70000 perſons in the accompt of others: inhabiting for the moſt part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the outlets of Indus and Ganges, ſtretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 1. Their adminiſtring the Sacrament of the Euchariſt in bread ſeaſoned with ſalt; 2. Adminiſtring in both kinds, but uſing inſtead of wine (which is ſcarce or not at all to be had in this Countrie) the juice of raiſins ſoftned in water over night, and ſo preſſed forth; 3. Not baptizing children untill 40 dayes old, except it be in danger of death; 4. Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Croſs; 5. Allowing one mariage to their Prieſts, but debaring the ſecond; 6. In painting God with three heads on one body to denote the Trinity. 7. Denying the uſe of extreme Unction; and 8. Not acknowledging the Popes Supremacie. And in this State they ſtood till the year 1599, when by the ſollicitation of the Portugals, they renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Muſall, and ſubmitted their Churches to the juriſdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Diamper, not farre from Maliapar by the Arch-biſhop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in thoſe parts) not onely rejecting all opinions contrary to the Romiſh Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and reformed by the ſaid Arch-biſhop, according to the Rites and doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But theſe comparatively to the reſt, come not to an handfull; the main body of the People wallowing in their Gentiliſm; and ſtill retaining many of thoſe antient Cuſtomes, which they uſed of old: as viz. 1. Not knowing their wives after they have born them two children; 2. Nor keeping them, if after five years cohabitation, they can raiſe no iſſue by them; but then exchanging them for others; 3. Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy; 4. Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decaied by Age, or ſickneſs. To theſe they have ſince added others of a later invention, perhaps more barbarous, of which we may have opportunity to ſpeak anon. Their Prieſts or learned men, in the time of old were called Brachmans from one Brachman, the preſcriber of their

Rites

Rites and Laws, by whom inſtructed in the Rudiments of their Philoſophy; a Sect of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnoſophiſts; who were to them as the Chaldei, to the Aſſyrians; the Magi, to the Perſians; and the Druides, to the antient Britans. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the moſt part an auſtere and ſolitary life in Caves and Deſarts; feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abſtaining from all carnall pleaſures: but that time paſt, they may indulge themſelves more liberty, and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common-people, as being their ordinary Prieſts. Of theſe, the great Alexander, when he was in this Countrey, ſurprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many ſtrange queſtions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himſelf confeſſed) ſome not unſatisfying though ſtrange anſwers. To theſe Gymnoſophiſts, or Brachmans the Bramines do now ſucceed, both in place and authority; but differ from them moſt extremely in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives: theſe Bramines being the moſt impure, libidinous, and ſenſuall beaſts in all the Countrey; privileged with the firſt nights lodging of every Bride, which when ſated with their filthy luſt, they ſell, or trafick with, to ſtrangers; ſerving as Stallions to old men, and as Pandars to young; ſo fleſh'd in wickedneſs, and ignorant of all good letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and ſhape. Mahometaniſm is alſo entertained in a great part of the Countrey, firſt brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Perſians unto whom conterminous; but much increaſed by the victories of the Great Mongul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath cauſed it to be propagated in moſt parts of his large dominions.

Mountains of moſt note in it, beſides Caucaſus, and ſome other of the branches of Taurus or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Perſian Empires, 1. Sardonix, full of mines of thoſe precious ſtones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2. Vindius. 3. Bittigo. 4. Adiſathras. 5. Thoſe called Apocopi, and 6. Thoſe named Orodii. And on the further ſide of Ganges. 7. Sevyrrus. 8. Maandrus. 9. Thoſe called Damuſi, and 10. Semanthinus; part of this laſt extending alſo unto China. All of them very fruitfull in the production of mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of Chief note of all is that which Ptolomy calleth Bitigo, and is now named Gates, the Southern part of the great Mountain Imaus ſpoken of before: extended from Mount Caucaſus, where it croſſeth the Taurus in right Angels, to Cape Comari, a known Promontory of Induſtan, or the Hither India (which it divideth into Eaſt and Weſt) for the ſpace of 400 leagues and upwards. Conceived by Poſtellus a learned Writer, to be that Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the 10th of Geneſis, where it is ſaid to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the Sonnes of Joktan, Gen. 10. v. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can ſee, the ſonnes of Joktan being ſettled in theſe parts of India, and the Provinces of the Perſian Empire which lie neereſt to them. And ſo farre Stephanus doth concurre with Poſtell, as to affirm of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons Indiæ, an Indian Mountain: both of them grounding on Saint Hierom, who expreſsly ſaith, Sophera mons Orientis in India, juxta quem habitaverunt filii Jectam, i. e. that Sephar, or Sopher, is the name of a Mountain of the Eaſt in India; neer to which dwelt the ſonnes of Jocktan. More probably, without doubt, than that we ſhould transfer it into America, as I ſee ſome do; and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other; and thence as ſome will have it to the Streights of Magellan. Which ſhould we grant, we muſt not look for Joktan, or the ſons of Joktan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bochartus placeth them; nor in the Eaſtern parts of Aſia, where moſt probably they may be found: but we muſt croſs the vaſt Orientall Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were: beſides, that granting this for true, we muſt allow America to have been known in the time of Moſes; which no Author that I ever met with did ſo much as dream of.

Rivers of moſt note are, 1. Indus, which ariſeth out of that part of Taurus which the Antients called Paropamiſus, the Moderns, Naugrocot; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a courſe of 900 miles, falleth into the Ocean at ſeven Mouths, that is to ſay 1. Sagappa, being the moſt Weſtern, 2. Sinthum, 3. Aureum, 4. Cariphi, 5. Sappara, 6. Sabalaſſa, 7. Lonibare, the moſt Eaſtward. But five of theſe being chaoked with ſands, or drawn into the neighbouring Chanells, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and antient ſtories for giving name unto the Country, and that ſo celebrated voyage of Alexander, who ſayled down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding above five moneths, of which there is ſaid to have paſſed no day wherein he ſailed not 15 miles, or 600 Furlongs. 2. Ganges, which riſeth as ſome ſay from the Mountain Imaus, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imaus falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is firſt collected into a Lake, or Pool (ſuppoſed by others for the fountain and Original of it) whence with a gentler pace it paſſeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is ſaid by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers. In the narroweſt place of eight miles breadth, in the broadeſt 20. ſeldome ſo ſhallow but that the depth thereof is 100 foot, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Chanels it falleth at laſt into the Sea; the firſt of which moſt towards the Weſt, is called Cambyſum, 2. Magnum, 3. Cambericum, 4. Pſeudoſtomum, and 5. that which lyeth furtheſt towards the Eaſt, called Antiboli. This River erroneouſly ſuppoſed to be that Piſon which watered Paradiſe: and to encreaſe the reputation of the error, we find it countenanced by Joſephus, and other no leſs eminent names; and alſo backed by ſome traditions of the people which inhabit neer it. By whom it is affirmed that one of the Bengalan Kings ſent men up the River, who came at laſt to a pleaſant place, bleſt with a fragrant Earth, ſweet air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth ſo poſſeſs them, that at the mouth of this River called Gangaſagie, ſuch as are weary of this world uſe to caſt themſelves into the current, rent, and are presently devoured by a fish called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to find a quick passage to Paradise. The occasion of which error among the Antients proceeded from those words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Pison, that it compassed the land of Havilah: which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River must be Pison, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For besides Havilah the sonne of Jocktan, planted in some part of India; there was another Havilah the sonne of Chus, settled in the land of Havilah or Chusiana, not far from Babylon: this last indeed watered by the River Pison, and the first by Ganges; too farr asunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken or mistaken one for another. But not less famous, because none of those which neighboured the garden of Eden: perhaps of greater fame than any of those which did. For to this River do the superstitious Indians make their solemn Pilgrimages, vainly conceiving that they shall be sure of their eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the People ascribe the fertility of the Countreys adjoining, as the Ægyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Countrey antiently, and at this present is, divided into two main parts, (each subdivided into many particular Provinces) viz. 1. India intra Gangem, 2. India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will first take a brief survey with reference to the state and story of it in preceding times; and then consider them with reference to the present age.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM, is bounded on the East, with the River Ganges till the fall thereof into the Sea, and after that with that large and spacious Bay, called antiently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala; on the West, with Paropamisus, Arachosia, Gedrosia, Provinces of the Persian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas: on the North, where it is broadest, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamisus, Caucasus, and other parts; and on the South, where it endeth in a sharp point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Commaria extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being situate on this side of Ganges; by the moderns Indostan.

The Countrey of the same nature formerly, as it is at the present, not altered but by changing of the chanels of Indus; which being shifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a sandy Desart: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fatning and enriching all the land which it overfloweth. The people of those elder times much like the Scythians, especially in their course of life, living without Cities, Temples, Houses, in their moveable tents: their food the bark of a tree called Tala which served for bread; and the flesh of bucks, does, and other venison, with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free-men, but no Slaves to be found amongst them. Less warlike than the Scythians, but as great Contemners of death as they: the very women contending eagerly amongst themselves, which should accompany their Husband (one husband having many wives) to his Funerall Pile. Of which thus Saint Hierome, Hæ igitur contendunt de amore viri, & ambitio summa certantium est ac testimonium castitatis dignam morte censeri. A cuttome still retained amongst them; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said in another place.

Principall Rivers of this part, 1. Hydaspes, by Ptolomy (and by him only) called Bidaspes, one of the furthest bounds of Alexanders conquests. 2. Suastus, 3. Coa, 4. Acesines, very memorable in the Gests of Alexander. 5. Sandabilis, 6. Zaradrus: all comming from the Northern Mountains, and all falling (Hydaspes with three other Rivers first received into it) into the greater bed of Indus. 7. Diamna, 8. Sorabus, and 9. Soa, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Chanell of Ganges. 10. Naragonas, issuing from Mount Vindius. 11. Baris, from Bittigo. 12. Chaberis, from Adisathras. 13. Tindis, from the hill called Uxentus; and 14. Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of less note. By what names called at the present, I determine not; nor find I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtless to be found in 1. Catamul, 2. Cebcha, 3. Ray, 4. Chenao, 5. Rebeth, all tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schind. 6. Taphi, 7. Harunda, 8. Chambel, 9. Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with such others of the principal Rivers as are now known by name unto us, shall occasionally be touched on in that which followeth. Besides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Gests of Alexander, (but the name occureth not) not much above a mile in circuit, but exceeding pleasant, shaded on every side with woods; memorable for the great refreshment which it gave to Alexanders Army, when even pined with thirst.

The Countrey so exceeding populous in the time of Ptolomy, that it afforded him the names of more noted Cities, than any one Countrey in the world. Of which 1. Cottiara, 2. Nigama, 3. Sageda, 4. Rarassa, 5. Masopelle, and 6. Pityndra, are honoured with the name of Metropoles; as being the head Cities of their severall and respective Nations. 7. Ozene, 8. Sora, 9. Palibothra, 10. Gange, 11. Batana, 12. Hippocura, 13. Carara, 14. Modura, 15. Orthura, and 16. Malurgi, mentioned as the Royall seats of severall Princes; by the name of Regiæ. 17. Bardaxema, 18. Tyndis, 19. Argari, 20. Curula, 21. Chaberis, on the River so called. 22. Palura, on the shores of the Golf of Bengala, and 23. Palura, on the banks of Cambysum. 24. Tilegramocum; marked out above the rest with the name of Civitates, (Cities) and therefore probably of more note than others not so distinguished. And finally 25. Monogsassum, 26. Simylla, neer a Promontory of the same name; 27. Nitra, 28. Maziris, 29. Elancorum, 30. Colchi, 31. Salur, 32. Sobura, 33. Poduca, 34. Melange, 35. Maliarpha, 36. Contacissyla, 37. Nosygue. 38. Barygaza. Specifyed as the most noted and celebrious Empories; besides 39. Canthimus, 40. Stathmus, (and 41 a Road opposite to Chryse) two commodious Stations or Roads for shipping. The names and situation of these places is the most we find of them, which makes me pass them over with a bare recitall, only to shew how populous and well planted this Countrey was in the time of my Author.

Of less name, but of more note in the course of story, 1. Nysa, built by Bacchus at the time of his Indian conquest, and called thus by the name of his Nurse, to preserve her memory, his mother dying in Child-birth of him. Replenished by him with his sick and wounded Souldiers, whose posterity continued here till the time of Alexander, who spared the City and the people for his love to Bacchus, who was therein worshipped in a Temple of his own foundation, planted about with Baies, Vines, and Ivy, whose shadie branches covered the roof of it. In the middest thereof an Image, with all the Instruments belonging to a plentiful Vintage, all of Gold or Silver. 2. Taxilla, or Taxiala as Ptolomy calleth it, seated betwixt Indus and Hydaspes in the Region called Varsa, and built most probably by Taxiles a puissant King of India, in the time of Alexander. Adorned in elder times with a Temple dedicated to the Sunne, and therein with an Ivory image of Ajax, a Golden Statua of Alexander, and the portraiture of King Porus made in copper. The floor of Mosaical work pouldred with Pearls, the walls of red marble interlaied with gold, which made it shine a far off, like a flash of lightning. 3. Nagarna, called also Dionysiopolis; in memory of Bacchus who was also called Dionysius, and Liber Pater. 4. Adorne, by Diodorus called Aornos, and Avernus by Strabo; so strongly seated on a Rock, that Hercules was not able to force it: which made Alexander, imitating, and therein out-going the Acts of Hercules, assault it with the greater force, and at last he carried it. 5. Bucephala, built by Alexander on the banks of Hydaspes, and named thus in memory of Bucephalus his beloved horse, which had served him in all the course of his Fortunes, and dyed hereabouts, being then thirty years old. 6. Pireta, another of his foundations, so called by the name of his dog, whom he dearly loved. 7. Alexandria, on the banks of Indus, another of his foundations also. 8. Mazage, on the West of Indus, one of the first Towns of India taken by the Macedonians, though garrisoned within, and environed without by an host of 300000 men: but yielded after some resistance, with the use of her own body, by Cleophe the Queen thereof, who received it back with other favours from the hands of the Conqueror. 9. Nora, a strong City on the same side of Indus, taken by Polysperchon, one of his Commanders. 10. Samus, on the banks of the same River, taken by Alexander in the course of his navigation down that sea of waters; the Inhabitants whereof fought against him with poisoned Arrows, with one of which Ptolomy, afterward King of Ægypt, was dangerously wounded, and cured with an herb which Alexander dreamt he had seen in the mouth of a Serpent. 11. Oxydrace, the chief City of the Oxydracans, at the siege whereof Alexander is said to be the first that scaled the walls, and the last that could do so: the ladder breaking as soon as he was at the top. Standing thus alone as a mark to all their darts, he was by the Souldiers desired to leap down amongst them; but he in a daring bravado leaped into the Town among his enemies, where it was not only his good hap to light upon his feet, but to have an old tree at his back to defend him behind. In this posture he is said to have maintained the fight a long time against all the Souldiers of the Town; killing two of them with his own hands, and by that example teaching the rest to be more mannerly: till being wearyed, and dangerously wounded, he was forced to leave his feet, and commit the weight of of his body to his knees. In this case Leonatus, Pencestes, and some other of his Captains, came to assist him; who defended their dying Master, till the whole Army entred the Town, and put all the people to the sword, in revenge of their King, whose life they had little hope to enjoy, though he with much danger did afterward recover. For my part I give little or no credence to this story, ranging it in the same Catalogue of truth with the Adventures of Donzel del Phœbo, Rosicleer, Belianis, Amadis, and the rest of the rabble of Knights errant. Neither is this the first time that Curtius hath disgraced the soundness of Alexanders judgement, and the truth of his actions, with the like idle and impossible fables: though indeed in that particular, he saith that it was multo magis ad temeritatis quam ad gloria famam. And 12. Nicæa, built by Alexander on the banks of Acesines, in memory of his many great and signal victories. Not far from which finding how unwilling his Souldiers were to pass further East, he purposed to leave behind him some Monument of his great exploits, and to make his fame immortall amongst the Indians. And to that end he caused the form of his Camp to be inlarged, and the Cabbins to be made bigger than sufficed for his men to lodge in, the Mangers to be set higher than his horses could reach, Armour and Bits for horses of too great a size (made not for use, but ostentation of his might,) to be scattered up and down the Camp for the savage people to wonder at in the times to come. By means whereof he got nothing amongst knowing men but a suspicion that his Actions were indeed less memorable than they are reported to have been, since he so vainly laboured to have them thought greater than indeed they were.

The old Inhabitants hereof were the Indo-Scythæ, inhabiting on the North-West of Indus, the Mazagæ, Sadani, Piratæ, Limyrices, Aii, the Soringi, Arvari, Oxydracæ, Malli, and Lambatæ; the Gandarides, or Gangarides, neer the mouth of Ganges; the Cassirei, under the shades of Mount Vindius. The Musicani, Chatziei, Polindæ, Phyllitæ, Bittigi, Chadramotitæ, Pezuari, Adisathri, Mandulæ, Dryllophitæ, Sabaræ, Pandioni, with many others to the number 122 several nations, if Megasthenes be not out in his reckoning; too many and too impertinent to be mustered here.

unfortunate valley of Shinaar. We could not elſe have found this Countrey ſo full of people in the days of Semiramis, the wife of Ninus: who leading an Army compounded of ſeveral nations to the number of four millions and upwards (if Cteſias, and Diodorus Siculus who reports it from him be of any credit, but certainly the greateſt Army that was ever raiſed) was encountred by Staurobates King of India, with greater forces made up of naturall Indians onely, by whom ſhe was vanquiſhed and ſlain. A matter beyond all belief, though neither Army could make up a fourth part of that number, if the Indians had been no other than ſome one of thoſe Colonies which were ſent from B A B E L; or rather a ſecond or third Swarm of thoſe former Colonies, which went thence under the command of the firſt Adventurers. For that any of the firſt Adventurers, who were preſent at the building of the Tower of B A B E L, travelled ſo far Eaſt, is not affirmed by any who have laboured in the ſearch of their plantations. So that I take it for a matter undeniable, that the plantation of India preceded the attempt of B A B E L; though by whom made there is nothing to be ſaid for certain. Yet if I might have liberty to expreſs my own conceptions, I am inclinable to believe that all the Eaſtern parts of Perſia, with China, and both the Indiaes, were peopled by ſuch of the ſons of Sem, as went not with the reſt to the Valley of Shinaar. For otherwiſe I can ſee no reaſon, that the poſterity of Japhet ſhould plant the greateſt part of the Leſſer Aſia, and the whole Continent of Europe, with the Iſles thereof; and that the ſonnes of Cham ſhould ſpread themſelves over Babylonia, Paleſtine, the three Arabiaes, and the whole Continent of Aſrick; the poſterity of Sem being ſhut up in a corner of the Greater Aſia, hardly ſo big as ſome one Province taken up by the other Adventurers. And therefore that I may allow to the ſonnes of Sem an equall Latitude, I think it not improbable to fix them in theſe Eaſtern Countreys, ſpreading themſelves this way as they grew in numbers, before the reſt of the Adventurers went to ſeek new fortunes at the Tower of B A B E L. And being that the Countrey was large and wealthy, and might have room enough to ſpare for ſome ſecond commers (eſpecially deſcending from the ſame root with them) I doubt not but to place here alſo all the ſonnes of Jocktan, Havilah, Chatſarmaveth, Saba, Abimail, who have left here ſome tract or monument of themſelves, as hath been ſhewn at large in our G E N E R A L L P R E F A C E; and as concerning Ophyr, ſhall be ſhewed hereafter. To proceed therefore to our Story, the next who made any invaſion on this Countrey, after that of Semiramis, was Bacchus or Liber Pater, the ſonne of Jupiter and Semele, accompanyed with Hercules Ægyptius; not much more fortunate than ſhe: the forces of Bacchus being defeated, and Hercules forced to throw away his Golden Shield. But what they could not do by Arms, they effected by Arts. Bacchus inſtructing them in the uſe of wine, oyl, ſacrifices, and the Art of Architecture, and drawing them into Towns and Cities, for that cauſe honoured as a G O D. To Hercules they aſcribe the Nation of the Pandioni, proceeding from a daughter of his called P A N D Æ A: the memory of both preſerved in Statuaes and Pillars erected by them.

After this unattempted till the time of Alexander, who having made a full conqueſt of the Perſian Empire, invaded India with an Army of an 120000 fighting men. Beginning with C L E O P H E, Queen of the Mazaga, a people of Indo-Scythia, he brought her to conformity, poſſeſſed himſelf both of her perſon and eſtate; on whom he begot a ſonne called Alexander, who is ſaid to have ſucceeded in her Dominions. Being paſſed over the River Indus, Taxiles (by ſome called Omphis) a prudent Prince, whoſe Kingdome is affirmed to be bigger than Ægypt, ſubmitted of his own accord, offering his ſervice and aſſiſtance to promote his conqueſt, and preſenting him with a Crown of Gold, and 80 Talents of ready money. The King made welcome, but his money not ſo much as looked on: the Macedonian being ſo far from fingring of this Indian gold, that he gave him a thouſand Talents of his own treaſure. Encouraged by this Royall dealing, Abiajares, another puiſſant Prince of the oppoſite faction unto Taxiles, ſubmitted alſo, and was as graciouſly received: Porus, whoſe Kingdome lay on the other ſide of Hydaſpes, would not be ſo conquered, and therefore muſtereth up his forces, and valiantly made good the banks of the River. But vanquiſhed at the laſt, not without much difficultie, he was made a Priſoner to the Victor; who honouring the man for his brave reſiſtance, gave him his liberty and Kingdome with a great inlargement. The Conqueror had a great deſire to go further Eaſt, but the Souldiers would not be perſwaded: ſufficiently taught by Porus, what they were to look for, if the Indians ſhould unite their forces. Unable to prevail, he erected in the place twelve Altars, as high as Towers, where he obſerved many ſolemn Games and Sacrifices: and having ſacrifiſed to Hydaſpes, Indus, and Aceſines, he ſailed down Indus towards the Southern Ocean; which ſeen at diſtance, he turned towards Gedroſia, and thence to Babylon, where he died.

After his death Eumenes raiſed ſome part of his forces hence. But the Macedonians being plunged in a Civil war, one Androcottus ſtirred up the Indians to recover their freedomes; making himſelf at firſt their Captain, but at laſt their King. Poſſeſſed of all that had been conquered by the Greeks, he was encountred by Seleucus, who had then got the command of Aſia: againſt whom he brought an Army of 600000 fighting men. Frighted wherewith, Seleucus made peace with him, and contracted a ſolemn League betwixt them; continued with the interchange of friendly Offices amongſt their poſterity; and more confirmed by an interview betwixt Antiochus the Great, and Saphagaſenus, one of the Succeſſors of Andracottus; by whom Antiochus was preſented with 150 Elephants, and the promiſe of ſome treaſure to be ſent after him. By the Poſterity of Andracottus was the Kingdome held till the proſperity and full height of the R O M A N Empire. The power whereof though they rather knew by report, than trial, yet was it not amiſs to entertain a potent, though remote State, in terms of amity. Therefore they ſent Embaſſadours unto Auguſtus, who preſented him with a number of Tigers, (which beaſts (ſaith (ſaith Dion) till then, the Roman people had never ſeen) and which was the moſt pleaſing, a little boy born without arms, who with his feet could bend a bow, ſhoot, and play on wind inſtruments, as exactly as others with their hands. Trajan the Emperor had a great deſire to ſee this Countrey, but was diverted from that purpoſe by matters of more neceſſary importance to the State of his Empire. Moved with the fame of Antoninus, the Roman Emperor, they ſent a ſolemn Ambaſſie to him; making him Umpire in ſome Controverſies which they had with the Bactrians: from which Ambaſſadors it is probable that Ptolomy the Geographer who then lived, might receive his informations of the eſtate of this Countrey. The like they did to Julian the Apoſtate alſo, then ſetting forwards on his expedition againſt the Perſian; deſiring his friendſhip and alliance. How it was with them in the time of Conſtantine and Juſtinian, hath been ſhewn already. After theſe times by little and little, hiſtories have been in a manner ſilent concerning the affairs hereof; but for ſome conqueſts made on the parts next Perſia, by the Chaliphs of Bagdet. For notwithſtanding that there was continual traffick from the Red Sea hither; and between the Perſians, Turkiſh, and Indian Merchants for ſpices, and the other commodities of this Region; yet were not theſe Merchants acquainted with the ſtate of the Countrey; becauſe they entered not into it, but were met by the Indian Merchants at Sarmachand, being as it were the common Emporie. Neither did the Ægyptians at all enter into India, but were met by the Indians at Ormus, or ſome other Iland: even as now the Chinois, make ſome of the Philippine, the ſtaple of their trade with the Spaniards; whom they licence not to come into the Continent among them. But our modern navigators have withdrawn this maſk of obſcurity, and ſhew us her lively portraiture in as lively colours. One of the firſt which brake the ice, and gave us any certainty of their affairs, was Sir John Mandeville, accompted at his comming back for the greateſt Fabler in the world: ſo incredible ſeemed his reports of the magnificence of thoſe Kings, and the wealth of their Countreys, and the many rarities which he found amongſt them. But better thought of by our neighbours, he obtained a Monument in a Convent at Leige, the Friers of which keep ſome things of his, Comme pour honorable memoire de ſon excellence, for an honorable memorial of his Excellencies. Many of his Relations ſince confirmed by the Portugals, who under the conduct of Vaſquez de Gama firſt diſcovered this Countrey, by the new way of the Cape of good hope, Anno 1497. By whom and ſome later obſervations, we have been informed, that in this part of India were no fewer than 47 Kingdomes, whereof ſome few have ſtill their own natural Kings; the reſt all ſubject to the power of the Great Mogul: Contracted into a leſſer number by joining many leſſer territories into one Diviſion, we ſhall look on it as diſtributed into 15 Provinces. Some have reduced them unto five, but give us neither the bounds nor extent of any of them. And others in the deſcription of their travels, ramble up and down with ſuch uncertainties, (moſt of them being men of trades and ignorance) that though they tell us where they lodged, and what entertainments they did meet with; yet we ſhall hardly know by them (for I think they did not know themſelves) in what Province they were; or to what part the ſeverall Towns thorow which they paſſed, did of right belong. So that our paſſage thorow theſe Countries (having ſuch blind guides to follow) will be full of difficultie, and not ſo ſatisfactory to the Reader as he might expect. Howſoever, I deſire him to bear me company, whileſt I take the beſt ſurvey I can of theſe 15 Provinces, to which the whole may be moſt handſomely reduced: that is to ſay, 1. Dulſinda, 2. Pengab, 3. Mandao, 4. Delly, 5. Agra, 6. Sanga, 7. Cambaia, 8. Decan, 9. Canara, 10. Malabar, 11. Narſinga, 12. Oriſſan, 13. Botanter, 14. Patenaw, and 15. Bengala.

1. DULSINDA.

DULSINDA is bounded on the Eaſt, with the River Indus; on the Weſt, with Paropamiſus, and Arachoſia, two Perſian Provinces; but for the moſt part, under the command of the Great Mogul; on the North, with Caucaſus, by which parted from Tartary; on the South, with the Kingdom of Cambaia. So that it taketh up all the Northern parts of this Eſtate, which lie upon the Weſt of the River Indus: from which River called by the Natives Sinda, moſt probable it is that it took this name: and therefore I have written it with an ſ, Dulſinda, and not Dulcinda with a c, as I ſee ſome do, but on no good reaſon.

The Countrey by reaſon of the Northern ſituation of it more temperat, but leſs fruitful than the reſt of India. The ſeat, in antient times, of the Mazagæ, and Indo-Scythæ, when ſubdued by Alexander. Made up at preſent, of many leſſer Kingdomes, and ſmaller Provinces, denominated, for the moſt part, from the principal Tows, and Cities of them, as in other places.

Amongſt which thoſe of moſt eſteem, are 1. Caximir, Caſcimir, or Cheſmur, (for by all theſe names it is called) the chief of a Kingdome once, unto which it gave name, till ſubdued by Echebar, the Mogul; who in a pleaſant Iland, (in the middeſt of a great and deep Lake, about three leagues off the City) beſet round with Trees, built a Royall Palace: which he honoured ſometimes with his Court, removed hither from Lahor, partly the better to aſſure this new conquered Kingdome; but principally becauſe his Palace at Lahor, and therein an infinite deal of Treaſure, had but newly been conſumed by fire. The City it ſelf ſituate in the moſt healthy Country of all India, encompaſſed with high Mountains, covered for the moſt part of the year with ſnow; the reſt a delicate, goodly plain, diverſified with Paſtures, Woods, Corn-fields, Meadows, Parks, Gardens, and Rivers, even to admiration. The air hereof, and of the Country round about, by reaſon of the Northern ſituation of it, and the ſnowie Mountains, very cool and temperate. The ſoil abundantly productive of Wheat, Rice, and Vines; which laſt they plant at the foot of the Mulberry-tree, which ſeemeth by this means, to bear double fruits. Both Town and Kingdome ſubdued by Echebar, the Mogul, about the year 1597. their own diſſentions more conducing to that ſubjugation, than any viſible force which he brought before it. 2. Roree, a Fort of the Moguls towards Paropamiſus; but bordering upon the Country of Multan, to which People it properly belongeth: garriſoned not ſo much for fear of the Perſian, (for Paropamiſus, now called Cabal, is his antient Patrimony,) but to preſerve the People from the ſpoil of Theeves, who alwaies hang about the Mountains. 3. In the moſt Northern parts hereof, ſtood the Nagara of Ptolomy; miſtook by ſome for the modern Agra, of which more anon. 4. Seſtan, the chief City as I take it, of the Kingdome of Rebat; ſituate on the Eaſt of Caximir, betwixt it and the Indus: in the ſame Latitude with that, but not of ſo temperate an air; the ſnowy Mountains much conducing to the Temperature of the Realm of Caximir. 5. Multan, a great and antient City, and the chief of a Kindome, on the South of Caximir, or Cheſmur; and about three French leagues from the banks of the River Indus. The ordinary thorow-fare of the Caravans, in the way from Lahor to Spahan, (the chief Seat of the Sophy or King of Perſia) forced to abide there divers dayes, ſometimes ten or twelve, to enrich the Town, which of it ſelf is of no great trading, nor otherwiſe able to ſubſiſt but by this device. 6. Duckee, a Fort or Garriſon, ſituate in the Streights of the Mountains to ſecure the Caravans, and protect other Paſſengers from the danger of Robbers, hovering in theſe hill-countries, the out-parts of this Empire.

2. PENGAB.

OPpoſite to Dulſinda, on the Eaſtern-ſide of the River Indus, but more inclining towards the South, lieth the Country, or Diviſion rather, which my Author calleth by the name of PENGAB; bounded on the Weſt, with Indus, which divideth it from Dulſinda; on the South, with the Kingdome of Mandoa; on the North, and Eaſt, with thoſe many Kingdomes, which we have comprehended under the name of Botanter.

The reaſon of the name I find not, nor any thing memorable of the Country; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolomy, into the Provinces of the Lambatæ, Caſpiri, Cylindrine, and Suaſtene: ſubdued by Alexander in his expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Aceſines, and Hydaſpis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their courſe. So that it ſeemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdome of Porus was a part of this.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Lahor, on the Eaſtern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the faireſt and moſt antient City in both the Indies; of moſt eſteem for wealth and greatneſs. In compaſs about ſixteen miles, and honoured for a while with the ordinary Reſidence of the Great Mogul, till on the burning of his Palace, ſpoken of before, he removed his Court to Caximir, from thence to Fatipore, and at laſt to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldeſt ſonne, or heir apparent, ſent hither for avoiding all occaſion of factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding great trade, as being the chief Staple for the Spices in theſe parts, and other commodities of India, from hence tranſported into Perſia by the way of Candahor, the principall Town of Arachoſia; and ſo to Spahan the chief City of the Sophian Empire, where they are ſold, by reaſon of ſo long and chargeable a journey, at exceſſive rates. It is ſaid that 12000 Camels at the leaſt paſs every year thorow it with their lading, beſides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormus till that Town was taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth hereof, but more by that great Maſs of treaſure which a late Governour hereof did leave behind him. At whoſe death Echebar the Mogul (for the Mogul is the heir General unto all mens wealth) found in his Coffers three millions of Gold ready coined, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoined, and ſome ſtore of Jewels: beſides Horſes, Elephants, Houſhold-furniture, and other goods almoſt invaluable. 2. Sultan-puare, of more antiquity than beauty; yet of good eſteem. 3. Athec, in the common Road from Lahor to China; reported in the deſcription of the travels of Benedictus a Goes, a Portugal Jeſuite, to be a moneths journey from Lahor, and yet in the ſame Province with it. Which if it be true, either the Province muſt be large, or his journies ſhort: or if not true, we muſt remember that we had it from the pen of a Jeſuite. And yet as great as this Province or Diviſion is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns of conſideration which may be ſaid with confidence to belong unto it.

3. MANDAO.

THe Kingdome of MANDAO is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra; on the Eaſt, with Delly; and on the Weſt, with the River Indus. So called from Mandao, the chief City of it.

The Country more mountainous and rugged than the reſt of theſe Provinces, by reaſon of the many branches of Mount Bittigo, the Southern part of the Imaus, which do overrun it: in other things partaking of the riches of India. The men, as moſt of thoſe who live in ſuch mountainous tracts, of a warlike temper; comparatively with the reſt of the Indians: the women here antiently as valiant as the men in other places; riding aſtride, and practiſed in the Arts of Horſemanſhip: for that cauſe called Amazons; ſome of which are ſaid to be ſtill remaining. Inſomuch as it is written in the ſtories hereof, that the King of this Countrey not long ſince going to the warres, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife marching in the Front of two thouſand women all well mounted and prepared for ſervice.

Chief Cities hereof, 1. Mandao, ſeated on the bankes of the River Mandova, (the Manda of Ptolomy and the Antients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, ſaid to be 30 miles in compaſs; yet ſo well fortified, and furniſhed with all neceſſaries for defence and reſiſtance, that it held out twelve years against Mirumudius, or Merhamed, the Great Mogul, who then besieged it. Surrendred at the last, and with it the Kingdome. Memorable for the great battail fought before it betwixt the said Merhamed, then comming to the relief thereof; and Baburius King of Cambaia who had then distressed it: in which fight Baburius lost his tents and Treasures, and was fain to fly disguised unto Din, to crave aid of the Portugals. 2. Molran, once the chief City of a Kingdome, or a Kingdome rather of it self, but of no great note: the women whereof though not so good Souldiers as their Ancestors of the female sex, yet to come as neer them as they can, use boots and spurs when they take a journey, and so fitted sit astride the saddle. 3. Scernus, on the River so called, of more Antiquity than greatness; as is also 4. Polymbothie, the Palibothra of Ptolomy and others of the antient writers, then the chief Town of the Palibothei (by Pliny and Strabo, called Prasii) a People of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it self of great power and wealth, till Baburius King of Cambaia having conquered the Realm of Citor, and therewith a great part of Sanga, made an attempt upon this also. Ujalgee then King of Mandao finding himself too weak for so strong an Enemie, craved aid of Merhamed (or Miramudus as the Latines) the Mongul Tartar, then reigning in Chabul or Arachosia, and possessed of some parts of India also since the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own subjects, some mercinary Persians, and a great body of Zagathaian Tartars, from whom originally descended, came in accordingly: discomfited the vast Army of Baburius, consisting of of 150000 horse, and 500000 foot, in two set battails, the first at Docets, the next at Mandao; and following his blow possessed himself of the whole Kingdome of Cambaia. But not content with that success, quarrelled the Mandoan King in whose aid he came; besieged him in his principal City, which at last he won, and therewithall the Kingdome also: the wretched King shewing hereby a fair both evidence and example to succeeding ages, that the easiest way for a Prince to ruin his own estate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Forrein power into his own Dominions, which he cannot as easily thrust out, as he hath brought them in.

4. DELLY.

DELLY is bounded on the West, with Mandao; on the East, with the Kingdome of Botanter; on the North, with the Eastern parts of Pengab; on the South, with the Eastern parts also of the Kingdome of Agra. So named from DELLY the chief City of it, by some called Delin.

The Countrey, besides what is common to it with the rest of India, is said to be more abundantly stored than any other part of it with horses, Elephants and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing singular, except it be that many of them taking more delight in theevery than honest trades, live for the most part upon spoil: but those especially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being such of the nobility or better sort, who since the conquest of their Countrey by the Great Moguls, have lived like Out-Laws on the Mountains. Of the same temper with the Resbutes in Cambaia, and the Agwans in Sanga and Dulfinda; who rather than submit themselves to a forrein yoak, (as they count that of the Mongull) choose to forsake their proper dwellings, and all honest waies and means of living.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Delly, A City not only honoured heretofore with the residence of the Great Moguls, who from hence pass in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongst their most knowing Subjects; but beautified with many sepulchres of their antient Kings, whose funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deserted of late times, by the Great Moguls, moving their Courts from place to place, as they inlarged their Empire, and increased their conquests: yet still a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains and Commanders, do frequent the same; and have their houses and pleasure of retirement in it. 2. Tremel, upon the Western side of the River Mandova; but not much observable. 3. Diceti, memorable for the great battel fought neer unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the forces of Baburius, and therby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambaia.

This Countrey governed a long time by its natural Princes, was at last conquered by some Moores or Saracens, comming from Persia or Arabia, but I find not which, who grew to so great power and wealth, that Sanosaradine, a Mahometan, one of their Descendants, dreamt of no less than the conquest of all India, if not of the whole Continent of Asia also. Having about the year 1300 (memorable for the beginning of the Ottoman Empire) subdued by little and little all the neighbouring Princes which made head against him; he pierced at last into Canora, now called Decan, and conquering a great part of it returned back to Delly. The pursuit of his victories he left unto one Abdessa his Lieutenant there, who added the rest of that Countrey to his Masters territories; but kept the possession to himself, confirmed therin by Sanosaradine, with the Title of Regent. But Sanosaradine dying in a war against the Persians, left for his Successor a sonne so unlike his Father, that the conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Masters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithstanding of sufficient power to preserve it self, from any of their equal neighbors, till the rising of the Great Moguls: whose puissance being unable to withstand, it submitted at the last to Adabar, the son of Merhamed, the second Emperor of this line: who to assure himself of the peoples loyaltie, and confirm his conquests, settled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next prosperous emergency, as before was noted.

5. AGRA.

THe Realm of AGRA is bounded on the North, with Delly, and Mandao; on the South, with Sanga, and Cambaia; on the West, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the Kingdome of Cambaia; on the East, with Oriſtan, or Orixa. So called from Agra the chief City of it, and the Seat Royall, of late times, of the Great Monguls.

The Country ſaid to be the beſt and moſt pleaſant of India, plentifull in all things, and ſuch a delicate, even peece of ground, as the like is hardly to be ſeen. Well watered, as with other Rivers, ſo moſt eſpecially with thoſe of Tamtheo and Jemena; which laſt runneth thorow the middeſt of it, North and South, or rather from the North-weſt to the South-eaſt: from whence bending more directly Eaſtwards, it falleth at laſt into the Ganges, or that which is ſuppoſed to be Ganges, for the bed of that great River is not certainly known. The People for the moſt part Gentiles; Mahometaniſm coming in with the Great Mogul; and generally inclining ſomewhat to the Pythagorean. For ſuch as live upon the banks of the River Jemena, neither eat fleſh, nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they eſteem ſo ſacred, that thereof they uſually make their Temple, and ſay their prayers therein, but naked (in which poſture they both dreſs their meat and eat it): lodging upon the ground, being impoſed by them as a penance, and ſo conceived.

Places of moſt eſteem herein, 1. Fatipore, or Fettebarri, on the Weſt-ſide of the River, a very fair and goodly City, once beautified with a Royall Palace here built by Echebar (after the removall of his Court from Caſcimir) with many ſpacious gardens belonging to it, but much decaied, ſince the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which moſt of the Stones are carried, and no ſmall quantity of Corn ſowed within the Walls. 2. Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena; inferiour to Lahor for wealth and greatneſs, but far more populous: the conſtant reſidence of the Court here in theſe latter times, drawing to it great reſort of all ſorts of People. By ſome ſuppoſed to be the Nagara of Ptolomy; but ſuch a ſuppoſition as is built on no better ground, than ſome reſemblance of the names. For Ptolomies Nagara is by him placed on the Weſtern-ſide of Indus, in the Latitude of 33. whereas this Agra ſtandeth on the Eaſt of the River Jemena, five Degrees more Southwards, in the Latitude of 28. But what it loſeth in Antiquity, it hath got in honor: the Town and Territory being a peculiar Kingdome, till Echebar the Mogul ſubdued it, Anno 1598 in his paſſage from Lahor to Decan. But it loſt nothing by the hand. For Echebar delighted in the ſituation of it (and that withall it ſtood in the middeſt of his Kingdomes) made it the Seat Royall of his Empire; fixt there, for the moſt part ever ſince: by means whereof exceedingly increaſed in wealth, beauty and greatneſs: the very Caſtle in which the Mogul uſually reſideth, being two miles in compaſs, environed with moſt high and unſcalable walls, and fortified with great ſtore of Ordinance. The whole ſpace betwixt it and Fatipore, being 18. miles, affirmed to be a continuall Market: and all the Intervall from hence to the Town of Lahor (from which diſtant 600 miles towards the South) adorned with continuall Rowes of Trees on both ſides of the wayes, moſt of them bearing a kind of Mulberry; and at every ten miles end, houſes erected by the King or ſome of the Nobles, for beautifying the way to the Regall City, preſerving their own memory, and the ſafe lodging of Paſſengers, in danger otherwiſe, by night of Theeves and Cutthroats. 3. Hendee, a Town more towards the South, beautified with a fair Caſtle of the Kings, cut out of the main Rock, and wrought with carved work round about, fortified with 50 peeces of Ordinance, and thought impregnable: for that cauſe made a Priſon for great perſons. Here are alſo two Hoſpitals for ſuch Captains (and Captains only) as are maimed in the wars. 4. Beani, twelve courſe or 18. miles from Fattipore; the moſt noted place for Indico in all the Indies; for the making whereof they have here twelve mills. Which Indico, (by the way) groweth on a ſmall ſhrub like our Gooſe-berry-buſhes, bearing ſeed like a Cabbage-ſeed: which being cut down, are laid in heaps for half a year, and when rotten, brought into a vault, to be trodden with Oxen from the Stalks, and being ground ſmall and fine at the Mills, is laſt of all boiled in furnaces, refined and ſorted.

6 SANGA.

SANGA is bounded on the North, with the Eaſt parts of the Realm of Agra; on the South and Weſt, with Cambaia; from which parted on the Weſt, by the Mountain Gate; and on the Eaſt, with Oriſtan. The reaſon of the name I find not: this Country being too far South to be ſo called from Sangalaſſa, a Town of chief note neer the fountains of Indus, where placed by Arianus, lib. 5.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Azmere, or Aginer, 180 miles from Agra. At the end of every courſe (each courſe a mile and an half) a fair pillar erected, and at every tenth courſe a fair Seraglio (ſuch as we call Innes) for the entertainment of Travellors. All built by Echebar, who wanting Children, is ſaid to have gone in Pilgrimage, on foot from Agra to Azimere, ſaying his prayers at the end of every courſe, and lodging all night at the tenth. 2. Citor, the chief City of Sanga, and once a Kingdome of it ſelf, or the chief of that Kingdome. Situate in the midle way betwixt Surat, a known Port of Cambaia, and Agra ſpoken of before: and moſt magnificently built on the top of a rocky hill, to which the paſſage is ſo narrow, and ſo well fortified, (there being in it three Gates, at the top, the middle, and the bottom) that thereby, and by other advantages of Art and nature, it was thought impregnable. Affirmed to be 12, miles in compaſs, beautified with many goodly buildings both publique and private; but once more glorious than it is; here being to be ſeen the ruins of 100 Temples, and above 100000 houſes, either demoliſhed by the wars, or ſuffered to decay by the great Moguls, who would not willingly have any thing in the Indies of more Antiquity, than themſelves; and therefore are rather inclined to build new Cities, than uphold uphold the old. The greatneſs and Antiquity of it have made ſome men think that it was the Royall Seat of Porus. Others affirm the ſame of Delly, but neither rightly: the Kingdome of Porus lying more towards the River Indus, and not ſo far South. Governed not long ſince by a Queen called Crementina, not more fair than valiant, who revolting from Baburius King of Cambaia, to whom ſhe formerly had paid tribute; was diſpoſſeſſed of the Town of Cator, where ſhe had fortified her ſelf with 30000. foot, and 2000 horſe: the People in a deſperate reſolution, laying all their treaſures on an heap, which they burnt together with themſelves; in which flame it is ſaid that there periſhed 70000 perſons. But the Cambaian did not long enjoy his victory. For not long after both the City and a great part of the Countrey, was conquered by the great Mogul, the mountainous parts hereof being held againſt him by Ramee, the Sonne or ſucceſſor of Qu. Crementina: till ſeeing himſelf deſtitute of all better helps, he put himſelf into the hands of one of the Sonnes of the late Sultan, by whom reconciled unto his Father. Some other Towns there are in this Province, and in that of Agra before mentioned, and thoſe of good eſteem perhaps amongſt the natives; but of no obſervation or importance in the courſe of buſineſs.

7 CAMBAIA.

CAMBAIA hath on the Eaſt Delly and part of Mandao; on the Weſt, Gedroſia a Province of the Perſian Empire; on the North, Dulſinda, and the reſt of Mandu; on the South, the main Ocean, and ſome part of Decan. It lieth on both ſides of the Indus; and is ſo called from Cambaia, the chief Province of it. The whole divided into 1. Sinda. 2. Guzarate, and 3. Cambaia ſpecially ſo called.

1. SINDA hath on the Eaſt the River Indus, by which ſeparated from Mandao; on the North, that part of Sanga which is called Dulſinda; on the Weſt, parts of Gedroſia, and Guzarate; and on the South, the reſt of Guzarate onely: coaſting along the Weſtern banks of the River Indus, whence it had the name; that River being now called Sind, as was ſaid before. And for this reaſon, as I take it, the Weſtern part of Sanga lying North of this, took the name of Dulſinda, and not Dulcinda (with a C) as moſt commonly written.

The Country for the generality very rich and fertile; but in ſome places nothing but a ſandy Deſart, inhabited for the moſt part by wild Aſſes, Foxes, Deer, and ſome wilder beaſts; but none ſo wild as the Calies, a robbing nation, ſo numerous withall, that they ſometimes rob whole Caravans as they paſs that way, notwithſtanding the many Forts and Caſtles built of purpoſe to ſecure thoſe paſſages.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Tutta, (or Gutu Negar Tutta) on the banks of Indus, a Town of great trade, but moſt frequented by the Portugals; who here receive ſuch Indian commodities, as come down the water from Labor; returning Pepper in exchange, which they bring up the River from their other Factories. 2. Lowribander, at the mouth or out-let of the Indus, three dayes journey from Tutta, the Port-town unto which it is, notwithſtanding that diſtance. Supposed to be ſituate in or neer the place of that Alexandria which Alexander built in memory of his navigation down this River to the Indian Ocean. An Haven much frequented becauſe free from worms, which about Surat, and other Havens on theſe Seas, ſo infeſt the ſhips, that without much coſt and care beſtowed upon them, they make them unable to return. 3. Catwalla, memorable for the Tenure, as given by Echebar the Mongul to a company of Women and their poſterity for ever, to bring up their daughters to dancing, and more wanton exerciſes. 4. Radempoore, a great Town with a ſtrong Caſtle, ſeated at the edge of the Deſarts: thorow which thoſe that are to paſs uſe here to provide themſelves of water and other neceſſaries for their journey. 5. Nuraquamire, a pretty Town on the further ſide of the Deſarts, eſteemed a Paradiſe by ſuch as have paſſed thorow thoſe uncomfortable and dangerous ſands, for the ſpace of ten or twelve daies journey. 6. Sarrama, a large Town, twenty miles from Tutta; the Center in which all lines meet, and from whence the diſtances of all Towns in Sinda, are accuſtomably meaſured.

The Countrey antiently ſubject to the Kings of Cambaia, and in the right of that Crown to the Great Mongul: but the people for the moſt part ſo untamed and maſterful, that except in ſome of the greater Towns they pay no Tributes, and in ſome places even within half a daies journy of Tutta, will acknowledge no King, but rob and ſpare whom they pleaſe. If at any time the Mogul ſends a force againſt them, (as he doth ſometimes) they fire their houſes, made like a Bee-Hive of ſtraw and mortar, which are ſoon rebuilded; and retire themſelves unto the Mountains. Yet one good quality they have amongſt many ill ones. When they have robbed a Traveller, or took money of him in the way of toll or cuſtome for his paſſage by them, they will conduct him honeſtly to the end of the Deſarts, leſt any ſhould rob him but themſelves.

2. GUZARATE hath on the North, Sinda; on the South, the main Ocean; the River Indus on the Eaſt; on the Weſt, Gedroſia, which the Indians call Nawatacas, but the Perſians, Circam.

The Soil of the ſame temper and fertilitie with that of Cambaia, ſpecially ſo called; and there we ſhall ſpeak further of it. The common people whom they call Guzarates of the ſame diſpoſition generally with the reſt of the Indians: but the greateſt part of the Countrey is poſſeſſed by the Resbutes or Rasbooches, the antient Inhabitants of this tract. Who when their Countrey was ſubdued by the Moores or Saracens, retired unto the Mountains and faſtneſſes of it, ſtanding upon their guard, and were never yet ſubdued by the Great Monguls. Who though poſſeſſed of the Sea-ſhores, and moſt Towns of conſequence, are fain to leave the inland parts and open Countries to the power of theſe Out-lawes: who either prey upon the people, or force them to compound for their peace and quiet at uncertain prices. Their Arms moſt commonly a Sword, Buckler, and Launce; well-horſed, and reſolute in any thing which they undertake:

which made one of the Moguls say of them, that no men in the world knew to die, but they.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Din, in a Peninsula looking towards Persia, but on the Eastside thereof, neer the mouth of Indus. Possessed by the Portugal, and by them fortified with a strong and impregnable Citadel, built with the leave and liking of King Badurius, thereby to buy their aid against Merhamed the Mongul who had newly vanquished him. A matter of such consequence to the Crown of Portugal, that John Bo elius confined to India for some Crimes by him committed, undertook (in hope by the merit of that service to obtain his pardon) to carry the first news of it in a small vessel not above 18 foot long, and but 6 foot broad (the best which for the present could be provided): which with great courage he performed, and thorow that large, wide, and tempestuous Ocean, came in safety with his news to Lisbon, to the great joy of the King, but greater admiration of all sorts of people. Scarce settled in their new possession, when besieged by Solyman Bassa, Admirall to Solyman the Magnificent, with a Fleet of 80 ships and Gallies, Anno 1537. offended with the Portugals for aiding the King of Persia, more for diverting the Spice-trade unto Alexandria. In which he had so ill success, that having assaulted it in vain with his Land-forces, he was fain to raise his siege in such hast and tumult, that he left his great Ordnance behind him. 2. Sauran, a Town and Castle of the Resbutes, spoken of before; and by them held against the power of the Great Mongul. 3. Boldra, a very fair and beautiful City, but of no great compass. 4. Ardovat, not far from the banks of the Indus, on the North of this Region towards Sinde. 5. Madrbat, by some called Amadabat, affirmed to be both for wealth and greatness the cheif of Guzarate, neer as big as London; well walled, and situate on a plain neer the Rivers side; seldome without Merchants of all Religions, Jews, Gentils, Christians, Moores, some of all, and neither. 6. Stringi, 7. Periuo, 8. Serkesse; this last remarkable for the Sepulchres of the old Kings of Cambaia, fair, and well kept, and visited from all parts of the Kingdome.

Nothing considerable in this part of the Countrey, as to point of story, but what is common to them with the rest of Cambaia; but that the Resbutes, or Rasbooches still remain unconquered. Possessed not only of the hills and Mountains, but of some strong holds: and governed by the Heads of their Casts or Tribes: all which acknowledge the Mongul for their Superiour in regard of his power; but none of them obey him as their Lord or Soveraign: conceiving it to be some abatement of their own authority, if they admit of him as an Umpire to compose their differences, which they sometimes do.

3 CAMBAIA specially so called, hath on the North, Mandao; on the South, the main Ocean, and some part of Decan; on the East, Delly, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains; on the West, the Main Ocean, with some part of Guzarate. It standeth on the East-sides of the out-lets of Indus, running along the Sea-shore for 500 miles, and took this name from Cambaia the chief City of it.

The Countrey said to be the most fruitful of all India, abounding in Rice, Wheat, Sugar, Spices of all sorts, and choicest fruits: of silk and Cotton so great plenty that they fraught yearly forty or fifty ships with those commodities. In the mountains they find Diamonds, Chalcedonies, and a kind of Onyx-stone, which are called Cornelines, and corruptly Cornelians. Amongst the Rarities hereof, they reckon the Abades, a great Beast, twice as bigge as a Bull, having on their snowts a little horn, and the hide so hard as no man can pierce it with a thrust; which is the Rhinocerot of the Antients.

The people effeminate and unwarlike, and therefore not much used by the Moguls in a war of consequence; to supply which defect he furnisheth himself with Souldiers out of Persia, of which his standing bands consist; most of their Sultans and Commanders of that Nation also. More given to merchandise than war, and therein thought to be as cunning (if not deceitful withall) as any people in the world: treacherous in their trust, proud in their carriage, bloody upon advantage, and much given to Venerie; ignorant of letters, but well practised in Mechanical Arts. In matters of Religion, for the most part Gentils; not knowing, or contemning the Law of Mahomet; but very punctual in their own heathenish superstitions. The Bannians in this Countrey, being natural Indians, nusled in Paganism, and so wedded to their old Idolatries, that no perswasions can prevail with them, make the greatest number: and seem to be all Pythagoreans in some opinions, for they eat not any thing that hath blood or life, but feed on Rice, Roots, Plantons and such natural fruits; paying a large Revenue yeerly to the Great Mogul, that no Oxen may be killed amongst them. And because new opinions should not grow amongst them, they marry in their own Tribes only, and never out of their own Trades; secure thereby as they conceive from all innovations.

Cities of most observation in it, 1. Cambaia, three miles from the Indus, and as many in compass, one of the neatest and best built in all the East. So populous withall, that it is thought to contain 130000 Families, and is therefore called the Caire of the Indies. Of most esteem in all this Kingdome (though far less than Madabat) to which it doth impart its name. 2. Barocho, Southwards of Cambaia on the top of an hill, with a fair River underneath it: well-walled, and noted for the best Calicuts (a kind of linnen Cloth so called from the City of Calicut, where it was first made) not to be matched in all the Indies. 3. Swalley, still more unto the South, and about a mile from the Sea-shore; but giving name unto a large and capacious Bay, where the ships ride which trade at Surat. 4. Surat, about ten miles from the Bay of Swalley, from whence the River navigable but by Boats and Shallops; fortified with a Castle of Stone well stored with Ordnance. The houses for the most part of Sun-dried bricks, very large and lasting: built with flat roofs, but battlemented on all sides for fear of falling; and beautified with goodly Gardens of Pomgranats, Melons, Figs, and Limons, interlaced with Riverets and Springs. Made of late years a Factory for the English Merchants, who have here their President, and a magnificent house for the reception and staple of their Commodities. 5. Neriand, a great Town, and as remarkable for the making of Indico; which growing on a ſmall ſhrub like our Gooſe-berry-buſhes, bears a ſeed like a Cabbage ſeed, and being cut down, is laid in heaps for half a year. Grown rotten, it is brought into a vault to be trod by Oxen from the Stalks, then ground in Mills, and finally boyled in furnaces, refined and ſorted, and ſo ſold to the Merchant. 6. Damam, upon the Sea-ſide over againſt Diu, and poſſeſſed as that is by the Portugals. A beautifull and pleaſant Town, fortified with a ſtrong Caſtle at the North-end of it, of white chalky ſtone, well planted with Ordnance: oppoſite whereunto on the South-ſide of the Town, a goodly Church, edged atop with white. Which with the houſes, for the moſt part of the ſame colour alſo, afford a pleaſing proſpect to the ſailers by. 7. Cumpanel, ſituate on the top of an high mountain, and environed with a ſeven-fold wall; once the Seat Royall of the Kings of Cambaia. 8. Daraiotote, a place of ſuch ſtrength that the great Moguls could never get it by force. Rendred at the laſt upon compoſition, conditioned they ſhould ſtill be governed by a King of their own. 9. Netherby, a great market of brazen ware, beaſts, and Armour. 10. Bandre. 11. Tanai, &c.

This Kingdome taking in Guzarate and Sinda, as parts hereof, is extremely populous, ſaid to contain 6000 Towns and Villages very well inhabited: but the people not accuſtomed to, or unfit for warres. Antiently governed by Kings of their own, it was firſt ſubdued by the Arabians or Moores, Anno 1423. under the conduct of one Mahomet or Machamut: who having forced the Resbutes or naturals of the Country to betake themſelves unto the Mountains, was made King hereof. To him ſucceeded his ſonne Mamudius, one of no great action. But what he wanted was ſupplied by his ſonne Baduruus, who having conquered the Kingdome of Citor, invaded that of Mandao alſo. His Army for that warre conſiſted of 500000 foot, 150000 horſe, 1000 great pieces of Ordinance, 500 wagons loaded with powder & ſhot, and as many wain-loads of gold and ſilver to pay his Army. But being diſcomfited in two great battels, by Merhamed the Mongul Tartar, whom Galgee the Mandoan King had called in to his aid, he ſhaved his beard, and fled in a diſguize to Diu then poſſeſſed by the Portugals, whom he licenced in that diſtreſs to build the Citadel: ſlain afterwards by a mean mariner, at his return from the Portugal Vice-Roy, whom he had viſited on ſhip-board. And though Mamudius his Succeſſor endeavoured to free his Kingdome from both pretenders: yet weakned with the loſs of ſo great an Army he was not able to effect it. Firſt driven from Diu, which he had beſieged both by Sea and land, to his great diſhonour; and after vanquiſhed in battell by Adabar the ſonne of Merhamed, not far from Serkeſſe, the antient buriall-place of the Kings of Cambaia, but then the Sepulchre of the Kingdome: which by that victory fell to the Great Monguls, who have ſince enjoyed it.

8 DECAN.

DECAN is bounded on the Eaſt, with Narſinga; on the Weſt, with the Indian Ocean; on the North, with Delly and Cambaia; on the South, with Malavar, and Canara. The reaſon of the name we ſhall have anon.

It lieth along the Sea-coaſt, for the ſpace of 250 miles, betwixt Aliga, and Bate, two noted Rivers; extending Eaſt, as farre as the Mountain Gates, and afterwards thruſting into the North betwixt Cambaia and thoſe mountains till it meet with Delly. The ſoil much of the ſame nature with the reſt of India, but not ſo flouriſhing as Cambaia. The People for the moſt part Mahometans, which Religion was firſt planted there by the conqueſts of Sa Noſaradine, 350 years ago; yet not without ſome entermixture of their antient Gentiliſm.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Bider, the Seat Royall of Mamudza, once ſole King of this Country, who to beautifie and adorn this City, commanded every one of his Prefects, or ſubordinate Governors, being eighteen in number, to build here a Palace, and to reſide therein certain moneths in the year; each one to leave a ſonne there in perpetual hoſtage. Situate in the moſt Northern parts of the Countrey neer the borders of Delly; from the King whereof Mamudza had then newly revolted: and therefore would make ſure of this place, as moſt in danger. 2. Viſapore, bordering on Cambaia, the Princely Seat of Idalcan, one of the Kings of Decan, after it was diſmembered into ſeverall Kingdomes. 3. Danger, confiningon Canara, a beautifull and flouriſhing City, once the chief Seat of Niſalamoccus, or Nizalmoxa, another of the Kings hereof after that diviſion. 4. Decan, ſo called by the name of the Province, of which the chief City next to Bider the Imperiall Seat. Six miles from which there is an hill encompaſſed with an high wall, and kept by a ſtrong Garriſon, becauſe of the great ſtore of Diamonds which are digged out of it. The town ſo wealthy, that the people generally are attired in ſilks, or the pureſt tiffany. 5. Sintacora, on the mouth of the River Aliga, where it falleth into the Sea. 6. Goa, a Sea-Town alſo, ſituate in a little but moſt pleaſant Iland called Ticuarinum, fifteen miles in compaſs; oppoſite to the mouth or out-let of the River Mandova. A noted Empory, and one of the chief keys which unlock the Indies; for number of Inhabitants, magnificent buildings, and pleaſantneſs of ſituation, one of moſt note in all this Country. Poſſeſſed by the Portugals, who have here their Arſenall, and harbour for their Indian Fleet; by which they do command theſe Seas. So ſtrongly fortified withall, that though beleagured by Idalcan (of whom before) with 35000 horſe, 6000 Elephants, and 250 peece of Ordnance, Anno 1573. yet he could not force it. Made in regard of the convenient ſituation and ſtrength thereof, the ordinary Reſidence of the Portugal Vice-Roy, who hath here his Counſell, Chancellor, and other Officers, for the government of ſuch parts of India as belong to that Crown: as alſo of the Arch-Biſhop or Primate of the Indian Churches planted by that nation, who is hence called the Arch-Biſhop of Goa. 7. Chaul, a Sea-Town in the hands of the Portugals alſo; and by them well fortified: Inſomuch as Niſamalocco, aſſaulting it at the ſame time with a very great Army, was fain to leave leave it as he found it. 8. Balaguate, in the uplands or Hill-Country, whence it had the name: Bal in the Persian language signifying a top, or summit of a mountain, and Guate an Hill. 9. Brampore, once the chief seat of another Kingdome; now the chief City of those parts of Decan which are subject to the Great Mongul. Situate on a great River in the middest of a spacious Plain, beautifull, and of very great trading; in bigness equall unto Paris, yet yielded to Echebar the Mogul, without any resistance, Anno 1600. Miram then King thereof forsaking it, and betaking himself to 10. Syra, a strong hold both by art and nature. Situate on the top of an hill, in compass five leagues, and environed with a triple wall, furnished with victuals, and all other necessary provisions, sufficient to maintain 60000 men many years; 3000 great peeces of Ordnance planted on the walls. Besieged herein by Echebar with an Army of 200000 fighting men, he held out against him: till overcome by promises of fair correspondence, drawn out of his hold (some of his Counsellers being bribed to perswade him to it) he was detained by the Mogull; and the Commanders won by rewards and hopes yielded up the Fort, and therein all the Princes of the Royall family, accustomably kept therein when the Throne was full; which vacant, the next Heir was taken hence, to succeed unto it. Of the same nature as it seemeth with the hill Amara in Ethiopia.

The Countrey formerly inhabited by a people called Venaztrari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sanosaradine, a Mahometan, and King of Delly: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, possessed himself of a great part of it, compelling them to submit unto his Religion. The residue hereof subdued by Abdesa, whom Sa Nosaradine left here to pursue the warre, was by him governed with great justice for 20 years: when dying, he left his government to his sonne Mamudza, confirmed by the Successor of Sa Nosaradine in his Fathers Regency on the payment of an annuall tribute. Mamudza soon finding that the young King was of no great Spirit, not only refused to pay the tribute imposed upon him, but took unto himself the title of King of Decan: giving this name unto the Countrey (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mungril body of Christians, Mahometans, and Gentiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in language, customes, or Religion; the word Decan signifying in that tongue, as much as an illegitimate brood, or a body of Bastards. Out of these he made choice of twelve (others say eighteen) whom he appointed Governors of so many Provinces: not daring to trust any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the Countrey: and hoping that these Slaves thus promoted by him, would be more subject to command. But here his silly hopes deceived him. For these Slaves either governed by their masters example, who had done the like unto the sonne and Heir of Sa Nosaradine, or presuming on their own strength, and some forein aids, left to their master nothing but an empty title, each one becoming absolute in his severall Province. Nor did his Successors for any long time enjoy that title; Daquem the last of them being taken at Bider his chief City: and thereupon the name of King usurped by every one of those petit Tyrants. Reduced at last into fewer hands, such of them as were left became considerable Princes; as appeareth by the great Army raised by Idalcan for the siege of Goa. But in the end, distressed on the one side by the Portugals, who embarred their trade, and invaded on the other side by the Great Mogul with most puissant Armies; Melic entituled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampore, were in fine subdued by Echebar, about the year 1600. Against whom and his Successors, though the Venazarari still hold out, as the Resbutes or Rasbooches do in the Realm of Cambaia; and that the King of Amdanager, and perhaps some other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country; the residue of these Roytelets, and petit Princes, (if any of them be remaining) being Homagers or Vassals to him. Against whose further Progress to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar so greedily aimed at, the puissant Kings of Narsinga, and those of Malabar, have opposed their power: whose Kingdomes and estates we must next survey, before we take a view of those other provinces, which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9. CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof antiently it was a part) on the South, with Malabar; on the East, with Narsinga, from which separated by the Mountain Gates; on the West, with the Ocean. The reason of the name I find not; nor much worth the searching.

The Countrey hath a fair Sea-coast, with many capacious Harbors to it, which cannot but adde much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furnished in the in-land parts, with Rice, Figs, and Sugars; but destitute of Wheat, Pulse, and Barley. Not much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing or not regarding the use of bread; but living on such fruits as the earth produceth of it self without the charge or care of the husband-man. In other things, but little differing, if at all, from the rest of the Indians: their Religion for the most part Paganish; but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principall Towns and Cities of it, 1. Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2 Onor, a Port-Town of good note, sometimes held by the Portugals. 3. Buticalia, situate in the richest part of all this Country; never possessed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4. Mangalor, a town of great wealth and trade; fortified with a strong Castle, once destroyed by the Portugueze, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narsinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5. Mayendre, more within the land. And so is also 6. Lispor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant. 7. Solsette, in a Peninsula of 20 miles compass containing 36. Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants: the Town about 9 miles from Goa, and subject with the whole Peninsula to the Portugals.

This Country is now subject to the Kings of Narsinga; but formerly under the command of its own Princes: he the name of Canara, comprehending in thoſe times all that Countrey alſo, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Noſaradine and Abdeſſa, and by Mamudza cantoned into many Prafetture, this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narſingan, who taking his advantages, in the minority of one of their Princes, became Maſter of it. And when the Idalcan, (for I take that not ſo much for the name of a man, as a Title of dignity) quarrelled his poſſeſſion of it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdomes of Decan, Chriſmarao then King of Narſinga, brought a powerfull Advocate to defend his right, that is to ſay, an Army of 606000 Foot, 29650 Horſe, and 537 Elephants: every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four men in it, with which ſtrong Argument the Idalcan being confuted in the Schooles of war, with much difficulty ſaved himſelf, though he loſt his cauſe: the Narſingan ever ſince continuing quiet in the poſſeſſion of this Country; except onely ſome of the Sea-Towns in the power of the Portugals. Who in the year 1567 deſtroyed in thoſe few places by them poſſeſſed no fewer than 200 of their Idol-Temples, with many of their Pagodes, or Idols in them; converting the Rents and Lands which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raiſed from the ſeverall Ports which they hold herein, to the maintenance of a College of Jeſuites in Salſette, and other Religious houſes founded by them, in their other Cities.

10. MALABAR.

MALABAR is bounded on the North, with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangeraco; on the Eaſt, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narſinga; on the Weſt and South, with the main Ocean. On the Coaſt whereof it doth extend for the ſpace of 300 miles, that is to ſay, from the River Gangeraco, to the Cape Comori, which I conceive to be the Commaria Extrema of Ptolomy, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing anſwerable to the length, not above 50. miles where broadeſt, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Conus,

The Country more populous, for the bigneſs, than any in India; enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitfull Soyl, well watered, and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentifull in Rice, and all manner of Spices, as Ginger, Cinnamon, Caſſia, Pepper, and moſt excellent fruits. Amongſt their Trees, there is one whoſe name my Author ſpeaks not, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not onely wood for Fewell, but they draw from it, wine, ſugar, oyl, fine cloth and cordage: another tree, which beareth Cotton, and Cypreſs, or Cobweb-lawn, of the leaves whereof they make a fine ſtuff like to Sattin or Taffata. They have alſo great ſtore of Apes, and Monkeyes, Parats, Paraquitoes, and other Creatures not known in theſe parts but from thence: not to ſay any thing of their Lions, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian neighbours. The flowers there alwayes in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green, by reaſon that the Air is ſo ſweet and temperate.

The people are of coal-black colour (differing therein from the reſt of the Indians, ſwarth and complexioned like the Olive) well limbed, and wearing their hair long and curled: about their heads an hankerchief wrought with gold and ſilver, and about their middle a cloth, which hangeth down to conceal their nakedneſs. Of manners treacherous and bloody, more properly to be termed deſperate than ſtout and valiant; and for more ſurety in their wars, they uſe poiſoned Arrows, as they do alſo in their theeving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, and more beſotted generally on their Idolatries, than the reſt of theſe Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worſhip, ſeated upon a brazen throne, and crowned with a rich Diadem. From his head iſſue out four horns, from his mouth four Tusks; his eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his noſe flat and ugly, his viſage terrible, his hands like claws, his legs and thighs like thoſe of a Lion. In a word, we cannot paint the Devill in a more ugly figure, than they do their God. Unto this Pagode, or his Prieſt, they offer the virginity of all their daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privy parts a Bodkin of gold and ſilver, upon which the Bride (maried moſt commonly at ten or twelve years of Age) is forcibly ſet; the ſharpneſs of it being ſuch, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if ſhe prove with child that year, it is ſaid to be of his begetting, and the more eſteemed. Others with more humanity, inſtead of torturing their daughters to this wretched Idol (parallell almoſt to the offering of their ſonnes to Moloch amongſt the Syrians) preſent them to the Bramini, or Idol-Prieſt, to be deflowred the firſt night of the wedding: and without one of theſe two handſels, no man is ſuffered to enjoy the uſe of his wife, not their Kings themſelves. More privileged yet than many women neighbouring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themſelves with their husbands bodies: but may have many Husbands either ſucceſſively or at once, as they liſt themſelves: and if at once, ſhe ſends her children to that husband (as we know who did) who ſhe thinks to have the beſt right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we ſaid before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be cantonned into many Kingdomes. Divided at preſent, and long ſince, into thoſe of 1. Cononor. 2. Calecut. 3. Granganor, 4. Chochin. 5. Cai-Colam. 6. Coulan, and 7. Travancor.

1. CONONOR, joineth to Canara, extending Southward on the ſhore about 20 miles, where it bordereth on the Kingdome of Calicut. The chief Cities of which, 1. Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built, and beautified with a very fair Haven, not more ſafe than ſpacious, capacious of the greateſt veſſels, and for that cauſe much frequented by forein Merchants; but ſpecially by the Portugals, who for the aſſuring of their trade have here a Citadel, erected and well garriſoned with the Kings conſent.

lent. 2. Cota, not far from Cangeraco, the border betwixt this and Canara. 3. Peripatan, on the confines of Calicute. 4. Marabia. 5. Tramopatan. 6. Main, intermediate Towns, but not much observable.

2. CALICUTE, South from Cononor, extending on the Sea-shore 25 Leagues, and situate in the most pleasant and fruitfull part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1. Pandarane, on the skirts of Cononor. 2. Tanor, a retiring place of the Kings. 3. Patangale. 4 Chatua, on the borders of Cranganor. 5. Chale, a strong peece, once in the hands of the Portugueze, but in the year 1601 recovered by the King of Calicute, who had besieged it with an Army of 90000 men. 6. Capacote, the Haven to Calicute. 7. Calicute, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea three miles, and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houses, but standing some of them far asunder, mean and low-built, few of them exceeding the height of a man on horse-back; the soil being so hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cause unwalled. Insomuch that Merchants houses are here valued but at 20. Crowns, those of the common sort at no more than ten. Which notwithstanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Persians, Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars, these last from the furthest parts of Cathay 6000 miles distant. The common Staple in those times of all Indian Merchandise, till distracted into severall Ports by the power of the Portugals: who being more industrious, and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the shore for a very strong Castle, by which they do command the Haven, and receive custome of all Merchandise going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicute, he besieged it with 100000 men: and though the Portugals held it out a whole winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it, but first demolished it to the ground, that it might not be made usefull to those of Calicute. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no less wantonness; the men here using to change wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: & the women spending their whole time in adorning themselves with Rings and Jewels, about their ears, necks, legs, arms, and upon their brests; though going naked for the most part, one would think that a little dressing might suffice them. If covered, it is onely with a smock of Calicut, a kind of linnen cloth here made, and from hence so called: and that not used but by those of the better sort.

3. CRANGANOR, lieth on the South of Calicute, a small Kingdom, and affording little worth the speaking of: but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of those old Christians, whom they call Christians of Saint Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be so full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and exposed to publique scorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometans, amongst whom they live. The City rich, commodiously built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with his crooked streams the most part of the Country, makes it fat and flourishing.

4. COCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the shore for the space of 40. Leagues: and therein many Christians of the first plantation, besides some converts made of later times by the Jesuites. Towns of most note herein. 1. Augamale, the Arch-Bishops See of those antient Christians, fifteen miles from Cochin. 2. Cochin, a Bishops See, but of later erection, and the chief City of this Kingdome, which takes name from hence. Situate on the mouth or out-let of the River Mangat, by which almost encompassed like a Demy-Iland; Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very safe and spacious; as also by the friendship of the Portugal Nation. By whose power and favor they have not onely freed themselves from the King of Calicute, to whom before they did acknowledge some subjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the trafick also: this King permitting them to erect a Castle on the Haven, to secure their trade; which the other on good reasons of State forced them to destroy. The King hereof in some respect superiour unto him of Calicute, when a Vassal to him: this King being the Pope or Chief Bishop, as it were, of all the Bramines: for which cause reverenced by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of these Western parts) who look upon him as the head of their superstition, and pay him many Annuall duties.

5. CAI-COLAM, is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in the temper of the Air, and the fertility of the Earth: which notwithstanding, the King hereof is not so rich as his other neighbours. Here live also many of the old Christians, taking name from Saint Thomas; but those so destitute of Priests and Ministers to instruct them in the Principles of Christianity, that once in three years there came some formerly from the Patriarch of Muzall, in Assyria, to baptize their children. Better I hope provided for in these later daies: since their emboso ming and reconcilement to the Church of Rome. Their chief Town of the same name with the Country, hath a very fair Haven, in the fashion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till destroyed by the Portugals; but since that re-edified. Of less note there are many both Towns and Villages, but such as do deserve here no particular mention.

6. COULAN, upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20. Leagues more Southwards upon the Shores, is said to be destitute of corn, but plentifull of pepper, and most sorts of spices. So stored with Horses, and fit Riders to serve upon them, that the King hereof keeps 20000 Horse in continuall readiness either for invasion or Defence. This Kingdome, as the rest before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Coulan, 24. miles from Cochin, and once a member of this Kingdome; of great resort by forein Merchants, by reason of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary Seat of the Cobritin, or chief Priest of the Bramines, till removed to Cochin: and held to be the Metropolis or mother City of all Malabar; the rest being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Christians, as well of the originall foundation of Christianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jesuites.

7. TRA-

7. TRAVANCOR, called alſo TRANCANOR, reacheth from the Kingdome of Coulan, to the Cape of Comarim, and turning towards the Eaſt, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael, in the Kingdome of Biſnagar or Narſinga. By which accompt it hath the benefit of the Sea on all ſides except towards the North: reaching in breadth from the Weſt Seas unto the Eaſt about 90 miles. The Country, as the reſt before, inhabited by many with the name of Chriſtians, if they may be called ſo which want Sacraments: the condition of theſe Thomaan Chriſtians in former times being ſo unhappy, that in 50 years before the coming of the Jeſuites, (if the Jeſuites may be believed from whom we have it) they had ſeen no Prieſt, nor other Miniſter of the Goſpell. Chief Towns hereof, (for of thoſe many others of leſs note I ſhall make no mention) are 1. Travancor, the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well-built, nor of very much trading. 2. Quilacare, the head City of a peculiar Signeury, but held of the Kings of Trancanor, as their next and immediate Lords, though all thoſe Kings alſo Fendataries of the Crown of Narſinga. And were that the worſt Tenure by which they hold, it might be tolerable; but there is a matter of worſe conſequence which attendeth theſe beſotted Princes. The Kingdome here is but a pomp of twelve years continuance, and then endeth in a ſad Cataſtrophe. For at the end of thoſe twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with ſilk or Tapeſtry, and in the ſight of all his People, gathered together to behold this ſtrange ſolemnity, cutteth off his noſe, ears, lips and other parts, which he caſts towards the Idol, and in concluſion cuts his own Throat for his finall Sacrifice: his deſigned Succeſſor being preſent at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at ſo dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with thornes, yet here the pomps of ſoveraignty be leſs laſting than in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end, of horrors.

Theſe Kingdomes heretofore but one, till the year 900 or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into theſe ſeven by Sarama Pereimal, the ſole Monarch. He by the ſollicitation of ſome Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein ſo devout, that he reſolved upon a Pilgrimage to Meccha, there to end his daies. At his departure, he divided his eſtates into theſe ſeven parts, diſtributing them amongſt the neereſt of his kindred: aſſigning unto him of Coulan the preheminence in ſacred matters, and the Imperiall dignity unto him of Calecute, with the title of Samorin, that is to ſay, Chief Emperor, or as ſome write, a God on earth. He only privileged with the right and power of coinage; the reſt to be ſubordinate, if not ſubject to him. From Pereimals ſetting forwards to the City of Meccha, the Malabars accompt their reckonings, and begin their years; as the Chriſtians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his heſts were punctually obſerved. But the Kingdome of Calicute being weakned by the power of the Portugals, the other Kings began to free themſelves from that ſubjection, and in the end to caſt off all Relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet ſtill he is eſteemed of more power and majeſtie, than any of the reſt of the Kings of Malabar; and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; firſt in regard of that infinite trading which is mannaged from moſt parts of the World in his Port of Calicute; the cuſtomes and impoſts upon which muſt needs be of exceeding value; and ſecondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are ſaid to equal ſome Kings in Africk, and Dukes in Europe nor a few.

Quid Domini facient? audent cum talia Fures.
And if the man ſuch riches have,
Then what muſt he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raiſe may be fully ſeen by that which hath been ſaid before; wherein we find him with an Army of 50000 men beſieging and taking in the Fort of Chalen; with another of 100000. beleagureing the Caſtle which the Portugals had built neer his City of Calicute. And when the ſaid Portugals ſtirred up the King of Cochin to make head againſt him, he fell upon them ſuddenly both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-ſouldiers, and 200 good Veſſels of war for the ſervice at Sea. Sufficient force to reduce the reſt of theſe petit Kings to their old acknowledgements, but that ſome of them to avoid the danger, have put themſelves under the Vaſſallage, or protection at the leaſt, of the Great Mongul: others by ſuffering the Portugals to build forts in their Kingdomes, have engaged them in defence of their eſtate againſt this pretender. His forces conſiſt moſt of Foot, Horſe being unſerviceable in theſe Countries, by reaſon of thoſe many Rivers which interlace it. And theſe Foot are compounded moſt of Gentry which they there call Nairos, trained to their weapons when they are but ſeven years of Age; every one to that weapon which he moſt delighteth in; which makes them very expert and nimble at them: much privileged for that cauſe by the Lawes of the Countrey; and ſo eſteemed of by the King, that out of them his Siſters chooſe what men they pleaſe to be their Husbands; ſome of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King ſucceeding.

Nothing elſe memorable touching the affairs of Calicute, but the way of ſucceſſion to the Kingdome: the Crown deſcending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the ſonne of his Eldeſt Siſter, or neereſt kinſwoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath alwaies the maidenhead of his Queens, and that ſome of theſe Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company; it is preſumed, or very probably ſuppoſed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines, and not the Kings.

8. NARSINGA.

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Travancor; on the Weſt, with the Mountain Gates; on the North, with Oriſtan or Orixa; on the Eaſt, with the Golf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga the chief City of it, and the Royal residence of the King.

The Countrey is said to be in length 600 miles, or as some say of as much extent as can be travelled in six moneths: plentiful in the same commodities which the rest of India do h afford, except Pepper and some other spices which are proper to Malabar. Not so well furnished with Rivers, as some other places: which want is liberally supplyed by water falling from the Mountains, and received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moisten, and enrich the land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel, in which if any year passeth without rain, they fall into such extremities, that they are fain to sell their children.

The People, in Religion Gentiles, so worshipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature, that they join the Devil or their Pagodes in Commission with him, whereto induced by the perswasion of their beastly Bramines, who thereout suck no small advantage. Some Christians there are intermixt, of the old plantation, especially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel: but not so well instructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to dissuade them from the use of some Heathenish customes, though barbarous, inhumane, and against all reason; not used in any place but amongst the Indians. Amongst which I reckon for most savage, the forcing of poor women to burn themselves with their husbands bodies, the womens kindred not the husbands thrusting them on these hard conditions, who reckon it a disgrace to their familie, if she should refuse. And because they will be sure not to have that infamy stick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who shall so refuse, must shave her head, and break her Jewells, and not be suffered to eat, drink, or sleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miserable than the Flames which they seek to shun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greedinesse, and to contend which shall be foremost: she being thought to have been most loving during his life, which is now most willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her self to his Manes, at the funeral pile: whereunto thus alludeth the Poet.

Et certamen habent lethi, quæ viva sequatur
Conjugium; pudor est non licuisse mori.
Ardent victrices, & præbent pectora flammæ;
Imponunt q; suis ora perusta viris.

A shame 'tis not to dy: they therefore strive,
Who may be fam'd to follow him alive.
The Victor burns, yields to the flame her brest;
And her burnt face doth on her husband rest.

Chief Cities of this Countrey, 1. Cael, on the borders of Travancer, belonging antiently to the Kings of Coulan, now to those of Narsinga; the people whereabout called Paravi, are a kind of Christians, who live for the most part by fishing for Pearl, which they sell to the Portugals, and Bengalan Merchants. 2. Golconda, the chief City of the Province called Musulipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vassal to the Kings of Narsinga. 3. Chamdagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4. Prepeti, three miles from Chamdagrin, memorable for an yearly feast here celebrated in honour of Perumal (once sole King of Malavar) reckoned for a Saint at least in these parts of India: the offerings at which accustomably amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5. Chadambaram, the Mother-City of those Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Perumal, who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of annual rent, all consumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have bren born out of Perumalls head. 6. Madura, honoured with the residence of the Chocanadi, or the Chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdome; so numerous, that in this Town, and the territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thousand. The seat also of one of three Naichi, or tributary Kings of the Crown of Narsinga: the other two residing at 7. Gingi, and 8. Tanaor, the Chief Towns of their Principalities, but not else observable. 9. Maliapur, called also St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of that Apostle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolatrous Indians, whose posterity, in other things like unto other men, are said to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephants: a punishment inflicted on the whole Generation for the sin of their Ancestors: How true this is I cannot say, but sure I am that Dorotheus saith, that he resteth at Calamina, where he was slain with a dart. However, the Portugals, to make some use of the old tradition, removed some bones from this place, which were said to be his, and enshrined them in Goa, their own City; much visited by profitable Pilgrimes, to their great enriching. The City once so large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples for the use of divers Nations which resorted thither. In these later daies desolate and forlorn, inhabited onely by some old Christians, till the Portugueze began again to people it with new Colonies. 10. Choromandel, giving name to a large Sea-Coast, lying on the West side of the Golf of Bengala. 11. Casta, a Town of Choromandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Countrey; but buried quick in the same grave with him. 12. Negapatan, in the same Region, inhabited for the most part by Saint Thomas Christians. 13. Tarnassari, once the head City of a Kingdome so called, the King whereof was able to bring into the field, 100000 horse and foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now subject to the King of Narsinga. The people black, but so out of love with their own colour, that they willingly prostitute their wives or daughters, to any people of a whiter and more cleer complexion. 14. Bisnagar, once the chief City of this kingdome, whence the King is sometimes called the King of Bisnagar. In those times 24 miles in compass, with nine Gates in it, (amongst others) continually guarded with Souldiers; and a magnificent Palace not elsewhere equalled. In the year 1565. sacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joint forces had invaded this kingdome, it became desolate and forsaken; and the Court removed to 15. Penegarde, eight daies journey within the Land (Biſnegar being ſeated on the borders of Decan) But long it had not ſtaid there when removed to 16. Narſinga, where it hath ever ſince been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdome, unto which it gives name, though the King many times call himſelf by the name of that City where he reſideth for the preſent.

Of the Antiquity of this kingdome I have little to ſay; theſe Eaſtern parts not being known at all till theſe later times, nor well known in theſe. About the year 1550 their King then reigning was impriſoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who ſhewed him only once a year to his Subjects, parting the power and government amongſt themſelves. He being dead, and his ſonne kept in the like reſtraint, Romaragio the firſt Captain aſcended the Throne, Timaragio mannaged the Eſtate, and Bengahe commanded the Army. But theſe Uſurpers being overthrown by the kings of Decan, in the year 1565. Timaragio the Survivor took the charge of all; whoſe ſonne, to make himſelf ſure of the kingdome, murdered his impriſoned Soveraign (the life and liberty of kings being much of a date) whence followed many broiles and troubles touching the Succeſſion, till ſettled in the perſon of Chriſnarao, the undoubted Heir: who did not only reſtore peace and quiet to Narſinga it ſelf, but recovered Cantra out of the hands of the Idalcan, who had before endangered his eſtate therein. Of the great Army which he led againſt this Idalcan, we have ſpoke already: adding here onely, that before he went upon this enterpriſe (called the journey of Rachiol) he ſacrificed in nine daies 2036 Beaſts to the Countrey Idols, the fleſh whereof he cauſed to be diſtributed amongſt the poor; Routed at firſt, and being perſwaded by ſome about him to go out of the field, he is ſaid to have made this Noble Anſwer, that he had rather the Idalcan ſhould boaſt that he had ſlain him, than vanquiſhed him. And thereupon leaping into the thickeſt of his enemies, and well followed by the valianteſt of his Friends, he obtained the victory. But this vaſt Army of 606000 foot, 30000 Horſe, 537 Elephants, with neceſſaries anſwerable to ſuch infinite multitudes, ſpeaks only what he can do on extreme neceſſity, or when he hath ſome long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better meaſured by their ſtanding forces, than by premeditated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much ſhort of his greateſt neighbours: his ſtanding bands conſiſting of 40000 Nairos, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which ſerve on foot; 20000 Horſe, who are either Perſians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continual readineſs: his foot defraied out of his Revenues, his Horſe maintained like the Turks Timariots out of certain lands diſtributed amongſt his Captains (ſome of which are ſaid to have a million of Crowns per Annum) to furniſh him with theſe ſtable bands of Horſes and Elephants.

As for his Revenue it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three, defraying with the reſt the expence of his houſhold, and the entertainment of his Foot. This ſum amaſſed together out of the lands, mines, and forreſts of the Countrey, which are wholly his; and the waters of of ſome Rivers, (ſold by him to his ſubjects) which he monopolizeth; the common people having nothing but their Armes and Labour. Of which, the mines, forreſts, and one third of the lands, he retaineth to himſelf; the other two being divided amongſt his Captains. So that it is no marvel if ſo rich a Countrey yield him ſuch an income, conſidering it is all his own. I do rather wounder (of the two) it ſhould yield no more.

9. ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narſinga; on the Weſt, with Delly, and Mandao; on the North, with the Kingdomes of Botanter; on the Eaſt, with the Golf of Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane; ſo called from Oriſſa, the chief City of it.

The Countrey hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine ſtuff like ſilk, made of graſs, and there called Yerva; with which, together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Mirabolins, and other commodities here growing, they uſe to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Oriſſa only. The people ſo well governed, or ſo hating theft, that in the time of their own kings, before they came under the Moguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points of the ſame temper and religion with the reſt of the Indians ſubject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moiſten and refreſh it, but none ſo beneficial to the Kings hereof, as the River Guangen (of old called Chaberis) the waters whereof eſteemed ſacred by the Kings of Calicute and Narſinga, and much uſed by them in their ſacrifices and ſuperſtitious purgations, are wholly ingroſſed by this King, who ſelleth them to thoſe Princes at exceſſive rates. Beſides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coaſt, of 350 miles in length; that is to ſay, from Cape Guadarino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narſinga; to Cape Leogora in the Eaſt, which parts it from Bengala. But for all that not very much traded, becauſe not ſo well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far leſs Territory.

Towns of moſt note herein, 1. Oriſſa, on the Sea-ſide, or not far from it, the beſt traded Port of all this Kingdome; to which the name thereof is to be aſcribed, as the Head-City of the Countrey. 2. Cateoha, ſix daies journey within the land, the ordinary reſidence of their Kings, before it was ſubdued by the Great Monguls. 3. Angeli, a well-frequented Port, at the bottom of the Golf of Bengala, from whence many ſhips are yearly laden with Indian wares. 4. Bacolli, or Bacola, more within the land, and once the head City of a Kingdome, but a very poor one. 5. Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat fleſh, or kill any beaſt. 6. Senerpate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deſerves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom; but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, ſubdued not many yeers ſince by the K. of Patanaw: and both, grown weaker by that war, by Echebar, the Great Mongul.

10. BOTANTER.

BOTANTER (under which name I comprehend all those petit Kingdomes which are crowded together in the North and North-East of this part of India) hath on the South, Oristan and Patanaw; on the West, the River Guenga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Sanga; on the North, the Zagathaian Tartars, divided from it by some branches of Mount Taurus; on the East, the famous River Ganges. So called from Bottia, the principall City of Botanter, which is the chief of these small Kingdomes.

The Countrey great, of three moneths journey in extent, full of high Mountains, one of which may be seen five dayes journey off, in which are said to dwell a people with ears of a span long or more, whom otherwise those of the Valleys count as Apes. In those parts which are next Sanga, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more enclined to the Olive Colour. Their garments they wear close to their bodies, so streight that one cannot see a pleit or wrinckle; and those they never put off by night nor day, whilest they are able to hang on: nor do they wash at any time, for fear of defiling so pure a Creature as the water. Content with one wife (deservedly to be held a miracle in these Eastern parts) and yet cohabit not with her after two or three Children. When any of them dy, the Sooth-sayer is to tell them what to do with his body: according to whose direction (first consulting his Books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towes of note there are amongst them. The principall, 1. Bottia, the Metropolis of it. 2. Calamur, and 3. Negarist, their Staples for the sale of their cloth, (most of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinoys, and Tartarian Merchants, who resort frequently to those markets. This a distinct Kingdome of it self, the Kings whereof are called Dermair, but Vassals to the great Mongul. And so is he of

2. COUCHE, another Kingdome of this Tract, frontire upon Cauchin-China, beyond Ganges; so called from Couche, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reason that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will; full of good pastures by that means, and those well stored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel, though the people neither kill nor eat them. But on the contrary build Hospitals for them, in which when lame and old they are kept till they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their small money being Almonds.

3. GOUREN, a kind of Desart or unpeopled Country, joyneth close to this. In which are few Villages, grass longer than a man, and therein many Buffes, Tigers, and other wild Basts, none wilder than the Theeves who frequent the wildernesses.

In this Tract also are the Kingdoms of RAME, and RECON, joining upon Zagathay, or enclining towards it; possessed by the Mongul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before; but Feudataries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachosia, who commanded in the North-East of Persia, and these North parts of India: and from those places drew his Army or the greatest part of it, when called unto the aid of Gulgee, the King of Mandu. Here is also the Kingdome of TIPPURA, naturally fenced with hills and mountains; and by that means hitherto defended against the Mongul Tartars, their bad neighbours; with whom they have continuall warres. But of these Northern Kingdomes lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be said, and that little of no certain knowledge: those parts being hitherto so untravelled, that they may pass in the Accompt of a Terra Incognita.

11. PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realms of Botanter; on the East, with Ganges; on the West, with Oristan; and on the South, with the Kingdome and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patane the chief City of it. There is another Kingdome of this name in the further India: but whether it were so called because a Colony of this; or from some resemblances in the nature of the severall Countries, or from the signification of the word in the Indian language; I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the same name, yet they are under several Governments, and situate in farre distant places: no other wise agreeing than in some resemblances, as Holland in the Low-Countries doth with Holland in Lincolnshire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold which they dig out of the pits, and wash away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of slender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great dissemblers. The women so bedecked with silver and copper, especially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a shooe. Both Sexes use much washing in the open Rivers, and that too intermixt together in their naturall nakedness; especially such as live neer the banks of the River Jemena (esteemed more holy than the rest) which from Agra passing thorow this Country, falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Patane, a large town and a long one, built with very broad streets; but the houses very mean and poor, made at the best of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, because the antientest, and that which gives the name unto it. 2. Bamaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries use to come in pilgrimage, to bath themselves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flourishing, and beautified upon the Rode with handsome Villages. 3. Siripur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet subdued by the Great Mongul's. 4. Ciandecan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jesuites, when blamed by them for the worship of so many Pagodes, as contrary both to the law of God and nature. For causing them to rehearse the Decalogue, he told them that he did offend no more against those com-commandements in worshiping so many Pagodes, than they themselves in worshipping so many Saints. 5. Satagim, a fair City (for a City of Moores) once part of Pataman, since ascribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Pataneans, but corruptly Parthians, were once of great command and power in these parts of India. Lords for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala, into which driven by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their last King being slain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joined in an Aristocracy, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their Successors attempted Oristan, and added that also to their Estate. But they could not long make good their fortunes; subdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made subject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripur, the King of Candecan, and he whom they call Mansadalim, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their antient Paganism, as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometanism, have vassalled themselves to the great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12. BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North, with Pataxaw; on the East, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and West, with the Gulf of Bengala; So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land A Countrey stored with all things necessary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and Long-Pepper. Such aboundance of Silk, & Cotton, and of Flesh and Fish, that it is impossible that any Countrey should exceed it in those commodities. And which crowns all, blest with so temperate and sweet an air, that it draws thither people of all sorts to inhabit it. Here is also, amongst other rarities, a Tree called Moses, which beareth so delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to sin.

The natural Inhabitants for the most part, are of white complexion, like the Europeans, subtil of wit, and of a courteous disposition, well skill'd in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not somewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with some smattering in Philosophy, Physick, and Astrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparell: not naked as in others of these Indian Provinces, but clothed in a shirt or smock reaching to their feet, with some upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchastity, though Adultery be punished with cutting off of their noses. Neat, if not curious and too costly in this one custom, that they never seeth meat twice in the same Pot, but for every boyling buy a new one. In Religion, for the most part Mahometans, especially on the Sea-shores, which lay most open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometanism was here planted many ages since.

Of Rivers we need take no care having spoke of Ganges. That with its many Channels may abundantly serve to water so small a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principall whereof, 1. Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, situate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned for one of the most beautifull Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages, by reason of the holyness and divine operations ascribed by the Indians to the waters of it: there being few years in which not visited by three or four hundred thousand Pilgrims. 2. Gouro, the seat-Royall of the antient Kings. 3. Catigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4. Taxdi, once a Town of great trafick, and situate in those times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the Channel (occasioned by the frequent overflowings of it) above a league off from the River. 5. Porto Grande, and 6. Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals, but without Forts for defence, or rules for Government. Places like the Asylum, which was built by Romulus; whereunto such as dare not stay in their own Countries, or any well-regulated Cities, use to make their resort; privileged here to live in all kind of licentiousness.

Here is also in the North parts of this Province, or adjoining to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN. Lying along the banks of Ganges, but so remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles distant from the neerest branch of it. Wealthy, and populous withall; governed heretofore by a King of its own, so wallowing in wealth and sensuall pleasures, that he had in this City and the parts adjoyning twelve Royall Palaces or Seraglios, all stowed with women for his lust. Now subject with Bengala and Pataxaw, betwixt which it lieth, to the Empire of the great Monguls.

There are also some small Ilands in the Gulf of Bengala, which I account unto that Kindom. 1. Bazacata, now called Basse. 2. Barasse, of which name there are five in Ptolomy, three of them by Mercator said to be Mindanao, Cailon, and Subut. 3. Two, called the Ilands of Good fortune, by him placed under the Æquator, and said to be inhabited by Anthropophagi, or man-eaters; as also were three more which he calls 4. Sabadiba, now named Cainam. 5. Insula Satyrorum, or the Isles of Satyres, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like Satyres. And 6. those called Maniola, in number ten, (now Islas de Pracel) reported by Ptolomy to be so stored with Adamant stones, that they violently drew to them any ships or vessels, which had iron in them: for which cause they which used these Seas fastned the planks of their ships with wooden pins. But our later Navigators find no such matter unless perhaps it be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux, where indeed we meet with such an Iland, in the course of his Errantrie.

But to return again to the Kindome of Bengala, we find it of a different constitution from the rest of the Kingdomes of these parts. Not governed by a family of Successive Princes, descended from the Stemme of a Royall Ancestrie, as the others are. Chance, or necessity, had brought thither many Abassines, or Æthiopians, who made a conquest of the Country; and those choſe a King out of themſelves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Regall honor to the Abaſſine Nation, they procured thence yearly certain thouſands of Slaves, whom they trained up unto the warres, advanced unto the higeſt commands in civill and military ſervice; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Soveraign: as the Mamalucks in the Kingdome of Egypt, whom herein they followed. By ſome Arabians trading with them, they came in time to admit Mahometaniſm amongſt them, on the Sea-coaſts eſpecially. Diſpoſſeſſed firſt of ſome part of their Kingdome, lying about Satagan, by the Pataneans; when driven to ſeek new dwellings by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartar: and of their whole Kingdom, by the valor and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the reſt of his eſtate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this ſide of Ganges (the Kingdomes of Malabar and Narſinga being but a Parentheſis in the conſtruction of this ſentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his deſcent from the Mongul-Tartars, one of the five great Tribes or Nations into which that People were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almoſt all the greater and leſſer Aſia, unto his eſtates: left Perſia, with the parts of India which lay neereſt to it on the North, to Myrza Charrok, his fourth ſonne. But his iſſue failing in Abdula, the 4th. of that line, thoſe eſtates fell to Abuſaid, deſcended from Maromcha, the third ſonne of Tamerlane: Whoſe ſonne and Succeſſor called Zeuzes, by ſome Malaouchres, being diſſeized of the greateſt part of the Kingdome of Perſia, by Uſſan-Caſſanes: the rights of all, with the poſſeſſion of Arachoſia (now called Chabul) and Paropamiſus (now Candahor or Sableſtan) together with ſo much of India as was held by thoſe Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger ſonnes of Abuſaid; whoſe poſterity laying hold on ſuch opportunities as were offered to them, have made themſelves Maſters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whoſe Succeſſors and their achievements we ſhall here preſent.

The Great Monguls.

1473. 1. Hamed, the ſonne of Abuſaid, of the race of Tamerlane, after the conqueſt of Perſia by Uſſun-Caſſanes, ſucceeded in Chabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realms of India ſubject to the Tartars.

1500. 2. Babor, or Baburxa, in danger to be diſpoſſeſſed of moſt of his Eſtates by the neighbouring Uzbeques, living upon the borders of Perſia, Tartary, and India, whom at laſt he quieted; enlarged his dominions by the conqueſt of ſome part of Patanaw, and other Kingdomes in the North.

1532. 3. Hamoyen, the ſonne of Babor, or Baburxa, commonly called Emanpaxda, vanquiſhed by the Parthians, or Pataneans, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamas, the 2d. Perſian Monarch of this line, on promiſe to conform to the Sophian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and ſettled his affairs, but held himſelf to the former Principles of his Irreligion.

4. Merhamed, or Miramundus, ſonne of Emanpaxda, called in by Galgee the King of Mandao, againſt Badurius the Cambaian, vanquiſhed the Cambaian King in two pitched fields, and conquered the Kingdomes of Mandao, and Balaſſia, with ſome other Provinces.

5. Adabar, the ſonne of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambaia, unto his Dominions.

1550. 6. Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the moſt fortunate and victorious Prince of all this family, ſubdued the Kingdoms of Caximur, Agra, Decan, Oriſſa, Bengala, Patanaw, and divers others of leſs note.

1605. 7. Selim, ſurnamed Jangheere, the ſonne of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his fathers conqueſts.

1627. 8. Blockie, the grandchild of Selim by his eldeſt ſonne, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon at Agra) proclamed King on the death of his Grand-father; but ſhortly after made away by Aſaph Chawn, ſo to make room for 1627. 9. Curroon, the third ſonne of Selim or Jangheere, and ſonne-in-law unto Aſaph Chawn; having by his own Miniſters, and the hands of his Father-in-law, murdered the proclamed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royall blood, ſucceeded into the Eſtates, and was crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince: ſtill living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on theſe Princes, their eſtate and power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long ſince embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally deſcended. But not ſo ſcrupulous or preciſe in that profeſſion, as to endeavour the ſuppreſſing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his ſonne Jangheere, being ſo inclined unto Chriſtianity, that they permitted the Jeſuites to build Colleges and Churches in Agra it ſelf the Imperiall City, and many other chief Cities in his dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtfull what Religion to adhere unto, he cauſed 30 Infants to be ſo brought up that neither their Nurſes nor any body elſe ſhould ſpeak unto them; reſolving to addict himſelf to the Religion of that Country, whoſe language ſhould be ſpoken by them, as moſt agreeable to nature: and he did accordingly. For as thoſe Children ſpoke no language, ſo was he poſitive, and reſolved in no Religion. Able to ſee the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the ſtrictneſs of Chriſtianity. And though Selim who ſucceeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects, declared himſelf for that Religion; yet his affairs being once ſettled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father. Sultan Curreon now Reigning, of the ſame Neutrality, and 'tis well he is ſo, there being no Religion ſo impure and bloody, which he would not diſhonor by his known ungraciouſneſs.

The Language ſpoken by theſe Princes, and their natural Subjects the Mogores, or Mongul-Tartars, is ſaid by ſome to be the Turkiſh. But I think rather that it is ſome Language near it, than the very ſame: And that the Language which they ſpeak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from wich the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialect, a ſprinkling of the Perſian intermixt amongſt it. A mixture not to be denied, in regard of their long dwelling in that Countrey, the entercouſe which their Subjects of thoſe parts have with theſe of India, and that the greateſt part of their Souldiers, Officers and Commanders, are ſupplied from thence.

Their Government is abſolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every mans eſtate which is worth the having: the perſons and purſes of his Subjects at his ſole diſpoſing, ſo that he may amaſs what treaſures, and raiſe what forces for the Wars his need requireth, or the Avarice or Ambition of his Miniſters ſhall ſuggeſt unto him. Firſt, for his Treaſures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to Fifty Millions of Crowns, and there are reaſons to perſwade that it may be more. The Countrey very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Impoſt upon which is of infinite value, beſides the vaſt ſums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countreys whatſoever, which hold traffick here; their commodities not being to be parted with but for ready coyn. The whole Land being alſo his, he eſtates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himſelf, and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleaſure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themſelves, but him: it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbents death, to enter on the whole eſtate of the Tenant by the way of Eſcheat: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of courſe, the wife and children of the deceaſed being fairly dealt with, if he content himſelf with the perſonal eſtate, and leave the Land to them to begin anew. For inſtance, of thoſe huge ſums which in ſo rich a Countrey may be had this way, it is ſaid that when the Vice Roy of Lahor dyed, he left to Echebar three millons of Gold, beſides Silver, Jewels, Horſes, Elephants, Furniture and Goods, almoſt invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mongul ſeized of his into his hands 3300 pound weight of Gold, beſides Plate and Jewels. Beſides theſe means of heaping treaſure, all the Mines of the Countrey are wholly his, and the Preſents given by all ſorts of Suters, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his preſence which comes empty handed. Finally, if Badurius, which was King of Cambaia onely, could bring into the field at once 500 Tun of gold and ſilver to pay his Army; and after the loſs of all that treaſuee, advanced upon the ſudden the ſum of 600000 Crowns, which he ſent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to ſuccor him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treaſures muſt we think this Prince to be maſter of, who hath more than four times the eſtate of the King of Cambaia, and far more trading now than in former times?

By the like Parallel we may conjecture ſomewhat at his Forces alſo. Badurius the Cambaian brought into the field againſt Merhamed, and the King of Mandio, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horſe, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 pieces of braſs Ordnance, of which were four Baſiliſks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen; and 500 Carts loaded with powder and ſhot. What then may we conceive of this Prince, who is Lord of ſo much a greater eſtate than he, but that his Levies may be raiſed proportionably to ſo great Dominions? But becauſe poſſibly Badurius did extend himſelf to the utmoſt of his power, and having loſt two Battels, was never able to recruit again, which no wiſe Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any ſuch hazards on the loſs of a Battel, can in an inſtant raiſe 50000 Elephants, 300000 Horſe, and Foot proportionable; and yet have ſtock enough for an After-game, if that he ſhould chance to loſe the firſt. But it is ſeldom that he hath advanced to ſo high a Muſter. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Decan, he had but an Hundred thouſand men, and a thouſand Elephants for fight; though poſſibly of all ſorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in time of Progreſs, it is ſaid that his followers of all ſorts amount unto two hundred thouſand; and that his Tents do uſually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithſtanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire have not only been at a ſtand, ſince the death of Echebar; But the Rasbooches in Cambaia, the Venazarari in Decan, and other puiſſant Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out ſtill againſt him, ſome of them being ſaid to command as much land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in a readineſs 20000 Horſe, & 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature or Divine Providence hath given to Empires, as to men, a determinate growth, beyond which there is no exceeding.

2 INDIA EXTRA GANGEM.

INDIA EXTRA GANGEM is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further ſide of the River Ganges, from the ſpring or fountain of it, whereſoever it be, to the fall thereof into the ſea by the firſt and laſt mouth thereof, which is called Antibali: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this ſide of that River. From hence extended Eaſtward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Countrey in thoſe elder times ſo renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it had the name of The Silver Region, and an other of The Golden Cherſoneſe: this laſt ſuppoſed to be the Ophir of Solomon, of which which more hereafter. The People of the ſame nature and diſpoſition, in the elder times, as thoſe which did inhabit on the hither ſide of the Ganges: not ſo well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reaſon of the remoteneſs of their ſituation; nor ſo well diſcovered at the preſent. So that the beſt Accompt we ſhall be able to give of it, will not be ſo exact and punctual as of that before: with reference either to the eſtate hereof in the times of the Antients, or the affairs of it in theſe daies.

Mountains of moſt note in it, 1. Bepyrrus, 2. Maandrus, 3. Semanthinus; and 4 theſe called Damaſi, touched upon before, in our general diſcourſe of India. Out of which, and from other Springs, flow theſe following Rivers, 1. Catabeda, 2. Bocoſanna, 3. Sadus, 4. Temala, 5. Beſynga, 6. Chriſſoras, 7. Polandas, 8. Attabas, theſe three laſt in the part hereof called the Golden Cherſoneſe. 9. Daonas, and 10. Dorias, riſing out of the Mountains called Damaſi. Others there are whoſe names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now diſtinguiſhed, it is hard to ſay. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1. Balanga, 2. Cirtatha, 3. Taſale, 4. Tagma, and 5. Malihura, have the name of being the Metropoles of their ſeveral Nations. 6. Triglyphon, only honoured with the name of Regia; more memorable perhaps for the white Crows, and bearded Hens, which are ſaid to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat-Royal of ſome petit Prince. After theſe 1. Sada, on the banks of the River Sadus, 2. Samba, 3. Sabara, 4. Coli, 5. Zaba, and 6. Sinda, have the name of Cities. 7. Baracura, 8. Berabonna, 9. Bebynga, 10. Tacola, 11. Sabana, and 12. Thibon baſtus, are marked out for the moſt noted Empories, or Towns of trade; the memory of Sabana being ſtill preſerved in the Frith of Sabor, betwixt this Cherſoneſe and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by thoſe ſpecial Adjuncts, of which, 1. Cocconagara, and 2. Balonca, in the Golden Cherſoneſe; 3. Rhandamarcotta, in the Midlands, 4. Pentapolis, neer the mouth of Ganges called Antibolum; 5. Agnigara, neer the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6. Corygaza, one of the principal Towns of the Maranda, may be ſome of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, beſides the Maranda laſt ſpoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gangani, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacorai, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrrus; as the Tilada on Maandrus; and the Animacha, and Caboca, neer the hills called Damaſi. The Baſada, ſaid to be crooked, ſhort, and thick; but of a cheerful aſpect, and cleer complexion: of which compoſition alſo the inhabitants of the Golden Cherſoneſe were obſerved to be: the Barra, and Cudura, on the Bay called Sinus Magnus; the Leſtori, a Theeviſh and Piratical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of ſo hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow. Theſe, with the reſt, too many to be here recited, the iſſue in moſt likelyhood of Chavilah and Saba the ſonnes of Joktan; of whom we find ſo many footſteps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaraco Sinu, Sabana Emporio, Sobanus Fluvio; and in the Countreys now called Ava, and the Kingdom of Cavelan. Of any of their actions we find little in antient ſtories, or of the power of any of their former Kings: but that it was given out in the time of Alexander, that beyond the Ganges lived a Prince called Aggramenes (the moſt powerfull King of all thoſe Countreys) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horſe, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to trie maſteries with him; yet his Souldiers were ſo terrified with it (remembring the hard bout which they had with Porus) that no perſwaſions could prevail with them to go further Eaſtward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unleſs the converſion of the Indians in the time of Conſtantine, may be applyed to thoſe on that ſide of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the later obſervations and diſcoveries of it, we find it (as moſt barbarous Countreys elſe till reduced to Order) diſmembred and ſubdivided into many eſtates, almoſt as many Realms as Cities, and diſtinct governments amongſt them, as Tribes and Nations. Moſt of them Gentiles in Religion, with whom the name of Chriſt and Chriſtianity not ſo much as heard of, till the comming of the Jeſuites thither; who have not onely obtained leave, but ſome invitations, for the promoting of the Goſpel. And for Mahometaniſm, though it had got ſome footing on the Sea-coaſts of the Golf of Bengala, as lying moſt convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants: yet on the North, and midland parts, and thoſe towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was as little heard of as Chriſtianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them; to which as many of the reſt as are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are thoſe of, 1. Brama or Barma, 2. Cauchin-China, 3. Camboia, 4. Jangoma, 5. Siam, and 6. Pegu.

BRAMA.

THe Kingdomes of BRAMA or BARMA have on the Weſt, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartarie; on the Eaſt, Cauchin-China; and on the South, the Kingdomes of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Brames, poſſeſſed for many ages paſt of theſe North-Weſt Countreys. By the tranſpoſing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdomes of Barma.

The Countrey of theſe Brames or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the neereſt of the Peguan Kingdomes for the ſpace of 150 Leagues, but far more from Weſt to Eaſt: watered with many great and remarkable Rivers, iſſuing from the Lake Chiamay, which though 600 miles from the Sea, and emptying it ſelf continually into ſo many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compaſs, and is nevertheleſs full of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and the commodiouſneſs of the Lake, the Countrey is wonderfully en-enriched, as Egypt by the overflowings of Nilus. Which notwithstanding, there are in it many huge forrests, in the West especially, and therein many Lions, Tigers, Ounces, Serpents, and other Creatures of a mischievous and hurtfull Nature.

The whole Countrey containeth the Kingdomes of 1. Calam, 2. Prom, 3. Melintay, 4. Miranda, 5. Bacam, 6. Tangu, 7. Ava, and 8. Brama.

Of 1. MELINTAY and 2. MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the rest, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the first rising of his fortunes, becoming the foundation of his following greatness. Of 3. BACAM, it is said that it is plentifully enriched with Mines, both of Gold and Silver. In 4. CAVILAN, commonly and contractedly called CALAM, we find apparent foot-steps of the name of Chavilah the sonne of Jocktan. Of the rest more is to be said, not much.

5. PROM, though it be a little Kingdome, is exceeding populous, and stored with warlike people. Given by the second King of Pegu of the Tanguan Race, to a younger sonne; who being by his Father commanded to the siege of Martaban which had then revolted, not only did decline the service, but rebelled against him; and by the strength of this small Kingdome held it out three years. But seeing his Fathers fortunes in a manner desperate, he repented of his disobedience; and went unto his aid, with an Army of 50000 men of his Natural Subjects. Treacherously poysoned on the way by his chiefest Counseller, for fear the Crime of his Revolt would be charged on him.

6. TANGU, is the name of one of these Bramian Kingdoms, so called from the chief Town thereof: formerly subject with the rest to the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their several Vice-Royes. One of which taking his advantage of the warres between the Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to set up for himself, and husbanded his affairs so well, that he became sole Lord of these Bramian Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the rest in this part of India. Not long enjoyed by his successor, when dispossessed and slain by one whom he married to his Sister, and made Governour of this very Province. In which he bore himself so stoutly, that being sent for by his King to aid him against some of his Rebels, and to bring all the inhabitants of the Country with him; he answered that he would send one half; to send all, unreasonable. Incensed with which denial the King armed against him; but he put the Leaders to the sword, and seized their followers. After this being now in Arms, and dispairing of reconcilement, he took upon himself the title of King of Tangu; and to secure himself therein, joined with the King of Arrachan against his Soveraign, whom he most barbarously slew (after he had put himself into his hands) with his wife and children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villany, subdued not long after, with the rest of these Indian Princes, by the King of Barma; of which more hereafter.

7. AVA, another of these Kingdoms, and one of the plantations of Chavilah also, is liberally furnished with all things necessary for the life of man. It affordeth also store of Rubies, which they dig out of the Mountains; a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of horse and Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava, which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, issuing out of the Lake of Chiamay, and communicates the same to the whole Province. Subject for many ages past to the Kings of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is said; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling against the sonne and successour of his Benefactor, and by him slain in single Combat, this Kingdome was conferred on a sonne of the Conqueror. A Prince of more vertue than his brother, and one which grew at last unto so great power, that in the bustles or combustions of the Kingdome of Pegu, he surprised or forced the Fort of Siriangh, formerly given unto the Portugals by the King of Arrachan, slew all the Souldiers, and spitted Philip de Brito, who commanded in it. After which, gathering together the dispersed Peguans, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himself a good bargain by it, if the sudden coming of the King of Barma, had not spoiled his markets.

8. BRAMA or BARMA, the most Southern of these Bramian kingdomes, the king whereof was Fendatarie to the kings of Pegu, or of their appointment. Of no accompt when the Portugals came first acquainted with India, not in many years after; now of most renown. For sitting still when all the rest of their neighbours were embroiled in wars, they gathered so much power and strength, that in the end, one of the later kings hereof observing how the forces of his neighbouring Princes were consumed, and their treasures wasted; levyed an Army of 300000 fighting men, 40000 Elephants, with all things suitable. And with this power subdued the kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of these parts) invaded the kingdome of Siam, and possessed himself of it; making in little time all the lesser Princes to become his Tributaries, as they still continue.

CAUCHIN-CHINA.

CAUCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the West, with the Kingdomes of Brama; on the East, with the Great Realm of China; on the North, extending towards Tartary; and on the South, bordering on Camboya.

The Countrey aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great store of silks, of which the Inhabitants make Taffata, and other stuffes. It affordeth also plenty of Porcellane Earth, which being made into Cups, Dishes, and other Utensils of household, is sold by the name of China-ware: well counterfeited of late amongst us, by putting a white crust on our Potters earth, as neat for use and shew as the naturall China.

The

The people very ſtout and warlike, eſpecially for Foot-ſervice, though they have many horſes here, and thoſe fit for warre. Well-practiſed on their Peeces alſo, on which they ſpend great ſtore of powder, but not ſo much in warre, as in ſports and triumphs: yet making much more than they ſpend, the earth in ſome parts yielding very fit materials for that commodity. Trained up to Manufactures, eſpecially to the making of Powder, Silks, and Porcellane, which they ſell to the Chineſe. Idolaters, for the moſt part, as are thoſe of China, whoſe Characters and language they alſo uſe: but ſo that there appear ſome inclinations unto Chriſtianity, in many of them, who have erected many Croſſes, and do admit the pictures of the Bleſſed Virgin, and the finall judgement. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progreſs in the Goſpel, if they had met with better Teachers than theſe Laymens books.

The chief City hereof is called Cauchin-China by the name of the Province, ſituate on a River coming out of China; and paſſing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Country divided into three Provinces, and as many Kings, over which one Paramount: but he and they the Tributaries of the King of China. Belonging hereunto is a little Iland called Ainao, ten miles from the land, where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fiſhing for Pearls The onely Province of the Indies, which is wholly ſubject to the power of a forein Prince; the Portugals holding in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces.

3 CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin-China; on the East and South, with the Ocean; on the Weſt, with parts of the Kingdome of Siam, and the Realms of Jangoma. So called from Camboia the chief City of it. Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Camboia ſpecially ſo called.

1. CHAMPA, the Northern part hereof bordereth Cauchin-China, and is liberally provided of all neceſſaries: beſides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in ſilver, much uſed in Barbes, and at the funeralls of great perſons. This a diſtinct kingdome of it ſelf, but ſubject with the reſt to the king of Barma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Country, is ſituate neer the Sea-ſide, and of very good trafick.

2. CAMBOIA ſpecially ſo called, lieth South of Champa, a very great and populous Country, well ſtored with Elephants and Rhinocerots, which laſt the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth alſo great plenty of a ſweet-wood, which they call Calumba, as precious and as much eſteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the ſame, or ſome Species of it as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Fleſh, and Fiſh; well-watred with the River Mecon iſſuing out of China, & having received many leſſer ſtreams falleth firſt into a great Lake of 200 miles compaſs, and thence into the Indian Ocean, making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Ilands. By the overflowings of this River the whole Country is enriched (as Egypt by the like overflowings of Nilus): the inhabitants at thoſe times betaking themſelves to their upper Rooms, and paſſing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be ſtrong and warlike, though more enclined to merchandiſe and navigation than to deeds of Arms. Idolaters of the worſt kind, eſteeming Men and Beaſts of a like condition in regard of any future judgement; of late beginning to ſet up, and adore the Croſs, which is (it ſeems) the firſt Principle of Religion, in which the Friers are wont to inſtruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet, by theſe new Teachers, from burning the women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, uſed onely here; but voluntarily to expreſs their loves, not upon conſtraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1. Camboia, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odia, and Pegu, of which more anon. Situate on the River Mecon before deſtroyed: where it hath its fall into the Sea; well traded, as the Staple for all this Country, the commodities whereof are brought hither, and here ſold to the Merchant. 2. Cudarmuch, twelve league from Camboia, on the ſame River alſo. 3. Coul, on the Sea-ſide in the very South-weſt Angle of all the Country. The Kings whereof, once abſolute, and at their own diſpoſing, till invaded by a vaſt Army of the neighbouring Laos; in which their King being ſlain, and his forces weakned, his ſonne and Succeſſor was conſtrained to become a Vaſſal to the crown of Siam. But fearing the loſs of his eſtate, when that Kingdom was made ſubject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598. he applied himſelf unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninſula (part of his dominions) extending three leagues into the Sea; and ſent to the Jeſuites for ſome of their Society to live and preach amongſt his people. Not able for all theſe honeſt Policies to preſerve himſelf from being made a Fendatary of the King of Barma.

4 JANGOMA.

JANGOMA or the Country of the LAOS, is bounded on the Eaſt, with Camboia and Champa, from which parted by the River Menon; on the Weſt, with the River of Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdome; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Brama.

It took this name from Jangoma the chief province of it, the other two (for here be three of them in all) being thoſe of Lovea, and Curroy. All of them joyned together called the Country of the Laos, by the name of the people, a mighty Nation and a ſtout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and truſſing up their hair like a cap. Their Country very rich and levell, but very ill-neighboured by the Gueo-

ri (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name of Gangigu) who poſſeſs the mountains: whence falling in great companies to hunt for men whom they kill and eat, they commit cruel butcheries amongſt them. Inſomuch as this people, not able to defend themſelves againſt their fury, or rather wanting good leaders to conduct and order them (for it is ſaid that they can make a million of men) were fain to put themſelves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no further than the humour took them.

Towns they have none of any note, except thoſe three which give name to the ſeverall Provinces; and thoſe of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the moſt part live on the banks of their Rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber; or elſe upon the Rivers in boats and ſhallops, as the Tartarians of the Deſarts in their Carts or wheel-houſes. One of their Rivers (commonly called the River of Laos) ſaid to extend 400 Leagues within the land, as far as Tartary, and China; and from July to September to invert its courſe, and flow back ſtrongly toward its fountain. Not governed by any certain rule or order, till they ſubmitted to the Patronage of the king of Siam; and then no oftner than they liſted: though for their ſakes, that king engaged himſelf in a war againſt the Cannibals, their moſt deadly enemies, accompanyed with 25000 foot, 20000 Horſe, and 10000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of thoſe Cannibals (of whom otherwiſe they had been devoured) in the year 1578 they deſcended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000, and fell into the Realm of Camboia. But they made an unproſperous adventure of it. For though the king of Camboia loſt his life in the battel, ye he gave them ſuch a fatal blow, that they were almoſt all ſlain, drowned, or captived in the fight. Weakned wherewith they became an eaſie prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he firſt made himſelf ſole Maſter of this part of India. Who giving to his brother the kingdome of Ava, and leaving to his eldeſt ſonne the kingdome of Pegu, with the Soveraignry over all the reſt, conferred this Countrey, with the title of king of Jangoma, on a younger Sonne. But he, begotten on a daughter of the king of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Indian Empire, was eaſily perſwaded by the Talapoies, (ſo they call their Prieſts) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his claim by the kings of Arracan and Tangu, by whom that king was ſlain, and his kingdome waſted. How he ſped afterwards I find not. But probable it is, that he ſubmitted with the reſt to the king of Barma.

5. SIAM.

SIAM, is bounded on the North, with Jangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, ſave that it toucheth on the Eaſt, with a part of Camboia, and on the Weſt, with a point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all thoſe kingdomes which paſs under this name, as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Countrey of greater length than breadth, ſtretcheth it ſelf South-wards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninſula or Deny-Iland, called antiently Aurea Cherſoneſus, or the Golden Cherſoneſe: one of the five famous Cherſoneſes or Peninſulaes of the elder writers; the other four being Peloponneſus in Greece, the Thracian Cherſoneſe neer Propontis, the Taurican Cherſoneſe in the Euxine, and the Cimbrian Cherſoneſe in the North of Germany, now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, ſuper-added to it, from its plenty of Gold, for which much celebrated by the Antients, both Greeks, and Romans (and therefore not improbably thought by ſome to be Solomons Ophir) ſtil famous with the reſt of the Countries of the kingdome of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tinn, and other metals; great quantity of Pepper ſent yearly thence, with ſtore of Elephants, and horſes: the whole Countrey very fat, and fertile, well ſtored with Rice, Corn, Graſs, and all other neceſſaries.

The people generally much addicted to pleaſures, if not to Luxury; delighted much with Muſick and rich apparel; and ſuch as ſtand much upon their honour. For their inſtruction in good letters they have publick Schools, where their own Lawes, and the myſteries of their own religion, are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in ſtrange tongues underſtood by none but by the learned. To tillage they can frame themſelves, and are painful in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanicall Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, worſhiping the four Elements amongſt other Gods; to each of which as they are ſeverally affected, ſo are their bodies to be diſpoſed of: either burnt, buried, hanged, or drowned, after their deceaſe; as in their lives they were moſt devoted to the fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Chriſtians here alſo in and about the parts poſſeſſed by the Portugals; but more Mahometans: who poſſeſſing two hundred Leagues of the Sea-Coaſts of this Countrey, have planted that religion in moſt part of the Countrey now by them poſſeſſed.

It containeth in it many kingdomes, ſome of little note; thoſe of moſt obſervation, 1. Malaca, 2. Patane, 3. Jor, 4. Muanay, and 5. Siam, properly and ſpecially ſo called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, Jor and Patane are poſſeſſed by the Arabians or Saracens; the other two have followed the fortunes of the kings of Siam.

1. The kingdome of MALACA taketh up the South part of the Golden Cherſoneſe, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Ptolomy calleth Malanatin, in the extreme South-point hereof neer unto Sabana, then a noted Emporie, for the ſpace of 270 miles. So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Muſicana, or built very neer it, from whence this Tract is called by Strabo, Muſicani terra. The City ſeated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here ſaid to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings whereof, and the neerneſs of it to the Line (being but two degrees to the North) the Air hereof, and all the territory belonging to it, is very un-unwholſome; and for that cauſe the Countrey but meanly populous. In compaſs it is ſaid to be 20 miles, of great wealth, becauſe of almoſt infinite trading; for Spices, Unguents, Gold, Silver, Pearls, and pretious Stones, the moſt noted Emporie of the Eaſt. Inſomuch that is ſaid by Ludovico Barthema, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more ſhips than any one City in the world, more by far ſince the comming of the Portugals to it, than it was before. The People (as in all this tract) of an Aſh-colour, with long hair hanging over their faces; bloody and murderous, ſpecially when they meet one another in the Night. Few other Towns of any note in a place ſo unhealthy, except 2. Sincapura, ſituate Eaſt of Malaca, neer the Promontory of old called Magnum; ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Zaba of Ptolomy; and that more probably than that it ſhould be his Palura, as Maginus would have it; Palura being a City of the Hither India, and different at the leaſt 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Cherſoneſe. But whatſoever it was called in the former times, it was in theſe latter ages the mother of Malaca; the greateſt part of the Trade and people being removed from thence to this newer foundation: before which time it was the beſt frequented Emporie in theſe parts of the Eaſt. 3. Palo Zambilin, 120 miles on the Weſt of Malaca, from whence to Sincapura, coaſting about the Southern Cape (now called Cape Liampo) we have a Sea-ſhore of 270 miles, as before was ſaid. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few ſheds upon the ſhore for the uſe of Fiſher-men, and ſome ſcattered Villages in the land: the People dwelling moſt on Trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times poſſeſſed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258 became a kingdome of it ſelf; founded by Paramiſera, and ſome other of the Javan Nobility, who flying the tyranny of their own king, came into this Country, where they were lovingly received by Sangeſinga, then reigning under the Siamite, in Sincapura. Him they perfidiouſly ſlew, and inveſted Paramiſera in his Dominion. Outed of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to ſeek a new dwelling, and after two or three Removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now ſtandeth, which City, pleaſed with the commodiouſneſs of the ſituation, he is ſaid to have built. The trade of Sincapura in ſhort time removed hither alſo, which ſo increaſed the wealth and power of the Kings hereof, that joyning with the Moores who began to plant themſelves on the ſhores adjoyning, and receiving withall the Law of Mahomet, they began to caſt off all ſubjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the ſonne and Succeſſor of Paramiſera had ſubmitted his new-raiſed kingdom, and became their Homager. Incenſed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500 ſent out a Navy of 200 Sail to diſtreſs it by Sea, and an Army of 30000 men and 400 Elephants to beſiege it by land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindred by Tempeſts, and the inſolencies of ſome of his Souldiers, the Portugals, in the year 1511, under the conduct of Albuquerque had poſſeſſed themſelves of it, who built there a Fortreſs and a Church. And though Alodinus the ſonne of the expelled King (whoſe name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Eſtate, and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the kings of Jor and Achen (two neighbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have ſeverally and ſucceſſively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they ſtill keep it in defiance of all oppoſition which hath been hitherto made againſt them.

2. North unto that of Malaca lieth the kingdome of JOR, IOR, or IOHOR; ſo called of Jor, or Johor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the moſt part by Moores, or Saracens, Mahometaniſm by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Country alſo. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of ſo much power, that joining his Land-forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he beſieged Malaca, and built a Royall Fort before it: in which, when taken by Paul de Lima, by the defeat of this king, were found 900 pieces of braſs Ordnance. After this, picking a quarrel with the king of Pahan, he burnt his houſes, barns, proviſions, and the Suburbs of the City it ſelf: but in the courſe of his affairs, was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Iſle of Sumatra) his old confederate, who after 29 daies ſiege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this king or kingdom, I am not able to reſolve. In former times it did acknowlege him of Siam for the Lord in chief.

3. More North-ward yet lieth the kingdome of PATANE, denominated from Patane the chief City of it: but different from Patane, in the other India, as Cleveland in York-ſhire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countries from Holland in Lincoln-ſhire, as hath been fully ſhewn before. The City made of wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and compoſed together: the Meſquit onely (moſt of the people being Mahometans) is built of brick. The Chinois make a great part of the Inhabitants of it, inſomuch that in this ſmall City there are ſpoke three languages, viz. the Chineſe, uſed by that people, the Malayan (or language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this ſmall Crown is Feudatary. Built of ſuch light ſtuff and combuſtible matter, it muſt needs be in great danger of fire; and was moſt miſerably burnt in the year 1613 by ſome Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of ſome of their Fellows: at which time the whole City was conſumed with fire the Meſquit, the Queens Court, and ſome few houſes, excepted onely. The Country governed of late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the Engliſh, and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that diſmall fire, offended with the King of Pan or Pahan, who had maried her Siſter, and reigned in a little Iland not farre off, ſhe ſent againſt him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 men: by which compelled to correſpond with her deſires, he brought his Queen and her children with him to make up the breach.

4. The Kingdom of SIAM, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, is ſituate on the main-land (the reſt before deſcribed being in the Cherſoneſe), betwixt Camboia on the Eaſt, Pegu on the Weſt, the kingdome of Muantay on the North, and the main Ocean on the South. The chief Cities of it, 1. Socotai, memorable for a temple made wholly of mettall, 80. ſpans in height, raiſed by one of the Kings; it being the the cuſtome of this Country, that every king at his firſt coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple which he adorneth with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2. Quedoa, renowned for the beſt Pepper, and for that cauſe very much frequented by forreign Merchants. 3. Tavay, upon the Sea-coaſt where it joineth to Pegu. Whence meaſuring along the ſhores till we come to Champa before mentioned; being all within the Dominions of the king of Siam (not reckoning the Cherſoneſe into this Accompt) we have a Seacoaſt of the length of 600 Leagues. 4. Lugor, upon the ſea-ſide alſo, neer that little Iſthmus, which joineth the Cherſoneſe to the land; from whence to Malaca is 600 miles ſail all along the coaſt. 5. Calantan, the head City of a little kingdome but ſubject to the Crown of Siam. 6. Siam, the chief City of this part of the kingdome, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiouſly ſeated on the River Menam, for trade and merchandiſe. So populous and frequented by forreign nations, that beſides the natives here are ſaid to be thirty thouſand houſholds of Arabians. The Houſes of it high built, by reaſon of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper rooms; and unto every houſe a boat for the uſe of the familie. Thoſe of the poorer ſort dwell in little ſheds made of reed and timber; which they remove from place to place for the beſt convenience of their markets. And yet ſo ſtrong that being beſiged by the Tanguan Conqueror, then king of Pegu, Anno 1567. with an Army of fourteen hundred thouſand fighting men, for the ſpace of 20 moneths together, it reſolutely held good againſt him: not gained at laſt by force but treaſon, one of the Gates being ſet open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Chriſtianity, but hitherto ſo ill inſtructed in the principles of it, that they maintain amongſt many other ſtrange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years (from what time I know not) the world ſhall be conſumed with fire, and that under the aſhes of it ſhall remain two egs, out of which ſhall come one man and one woman, who ſhall people the world anew.

5. MUANTAY the laſt of theſe Kingdomes, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam: memorable for nothing more then the City of Odia, or Udia, the principal of all the Kingdomes of Siam, and the uſual reſidence of thoſe Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Caipumo, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the warres, and in continual readineſs for preſent ſervice. For though this King be Lord of nine ſeveral Kingdomes, yet he uſeth none of them in his wars but the naturall Siamites, and thoſe of this City and the reſt of his Subjects of Muantay. It is ſaid that for the uſe of this City only (being ſeated like Venice upon many little Ilands not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 skiffes, and ſhallops; ſerving to waft the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great ſtrength, and almoſt impregnable. But being beleagured by the Tanguan or Bramian Conquerour with ten hundred thouſand fighting men (an Army bigge enough to have buryed a greater City than this; if every man had but caſt a ſhovell full of earth upon it) it was wonne at laſt.

The Government of theſe kings of Siam, was abſolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being ſole Lord of all the land in his kingdomes, which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Huſbandmen, during life or pleaſure, but never paſſed over unto any, the right of Inheritance. And theſe he grants unto his Subjects, beſides rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of horſe, Foot, and Elephants: thereby inabled without further charge unto the Suhject to leavy 20000 Horſe, and 250000 Foot for preſent ſervice; beſides far greater numbers out of the reſidue of his people, if occaſion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was ſaid to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which beaſts he is reported to have 30000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the war. By reaſon of ſo great a power he became Maſter of the Realms of Camboia, and Champa; held thoſe of Malaca, Jor, Pahan, and Patane, as his Vaſſals and Tributaries with that of Jangoma and the Laos, under his protection. But when the fatal time was come; and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the king of Pegu, he poiſoned himſelf upon the newes; his ſonne becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This ſonne of his; too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a ſonne of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, (degenerating from the gallantries of ſo worthy a Father) by whom he was beſieged in Siam with 900000 fighting men. Unable to reſiſt this Army, if he had preſently declared ſuch a reſolution, he entertained the king with Treaties, and promiſes of delivering the City to him, till the third moneth after, (which was March) when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Countrey for 120 miles about: by which ſudden and violent inundation, and the ſword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there periſhed all of this great Army except 70 thouſand. After this blow, the conquering Siamite Anno 1600 beſieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more annon: and dying in the year 1605. left his eſtate unto his Brother. Whoſe ſonne ſucceeding, ſettled a Factory in Siam of the Engliſh Merchants Anno 1612. and was in a fair way of obtaining the ſoveraignty of Pegu, then deſtroyed and waſted; if the violent and unreſiſtable coming of the king of Barma had not croſſed him in it; to whom now ſubject with the reſt of the Indian Princes on that ſide of the River.

6. PEGU.

PEGU is bounded on the Eaſt, with Jangoma, and a part of Siam; on the North, with the kingdomes of Brama; on the Weſt and South, with the kingdome and Golf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that is by the name of the River upon which it ſtandeth. Divided commonly into the kingdoms and eſtates of 1. Verma, 2. Macin, 3. Orrachan, 4. Martavan, and 5. Pegu ſpecially ſo called.

1. VERMA is the name of a ſmall kingdome bordering upon Bengala, and ſo denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof. A kingdome which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moores and Mahometans, which can be ſaid of no other of theſe Indian kingdoms.

The people black, naked above the Waſte, and covered beneath it onely with a veil of Cotton: in matter of Religion Gentiles, and in warre right valiant. This laſt apparent by the long and frequent warres which they had with the Peguans: to whom made Tributary in concluſion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACIN, ſo called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of theſe Peguan kingdoms. Of ſmall eſteem but for the great quantity of the ſweet-wood by the Latines called Lignum vitæ, by the natives Calamba, ſo much in uſe for Funeralls and Bathes, (as was ſaid before;) held alſo by the Indians for a Sovereign and unparallell'd Medicine againſt many dangerous diſeaſes; great quantities whereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the firſt kingdoms which was conquered by the king of Barma, (upon whom it bordereth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORRACHAN or Arrachan, lieth on the Weſt of Macin, and the South of Verma, environed round with mountains and impaſſable woods. Chief Towns thereof, 1. Diaga, taken and deſtroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the king of Arrachan. Anno 1608. 2. Sundiva, ſituate in an Iland unto which it gives name, ſix leagues off from the continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, Anno 1602. and from them taken by this king about two years after, and made a member of his kingdom. The Iland 30 leagues in compaſs, very ſtrong, fruitfull, and the Town well fortified. 3. Arrachan, the head City, which gives name to all, diſtant from the Sea 45 miles, but ſeated on a large and capacious River. The king and kingdom of no note, till the ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the deſolation of which State the king hereof combining with him of Tangu, beſieged the ſecond Tanguan king in the Caſtle of Macao; and had betwixt them the whole pillage of that wealthy City, together with the poſſeſſion of the beſt Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arrachan in triumph, leading with him the white Elephant of the king of Pegu, ſumptuouſly adorned; the brother and two ſonnes of the Peguan following in the Pageant. A ſolemn and magnificent entry. The better to aſſure himſelf of his new dominions, this king beſtowed upon the Portugals the fort of Siriangh, on the River of Pegu. For which favour ill-requited by the Portugals, who had taken his ſonne, and put him to a grievous ranſom, they brake out into open warres. In the purſuit whereof, after many loſſes, the king recovered from them the Iſle of Sundiva, and manning out a Fleet of 1200 ſail (of which 75 were of ſo great burden as to carry every one, twelve peeces of Ordnance) and in that fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 greater peeces, beſieged the Fortreſs; aſſiſted in that action alſo by the king of Tangu. And though he failed in his deſign, yet like enough he had prevented the king of Ava, who took it in the year 1613 as before is ſaid, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own kingdom, by the king of Barma: of whoſe great riſe, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arrachan, were the firſt foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richeſt of theſe kingdoms, lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the Weſt. The ſoyl ſo fertile that it yieldeth three Harveſts in a year, and ſent annually 15 ſhips to Cochin, and as many to Malaca, laden with Rice. Rich alſo in Mines of Iron, lead, ſteel, braſs, ſilver, gold, and Rubies: and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forreſts well-ſtored with Harts, Bores, and Buffoles, ſtore of Pines and Palms: the woods with Sugar-canes, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and ſhrubs either Medicinal or odoriferous. The principall City of it called alſo Martavan, ſituate on an Haven open at all times of the year, and not choked with ſands, as uſually other Havens are in the Indian winter: of great trading, much ſplendour, and a temperate air. Faithfull unto the laſt to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were ſubject, and in that conſtancy they twice repulſed the king of Siam who then had conquered the moſt part of the Kingdome of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite cauſed two of his cowardly Captains to be caſt into a chaldron of ſcalding oyl; and at the third aſſault became maſter of it. Bannalaius the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects, being compelled to hide themſelves in the woods and Deſarts.

5. PEGU, the moſt predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Croſcent or half-moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on that coaſt from Negrais unto Tavan the next Town of Siam, for the ſpace of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little leſs in breadth, if not quite as much. So called from the River Pegu, which runs thorow the middeſt of it, and gives this name alſo unto Pegu the moſt noted City.

The Soyl hereof exceeding fruitfull, by reaſon of the annuall overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth alſo many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make wax) ſtore of Elephants, and abundance of Parats which ſpeak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place elſe.

The people of a mean ſtature, ſomewhat corpulent, and naturally beardleſs. If any ſtragling hair thruſt forth, they alwayes carry Pinſers with them, to pull them out. Nimble and ſtrong, but yet not very fit for warre; ſpending too much of their ſtrength in the love of women, to which moſt paſſionably addicted. They black their teeth, becauſe they ſay that dogs teeth be white: and wear no cloths but on their heads and about their nakedneſs. Said by the Jews to be deſcended from ſome of the Tribes of Iſrael confined hither by Solomon: but by the Peguins themſelves, to be begotten of a dog and a China woman, which were were ſaved here upon a Shipwrack. By Religion for the moſt part Gentiles, imagining innumerable worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every world: more Orthodox in aſſigning after this life according to the merits of the party deceaſed, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and pleaſures, if they had not added a third alſo for ſatisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdome, 1. Coſmi, ſeated in a Territory full of Woods, as thoſe Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes, and Parats: the houſes made of Canes, which ſerve here for timber, (ſome of them being as bigge as Hogs-Heads) covered over with thatch. 2. Joccabel, a great City, on the River Pegu. 3. Dian, on the ſame River alſo, where they make Barks or Veſſels as big as Galeaſſes; which ſerve both for trade and habitation. 4. Coilan, a City four-ſquare, and each ſquare four miles. 5. Lunagon, a pleaſant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6. Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for ſo many he had) being alwaies kept about the Court, not ſeen abroad but in great ſolemnities, when trapped in furnitures of Gold, and no leſs honoured by the people, than the King himſelf: called therefore King of the White Elephant by the neighbouring Princes. 7. Silvanpeda, where many victualling Barkes are made to ſerve for dwelling on the Sea. 8. Meccao, where they uſe to unload ſuch goods as are to paſs by Land to Pegu. Neighboured by the ſtrongeſt Caſtle in all this Kingdome, and therefore choſen by the King for his place of Retreat, when diſtreſſed by the Kings of Arrachan, and Tangu. To the laſt of which making choice to yield up his perſon, with his Wife and Children, becauſe he had maryed him to his Siſter, he was by him perfidiouſly and baſely murdered. 9 Siriangh, a ſtrong peece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals, and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year one thouſand ſix hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good againſt him, and the King of Tangu his Aſſociate, for the ſpace of thirteen years together; was at laſt forced to yield himſelf priſoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a ſpit. 10. Pegu, the glory of theſe parts, great, ſtrong, and beautifull; Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old, inhabited by Merchants, the New, by the King and his Nobility. The houſes made of wood, but covered with Tiles; a Coco-Tree before every houſe, yielding a comfortable ſhade, and a pleaſant ſhew. The Steetes as ſtrait as any line, and ſo broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreſt in the narroweſt of them. In figure ſquare, each ſquare having five Gates, beſides many Turrets; all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with walls of ſtone, environed on all ſides with great Ditches; and in the middeſt the Royall Palace, walled and ditched about, moſt ſumptuouſly gilded; but ſpecially the Temple or Idol-chapel, the walls whereof were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleaſure as the world could yield: his empire not extending only over theſe kingdoms now deſcribed, but over all the Provinces or kingdoms of the Bramanes alſo; which he governed by his ſeverall Vice-Roys, or rather TRIBUTARIE kings. A happineſs too great to continue long. For in the year 1567. the Vice-Roy or Tributary king of Tangu, by the aid of his faction, and reputation of his vertues, entered into rebellion, and ſlaying the Nobles of the Land, uſurped that kingdome. After this he ſubdued the Cities and kingdoms of Calam, Melintay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Brames or Bramanes; and therfore taking to himſelf the title of king of Brama, becauſe his fame and fortunes took their riſe from his victories over them. Following the courſe of his Succeſſes, he firſt aſſailed the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulſed with loſs. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleaguered Pegu, and ſubdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the ſiege of Siam, had it yielded to him. Dying he gave the kingdome of Ava unto one of his Brothers; that of Prom to one of his grandſonnes; the kingdome of Jangoma to a younger ſonne, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Soveraignty over all the reſt, to his eldeſt ſonne, a Prince of vicious and tyrannical nature; and not more cruell to his ſubjects, than they diſobedient to him. Whereupon preparations are made on both ſides, the people to defend their liberty, the King to preſerve his Royalty. During theſe civill diſcords, the titulary king of Siam, whoſe late overthrow was not yet fully digeſted, came violently into the Countrey of Pegu; burning Corn, Graſs, and Fruits; killing man, woman, and child, and having ſatisfyed his Fury, returned to his home. This ſpoil of the fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unſupportable famine, which conſumed all the inhabitants of this flouriſhing kingdome, except ſuch whom the Grantries of the City of Pegu preſerved, Anno 1598. For here the Fathers devoured their Children, the ſtronger preyed upon the weaker; not only devouring their more fleſhy parts, but their entrails alſo: nay they broke up the skulls of ſuch as they had ſlain, and ſucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his beſt advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his Brother-in-Law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For juſtly fearing the diſpleaſure of his angry Prince, to whoſe aid he had refuſed to come, when ſent for by him, he joined himſelf with the king of Arrachan, beſieged his Lord and Soveraign in the Fort of Meccao. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought beſt to put himſelf into the hands of his brother of Tangu; who aſſaulted and entred Pegu, where he found as much treaſure as 600 Elephants, and as many horſes, could conveniently carry away. This havock being made, he villanouſly murdered the King, Queen and their Children, and departed; leaving the gleaning of his ſpoil to the King of Arrachan: who, Anno 1600, was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Barma having with an Army of an hundred thouſand fighting men, and four-ty thousand Elephants, subdued the Kingdomes of Macin, and Arracan, followed the currents of his Victories; conquered Siam, drove the king thereof from PEGU, where he hath built a most Magnificent Palace: and is now the sole Monarch of the twelve Kingdomes of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-settled Estate, we cannot yet understand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whose inquisitiveness into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading, cannot give us any full satisfaction: Scholars and Statists are not permitted to observe; and such of the Natives as could give us the most light, are not suffered to travell. Onely we may conjecture by the great Wealth of those several Princes, and the vast Armies by them raised in their severall Territories, that his Annual Revenues, Casualties, and united Forces must be almost infinite.

And so much for INDIA.

OF THE ORIEN-TAL ILANDS.

THE ORIENTAL ILANDS, ſo called from their ſituation in the Oriental or Eaſtern Seas, may be divided into the Ilands of 1. Japan, 2. the Philippinæ, 3. the Iſles of Bantam, 4. the Moluccoes, 5. thoſe called Sindæ, or the Celebes, 6. Javi, 7. Borneo, 8. Sumatra, 9. Ceilan, and 10. certain others of leſs note.

1. JAPAN.

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Ilands, ſeparated by ſmall Gulfs, Streights, and turnings of the Sea, but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66. in all; others aſcribe that number to ſo many Kingdoms into which theſe Ilands (be they in number more or leſs) uſe to be divided. But whatſoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of accompt, to which the ſeverall petit Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to ſay, 1. Japin ſpecially ſo called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms; of which 26 are under the King of Meaco, 12 under the King of Amagunce, the other 15 under other Princes of inferior note. II. Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principall whereof are thoſe of Bungo and Figen. III. Xicoum, which comprehendeth four onely of theſe petit Signeuries.

JAPAN, the chief of all theſe Ilands, to which the reſidue may be accompted of but as Appurtenances, is ſituate over againſt the ſtreights of Anian, towards which it looketh to the North: diſtant from New Spain on the Eaſt 150 leagues, or 450 Engliſh miles; and 60 leagues from Cantan a Province of China, oppoſite to it on the Weſt. On the South it hath the vaſt Ocean, and thoſe infinite ſholes of Ilands which are called the Phillippinæ, and the Iſles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from Weſt to the Eaſt 200 leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in ſome places not above ten leagues over, and in the broadeſt parts but thirty.

The Country mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much ſubject unto cold, yet in ſome places they have Wheat ripe in the moneth of May; but their Rice, which is their principall ſuſtenance, they gather not before September. The ſurface of the Earth, clothed with woods and forreſts, in which ſome Cedars of ſo tall and large a body, that one of them onely is ſufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it ſtored with divers metals, and amongſt others with ſuch inexhauſible mines of gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth ſome of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered in this time with ſheets of gold, as ours in Europe are with lead. But I find no ſuch matter in our latter travellers. Their Fields and Medows full of Cattel, but hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their Fens much viſited by wild-Ducks, as their houſe yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails, and pullen.

The People for the moſt part of good underſtanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and ſubtil in their dealings. Of body vigorous and ſtrong, accuſtomed to bear Arms untill 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads ſhaved off. Patient they are of pain, ambitious of glory, uncapable of ſuffering wrong, but can withall diſſemble their reſentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, ſo it come not by his own unthriftineſs, for which cauſe they deteſt all kinds of gaming, as the wayes of ill-husbandry; and generally abhorre ſlandering, theft, and ſwearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feaſts in black; their teeth they colour black alſo to make them beautiful; they mount on the right ſide of the horſe, and ſit, (as we are uſed to riſe) when they entertain. In Phyſick they eat ſalt things, ſharp, and raw; and in their ſalutations they put off their ſhooes. The very Antipodes of our world in cuſtoms, though not in ſite: and the true type or Figure of the old Engliſh Puritan, oppoſite to the Papiſt in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that oppoſition. In other things they do much reſemble thoſe of China, if not the more ceremonious of the two: waſhing their infant-childten in the neereſt River, as ſoon as born; and putting off their ſhooes when they go to meat.

The people have but one Language, but that ſo intermingled with the words of others nations, that it ſeems rather to be many languages than one. They have long uſed the Art of printing, which probably enough they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and ſignifie not only letters, but ſome whole words alſo. In matter of Religion, Gentiles, adoring antiently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, and giving divine honour to wild beaſts, and the Stags of the Forreſts: but ſpecially worſhiping ſome of their deceaſed Prieſts and Princes, by the names of Fotoques, and Cames; to the firſt of which they uſe to pray for goods of the other world, and to the laſt for Temporall bleſſings. Their Prieſts they call by the name of Bonzes, ſetled in goodly Convents, and endowed with very large Revenues: who though divided into eleven different (if not contrary) Sects, do well enough agree in denying the providence of God, and the immortality of the ſoul. Of late times by the care and diligence of the Jeſuites, Chriſtianity hath begun to take footing here; whether with ſuch a large increaſe as their letters, called Epiſtolæ Japanicæ, have been pleaſed to tell us, I am ſomewhat doubtfull. They tell us there of ſome Kings of theſe Ilands whom they have converted and baptized; that within 50 miles of Meaco, they had 50 Churches, 200 at the leaſt in all, that in the year 1587 the number of their Converts was two hundred thouſand. Of this, if the one half be but true, we have great cauſe to praiſe God for it, and to give them the commendation of their pains and induſtry: not letting paſs the memory of the firſt Adventurer, who was Father Xavier, one of the firſt foundation of this Society, (employed in this buſineſs by Ignatius, the firſt founder of it) who landed here about the year 1556.

Rivers of note I find not any, though the Iland be generally well-watered: more memorable for two mountains in it, than for all the Rivers. One of which called Figenoiama, is ſaid to tranſcend the clouds in height; the other (but without a name) uſeth to caſt forth dreadfull flames, like Sicilian Ætna; on the top whereof the Devill environed with a white and ſhining cloud, doth ſometimes ſhew himſelf unto ſuch of his Votaries, as live about this hill an abſtemious life, like the antient Hermits.

Chief Cities of the whole Ilands, 1. Meaco, ſeated in Japan, and the chief of that Iland, formerly 21 miles in compaſs, but now by reaſon of their warrs, ſcarce a third part of it. The ordinary reſidence of the Trium viri, or three principall Magiſtrates, which ſway the affairs of all theſe Ilands: of whom the firſt entituled Zazo, hath the chief care in ſacred matters; the 2d named Voo, doth preſide in Civill; and the third called Cabacama, manageth the concernments of Peace and Warre. At this time it is uſed for the common Empory of the trade of China: that people not permitting Merchants to come amongſt them, but bringing to this place their merchandiſe, as the common Staple, where they are ſure to meet with Chapmen to buy it of them. 2. Oſſacay, a great and renowned City, conceived to be the richeſt in all the Eaſt; of ſo great trade, that every ordinary merchant is ſaid to be worth 30000 Crowns. 3. Fenoiama, or Figenoiama, at the foot of the hill ſo called, and about nine miles from Meaco. An Univerſity of the Bonzes, for whoſe convenience and ſtudy, one of the Kings of Japan is ſaid to have founded in this Town, and about that mountain, 3800 Convents, and to endow it with the third part of the Revenues of the Kingdom of Vorn. Theſe Colleges or Convents now reduced to 800 onely: but ſtill the Univerſity of ſuch fame and credit, that they give not the command or government of it unto any but the Kings ſonne, or his neereſt kinſman. 4. Banoam, another of their Univerſities, where they give degrees; affirmed to be as big as Paris. 5. Bongo, the chief of all that Province; in which the Jeſuites have a College; the Japonites learn the Portugal language, and the Europæans that of Japan. 6. Coia, the ſepulture of their Princes, or of ſome part of them: it being antiently ordained, that if their whole bodies be not here interred, they muſt at leaſt ſend one of their teeth. 7. Fiongo, about 18. leagues from Meaco, the ſubject of many great misfortunes. Deſtroyed in part by Nabunanga one of the Kings of this Iland, who lived Anno 1550: that which he left, terribly ſhattered by an Earth-quake Anno 1596. moſt of the ruins of it ſince conſumed by fire. 8. Amangaſaqui, five leagues from the Sea. 9. Surungo, as big as London with the Suburbs. 10 Edoo, a much fairer than that, and the chief Seat of one of their Kings. 11. Firando, a ſeat-Royall alſo of ſome other King, where, in the year 1613. there was a Factory eſtabliſhed for the Engliſh Merchants. 12. Ochinoſamanus, one of their moſt noted Havens. 13. Toſa, or Tonſa, giving name to one of the Ilands.

Theſe Ilands utterly unknown to the Antients, were firſt diſcovered by Antonio Mota, a Portugal, in the year 1542. I know Mercator taketh it for the Aurea Cherſoneſus ſpoken of by Ptolomy; and I cannot chooſe but wonder at it. The ſituation of it ſo far diſtant from that of the Cherſoneſe, that either Mercator muſt be groſſely out in his conjecture; or Ptolomy as much miſtaken in his informations; which no man hitherto can juſtly accuſe him of. But paſſing by the improbability of Mercators fancy, we are to know, that in former times theſe Ilands were ſubject to one Prince, whom they obeyed and reverenced with great affection: which government continued, as themſelves report, 1600 years in great State and Majeſty. But in the end, the Dairi, (ſo they call their King) addicting himſelf wholly unto pleaſures, and laying the burden of Government upon other mens ſhoulders, his Deputies or inferiour Officers uſurped Regal power, plumed themſelves with Eagles feathers, uſed in their ſtiles the name of Jucatas, or Kings; and in a word, left nothing but the name of Dairi, to their Lord and Soveraign. His iſſue to this day do enjoy that title, and but little elſe: the Princes bordering on Meaco, once his Royall ſeat, hardly allowing him ſufficient means to find himſelf victuall and Apparell; but otherwiſe befooling him with as glorious titles, as if he were poſſeſſed ſtill of his antient power. Onely they let him execute the place of an Harald, in giving Arms, and ſelling dignities and honours; which brings him in the greateſt profit he hath to truſt to. Of all theſe Kings, he which can make himſelf Lord of Coquinai (which are the five Realms about Meaco) is called Prince of Tenza, and eſteemed Soveraign of the reſt. Which height of dignity Nabunanga before mentioned, in his time attained to; after him Faxiba, and ſince him Taicoſuma: that ſovereignty being now in a likely way to become hereditary. For Faxiba having brought under his command moſt of theſe ſmall Kingdoms, tranſported the vanquiſhed Kings, and the chief of their Nobles, out of one Countrey into another: to the end that being removed out of their own Realms, and amongſt ſtrange ſubjects, they ſhould remain without means to revolt againſt him. A mercifull and prudent courſe. Having reduced into his power at leaſt 50 of theſe petit Kingdoms, he divided the greateſt part of the conquered quered territories. amongst his own faithfull friends and followers: binding them to supply him with certain numbers of men upon all occasions. By which, and other politick courtes, he so setled himself in those estates, that Taicosuma his sonne succeeded without opposition, who had he lived would have abolished the vain title of the Dairi; or took it to himself as he had the power; sollicited thereto by the King of China. But dying in or about the year 1607. Feresama his son succeeded; and may be still alive for ought I can learn.

What the Revenues of this King are, it is hard to say. I gues them to be very great, in regard he maketh two millions of Crowns yearly, of the very Rice which he reserveth to himself from his own demeasns. The store of Gold, and pretious stones which these Islands yield, being wholly his, must needs adde much unto his Coffers. And for his power, it is said that Faxiba was able to raise so good an Army out of the estates demised by him to his faithful followers; that he resolved once on the conquest of China: and to that end had caused timber to be felled for 2000 vessels for the transporting of his Army. And had he lived a little longer, tis probable enough he might have shaken that great Kingdome, the Japonits being so much the better Souldiers, that a small party of them would defeat a good Army of Chineſe. The fear whereof made the King of China after his decease correspond so fairly with his Successour.

Adjoining to Japan, betwixt it and China, lyeth the Iland of CORE A, extended in length from North to South: the people whereof being distressed by the Japonites, called in the Chineſe, by whom delivered from their Enemies, and restored to liberty, as before was noted.

2. PHILIPPINÆ.

SOuth of Japan, lieth a great frie of Islands which are now called PHILIPPINÆ in honour of Philip the second, King of Spain, in whose time discovered by Legaspi a Spanish Captain, Anno 1564. Strangely mistaken by Mercator for the Barussa of Ptolomy, those being placed by him in the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, five degrees South of the Æquator; these situate on the East of China, in 13 or 14 degrees of Northern Latitude: those being only five in number, these reckoned at above ten thousand.

The Air in all of them generally very mild and temperate, especially in the midland parts; that on the shores, somewhat inclining unto heat. The soil abundantly fruitful of all commodities both for necessity, and delights; that is to say, Rice, Pulse, Wax, Honey, Sugar Canes, many pleasant fruits, the faireſt Figges of all the world, plenty of fish, variety of Birds and Beasts, as well wild as tame, great store of Cotton Wooll, some Mines of Gold, and of other mettals great abundance.

Of all these Islands there are only fourty in possession of the King of Spain, belonging properly to Asia, but by him placed under the Government of New Spain in America, because discovered by Legaspi at the instigation or procurement of Don Lewis de Velasco, who was then Vice-Roy of that Province. In these 40 Ilands there are thought to be at the least a million of people subject to that Crown; many of which have been converted by the Friers and Jesuites unto Christianity. Of these the principal in account are, 1. LUSSON, affirmed to contain in compass 1000 miles; beautifyed by the Spaniards with a fair City, seated on a commodious Haven, which they call Manilla, in which resides the Depury or Lieutenant Governor for all these Ilands; and the bishop of the Philippines for ordering all affairs of those Churches. II. MINDANAO, 380 Leagues in compass; in which are many good Towns, as 1. Cailon, 2. Pavados, 3 Subut, 4. Dapiro, and some others. III. TANDAIR, more fruitful than any of the rest, and of good extent, 160 Leagues in circuit; more specially called Philippina, because first discovered and so named. IV. PALOHAN, as much mistaken by Mercator for the Bazacata of Ptolomy.

These, with the rest, subject in former times to the Kings of China, till they did voluntarily abandon them, and confine their Empire within the Continent. On this relinquishment the people fell into Civil warres, every man getting what he could for himself, and the stronger preying on the weaker: which factions and divisions gave great help to the Spaniard in the conquest of those few which are under their power. Ilands of more importance to the Spaniards, than is commonly thought: and therefore furnished by them at their first plantations, with Bulls, Kine, Horses, and Mares, which before they wanted, and do now reasonably abound with. For besides the abundance of victuals, and some plenty of Gold which they find therein, the situation is very fit to subdue the rest of the neighbouring Ilands; to settle the commerce betwixt China and Mexico; to bring on a continual trade betwixt the Ilands of this Sea, and those of America; and finally to prevent the Moors or Arabians from planting their Mahometanism any further Eastwards.

Not far from these, on the South of Japan bending towards the west, is another great heap of Rocks and Ilands. Some of them rich in Gold, and furnished with very choise fruits, and other necessaries, and peopled with a stout and warlike breed of men, well skilled in Archerie. The chief whereof have the names of 1. Lequin Major, 2. Lequin Minor, 3. Hermosa, 4. Reix Magos, &c. of which little memorable. And not far off those called 5. Cinmbabon, in which is said to be a Plantanimal, or sensible tree, and 6. Mathan, unfortunately remarkable for the death of Magellanus, slain there in a battel with the Natives.

3. The Isles of BANDAN.

THe Isles of BANDAN are in number seven, that is to say 1. Mira, 2. Rosalargium, 3. Ais, 4. Rom, 5. Nerra, 6 Ganuape, the least of all, continually burning, and for that cause deserted of its inhabitants, and 7. Bandan, bigger than any of the rest, and therefore giving name to all. Situate South of the Philippines, in the seventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitful of Nutmegs, than any other of all these parts, for which cause never without the concourse of forein Merchants from Java, Malaca, and China; and of late times from these Northern Countreys of Europe also. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach or Peach-tree, the innermost part whereof is the Nutmeg it self, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz or Mace; and over that the fruit it self, as it is in Peaches, Malacotons, and such fruits as those.

The people barbarous and rude, slothfull, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confusedly together without rule or order. Some of them still continue in their antient Paganism; but the greatest part are thought to be Mahometans, in which Religion very zealous, and so devout that they will not go unto their work or wordly businesses, till they have visited the Mesquits, and there done their devotions. A shame or Pattern shall I say in this, unto many Christians. All of them bloody and revengefull, but yet so farre from wronging the body of a dead Enemy, that they use to bury it with sweet odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principall, 1. Nera, and 2. Lontoor, joined in a league against the rest; the quarrell rising from the cutting down of certain trees, proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loss of their common liberty. Subject in shew to the King of Botone one of the Moluccoes, but too much at their own disposing. They had not else entred into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchfull Hollanders, they did not only settle four Factories there; but for the security of their trade, and to awe the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had also turned one of their Mesquits to a Fortress. Whereat the people were so incensed that they promised liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it: who falling desperately on fired it over their heads, and killed every man of them. The English Merchants have some trading also in these Ilands, more acceptable than the other, because not so insolent.

There is not far off another Iland, not in this accompt, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Ilands which lye round about it; but not else observable, except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabiants for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES.

THe MOLUCCOES are in number many, the King of Terenate which is one of them, being said to have dominion over 70 Ilands; but the determinate number of them I do no where find. Situate on both sides of the Æquator, and consequently of an hot and intemperate air: the soyl so drie and spongious, that it sucketh up the greatest shewr of Rain that doth fall amongst them, before it can pass into the Sea. Not very well furnished with necessaries for the life of man; but that defect supplied with the abundance of Spices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Mastick, Aloes, Pepper, and the like commodities, for which the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of these Ilands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A spice, which groweth on Trees like Bay-trees, yielding blossoms, first white, then green (at which time they yield the pleasantest smell in the world) and last of all Red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot, that if a Pail of water should only stand in the Room in which they are cleansed and sorted, the Cloves in two daies would dry it up. Of which nature the unspun silks of China are affirmed to be.

The people for the most part Idolaters, intermixt with some Mahometans dwelling on the shores, and of late times with Christians in their severall factories. Of severall Originals, and different languages, but all in generall fraudulent, perfidious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedness. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their shame; Not civilized by the cohabitation of more modest and civill Nations. Pitty such ill conditions should be lodged in such handsome bodies: the people being said to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for strength and valour not fellowed by any of them.

Of all the Ilands which pass under this name, there are not above five or six of any rekoning: that is to say, 1. Terenate. 2. Tidor. 3. Macir. 4. Rachian. 5. Machian, and 6. Botone: none of them above six leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 leagues in the Circumference. Some reckon Polerone amongst them, a little Iland not far off (if not one of the number) and well stored with Cloves. Frequented first by the English Merchants, from them taken by the insolent and ingratefull Hollanders: who being to restore it upon composition, cut down all the Clove-trees, so to deprive the English of the benefit of it.

Of the rest, Rachian, and Tidore have their proper Kings; So hath Botone also, if that be one of them, the King whereof had antiently some title and authority over those of Bandan. Macir, and Machian, are subject to the King of Ternate, who is a Mahometan in Religion, and said to be the Lord of 70 Ilands. This the most puissant member of this scattered body; and for that cause most aimed at

at by all Competitors: the Spaniards having here one Fortreſs, and the Hollanders three: both nations hated by the Natives, whom they conſume and waſt in the wanes betwixt them; but of the two, the Spaniard looked on by the people as the more Gentleman; the other ſtomacked and deſpiſed for their ſordid dealings. Nothing elſe memorable in the ſtory or Chorographie of them, but that they were diſcovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the reign of Charles the fift, who employed him in it, Anno 1519. And that there is in Ternate a prodigious mountain, in height above the clouds of the Air, and in nature agreeing with the Element of fire, which it ſeems to mount to: huge flames whereof, with dreadfull thunders, and a dark ſmoak, it ſends forth continually.

5 The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

Neer the Moluccoes, and almoſt intermingled with them, are a ſet of Ilands which Ptolomy calleth SINDÆ, and the Modems, SELEBES, many in tale, but not above four of any weight, that is to ſay, 1. SELEBES. 2. Gilolo, 3. Amboina. 4. Macaſſer, of which the two firſt are ſituate under the Æquator, and the laſt ſomewhat on the South of it: all of them in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by Anthropophagi, and a long time after; inſomuch as the Kings of the Moluccoes, did uſe to ſend their condemned perſons into theſe Ilands, there to be devoured. Which ſaid in generall, we will take a more particular view of them as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the reſt, and hath under it many leſſer Ilands, is large and rich. The ſoil thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comely, and of color, not ſo much black, as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late. Governed by many Kings or petit Princes, the cauſe of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are ſaid to have been converted to Chriſtianity, and for that cauſe much hated by their heatheniſh Subjects, who thereupon rebelled againſt them. It is ſituate Weſt of the Moluccos, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Chriſtian Kings: but poſſibly not ſo called untill their converſion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2. Nibon, in the South, and 3. Terolli, in the North parts of it.

2. GILOLO, called alſo Batachina, is one of thoſe Iſlands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Mor. Of large extent, conceived to be half as bigge as Italy. By that accompt (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilan is in compaſs, though of leſs reputation: that being governed by its own Princes, this ſubject for the moſt part to the king of Ternate. Situate Eaſt of the Moluccos, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well ſtored with wild hens, and on the ſhores provided of a kind of Shell-fiſh, which in taſt much reſembleth mutton. A tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread, and of the ſap or juice of it they compoſe a pleaſing drink which ſerveth them inſtead of wine. The air intemperatly hot; the people well proportioned, but rude and ſavage; ſome of them Gentiles, ſome Malometans, of which laſt Religion is their king. The chief Town of it is Batchame or Batachina, (whence the new name unto the Iland) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. AMBOINA, South of the Æquator, and the third of the Sindæ, hath many Ilands of leſs note which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compaſs about five hundred miles, ſaid by Maginus to be extremely rough and barren; which muſt be underſtood with reference to ſome kinds of grain. For otherwiſe it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Limons, Orenges, Coquo-nuts, Sugar-Canes, and other fruits; and very plentiful of Cloves. Which laſt, as it makes ſome to reckon it amongſt the Moluccos, ſo may it be the reaſon why the Iland is defective in ſuch fruits as require much moiſture: the Clove being of ſo hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moiſture of the Earth which is neer unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infeſt all the neighboring Ilands. Defamed for Cannibals, or man-eaters: it being here a conſtant cuſtome, that when their parents are grown old, or ſick of any incurable diſeaſe, they give them unto one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Amboyna, by the name of the Iland. Firſt taken by the Portugals, and by them ſecured with a ſtrong fortreſs: during whoſe power here, the Jeſuites who had in it their ſeveral Reſidences converted many to Chriſtianity. But in the year 1605. the Iland and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagen for the States of the united Provinces: who having cleered the Countrey of the Portugal Forces, poſſeſſed themſelves of it. Received by the natives at their firſt comming with joy and triumphs: but they got little by the change, as they found ſoon after; their new Maſters being more burdenſome and unſufferable than the old had been. For claiming in the right of conqueſt, they think they may oppreſs the Natives by the law of Arms, and ingroſs all trade unto themſelves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongſt the rude and ſavage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon ſome of the Engliſh (the greateſt Patrons under God which they have in the world) whom in the year 1618 they moſt cruelly tortured, and moſt wickedly murdered, under colour of ſome plot to betray their Fortreſs: but in plain truth for no other reaſon but becauſe they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

4. Weſt of Amboina, and South-weſt of Celebes, lieth the 4th of theſe Ilands called MACASSAR, ſaid to contain from Eaſt to Weſt 600 miles; plentiful of Rice, Fleſh, Fiſh, Salt, and Cotton-wool; not deſtitute of Gold and Pearls, and well ſtored with Sanders (Sandalum it is called in Latin) a medicinal wood, growing like a Nut-tree: of ſeveral colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the beſt: the fruit in making, like a Cherry, but of no eſteem. In ſome parts overgrown with woods, in which certain fierie Flies make nightly ſuch ſhining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the midle covered with high Mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Senderem, the Kings Seat, situate neer a large Lake, very commodiously for trafick. 2. Macassar, an English Factorie, so called according to the name of the Iland.

Neer to these Islands, and somewhat North to Battachina are some other Isles, plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man, but inhabited by a theevish and Piratical people: the principal of which, 1. Terrao, 2. Sanguin, 3. Solor, 4. Moratay, in which last they eat Battata Roots instead of bread; besides some others of less note. Most of the People Gentiles, except those of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuites, hath brought many of his subjects to the same Religion.

6. BORNEO.

WEst of these Celebes, lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described in these Indian Seas. In compass after their accompt who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say no less than three moneths sayl about. Situate under the Æquator, which parteth the dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Laus: opposite on the North, to Camboia; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Celebes; on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra.

The Countrey said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said withall to be unfurnished of Asses, Oxen, heads of Cattell, except only horses, and those but of small stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Camphire, Agatrick, and some mines of Adamants. Erroneously conceived by Mercator to be the Insula bona Fortuna spoken of by Ptolomy; that being seated opposite to the out-lets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundred fourty five Degrees, and fifteen minutes; this Eastward some Degrees of the Golden Chersonese, and consequently twenty degrees Distant at the least from that Iland in Ptolomy.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions; the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; those of Laus still remaining in their antient Gentilism. These think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially, whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain verses. Their publicke businesses are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counsellers of State meet, and ascend some tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-house. The same Apparell generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Air, a shirt of Silk, or of Calicut, or some such slight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Borneo, situate in the North-west part of the Iland neer a goodly bay, but in the middle of the Fens like the City of Venice; and seated as that is, on Piles, the building sumptuous, of hewed stone, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 25000 Houses in the smallest reckoning, the principal of all the Iland, which takes name from hence. 2. Cabura. 3. Taiaopura. 4. Tamaoratas. 5. Malano; all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 6. Sagadana, a Factory of English. 7. Lavi, on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Iland, the ordinary Seat of the King of Laus. 8. Paro, on another capacious Bay, not farre from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being seated on the North-west, and this on the South-East of the Iland. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so that he of Borneo hath the greatest part of it, and therefore keeps the greater State: not to be spoken with but by the mouth of some of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace served by no other Attendants than Maids or Women.

OPposite to Borneo towards the South lie the Isles of JAVA, two in number; both situate South of the Æquator, both of great Circumference, and commonly distinguished into Major and Minor, or the Greater and the Lesser Java.

1. JAVA-MAJOR, the more North-ward of the two, and by much the bigger, is said to be in compass 3000 miles, and that by them who elsewhere reckon Borneo for the biggest of these Seas. But the truth is, that the South-parts of this Iland not being perfectly discovered make the measurement thereof to be very uncertain. Conceived most probably to be the Jabadiu of Ptolomy, the most Northern part whereof is placed by him in the 8th Degree of Southern Latitude: said by him to afford much gold and silver, to be exceeding fruitfull of all other necessaries; and finally that the name did signifie κριθῆς νῆσος, or the Iland of Barley. All which agreeth punctually with the present Iland, the word, Jabad signifying a kind of grain much like our Barley, and Diu in the Persian and Indian tongues signifying an Island. And so in Jabadiu, we have found the Iland of Iava, the mutation of B. into V. being very ordinary.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is said to yield great plenty of fruits, and corn, but of Rice especially; flesh of all sorts, salted and sent from hence into other Countries; great store of fowl, both wild and tame; plenty of gold, some precious Stones, and the best kind of brass; silks in abundance, and great quantities of pepper, ginger, Cinnamon, and some other spices. In a word so befriended by the bounty of nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitome Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a lesser Volume. But withall it is much exposed unto storms and tempests, from which seldome free.

The

The people of a midle Stature, corpulent, and of broad faces, moſt of them naked or covered onely with a ſlight ſilken ſtuff, and that no lower than the knee: accompted the moſt Civill people of all the Indians, as fetching their deſcent from China: but withall treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careleſs of their words, to which ſo uſed, that they count it not amongſt their Faults. And therefore when a king of theirs had broke promiſe with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he anſwered that his tongue was not made of bone. Cruel they are alſo ſaid to be, and implacable, if once offended: accuſtomed of old to eat the bodies of their friends: accounting no buriall ſo honourable; nor obſequy, ſo applauſive. This alſo a cuſtome amongſt many of the reſt of the Indians, and ſo hath been ever ſince the beginning of the Perſian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hyſtaſpis underſtanding of this cuſtome, and withall knowing how the Grecians uſe to burn their dead; ſent to the Greeks, that it was his pleaſure they ſhould eat the bodies of their dead: But they uſed all means of perſwaſion and entreaty, not to be forced to ſo bruitiſh and barbarous a cuſtome. Then commanded he the Indians, to conform themſelves to the faſhion of the Grecians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greeks did to eat them. So impoſſible is it for a cuſtome either to be ſuddenly left off, or to ſeem undecent and inconvenient, if once thorowly ſettled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans or Gentiles, according to the fancy of their ſeverall Kings, whereof in this Iland there are very many, one for every great Tribe, or more powerfull Family. Zealous in their Religion which ſoever it be, as appears by the ſad ſtory of the daughter of the King of Ballambua, murdered by her husband the King of Paſſarva, the ſecond night after her wedding, with all her Attendants, becauſe they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in ſome common Principles they agree well enough, puniſhing Adultery with death; in which caſe the woman chooſeth her neereſt kinſman for her Executioner: but otherwiſe ſpending day and night in much ſloth and dalliance. Of the two, Gentiliſm is the more diffuſed, becauſe moſt antient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very ſwift growth, and of a great increaſe for ſo ſhort a time.

Their chief Towns, 1. Panarucan, neer a burning hill, which in the year 1586. break forth exceedingly, oppreſſed infinite numbers of men, and caſt great ſtones into the City for three dayes together. 2. Jortam, a Town of 1000 Houſholds, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief-Prieſt of whoſe ſuperſtition hath his dwelling here, of great authority and power over all the Iland. 3. Ballambua, 4. Paſſarva, 5. Tabam, 6. Matara, 7. Dannis, 8. Taggal, 9. Surrabaia, 10. Catabaon; the Seats of ſo many of their Kings; ſome of them alſo furniſhed of convenient Havens. 11. BANTAM, the ſeat alſo of a King, but of moſt trade in all the Iland, ſeldome without the company of Engliſh, Portugals, and Hollanders; the principall Factory of the Engliſh in all the Indies, though they have many beſides this. The Town unwholeſomely ſeated in a mooriſh ground, and much ſubject to fire. 12. Sunda, ſituate in a place abounding in pepper. 13. Agracan, a convenient Port; Here was alſo in the time of Ptolomy a Town called 14. Argyropolis, or the Silver City, long ago deſtroyed. And now there is, 15. Sura, a new Town in the territories of the King of Bantam, built by ſome of the Subjects of the King of Paſſarva, who being oppreſſed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a conſtant Succeſſion, adopting ſome of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their numbers to diminiſh.

Of the ſtory of this Iland I can ſay but litle. Divided into many petit and inconſiderable Kingdoms; and thoſe divided too by Mountains; croſſing the Iland in the middle from Weſt to Eaſt, which cut off all commerce and correſpondence betwixt one another. Some of theſe Kings Mahometans, ſome Gentiles, as before was ſaid; all ſubject or Homagers at leaſt to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the middeſt of the Iland. Next him, the King of Tuban was conceived to be richeſt, and the King of Ballambua of the greateſt territory, whoſe Family, after long warre and blood-ſhed, begun in the murder of his daughter, is ſaid to be wholly rooted out by the King of Paſſarva. Theſe Kings much reverenced by their ſubjects, and ſo well obeyed, that whatſoever they command, is done, be it never ſo dangerous.

2. IAVA-MINOR, ſituate on the South of the other, is ſaid to be 2000 miles in compaſs, and to be very neer the firm land of Terra Auſtralis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not ſo much on certain knowledge as unſure conjecture) to be of the ſame nature and condition with the greater Iava. The Inhabitants hereof in the time of Paulus Venetus, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and deareſt friends, and to worſhip all day whatſoever they ſaw firſt in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, diſtinguiſhed by the names of their principall Towns. Six whereof he had ſeen, which are theſe that follow. 1. Felech, where the Townſmen were Moors, and the Paiſants Gentiles. 2. Baſma, which did acknowledge the Great-Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any tribute. 3. Samara, where none of the North-Stars could be ſeen. 4. Lambri, in which ſome men were ſaid to have tails like dogs. 5. Fanſur, in which they have a Tree; the wood whereof put in water, will ſink like iron; of which they uſe to make Launces that will pierce an Armour. And 6. Dragorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it uſe to eat their neereſt kinſmen; and that no Prodigie at all, becauſe uſed by others.

To theſe two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Iava, fertile of Rice, but otherwiſe of ſo wateriſh and moiſt a Soyl, that the men and Cattel uſe to go knee-deep when they ſow it. The chief Town whereof is called Arosbay. And on the Eaſt of the ſame Iava the Iland Baly, exceeding popupopulous for the bigneſs, ſuppoſed to contain 600000 Inhabitants; and very well provided of Buls, Buffais, Goats, Horſes, Swine, many kind of fruits, and ſome ſtore of metals.

8. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the Greater Java, betwixt it and the Streight of Sincapura the moſt Southern Town of the Golden Cherſoneſe. The Streight in that place ſo ſtreight and narrow not above a musket ſhot in breadth, that ſome conceive this Iſland to have been formerly joined unto it by ſome little Iſthmus, ſince worn away by the violence and working of the Sea: and that this Iland, and not the Land of Malaca was that Golden Cherſoneſe which we find in Ptolomy. More probably by farre, than that we ſhould run after to the Iſle of Japan ſituate on the Eaſt of China, ſo farr from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North-weſt to the South-Eaſt, is ſaid by ſome to be 900. by others but 700 miles, the breadth 200, and the whole compaſs one and twenty hundred. Strangely affirmed by ſome writers to be the biggeſt of all the Eaſt; who yet aſſign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Situate under the Æquator, which divideth it into two parts, very neer an equalite: that on the North-ſide reaching unto five degrees, that on the ſouth-ſide but to ſeven degrees from the line it ſelf. By which accompt there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by conſequence muſt be very hot, but withall unwholſome, not ſo much in regard of the extream heats, as by reaſon of the groſs vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers which are found to be in it; and the thick woods which intercept the free courſe of a purging wind. The ſoil not capable of ſuch grain as in otherplaces, except Rice or Millet (for I know not otherwiſe how to render the Latine, Milium) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Camphire, Agarick, and Caſſia, in great abundance. It affordeth alſo great plenty of Wax and Honey, ſtore of Silks and Cottons; rich mines not onely of tin, iron, ſulphur, and other Minerals; but of Gold ſuch quantity, that ſome conceive this Iſland to be Salomons Ophir. And if Pedrunka Sirie one of the Kings of this Iland, in a letter written to King James did not brag too impudently, it may be probable enough. For by that letter it appeareth that all the furnitures of his houſe, and the trappings of his Elephants, and horſes, withal his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entituleth himſelf in his Regal Stile.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundred and thirty years ſince, at what time by the diligence of ſome Arabian Merchants trading to this Iſland, Mahometaniſm began to ſpread upon the Coaſts. But in the inland parts of the Countrey they are Gentiles ſtill, and ſtill retain amongſt them their old barbarous cuſtomes. The moſt loving men unto their enemies that were ever known; for otherwiſe they would never eat them. Having eaten they uſe their ſkuls inſtead of money, which they exchange or barter for ſuch neceſſaries as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthieſt man amongſt them, who hath moſt of this coin. Thoſe of the other Religion though in moſt points and cuſtomes they agree with the reſt of the Mahometans, have this one ſingular to themſelves: which is, that once every year on a certain day they go ſolemnly unto their Meſquits to ſee if Mahomet be come; leading a ſpare Horſe for him to ride upon: which (miſſing him) is mounted at their coming back, by the beſt man in the company. Of any great Progreſs that Chriſtianity hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That here are many and great Rivers, hath been ſaid before, but their names I find not. Here are alſo many Mountains, and thoſe great and high; that of moſt note called Balalvanus, ſaid to burn continually. Out of which, or not farre off do ariſe two Fountaines, of which the one is ſaid to runne pure Oile, and the other the beſt Balſamum: which I bind no man to believe but ſuch as have ſeen it.

Chief Towns hereof 1. Achen, the Seat Royall of that Kingdome, beautifyed with the Regal Palace, to which they paſs thorow ſeven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outermoſt; thoſe three continually guarded with women expert at their weapons, and uſing both ſwords and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his perſon. The materials of this Palace mean, but the furniture coſtly; the walls thereof being hanged commonly with Velvet and Damask, and ſome times with cloth of Gold. 2. Pedir. 3. Pacem, 4. Cambar, 5. Menimtabo, 6. Aura, and 7. Andragide, the ſeats of ſo many of their Kings. 8. Paſſaman, a Town of great trade, but ſituate in a mooriſh and unhealthy place; found ſo experimentally by too many of the Engliſh, who have there their Factory. 9. Priamon, and 10. Tecon, of a more healthy aire, but not ſo commodious in their Havens as is that of Paſſaman: theſe 3 Towns ſtanding in that part of the Countrey where the Pepper groweth.

All that we know touching the ſtorie of this Countrey, is that the Portugals, when they firſt came hither, found in it nine and twenty kings; reduced ſince to a ſmaller number. For Abraham, ſometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turks and Arabians ſubdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacem. Aladine who ſucceeded him, being onee a Fiſherman and grown famous for his exploits at Sea, was by this King preferred to the mariage of one of his Kinſwomen, made his Lord Admirall, and by him truſted with the protection of his ſonne and heir: of whom inſtead of a Protector he became the murtherer, and uſurped the State unto himſelf. When King, he added to his Crown the Kingdomes of Aru, or Aura, and Manucabo, and almoſt all the reſt in the North-part of the Iland. In this kings time, the Engliſh were firſt ſettled in their Factory there. Grown old (an hun-hundred years at leaſt) he was impriſoned by his eldeſt Sonne, impatient of a longer ſtay, alleging that his age had made him unfit for government, Anno 1604. The name of the New King Sultan Peatrucka Sirie, who in his letter to King James ſpoken of before, ſtiles himſelf the Sole King of Sumatra: either with greater brag than truth, or elſe becauſe the Kingdomes of Tecoo, Priaman, and Baroſe, being conquered by him, all the reſt were become his Tributaries. Aſſociated with the forces of the King of Jor, or Johor, who had maried his Siſter, he beſieged Malaca, and diſtreſſed it: But being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his diſpleaſure upon his Confederate, and ſubdued that Kingdome; who with the King of Siak (ſome other petit Prince neer Jor) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613. brought Priſoners to Achem.

The Government of this King is abſolute, and meerly arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to without form of Law. So cautelous, that without his Placard no ſtranger can have Ingreſs into his dominions, or free Egreſs out of them. Nor is admittance to his preſence granted unto any whom he firſt ſends not for by an Officer with a Gilded Staff. He is conceived to be ſtrong both by Sea, and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to put to Sea 120, or if need be 200 Gallies and Frigots fit for any ſervice, moſt of which carry Demi-Cannon, Culverin, Saker, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Braſs. So great a Maſter of his Subjects, that in 21 daies he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this Kings Gold, I cannot but take notice of ſome Ilands on the Weſt of Sumatra, called Aureæ Inſulæ, or the Golden Ilands; the chief of which named Andramania, is poſſeſſed by Cannibals, or man-eaters. Oppoſite unto which on the Eaſt ſide of this Iland, are thoſe called Linga, Banca, and Bintam; which laſt is ſaid to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for ſhipping. The houſes built of ſtone, but thatched except that of the King (for even theſe ſorry Ilands love to have a King of their own) whoſe houſe more eminently ſeated, is more handſomly covered.

9. ZEILAN.

WEſt of Sumatra, ſomewhat inclining to the North, is the Iland of ZEILAN, ten Degrees diſtant from the Æquator, and neer adjoining to the Promontory in the hither India which Ptolomy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only; the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the ſituation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the antient Writers. Ortelius and moſt other intelligent men of theſe later times are of that opinion. Onely Mercator, who hath carried the Golden Cherſoneſe to the Iſle of Japan; and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which laſt I muſt confeſs he hath many Partners) will have this Iland to be that which Ptolomy calls Nanigerus, though that be four Degrees more Weſt than the Promontory of Cory, to which this Iſle in former times ſeems to have been joined.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceilan is the Taprobane of the Antients, we will a little look on the State of that Iland, with reference to the times when thoſe Authors lived. By Ptolomy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of metals; By Pliny, that the Gold is purer, and the Gemmes fairer, than any in India; that there were alſo Groves of Palm-trees, and great ſtore of Elephants, is declared by Ælian and ſome others. Watered with many fair and pleaſant Rivers, viz. 1. Soana, 2. Azanus, 3. Baracus, 4. Ganges, 5. Phaſis: the hills in many places having a full proſpect over the adjoining Vallies; the chief of which were Malea, and thoſe called Calibi, the vales perpetually enriched with the choiceſt fruits. Exceeding populous for the bigneſs, and ſtored with many Towns of note. Of which Magrammum only hath the name of a Metropolis. 1. Margana, 2. Jogana, 3. Sindocanda, 4. Hodoca, 5. Nubartha, 6. Dogana, 7. Dionyſiopolis, 8. Bocana, 9. Abaraha, 10. Procurum, 11. Nigadiba, and 12. Anubingara, have the name of Cities. 13. Moduttum, and 14 Talicorum, noted for the Towns of trafick; 15. Priapis, 16. Mardus, 17. Rhizala, 18. Spatana, and 19. that of the Sun, for commodious Havens; 20. Anurogrammum being honoured with the Title of Regia, or the Royal City. As for the name, it is ſaid by Ptolomy to have been firſt called Taprobane, then Simondi Inſula, and finally in his time Salice, and the People Sale; from whence the name of Selan or Seilan ſeems to be derived.

To take a view of it at the preſent, I find it ſaid to be of an Ovall form, divided from the main land by a narrow Channel, the Heavens refreſhing it with their dewes, the Air with a fragrant freſhneſs, and the waters with their many Rivers and Fountains; the Earth diverſifyed into lofty hills, and lowly Vallies; her inward Chambers filled with Metals, and Jewels, her outward Coat of the pleaſanteſt colour, ſtored with whole woods of Cinnamon; beſides Fruits, Limons, Oringes, &c. bettering thoſe of Spain. Of Fouls and Beaſts great plenty both wild and tame; and the beſt breed of Elephants in all the world. Deſtitute only of the Vine, the want of which ſupplyed with a pleaſant drink made of the juice of fruits, more natural to them than the other, and ſo preſervative of life that the people are reported to be longer lived than in any other parts. In a word ſo abounding in all contentments, that the Indians hold it to be Paradiſe, and take upon them to point out ſome of Adams footings, left for a memorial in ſome parts of it. And to confirm them in their Error, they have an Hill there which the Spaniards call by the name of Pico de Adam, affirmed to be ſeven Leagues in height, from whence Adam aſcended into Heaven: for that cauſe viſited by the Moores or Arabians, with continuall Pilgrimages.

The people for the moſt part tall and ſtrait of body, naked from the girdle upwards, unwarlike, and much given unto eaſe and pleaſures; So queaſie ſtomached that the pooreſt of them will not eat that meat which another hath touched; inclined to bravery, and therefore make wide holes in their ears, which they ſtretch out with Jewels to their very ſhoulders. Cunning Artificers in all metals, one of them making a Crucifix of ſuch exquiſite workmanſhip, that it ſeemed to give life to the dead; and was ſent by the Arch-Biſhop of Goa to the King of Spain, as the rareſt Jewell which had ever graced his Royall Cabinet. They are alſo very active, and well skilled in Iuggling, both men and women, travelling thorow India with their tricks and Hobby-horſes, by which they get themſelves both delight and money. In matter of Religion, they are generally Idolaters, eſpecially the Natives, whom they call Cingalas, which live in the Inlands; the Sea-coaſts (as in other Ilands) being filled with Mahometans. No Chriſtians that I hear of but in Columbo, a Town of the Portugals.

Cities of moſt repute amongſt them, 1. Candie, the Seat of one of their Kings, ſuppoſed to be the Sindocande of Ptolomy, memorable for the ſtatues of their ſuppoſed Adam, moſt artificially wrought, of five or ſix Fathoms high, Symetrically proportionable to the print of his foot, which they conceive to have amongſt them. 2. Ventane, of great renown for an Idol-Temple, in compaſs 130 paces, of great height, and all white except the top, which hath the Spires thereof ſo gilded, that when the Sun ſhines, men are not able to look upon them. 3. Jamaſipatan, 4. Triqui-Lemale (ſuppoſed to be the Tariche of Ptolomy, 5. Batecolom, 6. Vilaſſem 7. Tanamaca, 8. Laula, 9. Galle, the Seats of ſo many of their Kings. 10. Nagarita, conceived to be the Nagiri; as 11. Agena, the Jogana of Ptolomy. 12. Colmuchi, the Seat Royall of the chief King of this Iland, ſituate on a capacious Bay in the South-weſt of it, and of moſt trade in all this Country: many great ſhips laden with Cinnamon, Gemmes, Elephants, and other Indian commodities, going yeerly hence. Fortified by the Portugals (by whom called Columbo) with a very ſtrong Caſtle, built with the Kings leave at firſt, to ſecure their trading; but ſince uſed by them as a curb to hold him in with, and to compell him to pay tribute.

This Country firſt diſcovered to be an Iland by Oneſicritus, Admirall of Alexanders Fleet, was in the time of Ptolomy inhabited by ſeverall Nations. The principall of which were the Galthi, and Mudute dwelling in the North, the Rhogandani, and Namigiri in the South; the Sindocardæ in the Weſt, and the Tarachi in the Eaſt: the middle parts being taken up by the Anurogrammi, Nagadibi, Soani, Semne. But little or nothing is ſaid of them in the way of ſtory, but that they were good Mimicks, did imitate the tunes of birds, and could ſpeak to two at once, as if double-tongued; that they were very ſtudious of Aſtrology, and worſhipped the Sun and the Hoſt of Heaven; that ſome of their Ambaſſadors coming to Rome, in the time of Claudius Cæſar, Solem à Læva oriri mirati ſunt, &c. admired to ſee the Sun riſe on the wrong ſide of them; and finally that the King was choſen by the people with reſpect had to his age and clemency; who being inthroned, appointed thirty Judges to adminiſter Iuſtice to the Subject, without the Major part of whom, ſentence of death was to paſs on no man. In following times this Monarchy (for ſuch it was in the time of thoſe Authors) was broken into many peeces: the Portugals finding nine Kings in it, at their firſt coming hither, all homagers or Tributaries to the King of Colmuchi. After that this their chief King was wickedly murdered by his Barber, who drove the other Kings out of the Country, and for a while uſurped the Monarchy to himſelf. Since which time, having once again recovered their Kingdoms, ſix of them (as I have ſomewhere read, but remember not where) put themſelves under the protection of the Great Mongul, and became his Feudataries.

Neer hereunto on the Coaſts of Malabar, are the Ilands which they call Maldivæ, many in number, but ſo called from the principall of them, as that from Maldiva, a noted and well-traded Empory, where the King reſideth. Not very plentifull of neceſſaries for the uſe of man, did not the Palm alone ſupply them in all other wants. Inhabited by an induſtrious and ſober people, who make themſelves long garments of Silk or Flax brought from other places, wherewith more modeſtly adorned than the reſt of the Indians: and by their fiſhing draw up ſhels of ſuch mingled colours, that they ſerve amongſt the Siamites inſtead of money.

10. ILANDS OF LESSE NOTE.

BEſides theſe Ilands repreſented to us by their ſeverall names, and ſome who have nothing but their names to take notice of; there be many thouſands of leſs note which we find in groſs: theſe Indian Seas being ſo prodigiouſly full of Ilands, that it is almoſt impoſſible to believe there ſhould be ſuch multitudes; but utterly impoſſible to credit what is told us of them. Some of the moſt remarkable of them we have touched upon, as Acceſſories or Appurtenances to ſome greater Ilands. The reſt we ſhall preſent only in the generall muſter, together with a taſt of ſome of thoſe ſtrange reports, with which ſome men have fouled their Papers, and abuſed their Readers. Of the Philippines, there are ſaid to be 11000. though but 40 of them in poſſeſſion of the King of Spain. More South, but over againſt China, is another frie of them affirmed by Mariners to be no fewer than 7448 and (as if nature had delighted to diſport her ſelf by ſowing Ilands in theſe Seas) another Shoal of them about India, no fewer in number than 12700: all which laid together would make a Continent as large as three or four parts of Europe; and are ſtill groaning under the burthen of Heatheniſm. Theſe Ilands ſtand ſo nigh unto one another, that they ſeem not only to ſuch as are a far to be all but one firm land; but whoſoever alſo paſſeth between them, may with his hands touch the boughs of the trees on the one ſide, and on the other. Of theſe and the other Indian Ilands, travellers relate many incredible fables; viz. that here be hogs that have two teeth growing out of their ſnowts, and asmany behind their ears, of a ſpan and a half long; a tree whoſe Weſtern part is rank poiſon; and the Eaſtern part an excellent preſervative againſt it. They tell us alſo of a fruit, that whoſoever eateth, ſhall for the ſpace of 12 hours be out of his wits; and of a ſtone, on which whoſoever ſitteth, ſhall ſuddenly have a rupture in his body. We are told alſo that hereabouts are taken Tortoiſes of that bigneſs, that ten men might ſit and dine within one of the ſhells; And that there is a tree, which all the day time hath not a flower on it, but within half an hour after Sun-ſet, is full of them. All huge and monſtrous lies, and not fit for credit. Galvano reporteth alſo, that in ſome of theſe Ilands there is a fruit, of which if a woman that is w^h child eat, her child will preſently move; that there is a River plentifully ſtored with fiſh, whoſe water is yet ſo hot, that it doth immediately ſcald off the skin of any beaſt that is caſt into it; that ſome of the men have tailes; and moſt of their ſwine horns: that they have oyſters which they call Brar, the ſhels whereof are of ſo large compaſs, that they Chriſten Children in them; that in the Sea there are ſtones which grow and increaſe like fiſh, of which the beſt lime is made; that there is a bird called Monicodiata, which having no feet is in a continuall motion; and that there is a hole in the back of the Cock, in which the Hen doth lay her egges, and hatch her young ones. I bid no man to believe theſe Relations: for my part I ſay with Horace,

Quodcunq; oſtendis mihi ſic, incredulus odi.
What ever thus thou tell'ſt me, I
Will alwayes hate it as a lye.

And ſo much for theſe Eaſtern-Ilands.

An Advertiſement to the Reader touching the Errata of this part.

IN the firſt place the Reader is to be advertiſed that Fol. 63. from the 24th. line to the 32, I have adventured to prove the Alamatha of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures: The place il pointed, but the judicious Reader will eaſily find out the ſcope and meaning. Yet if this ſhall not be approved of, I ſhould then think it to be that Elam or Helam, where David diſcomfited the Army of the Meſopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. v. 16, 17. In the next place he is to know, that Fol. 91. within the compaſs of five lines, the victory which Aſa king of Judah obtained againſt the numerous Army of Ethiopians, is twice repeated: in the firſt place aſcribed to Iethir, in the next to Mareſha. But being that Scripture doth more clearly aſcribe it unto Mareſha, (though the other alſo hath good Authors) let that of Iethir be ſupplied in this manner following. 5. Iethir, or Iatthir, in the North Border of this Tribe, towards Eleutheropolis: a City antiently of the Levites, in S. Hieroms time called by the name of Iethira, and then repleniſhed altogether with Chriſtians; now nothing but the name remaining, 6. Mareſa, &c. And finally whereas Ajalon p. 87. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and page 90 in the Tribe of Dan, the reaſon is, becauſe being ſituate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by ſome writers aſcribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like may be alſo ſaid of Michpas, mentioned alſo in two Tribes according as it is diſpoſed of by ſeverall Authors. Which being advertiſed, ſuch literal faults as do occurre in this third Book, may be mended thus.

COSMOGRAPHIE,

The Fourth Book:

PART I.

CONTAINING THE

CHOROGRAPHIE and HISTORIE OF

AFRICK,

And all the chief Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

OF AFRICK.

AFRICK is bounded on the East by the Red-Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West, by the main Atlantick Ocean, interposing betwixt it and America; on the North, by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia; and on the South, with the Æthiopick Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent; Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus not above 60 miles in length. Memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this: When Mark Anthonie was encountred by Augustus in the Naval battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midst of all his Fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her guard; Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable treasures, and intended to hoist her shipping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red-Sea; whence she had purposed to take sail, and together with her Sweetheart Anthonie and some other choicest friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans; But from this, Anthonie, who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last disswade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramis reversed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Streit of Gibraltar to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian miles; the Conus of it very narrow; But from the Conus or Pyris to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 4155 miles, being much lesse then Asia, and far bigger then Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libya, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Æthiopians, Alkebu-lam; by the Indians, Besecath. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Josephus out of Cleodemus and Polyhistor, deriveth from Epher or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham by Midian the son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Ifrichia, derive it from the Verb Faruch, signifying to divide; because more visibly divided both from from their own Country, and the reſt of the World, then any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fablers fetch it from one Afer a Companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain. Some fetch it out of Aphar, an Hebrew word, ſignifying Duſt, agreeable to its ſandie and duſtie ſoile: Feſtus an old Grammarian, from A Privativum, and the Greek word φρίκη, which imports a Country void of cold, as ſuitable to the fiery temper of the Aire. By Bochartus, who brings all from the old Phenician, it is ſaid to be derived from Peruc, Spica, an Ear of corn; which mollified into Feric, came at laſt to Africk, that is to ſay, a Country plentifull in Corn. Which Etymologie of his may receive ſome countenance from that great plenty of Corn which was bred in this Country, eſpecially in thoſe parts hereof which the Romans called the Proper Africk, whereof we ſhall ſpeak more when we come to Barbary; the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africk. But in my mind, (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aphar, be not worth accepting) I ſhould prefer the Etymon of Feſtus before any other; unleſſe we might be ſure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Suidas telleth us it was: for then without all peradventure we would ſeek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in ſome elder writers, i.e. Olympia, Oceanica, Eſchatica, Coryphe, Ammonis, Heſperia, Ortygia, and perhaps ſome others, it is enough to our deſign to take notice of them.

It is ſituate for the moſt part under the Torrid Zone, the Æquator croſſing it almoſt in the very midſt; and for that cauſe ſuppoſed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with ſuch ſtrange people, as hardly did deſerve to be counted men. Pomponius among others was of this opinion, gueſſing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by ſuch ſtrange Brutes, as the Cynophanes, who had heads like dogs: 2. The Sciapodæ, who with the ſhadow of their Foot could and did uſe to hide themſelves from the heats of the Sun: 3. The Gamoſaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the uſe of weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the ſight of men: 4. The Blemmyæ, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their breaſts: 5. The Ægypani, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the ſhape and making of their bodies. Theſe people (as they thought) poſſeſſed ſome ſmall portion of the mid-land parts of this great Country; the reſt they knew not, or conceived to be unhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late diſcoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Country proving in moſt parts to be well inhabited; and the coolneſſe of the nights, by miſts, dewes, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

Quodq; die Solis vehementi excanduit æſtu,
Humida nox reſicit, paribusq; refrigerat horis.
That is to ſay,
What the Sun burns by day, the Night renewes,
And doth as much refreſh with moyſtning dewes.

For notwithſtanding that it be in ſome places full of ſandy deſarts, a diſeaſe incident to ſome parts of Arabia, Perſia, and other Countries of a more Northernly ſituation; yet it is ſaid by ſome, who ſpeak it upon knowledge, that the greateſt part of thoſe Regions which lie under the Line or near it, (both in America and here) have ſo many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, ſuch abundance of Cedars and other ſtately Trees of ſhade, ſo many ſorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing and at all times beautified with bloſſoms; as may make them hold compariſon with any others ſuppoſed to be of a more temperate ſituation.

But as was ſaid before, the Ancients knew not much of this Country, and therefore ſpoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-ſay. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian, imployed by that State, diſcovered much of the Weſtern Shores of this great Peninſula, yet he ventured not much into the Land; nor did his Journal (either ſuppreſſed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to purſue thoſe Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian tongue, but ſince tranſlated into Greek, and publiſhed at Baſil by Sigiſmund Gelenius, ann. 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that ſome Phœnicians in the dayes of Pharao Neco, paſſing down the Red Sea, ſhould ſail about the Coaſts of Africk to the Streits of Gibraltar, and ſo return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what thoſe Ages diſbelieved or eſteemed impoſſible, is now grown ordinary; the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, ſince firſt performed by Vaſques de Gama, an Adventurous Portugal, in the year 1497. by means whereof theſe latter Ages are better inſtructed in the particulars of it then the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire and ſome parts adjoyning upon Egypt, more then the ſtrange Beaſts, and more ſtrange Reports which they had from hence, occaſioning hereby the By-word, Africa ſemper aliquid apportat novi.

Touching the State of Chriſtianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; moſt of thoſe Regions which Chriſtian religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometiſm having ſince regained from Chriſtianity: Inſomuch that not only the North-part of Africk near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Goſpel once ſo exceedingly flouriſhed, that three hundred Catholike Biſhops were at one time baniſhed thence by Genſericus King of the Vandals, is at this preſent utterly void of Chriſtians, (except ſome few Towns belonging to the King of Spain) but even in all this vaſt Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Chriſtian, but the Kingdom of Habaſſia only, and perhaps not that; none where the Chriſtians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt;

Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and some few Towns upon those Coasts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have those Nations gotten by our late Discoveries; it being Gain, not Godlinesse, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or dispersed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly so called, Egyptians, Habassines, Arabians, Jewes, and some European Christians: the European Christians only in their Forts and Garrisons, the Jewes in all the good Towns where Trade is stirring, the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-coasts bordering on the Red-Sea, but wandering in great herds or companies all about the Country with their wives and children; the Habassines and Egyptians in their severall Kingdoms: The Africans again subdivided into Moors and Caferes, of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet, the Caferes dwelling in the inland and more Southern parts, not discovered antiently, in their wonted Gentilisme. Accordingly, the Languages herein spoken are different also; The Portugal or Spanish being used by the Europeans; 2. The Chaldee or Syriack by the Jewes; 3. The Arabick by those of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4. The Habassine, and 5. The Egyptian, in those Kingdoms; 6. That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble language, supposed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with some Arabian words, and spoken generally in Morocco, and so amongst some of the inhabitants of Barbary neareſt to Mount Atlas; 7. That named Sungai, used in Tombutum, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8. That called Gubeo, spoke by those of Æthiopia inferior, and such of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Dioceses of Egypt, Africk, and part of the Dioceſe of Spain. The Dioceſe of Egypt subdivided into the Provinces of, 1. Libya superior, 2. Libya inferior, 3. Thebais, 4. Augustanica, 5. Arcadia, and 6. Ægyptus specially so called; distinguished by other names in the Nicene Councel: That of Africk, into Tripolitana, 2. Byzacena, 3. Zeugitana, 4. Numidia, 5. Mauritania Cæsariensis, 6. and Mauritania Sitifensis; that other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Dioceſe of Spain. The reſt of this Peninsula, as they never conquered, so it never was much taken into consideration. But being more perfectly discovered now then in former times, (though not so perfectly as that I can be able to promise an exact accompt of it) it is divided commonly into these seven parts; 1. Egypt, 2. Barbary or the Roman Africk, 3. Numidia, 4. Libya, neither of which the same with those of the antient Romans, 5. Terra Nigritarum. 6. Æthiopia superior, and 7. Æthiopia inferior. Such of the Islands as do properly belong unto any of these, shall make up the eighth. In the Descriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Plautanus, and begin with Egypt, as being peopled and possessed before all the residue.

OF EGYPT.

EGYPT is bounded on the East with Idumæa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the West with Barbary, Numidia, and part of Libya; on the North with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Æthiopia Superior, or the Abassine Empire.

This Country in the holy Scriptures is called Misraim, from Misraim the son of Chus, and grandson of Cham, by whom first planted after the flood; the footsteps of which name do remain amongst the Arabians, who still call it Misre. Named in the same regard in the Book of Psalms, the Land of Ham; a name retained in some of the sacred offices of the old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witnesseth) it was called Chemia, for Chamia no doubt, as that from Cham or Ham, the first stock of their nation. In Prophane Authors it hath had the several names of, 1. Aeria, from the serenity of the Aire, which is never clouded; 2. Potamia, from the propinquitie of the Sea, washing two sides of it; 3. Ogygia, from Ogyges a supposed King thereof; 4. Melampodus, from the black colour of the soil; 5. Osiria, from their God Osiris, here in high esteem; and finally, 6. Ægyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the reſt, either from Ægyptus the Brother of Danaus once King hereof, (in the stories of this Nation better known by the name of Rameses) or from Ægyptus the old name of the River Nilus, by whose annual overflowings made both rich and famous; and of the soil and rubbish which that River brought with it from the higher Countries, it was by some supposed to have been raised into firm land and gained out of the sea; Called therefore in some Writers by the name of Nili donum, or the gift of Nilus. Yet some there be who would have it called Ægyptus for Aigupthus, and that derived from Ai, and Coptus, which signifieth the Land or Country of Coptus, that being supposed to have been antiently the chief City of it. And some again will have the name derived from Chioth, by which the Ægyptians call themselves to this very day.

It conteineth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Asna, or Syene, bordering on Æthiopia, 562 Italian miles; in breadth (exclusively of Cyrene and Libya) from Rosetta unto Damiata, or from the most Westerly Branch of Nilus to the farthest East, 160 of the same miles; to which the adding of those two Provinces make a great accession: Situate under the second and fift Climates, so that the longest day in Summer is but 13 houres and an half.

By reason of this Southernly situation of it, the Air is here very hot and offensive, so that to avoid the insupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of some fresh wind, the Inhabitants are accustomed to build high Towers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves.

The

The ſoyl made fruitfull by the overflowings of Nilus, (whereof more anon) is ſo exceeding plentifull of all ſorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum populi Romani, the Granarie or Store-houſe of the People of Rome: which Citie it did annually furniſh with four moneths proviſion; inſomuch that it was ſaid by Plinie, that the greatneſs of the Roman Empire could not long continue without the corn and wealth of Egypt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Country. It abounds alſo with rich Paſtures, in which they feed great ſtore of Camels, Horſes, Aſſes, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats, greater of growth then uſually in moſt places elſe; and by reaſon of the mooriſhneſs of the Country, they have great ſtore of Fowls: Of Poultrie they have alſo good numbers about their houſes, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the ſitting of the Hen, but the heat of Furnaces, or Ovens; in which their eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is alſo liberally furniſhed with great plenty of Mettals, ſome precious Stones, good Wines, and the choiceſt Fruits, as Limons, Orenges, Pomgranats, Citrons, Figs, Cherries, and ſuch as theſe, excellent both for taſte and colour; and of Palm-trees a great abundance; of which though we have ſpoke before, yet we ſhall here more fully declare the nature and ſtrange properties of them: They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thruſt forth Cods full of ſeed, but the Female is only fruitfull, and that not except growing by the Male, and having his ſeeds mixt with hers. The pith of theſe Trees is an excellent Sallad, better then an Hartichoke, which in taſte it very much reſembleth. Of the branches they make Bedſteds, Latices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Fans, &c. of the outward huſk of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Bruſhes. The fruit it bears, beſt known by the name of Dates, are in taſte like Figs: and finally, it is ſaid to yield whatſoever is neceſſary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never ſo ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burden, but ſtill to reſiſt the heavineſs of it, and to endeavour to lift and raiſe it ſelf the more upwards. For this cauſe planted in Church-yards in the Eaſtern Countries, as an Embleme of the Reſurrection: inſtead whereof we uſe the Ewe-tree in theſe cold Regions. For the ſame reaſon, given to Conquerours as a token of Victory; it being the Embleme or Hieroglyphick of a Souldiers life. Hence figuratively uſed for precedency; as, Huic equidem conſilio palmam do, in Terence; ſometimes for the Victory it ſelf; as, Non auferent tamen hanc palmam, in Plinie, & plurimarum palmarum homo, for a man that had won many prizes in the Fence-School, as in Tully, pro Roſcio; more naturally for the ſign of Victory, as in that of Horace,

——— Palmaque nobilis,
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.
That is to ſay,
The Palm, of victory a ſigne,
Equal's men to the Powers Divine.

The People, though the Countrie lie in the ſame Clime with Barbarie, are not black, but tawnie, or Olive-coloured; affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead, daubed over with dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having imbalmed them to lay them in ſome inward room of their Houſes: the men to keep themſelves at home, for the houſhold buſineſſes, the women to follow merchandiſe and affairs abroad; the men to carry burdens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their ſhoulders: Antipodes in theſe laſt to moſt other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious People, the firſt Inventers of Geomotry, Arithmetick, Phyſick, as alſo of Aſtronomy, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They firſt taught the uſe of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians, by them imparted to the Greeks. Accuſtomed at the firſt to expreſs their conceits in the ſhape of Birds, Beaſts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphicks; of which two or three Examples out of Orus, will not be impertinent. For Eternity they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: for a Year, they painted a ſnake, with his tail in his mouth, to ſhew how one year ſucceeding another, kept the World ſtill in an endleſs circle. For a moneth, they painted a Palm-tree, becauſe at every new Moon, it ſendeth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he ſoared ſo high, as that he governeth the leſſer birds. For integrity of life, they painted fire and water, both becauſe theſe Elements are in themſelves moſt pure, and becauſe all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was abominable to the Gods, they painted a Fiſh, becauſe in their Sacrifices the Prieſts never uſed them; and the like. From this manner of expreſſing ones ſelf, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no queſtion of the children of Iſrael, when they lived amongſt them:) the Hiſtory whereof, take briefly and word for word, out of Tacitus. Primi per formas animalium Ægyptii, &c. The Egyptians firſt of all expreſſed the conceptions of the minde, by the ſhapes of beaſts; and the moſt ancient monuments of mans memory, are ſeen graven in ſtones; and they ſay, that they are the firſt inventers of Letters. Then the Phœnicians, becauſe they were ſtrong at Sea, brought them into Greece; and ſo they had the glory of that, which they received from others: For there goeth a report, that Cadmus ſailing thither in a Phœnician ſhip, was the Inventer of that Art among the Greeks, when they were yet unexpert and rude. Some report that Cecrops the Athenian, or Livius the Theban, and Palamedes the Grecian, did finde out ſixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; and that afterward Simonides added the reſt. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of Demaratus the Corinthian; and the Aborigines, of Evander the Arcadian. So far Tacitus. That the Phœnicians were were the first inventers of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were herein skilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-masters to the Greeks, I think I may with safety maintain, having Lucan in consent with Tacitus.

Phœnices primi (fama si creditur) ausi

Phœnicians first (if fame may credit have)
Dar'd in rude Characters our words ingrave.

Of this minde also is Isidore of Sevill in the first book of Originations, who also addeth, that for that cause the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in red letters, as it is by some still in use. Hinc est quod & Phœniceo colore librorum capita describantur, quia ab ipsis litera initium habuere, cap. 3. As for these less vulgar Letters which the Latines call Cyphræ, and whereof every exercised Statesman have peculiar to himself; they were first invented by Julius Cæsar, when he first began to think of the Roman Monarchy; and were used by him in his Letters to his more private and tryed friends, that if by misfortune they should be intercepted, the contents of them should not be understood; ὅπως ἄγνωστα τοῖς πολλοῖς ἦ τὰ χρήσιμα, ne obvia literarum lectio cuivis esset. Augustus one of the greatest Politicians of the World, had another kinde of obscure writing; for in his Letters of more secrecy and importance, he always used τὸ δεύτερον ἀεὶ στοιχεῖον, to put the letter immediatly following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary writing he should have used. As for Brachygraphie, or the Art of writing by short Characters, so usefull for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is spoken: I finde in Dion, that Mæcenas that great favorite of Augustus Cæsar, and favourer of Learning, did first invent them, ad celeritatem scribendi, for the speedier dispatch of writing: καὶ αὐτός σημεῖα γραμμάτων τινα (they are the very words of my Author) ἀεὶς τάχος ἐξεῦρε. Isidor in the second Chapter of his book above-mentioned, ascribeth it to Aquila the Libertus or freed-man of this Mæcenas: and to Tertius Persannius, and Philargius, who added to this invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tito, a freed-man of Cicero's who had undertaken and compassed it in the Prepositions, but went no further. At the last it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole volume of his contractions consisting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contracto omnium, digestóque & aucto numero, opus effecit in quinque millia. But now I make haste to take a survey of these Egyptians as they stand at the present, much differing from the ingenuity and abilities of their Predecessors.

For such as have observed the nature of the Modern Egyptians, affirm them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Ancestors, prone to innovations devoted to luxury, cowardly, cruel, addicted naturally to cavill, and to detract from whatsoever is good and eminent. In their dealing with other men more observant then faithfull, of a wit much inclining to craftiness, and very eager on their profit: Of person, of a mean stature, tawnie of complexion, and spare of body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities apply themselves to merchandise; grow rich by Trading; reasonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in their dress and Fashion. Those in the Country who betake themselves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a savage and nasty People, crusted over with dirt, and stinking of smoak; fit company for none but those of their own condition. Nothing now left amongst them of the Arts of their Ancestors but an affectation which they have unto Divinations; to Fortune-telling great pretenders, by which, and by some cheating-tricks in which very well practised, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and so get their livelyhood: occasioning the vagabonds and straglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the same false Arts, to assume their names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hochpot or medley of many Nations, Moors, Arabians, Turks; the natural Egyptian making up the least part of the reckoning.

The Women of the same complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did they not too much affect a seeming corpulency; which if they cannot get in flesh, they will have in cloaths. Very fruitfull in child bearing, and quick of dispatch when they are in labour: some of them having three or four children at a Birth; those that are born in the eighth moneth living to good Age, and not in danger of death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities, cover their faces with black Cypres bespotted with red; their armes, and ancles, garnished with bracelets and hoops of gold, silver, or some other Mettal. Those in the Country, for a vail use some dirty clout, having holes onely for their eyes, which little is too much to see and abstain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the custom in all places else, the women use to make water standing, and the men couring on their knees.

The old Egyptians were so eminent in Arts and Learning, that from them Pythagoras and Democritus learnt their Philosophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato their Forms of Government. Orpheus and Homer their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly, here flourished Aristarchus that famous and learned Grammarian, 2. Herodian, a diligent Student and searcher into curious Arts, 3. Ammonius, the Master of Plotinus, 4. Didymus, surnamed Chalcenteros, for his indefatigable industry in several Sciences, 5. Manethon, an old Historian, of whom we have nothing but some fragments, 6. Appianus, an Historian of a later date, whose works are extant, 7. Didymus the Grammarian, 8. Cl. Ptolomæus, the the Geographer; 9 Achilles Statius the Poet; 10. And before all, the profound Philosopher Mercurius, surnamed Trismegistus. And after their conversion to the faith of Christ, 1. Pantænus, the first Reader of Divinitie in the Schools of Alexandria; 2. Origen, and 3. Clemens Alexandrinus, both skilled in the universality of Learning; 4. Dionysius; 5. Athanasius, and 6. Cyril; all three Bishops of Alexandria, and the glories of their severall times. Now nothing but ignorance and Barbarism to be found amongst them.

The Christian faith was first here planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity maketh the first Bishop of Alexandria. His successors, till the time of Heraclus and Dionysius, chosen continually out of the Presbyterie or Cathedral-Clergie; afterwards out of the Clergie at large. Their Jurisdiction setled by a Canon of the Council of Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Diocese of Egypt, (taking the word Diocese in the Civil notion) containing Libya, Pentapolis, and Egypt specially so called; to which, though Epiphanius addes Thebais, Maræotica, and Ammoniaca, yet he addes nothing in effect. Thebais and Maræotica being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniaca was of Libya. Afterwards the Æthiopian or Abassine Churches became subject to this Patriarch also, and do acknowledge to this day some relation to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the subjugation of this Country, Christianity fell here into great decay; languishing so sensibly since those times, especially since the conquest of it by the Turks, that whereas Brochardus in his time reckoned three hundred thousand Christians, in the last estimate which was made of them, they were found to be but fifty thousand. This small remainder of them, commonly called Cophti, either from the Greek word κόπτω, scindo, because they retained the use of Circumcision with their Christianity, or from Coptus a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reside; or finally by abbreviation from Ægophti, corrupted from Ægyptii, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithstanding in some particulars, in some from all other Christian Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points most proper to them, 1. Using Circumcision with their Baptism, but rather as a National then Religious custome; though in that sense also laid aside, as is said by some, by the perswasion of some Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Caire, An. 1583. 2. Conferring all sacred Orders under the Priesthood, on Infants immediately after Baptism; their Parents, till they come to sixteen years of age, performing what they promised in their behalf, viz. Chastitie, fasting on Wednesday and Friday, and the four Lents of the year. 3. Reputing Baptism not to be of any efficacie, except ministred by the Priest, in the open Church, in what extremity soever. 4. And yet not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Eucharist, assoon as Christened. 6. Contracting marriages even in the second Degree of Consanguinitie, without dispensation. 7. Observing not the Lords day, nor any of the Festivals, except only in Cities. 8. And in their Liturgies, reading the Gospel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, 1. Administring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper under both kinds. 2. Administring in leavened bread. 3. Admitting neither Extreme unction, nor the use of the Eucharist to those that are sick. 4. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead. 5. Not using Elevation in the act of Administring. And 6. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical and esteeming no better of the Latines then they do of the Jewes. In these opinions they continue hitherto against all Opponents and perswasions: For though Baronius in the end of the sixth Tome of his Annals, hath registred an Ambassage from Marcus the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8. wherein he is said to have submitted himself and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome; yet upon further search made, it was found but a Cheat, devised to hold up the reputation of a sinking cause. The Patriarch of Alexandria still adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practise and solicitation of some busie Friars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to use her Liturgies.

What their Religion was before Christianity, is obvious to the eye of a vulgar Reader; even the worst of Gentilism; these People not only worshipping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, creatures of greatest use and glory; nor only sacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollo, and the rest of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their severall times of some publike benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Christian Fathers, so most deservedly exposed unto publike scorn, by the pens of the Poets.

Porrum & cæpe nefas violare, & lædere morsu.
Felices populi, quibus hæc nascuntur in Hortis
Numina. — Quis nescit qualia demens
Ægyptus portenta colat, &c.

Which may be rendred to this purpose.

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more
Then deadly sinne. The Numen they adore
Growes in their Gardens. And who doth not know What monstrous Shapes for Gods in Egypt go?

But the God most esteemed by them, and by all sorts of the Egyptians the most adored, was Apis, a coal-black Oxe, with a white star in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs only only in his tail. But it ſeemeth his Godſhip was not ſo much reſpected by Strangers. For Cambyſes when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his ſword thorow the thigh, and cauſed all his Prieſts to be ſcourged: And Auguſtus being here, would not vouchſafe to ſee him, ſaying, Θεὸν ἀλλ' οὐχὶ σὸν σεβόμενον βούν ἐθέλω ἰδεῖν, that the Gods and not the Oxen of Egypt were the object of his devotions. A ſpeech moſt truly worthy ſo brave an Emperour.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Country, ſome were the works of nature, and ſome of induſtry and magnificence. Of this laſt kinde, I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramides, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their ſeveral kindes, the envy of the Ages paſt, and the aſtoniſhment of the preſent. Of the Labyrinth we ſhall ſpeak anon, in the courſe of our buſineſs. Look we now on the Pyramides, many in number, three moſt celebrated, and one the principal of all, ſituate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Weſtern banks of Nilus. This laſt, the chief of the Worlds ſeven Wonders, ſquare at the bottom, is ſuppoſed to take up eight acres of ground. Every ſquare 300. ſingle paces in length, aſcended by 255. ſteps, each ſtep above three Foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top conſiſting but of three ſtones onely, yet large enough for 60. men to ſtand upon. No ſtone ſo little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the reſt for others of thoſe mighty Princes) who imployed in it day by day twenty yeers together, no fewer then 366000. men continually working on it. The charges which they put him to, in no other food then Garlick, Radiſhes, and Onions, being computed at a thouſand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is ſaid to be the work of a daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Herodotus writeth) both to finiſh her Fathers undertaking, and raiſe her own unto the height, by the proſtitution of her body, requiring but one ſtone towards the Work from each one of her Cuſtomers; but the tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater Truth, though affirmed by Joſephus, and ſuppoſed by many good Divines, that the drudgery put upon the Iſraelites did concern theſe Pyramides: the Materials of theſe works being ſtone; their imployment, brick: But paſt all doubt, advanced by thoſe conſiderate Princes upon good advice, and not for oſtentation only of their power and glories. For by this means they did not only eternize their memory to ſucceeding Ages, but for the preſent kept the Subject from ſloth and idleneſs; who being a People prone unto Innovations, were otherwiſe like enough to have fed that ſin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

Next theſe Pyramides, I place the Iſle and Tower of Pharos, the Iſland oppoſite unto Alexandria, once a mile diſtant from the Land, but joyned to the Continent by Cleopatra on this occaſion. The Rhodians then Lords of the Sea, uſed to exact ſome tribute or acknowledgement out of every Iſland within thoſe Seas; and conſequently out of this. Their Ambaſſadors ſent unto Cleopatra to demand this tribute, ſhe detained with her ſeven days, under colour of celebrating ſome ſolemn Feſtivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and ſpeed, united the Iſland to the ſhore. Which finiſhed, ſhe ſent the Rhodians away empty-handed, with this witty jeere, telling them that they were to take Toll of the Iſlands, and not of the Continent. A work of great rarity and magnificence, both for the bigneſs of it, taking up ſeven Furlongs of ground, and for that cauſe called Heptaſtadium, and that incredible ſpeed wherewith it was finiſhed. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latine Pharos, by the name of the Iſland, it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus for the benefit of Sailors (the Seas upon that coaſt being very unſafe and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deſervedly eſteemed another of the Worlds ſeven Wonders: the other five being 1. the Mauſoleum, 2. the Temple of Epheſus, 3. the Walls of Babylon, 4. the Coloſſus of Rhodes, and 5. the Statue of Jupiter Olympicus. This Watch-tower, or Pharos, was of wonderfull height, aſcended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein lights burned nightly, as a direction to ſuch as ſailed by Sea. The Materials were white marble: the chief Architect, Soſtratus of Gnidos, who ingraved on the work this inſcription, Soſtratus of Gnidos, the ſon of Dexiphanes, to the Gods protectors, for the ſafeguard of Sailers. This inſcription he covered with plaiſter, and thereon ingraved the name and title of the King the Founder: to the end that the Kings name being ſoon waſted and waſhed away, his own which was written in marble, might be eternized to poſterity, as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cæſar purſuing Pompey into Egypt, and having diſcontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Souldiers, had his Navy which here lay at anchor aſſaulted by Achillas, one of young Ptolomies ſervants, Cæſar himſelf being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the skirmiſh he haſted to the Pharos, meaning to ſuccour his Navy in perſon: but the Egyptians making towards him on all ſides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and ſwim for his life. And though to avoid their Darts he ſometimes ducked: yet held he ſtill his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried ſafe unto his ſhips; and animating his men, got the victory. It is ſaid that Egypt hath only two doors; the one by land, which is the ſtrong Town of Peleuſium, or Damiata; the other by water, which is this Pharus: Tota Ægyptus maritimo acceſſu, Pharo; pedeſtre verò, Peluſio, velut clauſtris munita exiſtimatur, ſaith Oppius.

Amongſt the rarities of Nature, we may reckon thoſe ſtrange Beaſts and Fiſhes, proper almoſt unto this Country, i.e. the Crocodile, the Ichneumon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horſe) the Ibis, the Aſpe, and many ſeverall ſorts of Serpents. To ſpeak of which particularly were a work more proper to a Natural Hiſtory, then a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt then all the reſt, cannot be parted with in ſilence: A creature of a ſtrange nature, hatched of an egg no bigger then that of a Turkie; and yet increaſing to the length of thirty foot: his tail as long as all the reſt of his body, with which he is accuſtomed to intail his prey, and draw it into the River: His feet armed with claws, and his back with impenetrable ſcales; his mouth ſo wide (of which he moveth only the upper jaw) that he is able to ſwallow a whole Heifer: equally uſed to both Elements, but better ſighted in the water, then on the land: Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and ſuch as uſually flies from thoſe which dare ſet upon him; and eaſily vanquiſhed by the Dolphin, who ſwimming under the water woundeth him in the belly, where aſſaultable only. Whether ſo eaſily deſtroyed by the Ichneumon (a kinde of Water-Rat) skipping into his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers ſay, hath of late been queſtioned. That which I look on as a rarity of the greateſt moment, if not rather to be accounted ſupernatural) is that, about five miles from the City of Caire, there is a place in which on every Good-Friday yeerly, there appear the heads, legs and arms of men riſing out of the ground, to a very great number: which if a man draw near unto them, or touch any of them, will ſhrink again into the earth. Suppoſed by ſome to be an Impoſture of ſome Water-men only, who ſtick them over-night in the ſands, and keeping them ſecret to themſelves, obtain thereby the Ferrying over of many thouſands of People, to behold the ſight. But Stephen Dupleis, a ſober and diſcerning man, in the opinion of Goulartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwiſe of it, affirming ſurely that he was an eye-witneſs of the wonder, that he had touched divers of theſe riſing Members, and that as he was once ſo doing to the head of a childe, a man of Caire cried out unto him, Kali, Kali ante materaſde, that is to ſay, Hold, hold, you know not what you do. A ſtrange Fore-runner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Reſurrection of the whole Body, preſented yearly in the riſing of theſe ſeveral parts.

Of leſs diſpute, but not leſs rarity in nature, are theſe that follow. 1. That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a cloud do ſometimes happen to diſſolve upon them, it bringeth on their bodies innumerable ſores, and ſtrange diſeaſes. 2. The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are ſaid to follow on the ſame. Of which it is thus ſaid by Lucan;

Terra ſuis contenta bonis, non indiga mercis,
Aut Jovis; in ſolo tanta eſt fiducia Nilo:

The earth content with its own Wealth, doth crave
No Forreign Mart, nor Jove himſelf; they have Their hopes alone in Nilus fruitfull wave.

This Nilus hath his head, not in the Mountains of the Moon, as the Ancients thought, but in the Lake Zembre, in Æthiopia Interior: and running in one continual Channel (excepting where it brancheth into little Iſlands, as it ſometimes doth) till it waſheth the mid-land of Egypt, is before its influx into the Sea, divided into ſeven great ſtreams, opening into the Sea with ſo many mouths, namely, 1. Heracleoticum, 2. Bolviticum, 3. Schaniticum, 4. Patinicum, 5. Mendeſium, 6. Caniticum, 7. Peluſaicum. The firſt and laſt of theſe currents (which are the only two now left) being far diſtant from other, and growing into one, at the firſt point of the Rivers diviſion, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, becauſe to ſuch as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Anatolia, it reſembleth the Greek letter Δ. The other part is called Thebais, from Thebe, the chief City of it.

This Nilus from the 15. day of June, ſwelleth above his banks, for the ſpace of 40. days; and in as many more, gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the earth is deficient in her abundance of increaſe, for want of moiſture: and if the waters ſurmount the ſuperficies of the Earth, more than ſeventeen Cubits, then, like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having his ſtomack (as it were) over-laid, and ſurcharged with too much liquor: but if the mean be granted, there is no Country which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all houſed before the 20. of May. During this Inundation, they keep their beaſts and cattel on the tops of ſuch little hils, which either the Providence of Nature or the induſtry of man hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decreaſe of the Waters; and on theſe hills alſo ſtand the moſt of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood, like ſo many Iſlands, and holding a commerce and continual traffick by the entercourſe of Boats and Shallops, by which they do tranſport their Marketable commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time that the River doth not thus over-flow the Country, it is not only the Forerunner to a following dearth, but prognoſticateth ſome enſuing miſchief to the Prince and State. Confirmed by the teſtimony of good and creditable Authors; who have told us that in the 10. and 11. years of Cleopatra, the River increaſed not at all: that it was noted as a Foreteller of the Fall of thoſe two great, but unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra & her Sweetheart Antonius. A ſecond commodity which ariſeth from the over-flowings of Nilus, is the health which it bringeth with it in moſt parts of the Country; the Plague which oftentimes miſerably rageth upon the firſt day of the flood, abating inſtantly: inſomuch that whereas 500. may die of that diſeaſe in the City of Caire but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River, is, that keeping its waters united in a body together after it falleth into the Sea; it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean further then any part of it can be ſeen from the ſhore. Add unto theſe the many living creatures which the ſlime thereof engendreth on the withdrawing of the River to its natural channel: whereof Ovid thus,

Sic

Sic ubi deſeruit madidos ſeptemfluus agros
Nilus, & antiquo ſua flumina reddidit alveo,
Plurima Cultores verſis Animalia glebis Inveniunt.

Which I Engliſh thus.

So when the Seven-mouth'd Nile the fields forſakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes,
The Plough-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the mud that's left behind.

Amongſt which Creatures ſo ingendered, are ſaid to be ſuch innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furniſh this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured, the Plague of Frogs would come a ſecond time upon them to their utter deſtruction. Now becauſe Nilus runneth in its certain Channels, and that the People have no other water to make uſe of for all neceſſities, there are many By-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places, (by the care and munificence of their Kings) to receive its waters, and to communicate them to the People, who know almoſt no other drink then the waters hereof, and indeed they need not, the water of this River being of ſuch excellent both taſte and vertue, that when Peſcominus Niger ſaw his Souldiers murmure for want of Wine, What (ſaid he) do you grumble for wine, having the waters of Nile to drink?

On the banks of the River ſtood that famous Labyrinth built by Pſamniticus, which we have touched upon before; ſituate on the South of the Pyramides, and North of Arſinoe, or the City of Crocodiles. It contained within the compaſſe of one continued wall, a thouſand houſes, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble, and had only one entrance, but innumerable turnings and returnings, ſometimes one over another, and all in a manner invious to ſuch as were not well acquainted with them: The building more under the ground, then above; the Marble-ſtones laid with ſuch art, that neither Wood nor Cement was imployed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers ſo diſpoſed, that the Doors upon their opening did give a report no leſſe terrible then a crack of Thunder; the main Entrance all of White-marble, adorned with ſtately Columns, and moſt curious Imagerie: The end at length being attained, a pair of Stairs of 90 ſteps conducted into a gallant Portice, ſupported with Pillars of Theban ſtone; which was the entrance into a fair and ſpacious Hall, (the place of their generall Conventions) all of poliſhed Marble, ſet out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Dædalus in the Cretane Labyrinth; though that fell as ſhort of the glories of this, as Minos was inferior unto Pſamniticus in power and riches.

On the Banks of this River alſo grew thoſe ſedgie Weeds called Papyri, of which Paper was made in former times: They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moyſt'ning them with the glutinous waters of the River, they preſſed them together, and after dryed them in the Sun. By means of this Invention, Books being eaſier to be tranſcribed and reſerved then formerly, Ptolomie Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria: and underſtanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, ſtrived to exceed him in that kind of magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the uſe of Parchments, made of the skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membranæ, and Pergamena from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cauſe that in ſhort time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of uſe; in place whereof ſucceeded our Paper made of Rags, the Authors of which excellent Invention our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the uſe of theſe Papers and Parchments were firſt made known, I obſerve three wayes of writing amongſt the Antients, (I hope I ſhall be pardoned this ſhort digreſſion.) 1. On the inward ſide of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Liber, and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Caudex, gave the Latines occaſion to call a Book Codex. 3. They uſed to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to ſignifie, from whence a Letter-carrier was named Tabellarius. The Inſtrument wherewith they wrote, was a ſharp-pointed Iron, which they called Stylus, a word now ſignifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Phraſe which any man uſeth; as, Negligens ſtylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus ſtylus, in Cicero. I ſhould have alſo noted, that they uſed ſometimes to write in Leaves; That the Sibyls Oracles being ſo written and ſcattered abroad, had the name of Sibyllæ Folia, and that from thence we have the phraſe of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus, and that great increaſe of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural commodities of the Earth: let us next look on the Red-Sea, and the great Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have ſpoke already, as to the reaſon of the name, the extent thereof, and the ſeveral Iſlands contained in it; and therefore ſhall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Country, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous paſſage of the Iſraelites through it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharaohs Cenchres and all his people, at large commemorated in the books of Holy Scriptures: as alſo for that through it the Spices of India and Arabia were brought to Alexandria, and thence by the Venetians diſperſed through all Europe, Africa, and Aſia. I ſuppoſe I ſhall not do amiſſe to ſet down hiſtorically out of Galuano, a relation of the beginning, continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received so great commodity. Know then (saith he) that Ptolomie Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation was the first that set on foot this Navigation: Cosir (of old called Myos-Hormos*) on the sea-side, being the ordinary Haven, out of which they hoysed sail for* India; and into which they returned, full fraught with their commodities. From hence they were by land conveighed to Coptus, and so down the Nile to Alexandria: by which Traffick the City grew exceeding rich; insomuch that the Custom-house there yielded Ptol. Auletes 7 millions and an half of gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enhanced the Customs to double that sum: they sent into India every year (as Plinie witnesseth) 120 ships, whose lading was worth 120000 Crowns; and there was made in return of every Crown, 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths, and Moors had torn in peeces the Roman Empire, all commerce between Nations began to cease. At last perceiving the inconvenience, they began anew: conveighing the Indian commodities, partly by land, partly by water, unto Capha in Taurica Chersonesus, belonging to the Genoese: Next Trabezond was made the Mart-town, then Sarmachand in Zagatate, where the Indian, Turkish, and Persian Merchants met to barter wares: the Turks conveighing their merchandise to Damascus, Baratti, and Aleppo; from whence the Venetians transported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Christendome. Once again, viz. Anno 1300. the Soldans of Egypt restored the passage by the Red-Sea; which having continued more then 200 years, is now discontinued by the Portugals, Spaniards, English and Dutch, which bring them to their several homes by the back side of Africk: So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almost decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminished; but the Drugs and Spices have lost much of their vertue, as impaired by too much moisture. So much saith he, touching the course and alteration of this Trading: to which I shall take leave to adde, That for the better and more quick return of such Commodities as were usually brought into this Sea, some of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it, to the River Nilus, passable by Ships of greatest burden; the marks of whose proud attempts are remaining still. Sesostris was the first who designed the work, having before with good successe cut many Trenches from the River, and some Navigable, into many places of the Country; by which unprofitable Marishes were drained, the Country strengthened, Trade made easie, and the People better furnished with water then in former times. Darius the great Persian Monarch, seconded the same Project; so did one of the Ptolomies; The like is said of a Capricious Portugal in these later times. But they all gave it over on the same consideration, which was a fear lest by letting in the Red-Sea they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a second Deluge in the parts of Greece and Asia Minor which lay neerest to them; that Sea being found to be much higher then the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to understand, that all which hitherto hath been spoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt strictly and specially so called, containing only so much of the Country of Egypt as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nilus; and not to all that tract of ground which lay betwixt the Red-Sea and the borders of Libya, which was reckoned in the compasse of the kingdom of Egypt; much lesse as comprehending Libya and Cyrene also, though now accounted Members of that great Body, and antiently parts or Provinces of the Diocese of it. For Egypt, in the largest sense and acception of the word, may be, and generally is divided into these three parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general notion, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the borders of Idumea to the the Roman Libya or Marmarica, lying Westward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum, and on the borders of Æthiopia Superior, from the said Red-Sea, to the Country of Libya Interior. 2. Libya, or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly so called, and the Province of Cyrene, or Pentapolis. And 3. Cyrene or Pentapolis, reaching from that Libya to the greater Syrtis, where it bordered with that part of the African Diocese, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this first acception of it we shall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains, and chief Cities; which done, we shall describe the other in their proper places; and then unite them all in the Generall Story.

As for the Mountains of this Country, there are very many: there were no living else for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of these, 1. Those called Montes Libyci, lying in a long chain on the West of Nilus; 2. Alabastrinus; 3. Porphyritus; 4. Troigus; 5. Basanitus on the East thereof. Betwixt these Hils the course of the River is so hemmed in on both sides, that at the upper part of the stream where it first entreth into Egypt, the space betwixt the Mountains is not above four miles broad, enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Caire to thirty seven; thence opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Country doth increase in breadth. On these and other of the Mountains and lesser Hils, stand most part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Country-people in the time of the Flood, rising when least, to fifteen cubits, or seven yards and an half.

Rivers of note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that; that being sufficient of it self to enrich this Country, which otherwise would be nothing but a Sandy Desart. But what they want in Rivers, is supplied with Lakes and Trenches, which serve for watering their Cattel, tempering of mortar for their buildings, and other such inferior uses; sometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer sort, who cannot be conveniently furnished with the waters of Nile. Amongst the Trenches (which were many, as before was said) those of most estimation were the Works of Ptolomie and the Emperor Trajan: the first falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Isle called Heracleotis; the other into the main body of it, not far from Caire. These two, by reason of the many fresh springs which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authors; and betwixt these was seated the

Land

Land of Goſhen, extending from Nilus to the Red-Sea, on the Eaſt and Weſt. The chief of note amongſt the Lakes, were thoſe called, 1. Mareotis, not far from Alexandria, by Plinie called Arapotes, Maria by Ptolomie; all which names are now loſt, and changed into that of Lagodi Antacon, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Laccus, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which in the book of Maccabees is called Aſphar, lib. 1. cap. 9. And 3. Moeris, now called Buchaira, more memorable then the reſt, in compaſſe 3500 furlongs, 50 fathom deep, in the midſt whereof were two Pyramides 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it: the Fiſh of this Lake, for one ſix moneths in the year, ſaid to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer; for the other ſix, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Amari, into which the Trench or River called Ptolomaus, doth diſcharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided antiently into two parts only, 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extreme branches of the River Nilus, the form of which letter it reſembleth to him who ſtanding on the Sea-ſhore could take a view of it. 2. That called Thebais, from Thebe the principal City of it, comprehending all the reſt of the courſe of that River, ſhut up on both ſides with the Mountains ſpoken of before. But this Diviſion leaving out all thoſe parts hereof which lie on the Eaſt-ſide towards the Arabian Golfs, and on the Weſt as far as to the borders of Libya Marmarica: the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Cantreds or Diſtricts, by them called Nomi, increaſed in the time of Ptolomie the Geographer to 46. Ortelius out of divers Authors hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Dioceſe of the Empire, it was divided into four Provinces, (not reckoning Marmarica, and Cyrene into the accompt:) that is to ſay, 1. Ægyptus ſpecially ſo called, containing all the Delta, and the Diſtrict or Nomus of Mareotica, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Auguſtanica, ſo called from Auguſtus Ceſar, on the Eaſt of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petræa. 3. Arcadia, ſo called from the Emperor Arcadius, in whoſe time it was taken out of Thebais, lying on both ſides of the River, from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4 Thebais, extending on both ſides of the River from the borders of Libya Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) unto Æthiopia. Divided otherwiſe by ſome, into Superiorem, reaching from Æthiopia to the City of Antinous; Mediam, ſtretching thence to the point of the Delta; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the reſt. But at this time, that part hereof which lieth on the South and Eaſt of Caire, is called Saud, or Salud, honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the antient Pharaohs, becauſe neareſt unto Æthiopia their moſt puiſſant neighbour. 2. That betwixt Caire, Roſetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Errifia, wherein the Ptolomean Princes did moſt reſide, becauſe moſt convenient for receiving ſupplies of men from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Caire to Teneſe and Damiata, is now called Maremna, in which the Turks and Mamalucks made the ſeat of their Empire, becauſe more neighbouring to the Chriſtians, whom they ſtood in fear of, as likewiſe to invade them upon that ſide. In the whole Country there was reckoned in the time of Amaſis the 2d. no fewer then 20000 Cities: but if the Towns and Villages be not reckoned in, I ſhould much doubt of the accompt. By Diodorus Siculus it is ſaid that there were 3000 in his time: but Ortelius, on a diligent ſearch, finds 300 only.

Thoſe of moſt note in the Province of Auguſtanica, 1. Peluſium, the moſt Eaſtern City of Egypt towards Idumæa, ſituate on the moſt Eaſtern channel of Nilus, called hence Peluſiacum; by Ammianus ſaid to be the work of Peleus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himſelf in the Lake adjoyning, for the murder of his brother Phocus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to thoſe who came thither by Sea; the Metropolis of the Province of Auguſtanica, the birth-place of Ptolomie the Geographer, and the Epiſcopal See of S. Iſidore, ſirnamed Peluſiotes, whoſe eloquent and pious Epiſtles are ſtill extant. Out of the ruines hereof (if not the ſame under another title) aroſe, 2. Damiata, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Chriſtian Armies; for none more then that under John de Brenne the titulary King of Jeruſalem, and the Princes of Europe, An. 1220. During which (being of 18 moneths continuance) the Famine and the Peſtilence ſo extremely raged, that the Town in a manner was diſpeopled, before the Beſiegers knew any thing of their condition: till in the end two venturous Souldiers, admiring the ſilence and ſolitude of ſo great a City, in a Bravado ſcaled the walls, but found no man to make reſiſtance: the next day the whole Army entred, where they found in every houſe and every corner of the ſtreets whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them burial; A lamentable and ruthful ſpectacle! 3. Heros, or Civitas Heroum, in the Arabian Iſthmus, at the very bottom of the Golf; remarkable for the firſt interview betwixt Jacob and Joſeph, after his coming into Egypt. 4. Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Betſames, in the Scriptures On, of which Potiphar the Father of Aſenath (whom Pharaoh married unto Ioſeph) was Prieſt or Prince, as is ſaid Gen. 41. 45. Given (as Ioſephus telleth us) for an habitation to the ſons of Iacob; by conſequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Rameſes or Goſhen; and memorable in times ſucceeding for a publike Temple built for the Iewes with the conſent of Ptolomie ſirnamed Philadelphus, by Onias the High-Prieſt, then diſpoſſeſſed of his authority and office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much eſteemed by the Helliniſts or Grecizing Iews; and though Schiſmatical at the beſt in its firſt original, yet not Schiſmatical and Idolatrous, as was that of Mount Garizim. 5. Bubaſtis, ſomwhat more North then Heliopolis, by ſome of the Antients called Avaris, by the Scriptures Pibeſeth, another City of that tract, now better known by the name of Zioth, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which the Notitia calleth Caſtra Iudæorum; memorable in times of Paganiſme for a famous Temple of Diana. 6. Arſinoe, on the ſhore of the Red Sea, ſo called in honour of Arſinoe ſiſter of Philadelphus, and wife to Lyſimachus King of Thrace; afterwards wards called Cleopatris, in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Sues; Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies: Now almoſt abandoned, and would be utterly deſerted, were it not made the ſtation of the Turkiſh Gallies, that command the Gulfe: which being framed at Caire of ſuch Timber as is brought thither by ſea from the Woods of Cilicia, and ſometimes from the Shores of the Euxine Sea, are again taken in peeces, carried from Caire unto this City on the backs of Camels, and here joyned together. Conceived to be the ſame which in former times was called Baal-Zephon (of which ſee Exod. 14.9.) the laſt incamping-place of the Tribes of Iſrael, who from hence paſſed through the Red Sea, as upon dry land. 7. Gleba Rubra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and ſometimes Erythra Bolus alſo more neer the Latine; the redneſs of the ſoyl giving name unto it: ſituate on the River or Trench of Tralan: more memorable for a misfortune that befell it then for any thing elſe; purpoſely burnt by Amenophis the fift, upon this occaſion: Being blinde, he was aſſured by ſome of his Wizards that if he waſhed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman which had never known any but her own husband, he ſhould be reſtored unto his ſight. After a long ſearch and many vain tryals, he met with one whoſe water cured him; whom he took to wife: and cauſing all the reſt whom he had made tryal of, to be brought together to this Town, he ſet fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the women there aſſembled; which tale, if true, is little to the credit of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of moſt note and obſervation in the Province of Egypt ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called, are 1. Alexandria ſituate Weſtward of the Delta, over againſt the Iſle of Pharos; and built upon a Promontory thruſting it ſelf into the Sea; with which on the one ſide, and the Lake Mareotis on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks immediatly after his conqueſt of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilſt Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom: and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Dioceſe; Adorned with many ſtately buildings; of which moſt memorable the Serapium (or Temple of their God Separis) for ſumptuous workmanſhip, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferiour to none but the Roman Capitol: and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had ſtored it with 700000. Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War againſt Julius Caſar; a City of great trading, and infinite Riches; μέγιστον ἐμπόριον τῆς οἰκουμένης, the greateſt Empory of the World, as is ſaid by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens ſo abounded in all licentiouſneſs both of life and ſpeech, that they ſpared not the Emperour himſelf, if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Caracalla not ſo patient of a Contumely as ſome wiſer Princes, having felt the laſhes of their tongues, when he was amongſt them, aſſembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have choſen ſome to attend his Perſon; and ſuddenly gave command to his Souldiers, to put them all to the ſword. A ſlaughter ſo great and univerſall, that the River Nilus coloured with the blood of the ſlain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Gantenus read here both Divinity and Philoſophy to all ſuch as would come to hear him: which as it is conceived to give the firſt hint to the inſtituting of Univerſities in the reſt of Chriſtendom; ſo from that ſmall beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew ſo great and eminent, that Nazianzen calleth them Παντὸς παιδεύσεως ἐργαστήριον, the ſhop, or work-houſe, as it were, of all kinds of Learning. Much ſhort of what it was even in point of trading, eſpecially ſince the diverſion of the Trading from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly diveſted of thoſe beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the preſent by a mixture of Nations, Moors, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Chriſtian Cophtives; more for ſome little gain which they reap by Traffick, then any pleaſure in the place; Now called Scanderia by the Turks, remarkable only for the houſe of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the moſt part in Caire) and a Church in which S. Mark their firſt Biſhop was ſaid to be buried. 2. Canopus, ſituate eaſt of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum, ſo called from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having ſuffered ſhipwrack upon this coaſt, was there interred by his Maſter: A Town ſo branded in old times for varieties of all kinde of beaſtlineſs and luxury, that as Seneca very well obſerved, he that avoided the viciouſneſs and debauchery of it, could not ſcape the infamy: the very place adminiſtring matter for ſuſpicion. 3. Roſetta, on the ſame branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whoſe ruines it aroſe; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs, unwalled and deſtitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all ſorts of commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4. Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of ſome eminent Victory, and probably of the conqueſt of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town ſtanding within 30. Furlongs of Alexandria. 5. Aphrodites and Aphroditopolis, ſo called from Venus who was here worſhipped: ſituate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6. Sais, betwixt the ſame branches of the River alſo; whence that Nomus or Diviſion had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibnit, or Signiti. 7. Plinthine, on the Sea-ſide; and 8. Hierax, more within the land: the chief Towns of the Region called Maraotica.

In Arcadia, called alſo Heptanomus, becauſe it contained ſeven of the Nomi or Diviſions into which Egypt was diſtributed by the Macedonians, the Places of moſt note were and are 1. Memphis, on the Weſtern bank of Nile, not far from the ſharp point of the Delta, where the River firſt beginneth to divide it ſelf; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, by one of which who removed the Seat Royal from Thebo hither, it is ſaid to be built; and called thus by the name of his daughter. In compaſs, when it flouriſhed, about 20. miles; Great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongſt others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, beſet with Sphynxes:

now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statues of ſome monſtrous Reſemblances, ſufficient to ſhew what it hath been formerly. The Pyramides before deſcribed, ſtood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, ſaying, Barbara Pyramidum ſileat miracula Memphis.

Let barbarous Memphis brag no more
Of her Pyramides, as before.

2. Babylon, called for diſtinctions ſake, Babylon Ægyptiorum, built on the other ſide of the River, and ſomewhat more unto the North: ſaid to be founded by Cambyſes the Perſian Monarch, the firſt that made this Kingdom ſtoop to the yoke of a forreiner; and by him peopled with ſome Babylonians or Chaldæans, tranſplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruines; amongſt which many of the Chriſtian Temples and Monaſteries do lie there in rubbiſh; the Caſtle whereof ſerved long after for the Garriſon of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. This, thought by ſome to be the Babylon mentioned by S. Peter in his 1 Epiſtle cap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my ſon, (S. Mark being the firſt Biſhop of the Alexandrians, and the Apoſtle of Egypt) may make ſomwhat probable: but the truth and reality hereof, I diſpute not now. Out of the ruines of this City aroſe, 3. Caire, now, and for many Ages paſt the chief of this Country: raiſed from the aſhes of old Babylon by the Chaliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamalucks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compaſſe not above eight miles, but full of Streets, the number of which ſaid to be 18000. every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every ſeveral ſtreet an impregnable fortreſſe. Found ſo by Selymus the firſt, when he conquered Egypt, who ſpent three dayes in forcing his way through it with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean, the publique, ſpecially the Moſques, beyond thought magnificent. Viſited every ſeventh year with a dreadful Peſtilence; yet ſtill ſo populous, that it is conveived to be in good health, if there die not above a thouſand in a day, or 300000 within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards both within the City, and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleaſant Lake, but made more pleaſant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual ſolace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a ſtately Caſtle (the Palace of the Mamaluck Sultans) ſituate on the top of a Mountain, overlooking the City, and a great part of the Country alſo. So large, that it ſeemeth a City of it ſelf, immured with high walls, divided into many partitions or ſeveral Courts, in times paſt the places of exerciſe; and entred by dores of iron. Deſtroyed for the moſt part, by Selimus, for fear of giving opportunity to ſome rebellion; or envying the Mamalucks the glory of having been the Maſters of ſo brave a Manſion: that which is left, now ſerving for the habitation of the Turkiſh Baſſa, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4. Matared, or Matarea, not far from Caire; the ſoile whereof is ſaid to be ſo rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with ſand or gravel, ſo moderating the extreme rankneſſe of it. 5. Arſinoe, on the Weſt ſide of the Nile, and ſomwhat South of the famous Labyrinth before deſcribed; called alſo (to difference it from another of the ſame name on the ſhores of the Red-Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monſter. 6. Nilopolis, or Nili Civitas, in the Iſland called Heracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River: moſt memorable for being the Epiſcopal See of Cheræmon, a right godly Prelate; of whom ſee Euſebius in the 6 Book and 34 Chap. of his Eccleſiaſtical Hiſtory. 7. Troia, on the Eaſtern ſtream which makes that Iſland, not much obſervable but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying neer unto it, out of which were digged the ſtones which made the Pyramides. 8. Cynopolis, in a little Iſland up the water. 9. Hermopolis, or the City of Mercurie, called alſo Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another of that name not far from Alexandria; to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10. Antinous, now Antius, founded by Adrian the Emperor, in honour of Antinous his eſpecial favourite; the moſt Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11. Dionyſias, or the City of Bacchus, ſituate on the Southern end of the Lake of Moeris, in the Nomus or Diviſion called Oaſis parva. 12. Cly ſma, upon the ſhores of the Golf, a Roman Garriſon.

Cities of moſt note in the Province of Thebais, 1. Panopolis, the Panos of Antonixus, one of the greateſt of this part. 2. Ptolomais, the foundation of one of the Ptolomies, and the goodlieſt City of this Province, ſucceeding unto Thebe both in power and greatneſſe. 3. Saiet, a fair and large Town, ſix dayes journy from Caire, going up the water; but by what name called amongſt the Antients, I do nowhere find. Affirmed (erroneouſly, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joſeph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the fury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now ſomwhat ruinous; of the foundation of Helena the mother of Conſtantine. The City much reſorted to (on the ſtrength of this Tradition only) by many aged Chriſtian Cophties, who deſire to die there. 4. Dioſpolis, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the banks of the River. 5. Tentyra, in a little Iſle ſo called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The inhabitants whereof were the onely men who durſt encounter the Crocodile; A creature of a terrible name, but a cowardly nature; of which it is ſaid by Ammianus Marcellinus, that it aſſaulteth thoſe which flie from it, and flieth from thoſe who do aſſault it; In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is ſaid by the Apoſtle James, 4, 7. that if he be reſiſted, he will flie from us. Or as the good old Poet hath it, Eſt Leo, ſi fugias; ſi ſtas, quaſi Muſca recedit.

Give ground, a Lyon he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.

6. Coptos, upon the head of a Trench or water-courſe which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other ſide of the River; in old times a moſt noted Emporie for Indian and Arabian wares; from whence not only the Chriſtians of this Country are thought to have the name of Cophties, but the whole Country to be originally called Ægyptus, from Ai-Coptus, or the land of Coptus. 7. Thebe, the reſidence and foundation of that great Tyrant Buſiris, in compaſs 140 furlongs, or 17 miles and an half; called alſo Hecatompyla, from the number of an hundred Gates which were ſaid to be in it. So beautified with Coloſſes, Temples, Palaces, the Sepulchres of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State, that it was thought μαθημάτων ὑπὸ τοῦ ἡλίου ὅτω κεκοσμῆθαι, to be the Noneſuch of the world. Decayed on the removing of the Court to Memphis, it became a ruine ſo long ſince, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Iuvenal; as he telleth us, ſaying, Atque vetus Thebe centum jacet obruta portis.

Old Thebe, yielding to the Fates,
Lies buried with its hundred Gates.

8. Abydus, now called Abutick, once the ſeat-royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium, renowned for the Temple of Oſiris; more for the Statue of Memnon, which though made of ſtone, did at the riſing of the ſun yield a vocal ſound. 9. Elephantis, on the banks of Nile, neighboured by Crophi and Mophi, two ſharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Leſſer Cataract; of which, and of the greater, we ſhall ſpeak more fully in Æthiopia. The City ſeated in an Iſland of the River Nile, on the borders of Æthiopia ſub Ægypto, (as the Antients called it) known unto Ptolomie by the name of Elephantina, but to our Eccleſiaſtical writers by the name of Tabenna. Memorable in times of Heatheniſm for the Town and Temple of Onuphis, wherein ſtood the Nilometrium or ſtanding-pillar, by which they did obſerve the increaſe of the River; removed ſince to the Caſtle of Michias, two miles from Caire: in times of Chriſtianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabeniſiotæ. 10. Syene, (now Aſna) a little North of Elephantis, ſituate directly under the Tropick of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by ſome Aſtronomers; which when the Sun entred into that Sign, was wholly enlightened with his beams, without any ſhadow; ſo perpendicularly did the body of it ſtand over the pit. This the laſt City of Egypt towards Æthiopia.

And now I ſhould proceed, according to my Method in other places, to the Storie of Egypt: but being that Libya and Cyrene are now accompted Members of it, the fortunes whereof they have alſo followed in all or moſt of the mutations of State & Government, I ſhall firſt take a view of them as the limbs of this body, and ſhew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed.

2. MARMARICA.

2. LIBYA or MARMARICA; hath on the Eaſt, Egypt, properly ſo called; on the Weſt, Cyrene; on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Libycum, and ſometimes Parthenium; and on the South, ſome part of Æthiopia Superior.

It had the name of Libya, from the old Greek word λίβυς, ſignifying black, agreeable to the complexion of the people, which is black and ſwarthie; λίβυς, antiqua lingua Græca niger, ſaith a learned Writer; or poſſibly enough from Lub, an Arabian word ſignifying thirſt, as ſuitable unto the nature of the ſoile, which is drie and ſandie, in which reſpect called by the Greeks Xero-Libya, or Libya ſicca. From hence the South-wind, blowing from theſe Coaſts towards Greece and Italy, had the name of Lybs, and the Promontorie in Sicilie oppoſite unto it, that of Lilybæum. It was alſo called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmaridæ, a chief People of it, though placed by Ptolomie in Cyrene: and ſometimes Barca, from Barce a chief City in it; of late times Barca Marmarica, by both names united.

The Country for the moſt part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; inſomuch as Alexander paſſing through part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the ſpace of four dayes ſaw neither Man, Beaſt, Bird, Tree, nor River. Covered over in moſt places with a thick, light ſand, which the winds remove up and down continually, turning vallies into hils, and hils into vallies. Found by Cambyſes to his coſt, who as baſely eſteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, ſent part of his Army into this Country to deſtroy the Temple above mentioned; but in the paſſage towards that prohibited place, fifty thouſand of them were overwhelmed and ſmothered in a ſtorm of ſand, the reſt with much adoe eſcaping. Called therefore Xero-Libya, or Libya Sicca, as before was noted; and Libya ſitiens, thirſty Libya, (—— per calidas Libyæ ſitientis arenas) in that Verſe of Lucan.

The People, neighbours unto Egypt; and conſequently much of the ſame condition. Said by Herodotus (by whom they are called Adyrmachidæ) to be governed by the like Lawes and Cuſtoms as the Egyptians were; but to differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark and black, of conſtitution lean lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every light occaſion, very litigious, and eager proſecutors of their dues. By an old obſervation among themſelves, they abſtained both from Beef and Hog-meat. So obſtinate in denying their accuſtomed Tributes, that he who could not ſhew the marks of his ſufferings for it, either black or blue, was accompted no body: And ſo reſolved to conceal any thing diſgraceful to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a Robbery, no torment could compell him to tell his name. At this time, little differing in perſon, temper or condition, from the Egyptians, Moors, and Arabes, intermixt amongſt them.

Converted to the faith of Chriſt, with, or not long after the reſt of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whoſe juriſdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice: to the calling of which famous Council, this Country occaſionally concurred, by bringing into the World that wretched Arius, who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils had diſturbed the Church. His Hereſie condemned in that famous Council; but his Perſon, by the Divine juſtice of God, reſerved to a more remarkable puniſhment. Being ſent for by the Emperor Conſtantine to make a Recantation of his former Hereſies, he firſt writ out a Copy of his own Opinions, which he hid in his boſom; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took oath that he did really mean as he had written: which words the Emperor referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in his boſom. But God would not be ſo cozened, though the Emperor was. For as he paſſed in triumph through the ſtreets of Conſtantinople, he drew aſide into a private houſe of Eaſe, where he voided his guts into the draught, and ſent his ſoul as an Harbinger to the Devil to make room for his body.

Not more infamous for the birth of this Miſcreant, who denied the Divinity of Chriſt; then famous for the birth of one of the Sibyls, hence ſirnamed Libyca, by whom the ſame had been foreſhewn. Which Sibyls ſeem to have taken denomination from σὶο βόλαι, i. Iovis conſiliorum conſciæ. They were in number ten, viz. 1. Perſica, 2. Libyca, 3. Delphica, 4. Cumæa, 5. Samia, 6. Helleſpontiaca, 7. Tiburtina, 8. Albunea, 9. Erythræa, and 10. Cumana; which laſt is affirmed to have written the Nine books of the Sibyls. They were all preſented by an old woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay ſo great a ſum of mony as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the old woman burnt three of them, requiring as much mony for the other ſix, as for all; which being denied, ſhe alſo burnt the other three, asking as much for the three remaining, as for the reſt; which Superbus, amazed, gave, and the old Trot vanquiſhed. Theſe books contained manifeſt tokens of the kingdom of Chriſt, his name, his birth, and death. They were burned by the Arch-traitor Stilico. So that thoſe Prophecies of theirs which are now extant, are for the moſt part only ſuch as had been extracted out of other writings, where their authority had been quoted. Concerning which, though Caſaubon and ſome other of our great Philologers conceive them to be piæ fraudes, compoſed of purpoſe by the Fathers of the Primitive times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST; yet dare I not ſo far diſparage thoſe moſt godly men, as to believe they would ſupport ſo ſtrong an edifice with ſo weak a prop, or borrow help from falſhood to evict a truth; Or if they durſt have been ſo impudently venturous, how eaſie had it been for their learned Adverſaries, Porphyrie, Julian, and the reſt of more eminent note, to have detected the Impoſture, and ſilenced the Chriſtian Advocates with reproach and ſcorn? But of this enough here; more at large elſwhere.

Rivers of note I find not any. 'Tis well, if in a Country ſo full of ſands, there be any at all: ſome Lakes I meet with in my Authors, the principal of which, 1 Laccus, 2 Lacus Lacomedis, now Linxamo, 3 Cleartus; ſufficient to preſerve their few Cattel from the taint of thirſt. The Mountains of moſt note, thoſe called Anogombri, 2. and that named Azar; this laſt extended Weſt and Eaſt in a ſtrait line, from the 51 degree of Longitude, to the 53. 3 Aliphus; 4 Ogdomus; 5 Tmodes; 6 Alpis; not much obſervable, but that they ſerve for Land marks to diſcover the Country.

Towns of note there are none now in it. Of moſt eſteem in former times, 1 Batrachus, by ſome called Menelaus, an Haven-town. 2 Phthia, and 3 Aneſiſphyra, two Port-towns alſo. 4 Tetrapyrgia, ſo called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolomie. 5 Meſuchis, more within the land. 6 Mazacila, another midland town. 7 Chæreola, mentioned among the chief Cities of this tract, by Ammianus. 8 Paratonium, now Porto-raſſa, which with Peluſium are by Florus called the two Horns of Egypt, which whoſoever held faſt, would be ſure to maſter it. By ſome old writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo, from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, ſeated very near it. So antiently honoured with an Oracle, (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is ſaid to have come hither to enquire of her death; Perſeus and Hercules, touching their Adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great: but the Oracle by that time had learnt to flatter, and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the ſon of that God whom he came to worſhip. The Temple ſeated in the middle of a vaſt ſandie Deſart, environed with a pleaſant and delightful Grove, about ſix miles or more in circuit, watered with wholſom ſprings, refreſhed with a temperate air, and ſhaded with Fruit-bearing trees, which carried in their leaves a perpetual ſpring; Fortified with a triple wall, within the firſt whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings, within the ſecond a Seraglio for his Women, in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; The Oracle fitly placed (ſo the Prieſts would have it) near the Seraglio of the Ladies; Before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were firſt waſhed, then offered. A place of great repute in ſacred and civil eſtimate; all the adjoining Country taking hence the name of Ammoniaca, and by that name reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9 Antiphra, on the Eaſt border of it, towards Alexandria. 10 Barce, called afterwards Ptolemais, by the name of one of the Ptolomies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of ſuch accompt, that from hence the whole Country had the name of Barca, and the Inhabitants of Barcai, (——Latéque furentes Barcæi) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Libyarchæ and Baſſachitæ, in the North; the Ogdoni, Buzes, and Adyrmachidæ, in the South; the Goniatæ, and Proſaditæ, in the midland parts; the Libyægyptii, bordering neareſt unto Egypt, with the people whereof ſo intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one name and nation. Others there were of leſſe, or as little note, but all deſcended properly of Naphtuhim the ſon of Miſraim, from whom the name of Neptune, originally a Libyan Deity, ſeems to be derived yet ſo, that Lehabin his brother muſt come in for a ſhare; the founder, as it is conceived, of the Libyægyptii before mentioned. Being then of the ſame original with thoſe of Egypt, they followed the ſame fortunes alſo, till the times of the Ptolomies; by whom ſometimes given for portion, with the title of a Kingdom to their younger children. By the laſt will and teſtament of Apion, the laſt King hereof, a Baſtard-ſon of Ptolomie ſirnamed Euergetes, the ſeventh King of that houſe, bequeathed unto the Senate and People of Rome. By whom firſt ſuffered to live under them, as a Free-Eſtate till the conqueſt of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and ſo accordingly deſcribed by Ptolomie; where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammoniaca, occurre amongſt the Nomi or Diviſions of it. Afterwards made a diſtinct Province of that Dioceſe and governed by a Lord Preſident, under the Præfectus Auguſtalis, or Supreme Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the Eaſt with Marmarica, on the Weſt with Africa Propria, or the Realm of Tunis, and ſome part of the Mediterranean, and the Greater Syrtis; on the North with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South with Libya Inferior, or the Deſarts of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene the chief City of it, from whence ſomtimes alſo called Cyrenaica; by Plinie and ſome other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz 1 Cyrene, 2 Ptolemais, 3 Arſinoe, 4 Darnis, 5 Berenice; by Ammianus for the ſame reaſon Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of theſe Roman Provinces. And finally, at the preſent, it paſſeth with that laſt deſcribed by the name of Barca, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the Greater Syrtis unto Egypt, is no leſſe then 13000 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Country in the South parts deſolate and barren, ſtored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the People living up and down in ſcattered houſes, and at ſuch a diſtance, as if it were in ſo many Iſlands. Deſtitute not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping: if any fell, it was dried up preſently by the ſands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful, and well inhabited.

The People in old times were ſaid to have been utterly ignorant of buying and ſelling, of fraud and ſtealing, not knowing or not caring for the uſe of money; content with little, not ſuperfluous in their clothes or buildings, their houſes for the moſt part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Oſier-twigs. Much altered in the firſt part of their character, ſince the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Theeviſh nation, given wholly to Robbery and ſpoile. So lazie, that they will not manure or till their Land, but provide themſelves with Corn from Sicily, laying their Children to pawn for it, till by their Thieving they can raiſe a ſufficient ſumme to diſcharge the debt.

One onely River I find in it, but of fame enough to ſerve for many; By Ptolomie called Luthon, by Plinie Lethon, by the Poets Lethe. Swallowed by the Earth not far from its firſt original, it riſeth up again about Berenice fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulneſſe in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occaſion of the fancie. Some Lakes I find alſo in it, whereof one occaſioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the land (where indeed more neceſſary) neer Paliurus. With Mountains better ſtored, (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1. Thoſe called Herculis Arenæ, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Country Eaſt and Weſt; 2. Bucolicus, on the South of thoſe; and 3 Volpos, a long ridge of hils; bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of moſt note in it, 1. Apollonia, in the Eaſt parts, neer the Promontorie called Zephyrium, in the confines of Libya or Marmarica. 2. Cyrene, in the Weſt of that; once of ſuch power, that it contended with Carthage for ſome preheminencies: Then the chief Lady of this tract, which it gave this name to. The birth place of Eratoſthenes the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jewes compelled to carry our Saviours Croſſe. 3. Ptolemais, betwixt Cyrene and Arſinoe, built or repaired by Ptolomie Philadelphus; the Epiſcopal City of Syneſius, a learned and religious Biſhop of the Primitive times, as appears by his Epiſtles extant. 4. Arſinoe, on the Eaſt ſide of the River Lathon, ſo called in honour of Arſinoe, the ſiſter of Philadelphus, and wife of Magas once King of this Country. 5. Berenice, on the Weſtern bank of the ſaid River; ſo called from Berenice the mother, or (another of the ſame name) the daughter of Magas: the furtheſt Town of all this Country, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the greater Syrtis. This laſt a Quick ſand very dangerous to Mariners, in compaſſe 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6. Paliurus, more within the land, but on the borders of Libya or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7. Aptungis, now Lungifari, by Ptolomie called Aptuchi Fanum. 8. Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules, near the greater Syrtis; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing robbing the Orchards of the Heſperides of their golden Apples. Thoſe Heſperides ſaid to be Aegle, Arethuſa, and Heſperethuſa, the three daughters of Atlas: their Orchard placed by Ptolomie betwixt this Tower and Paliurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantick Iſlands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitania; by Plinie, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and poſſibly in all alike. 9 Zemythus. 10 Acabis, in the midlands; all worn out of memory. 11 Feſſan, of greateſt name now, though ſcarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Aſbetæ on the Eaſt, the Barcitæ near the Greater-Syrtis, the Macatutæ and Laganici, near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably deſcended from Naphtuhim the ſon of Mizraim, of whom there ſtill remain ſome footſteps in Aptuchi Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Aptuchus. This Aptuchus by ſome miſtakingly called Autuchus, and by the Grecians ſaid to be the ſon of Cyrene, and the brother of Ariſtæus: who being ſent out to ſeek their fortunes, Ariſtæus fell into the Iſle named Ceos; and Aptuchus or Autuchus into Libya, both by them firſt planted. Neptune, the Deity of this Country, by the Egyptians called Neptitim, ſeems to come from Naphtuhim; moſt highly worſhipped by this people, becauſe he firſt taught them τὴν τῶν ἁρμάτων καταζεύξιν, the Art of training Horſes to the Coach or Chariot; in which the Cyreneans after grew ſo expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a round or circle, and alwayes keep their Chariot-wheels in the ſelf-ſame tract. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan landing in this Country, had built the City of Cyrene; and founded it in ſo good a courſe of life and diſcipline, that in ſhort time it came to have dominion over the moſt part of this Country, and to contend with Carthage about their territories. Warred on by Apryes King of Egypt, they ſued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their aſſiſtance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themſelves, they craved aid of Ptolomie the firſt of that race, by whom they were finally ſubdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a ſon of his laſt wife by a former husband, whom he had married to Arſinoe one of his daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice the daughter and heire of Magus, with the ſon of Ptolomie Philadelphus. Alienᵉd from which Crown again, for the preferment of ſome of the younger Princes, and in the end given by one of the Ptolomies, the laſt king hereof, to the People of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Auguſtus Cæſar, by whom united in one Government with the Iſle of Crete; but made a Province of it ſelf by the following Emperours: never ſince ſeparated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we haſten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the queſtion in this point, betwixt them and the Scythian, being not eaſily decided. Whether it were ſo antient, as the Egyptians ſay, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memorie and ſtorie of 13000 years, and a ſucceſſion of 330 Kings in the time of Amaſis the ſecond, who was Cotemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if underſtood of Solarie years, meaſured by the courſe of the Sun, muſt not be allowed of, becauſe it maketh them many thouſand years older then the Creation: but if of Lunarie, which is moſt agreeable unto the Accompt of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by moneths, it will amount unto no more then to 1000 or 1100 years, and ſo fall anſwerably to the times following after the Flood. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and thoſe of 24 or 25 ſeveral Dynaſties, the matter is not ſo ſoon made up: For either thoſe Kings, muſt not be all Kings, or Supreme Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their ſeveral Regents or Vicegerents, armed with Regal power; thoſe Dynaſties not the ſucceſſions of ſo many Regal families, but of their Subſtitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live ſucceſſively under one Supreme: or elſe we muſt needs look on Egypt, as diſtracted in thoſe times into ſeveral Kingdoms, amongſt the Princes of thoſe Dynaſties before remembred: or finally, we muſt look for ſome of thoſe Kings and Princes before the Flood. By either of theſe wayes, the buſineſs may be well agreed: For if that moſt of them were but the names of ſeveral Regents, (as probable enough it is) there might be many ſuch in the reign of one King; according to the Kings fancie, the merit of particular perſons, or the neceſsities of State: Changes of great Officers, eſpecially if grown too great, are not new nor ſtrange. If they were all Kings or Supreme Rulers, (as is alſo probable) we find not any thing of moment to perſwade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their ſeveral parts (as in other Countries in thoſe times) till the greater had devoured the leſs. Or if they were the names of ſuch Soveraign Princes as had the ſole command of Egypt before the Flood, (as ſome think they were) they might amount in all to ſo great a number, and ſo many Dynaſties; the iniquity of thoſe times, the ambition of great perſons, and conſequently the ſhort lives of the Kings being duely pondered. That Egypt and moſt part of the world was peopled before the Flood, hath been already proved in our Generall Preface: If peopled, then no queſtion under ſome form of Government, the names of which Governours (call them Kings, or Rulers, or what elſe we pleaſe) might be preſerved in Egypt on pillars of braſs or ſtone, or otherwiſe tranſmitted by tradition unto Cham the Father of Mizraim, by whom this Country was firſt planted after the Confuſion of Babel. But that old ſtock of Kings and People being deſtroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Mizraim ſucceeded next in their deſolate dwellings: yet ſo, that the poſterity of Chus and Lehabim, two others of the ſons of Cham, had their ſhares therein. From the firſt of which deſcended the Inhabitants of thoſe parts of Egypt, which lay along the ſhores of the Red-Sea, or Golf of Arabia: in which reſpect not only one of the Nomi or Diviſions bordering on the Iſthmus, had the name of Arabia; but the people dwelling on thoſe ſhores, were called Arabes, divided into the Arabes Azarei, and Arabes Adei. And from the other came that mixture of Nations, called Liby-Ægyptii, or Libyans and Egyptians intermixt together, inhabiting in Maræotica and the Weſtern parts. But though theſe People were derived from ſeveral Anceſtors, they made one Nation in the totall: Subject to Mizraim as their chief, and after his deceaſe, unto his Succeſſors in the Kingdom of Egypt. Concerning whom we may obſerve, that in Cham our greateſt Antiquaries finde the name of Iupiter Hammon; Mizraim they gueſs to be Oſiris the great God of Egypt. To him ſucceeded Typhon not by right of blood, but by uſurpation. Who diſpoſſed by Lehabim, the brother of Mizraim (whom the Greeks call Hercules Egyptius) the Kingdom was reſtored to Orus the ſon of Oſiris. During the time of theſe few Princes hapned all thoſe things which are recorded in the Scriptures concerning Egypt: from the firſt going down of Abraham in the time of Oſiris, to the advancement of Ioſeph in the Reign of Orus: in which there paſſed the 15. 16. & 17. Dynaſties of Regal Vice-Royes; Lieutenants only, as I take it, to thoſe mighty Princes. The Kings themſelves called generally by the name of Pharaoh, though they had all their proper and peculiar names: as afterwards their Succeſſors here had the name of Ptolomy, and the Roman Emperours, that of Cæſar. Not troubling our ſelves therefore with their many Dynaſties, we will lay down the Succeſſion of their Kings, as well as we can; the diſagreement of Hiſtorians and Chronologers, touching this Succeſſion, being irreconcileable.

The Pharaohs or Kings of Egypt, of Egyptian Race.

2961.	39	Smendes, the Siſac of the Scriptures, who made War upon Rehoboam the ſon of Solomon; conceived to be the Seſoſtris of Herodotus and others of the ancient Writers. Of whom it is reported, that being a King of great wealth and puiſſance, he had brought under ſubjection all his neighbouring Princes: whom he compelled in turns to draw his Chariot. It hapned that one of theſe unfortunate Princes, caſt his eye many times on the Coach wheels: and being by Seſoſtris demanded the cauſe of his ſo doing, he replyed, that the falling of that ſpoke loweſt, which but juſt before was in the height of the wheel, put him in minde of the inſtability of Fortune. The King deeply weighing the parable, would never after be ſo drawn in his Chariot. He alſo was the firſt that encountred the Scythians in battel; having already in conceit conquered them, before he led his Army againſt them. The Scythians much much marvelled that a King of so great Revenues would wage War against a Nation so poor; with whom the fight would be doubtful, the Victory unprofitable; but to be vanquished a perpetual infamy and disgrace. For their parts they resolved to meet him, as an Enemy, whose overthrow would enrich them. When the Armies came to joyn, the Egyptians were discomfited, and pursued even to their own doors by the Enemy. But the Scythians could not enter the Countrey, because of the Fens, with whose passage they were unacquainted; and so they returned.

And when Alexander had overthrown Darius, he came & without blows won this fertile kingdom; which yielded him, during his life, the yearly value of 6000 talents. After his death, this kingdom fell to the share of Ptolomeus the son of Lagus, from whom all the subsequent Kings of Egypt were called Ptolomies, the ſpace of ten years; after her death was ſole Lord of Egypt. His brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Aſſociate in the time of his deprivation, and paſſing in the Accompt of the Kings of Egypt.

3892.	9	Ptol. Auletes, the ſon of Lathurus, ſirnamed alſo Dionyſius, whoſe Brother being ſetled by him in the Iſle of Cyprus, was moſt unjuſtly ſtripped by the power of the Romans, and he himſelf outed of Egypt by his own ſubjects, but reſtored by the aid & love of Pompey.
3922.	10	Ptol. Dionyſius called alſo Junior, or the younger, together with Cleopatra his wife and ſiſter, ſucceeded Auletes in the throne, which they held together by the ſpace of three years. In the laſt of which, Pompey was barbarouſly ſlain on the ſhores of Egypt, by the command of Achilles the young Kings Governour; and the young King himſelf unfortunately ſlain in the Alexandrian Tumult againſt Julius Ceſar.

Theſe Ptolomean Princes of Egypt, were for the moſt part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquiſhed; neither Prince having cauſe to boaſt of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whoſe life and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate; this Country fell to the ſhare of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome; no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxim of State, not to ſuffer men of great houſes to come into that Country, whoſe revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For beſides the natural ſituation of the place very defenſible; and beſides the abundance of money, with which it was ſtored; this Country alone furniſhed the City of Rome with Corn, for four moneths yearly. Whence Veſpaſian being choſen Emperor by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, haſtened hither; to this end only, that detaining the ordinary proviſion of victuals, he might by famine compell the City of Rome to ſtand at his devotion: Ut urbem quoque externæ opis indigam fame urgeret, as the Hiſtorian hath obſerved. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperors ſole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Dioceſe of it ſelf, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Prætorio Orientis. In the diviſion of the Empire allotted to the Conſtantinopolitans, whoſe Government being thought to be inſupportable by this wanton People, they called in the Saracens, by whom the Greek Garriſons were caſt out, and the Country made ſubject to Haumar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards, weary of them alſo, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we ſhall meet with two Caliphs at a time, the one reſiding at Caire in Egypt, to whom the Saracens or Moors of Spain and Africk did ſubmit themſelves; the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the reſt, at leaſt as to the ſupreme title, and ſome chief Prerogatives, though the main power was cantonned and diſpoſed of among their Sultans.

The Caliphs of Egypt.

of Etzar, being over-power'd by Almericus King of Hieruſalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkiſh Sultan of Damaſcus, which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachoch, a right valiant and ſtout Commander; who taking his advantages, not only cleared the Country of Almericus, but got the whole kingdom to himſelf; daſhing out the brains of Elphais with his horſemans-mace. And though Etzar his ſon aſſumed for a while the title of Caliph; yet the deſtruction of himſelf, and the whole Phatimean family, rooted out by Sarracon, ſoon put an end to that claim, and left the kingdom in the peaceable poſſeſſion of the Turkiſh Sultans.

The fourth Dynaſtie, or the Race of the Turkiſh Kings or Caliphs of Egypt.

1163. 1 Aſereddin, ſirnamed Shirachoch, called Sarracon by the Chriſtian writers; the firſt of the Turks which reigned in Egypt; of the Noble family of Alub.

1186. 2 Zeli-heddin, called Saladine by the Chriſtian writers, the ſon (or as ſome ſay, the nephew) of Sarracon or Shirachoch; confirmed in his eſtate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whoſe juriſdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schiſmaticks; He obtained alſo the kingdom of Damaſcus, conquered Meſopotamia, Paleſtine, and in the year 1190 regained the City of Hieruſalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to ſucceeding Ages, nor to glorifie him in the kingdom of Heaven, but the ſaving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.

1199. 3 Elaziz, the ſecond ſon of Saladine, ſucceeded in the Realm of Egypt, which he exchanged afterwards with his brother Eladel for the kingdom of Damaſcus.

4 Eladel, or El-Aphtzel, by the Chriſtian writers called Meledine, ſucceeded upon this exchange, in the kingdom of Egypt: and overcame the Chriſtians, without the loſſe of a man, at the ſiege of Caire, by letting looſe the Sluces of Nilus, which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleaſure.

1210. 5 Elchamul.

1237. 6 Melech Eſſalach, by the Chriſtian writers called Melechſala, the ſon of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the 9. of France; and going with that King towards Damiata, was ſlain by the ſouldiers of his guard, called Mamalucks.

1242. 7 Elmutan, the ſon of Melech Eſſalach, ſucceeded for a time in his Fathers throne; But the Mamalucks being reſolved to obtain the kingdom for themſelves, inforced him to flie to a Tower of Wood, which they ſet on fire; & the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran cloſe by it) was there drowned: & the Mamalucks ſetled in the kingdom, *An.*1245.

Theſe Mamalucks were the ofspring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circaſſians: whom Melechſala either bought of their Parents, or (at the ſecond hand) of the Tartars, then newly Maſters of thoſe Countries, to ſupply the want of valour in the idle and effeminate People of Egypt: and out of them ſelected a choiſe Band of men for the guard of his perſon. Knowing their ſtrength, and finding their opportunity, they treacherouſly ſlew Melechſala their Lord and Maſter; appointing one Azeddin Ibek, a Turco-man by nation, and therefore by moſt Chriſtian writers called Turquimenius, (one of their own number) a man of great ſpirit and valour, to ſucceed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supreme Authority into the hands of the Egyptians; and not permitting their own ſons to enjoy the name and privilege of Mamalucks, they bought yearly certain numbers of Circaſſian ſlaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be inſtructed in the Egyptian language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for imployment, they were taught the Diſcipline of War, and by degrees advanced unto the higheſt Offices of power and truſt; as now the Janizaries are in the Turkiſh Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were Precedented by thoſe of Egypt; ſo it is poſſible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkiſh Empire, as the Mamalucks did in the Egyptian. So unſafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the ſole guard of his perſon, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of ſuch, whom not the ſenſe of natural duty, but the hopes of profit or preferment may make uſeful to him. For thus we find, that Conſtantius a King of the Britains was murdered by his Guard of Picts: moſt of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of thoſe whom they intruſted either with the guard of their perſons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant how many times the Princes and Eſtates of Italy have been brought into the extremeſt dangers, by truſting too much to the honeſty of mercenarie Souldiers and Commanders. Take we for inſtance the proceedings of Giacopo Picinino, who with his Followers firſt took Pay of Ferdinand the firſt of Naples; left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy John Duke of Calabria the ſon of Renè Duke of Anjou; whom alſo he forſook in his greateſt need. The like we find of Franciſco Sforza, firſt entertained by the Duke of Millain, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Millain, made uſe of their own Army to ſubdue that City. Nor can I ſpeak better of the Switzers or their dealing in this kind with the French Kings, the Sforza's Dukes of Millain; and with whom not (to ſay the truth) that ever truſted or employed them.

Now as it is unſafe for a Prince to commit the cuſtody of his perſon, or the defence of his Eſtates to the faith of Forreiners; ſo is it dangerous to him to call in ſuch aids, and to commit his fortunes either wholly or principally unto their fidelity. A moderate ſupply of men, money, or munition, from a confederate King, is, I confeſſe, in moſt caſes convenient, in ſome neceſſary: as well to ſave their Natives from the ſword; as to trie a friend, and intereſt an Allie in the ſame cauſe. But to invite ſo great a number of Succours, as from Helpers may become Maſters, and oppreſſe the people whom they came to defend; is that Rock on which many Realms have ſuffered ſhipwrack, and which a good Pilot of the State ſhould with all care avoid. For as in the ſickneſs of the body natural, it is hurtful to a mans health and life, to take more phyſick then it may (after the effect thereof be wrought) either digeſt, or put out again: ſo in the body politick, it is a perilous matter to receive more ſuccours, then what (after they have done the deed they were ſent for) we may either with conveniencie reward and ſettle with us, or at liberty expell. Of all Surfeits, this of Forraign ſupplies is moſt uncurable: and Ne quid nimis, if in nothing elſe true, is in this caſe, oracle. There is no Kingdom (I am verily perſwaded) under the Sun, which hath not been by this means conquered; no Common-wealth, which hath not been by this means ruined. To relate all examples, were infinite and tedious; to inferre ſome, pleaſing to the Reader; and to illuſtrate the point, not unneceſſary. To begin with former times: Philip of Macedon, called into Greece to aſſiſt the Thebans againſt the Phocians, brought all that Country, in a manner, under his command. The Romans, by aiding the Sicilians againſt the Carthaginians, poſſeſſed themſelves of that flouriſhing Iſland; by aſſiſting the Hedui againſt the Sequani, maſtered France; by ſuccouring Androgeus againſt Caſſibelan, ſeiſed on Britain; by ſiding with the Ætolians againſt Perſeus, united to their Empire all the Kingdom of Macedon; and by the ſame courſe what not? In after-ages, the Britains called in the Saxons, and were by them thruſt out of all; the Iriſh called in the Engliſh, by whom they were in proceſs of time totally ſubdued; and the Indians called in the Mogul-Tartars, who now Lord it over them. Theſe forrein ſupplies are invited or let into a Country, commonly in four caſes. Firſt, when ſome one man upon diſcontent or deſire of revenge, openeth them a way to a Country: upon which motives, Narſes invited the Lombards into Italy; and Count Julian brought the Moors into Spain: the one to be revenged on the Empreſſe Sophia, who had deſpitefully reviled him; the other to revenge himſelf on King Rodorick, who had raviſhed his daughter. Secondly, when a weaker Faction makes way for them, to maintain their cauſe againſt a ſtronger: On which ground the Duke of Burgundy being oppreſſed by the faction of Orleans, made way for Henry the fifth to paſſe into France; and the Leaguers drew the Spaniards in, to hold up their declining cauſe againſt Henry the 4th. Thirdly, when an ambitious Prince makes uſe of a forrein power, to uſurp upon the rights of another man: And for that cauſe Ludowick Sforze perſwaded Charles the 8. to undertake the Conqueſt of the Realm of Naples, that by the countenance of his Arms he might appropriate to himſelf the Dukedom of Millain. Fourthly, when a King overburthened by a forrein or domeſtick force, which he is not able to reſiſt, requires the help of a forrein friend: in which caſe, Plus à medico quam à morbo mali, the Phyſick proves many times worſe then the Diſeaſe: for thus the Kings of Naples of the houſe of Aragon, being in danger of the French, drew in the Aids of Ferdinand the Catholique, the Couſin-German once removed of the King then being: And the Caliphs of Egypt, not able to withſtand the forces of Almericus, craved aid of the Turks; by which meane both thoſe kingdoms were made a prey to their forrein friends, and by avoiding Scylla fled into Charybdis. Nay many times it ſo happeneth, that theſe forrein ſuccours joyn in deſign with thoſe againſt whom they were called, and divide the conquered State between them: And ſo we find that the Burgundians being called by Stilico into Gaul, to prevent the breaking in of the Franks or French, joyned with them in a common league againſt the Romans, whom they diſpoſſeſſed at laſt of all that Country. Onely amongſt ſo many examples to this purpoſe, we find the Low-Country-men to have proſpered by theſe forrein aids; who by the aſſiſtance of the Engliſh, ranſomed themſelves from that yoke of bondage which was intended to be put upon them by the King of Spain. This I acknowledge to be true, and look upon it as a great Argument of the integrity and honeſty of the Engliſh Nation; although it be as true withall, that the Engliſh never had ſuch an Army there, as to be able to ſubdue them. But give me ſuch another inſtance, I will quit the cauſe: for the ſame Low-Country-men found it otherwiſe with the Duke of Anjou, Brother to Henry the 3. of France, whom they created Duke of Brabant, and their Governour-Generall; permitting him to bring in as many of the French, as either his authority or their own monies were able to raiſe: who was no ſooner ſetled in that command, but he made it his chief buſineſs to ſeize upon their ſtrongeſt Holds, and to be a more abſolute Prince amongſt them, then ever the Spaniards or Burgundians had been before. So that I think I may conclude, that theſe forrein Succours are the laſt to be tryed, and the leaſt to be truſted, of any remedies in State. But it's now more then time to return to the Mamalucks; and in them to

The third Dynaſtie of the Egyptian Kings, or the Race of the Mamalucks.

A. Ch.

1255. 1 Turquimeneius, who being promoted to the kingdom, releaſed King Lewis, whom Melechſala his predeceſſor had taken priſoner; but performed not half of the conditions agreed upon.

2 Clothes (by ſome called Elmutahaz) taking advantage of the miſeries of the Turks then diſtreſſed by the Tartars, ſeiſed on the greateſt part of Syria and Paleſtine.

1260. 3 Bandocader perfected the begun conqueſts of Clothes, and took from the Chriſtians the ſtrong City of Antioch; carrying on his Armies as far as Armenia, where he did much ſpoil.

4 Melechſait, or Melechſares, reſtored the power of the Mamalucks in Syria and Paleſtine; where it had been much impaired by Edward the ſon of Henry the 3. of England, and Henry Duke of Mecklenburgh, &c.

1289. 5 Elpis, or Alphix, recovered from the diſſenting Chriſtians, the ſtrong Cities of Tripolis, Berytus, Tyre, and Sidon; all which he razed to the ground, that they might not be any more ſerviceable to the affairs of the Chriſtians.

1291. 6 Araphus, or Euſtrephus, by birth a German, releaſed Henry Duke of Mecklebourg, after he had been priſoner 26 years. He rooted the Chriſtians out of Syria, took Ptolomais the laſt Town they there held, and ſo razed it, that he made it fit to be ploughed.

7 Melechneſar, when he was Lieutenant to Araphus, was diſcomfited by Caſſanes, a great Prince of the Tartars, with the loſs of 40000 Egyptians: but Caſſanes being departed, he recovered again all Syria, and deſtroyed Hieruſalem; for which ſervice he was afterward made Sultan of Egypt.

8 Melechadel, whom I ſuppoſe to be that Sultan that governed Egypt, when Tamberlane with unreſiſtable violence conquered it; but of this I am not certain; neither can I meet with any conſtant and continued ſeries (which I dare relie on) of his ſucceſſors in this kingdom, till I come to 9 Melechella, or Melechnaſer, who in the year 1423. ſubdued the Iſle of Cyprus, and made the Kings thereof to be from thenceforth Tributaries to the Mamaluck Sultans.

1465. 10 Cathbeyus, who much reformed the State of Egypt, and was a profeſſed enemy of Bajazet 2. the 8th King of the Ottomans.

1499. 12 Campſon Chiarſeſius, ſucceeded on the depoſing of Mahomet.

13 Zanballat, who dethroned Campſon, and not long after was depoſed by 1500. 14 Tonombeius; outed of his Eſtate by the joynt-conſent of the Mamalucks, ſo to make way for Campſon Gaurus.

1501. 15 Campſon II. ſirnamed Gaurus, reformed the diſordered and factious eſtate both of Court and Country, and for the ſpace of 16 years governed very proſperouſly: But ſiding at the laſt with Hyſmael the Perſian Sophie againſt Selimus the firſt of that name, the 3. Emperor and ninth King of the Ottoman family, he drew his Kingdom into a war, in which his Armies were overthrown, and himſelfe ſlain in battel.

1517. 16 Tonombeius II. ſucceeded Campſon Gaurus both in his Kingdom and misfortunes: vanquiſhed in his firſt year by the ſaid Selimus the firſt, An. 1517. Who having conquered this rich Kingdom, was uſed to ſay, That he had gotten a Farm to feed his Gomoglans, or young Souldiers. So Egypt became a Province of the Turkiſh Empire, as it ſtill continueth.

What the Revennes of it were in the time of the Pharaohs, I am not able to affirm. Great they muſt be, beyond the proportion of belief, or elſe they could never have been Maſters of ſufficient Treaſure to finiſh thoſe vaſt Structures which they undertook. Twelve thouſand and five hundred Talents they amounted Annually unto in the time of the Ptolomies, which of our money makes the ſumme of Two Millions and 347750 pounds.

pounds. Which ſumme, Auguſtus Cæſar (appropriating this Province to himſelf) is ſaid to have doubled: But whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the reſt in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly ſhipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperour, Two hundred thouſand Meaſures of Wheat, every Meaſure weighing Twenty pound weight; which cometh to Seven Millions and an hundred forty thouſand of our Engliſh Buſhels: Sold by him, or diſtributed gratis amongſt the Poor, as he ſaw occaſion. So that there might be very well ſome abatement in Money, conſidering that the Corn amounted to ſo great a ſumme. Nor were they much leſſe, if ought at all, when the Mamalucks ruled in this Country. For Campſon Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no leſſe then Ten millions of Ducats, at one clap, amongſt his Souldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyrannical government, and partly through the diſcontinuance of the uſual Traffick through the Red-Sea, receive no more then Three Millions; one of which is hoorded in his own Coffers; the ſecond is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Baſhaw, for ſupport of his charge; the third is diſtributed among his Garriſon-ſouldiers, and ſuch of them as by land guard his own Million to Conſtantinople; for by ſea he dareth not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few ſhips Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

And ſo much for EGYPT.

OF BARBARY.

BARBARY is bounded on the East with Cyrenaica; on the West with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantick also; on the South with Mount Atlas, by which separated from Libya Inferior, or the Desarts of Libya.

It containeth in it the whole Dioceſe of Africk, & part of the Dioceſe of Spain: subject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania and Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninſula; and afterwards extended it over all the reſt of the Country on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the ſubjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called BARBARY, either from Barbar, ſignifying in their language an uncertain murmur, ſuch as the ſpeech of the Africans ſeemed to them to be; or from the word Bar ſignifying a Deſart; which doubled, made up firſt Barbar, and after Barbary.

It is ſituate under the third and fourth Climates; ſo that the longeſt Summers day in the parts moſt South amounteth to thirteen houres three quarters, increaſed in the moſt Northern parts to fourteen houres and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the ſpace of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narroweſt 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where broadeſt, almoſt three hundred.

The Country in ſuch parts as lie neareſt to the Mediterranean, is full of hils, covered with woods, and ſtored with plenty of Wild-beaſts; provided reaſonably well of moſt ſorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, inſomuch that moſt of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champain country, watered with many pleaſant Rivers iſſuing from that Mountain, and liberally furniſhed with Cherries, Figs, Peares, Plumes, Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oile, Honey, Sugar; ſome Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineneſs nowhere to be bettered. Here are alſo beſides large Herds of Cattel, ſome Elephants, Lyons, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like ſavage nature, and of Apes great multitudes; Horſes good ſtore, of excellent both ſtrength and beauty. But taking it in the beſt parts, it falleth extremely ſhort of that infinite fertility which is aſcribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For beſides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on one ſtalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tacape, in the way to Leptis, a man might ſee a great Date-tree overſhadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-tree, under that a Pom-granat, under that a Vine, and under all, Peaſe, Wheat, and Herbs; all growing and flouriſhing at one time. It is affirmed alſo by the ſame Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that ſome fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a peece of ground of four cubits ſquare, was uſually rented out at ſo many Denarii: by which accompt, (as the learned Budæus doth compute it) an Acre of that ground muſt be worth yearly 12800 of the Roman Seſtertii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparallel'd increaſe of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The People are of a duskiſh colour, but inclining to blackneſſe: much of the ſame nature with the Arabians, by whoſe numerous families formerly they were overſpred; but the Africans of the two the better active of body, well skilled in Horſmanſhip, but impatient of labour; covetous of honour, inconſtant, crafty, and unfaithful; ſtudious in matters of their Law, and in ſome of the Liberal Sciences, eſpecially Philoſophie and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countries they are admitted to be Readers: they are alſo ſaid to be ſtately of gate, exceedingly diſtruſtful, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their women beyond all compare. The women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackneſſe, of delicate ſoft skins; and in their habit and apparel beyond meaſure ſumptuous: ſo dreſt, to make themſelves more amiable in the eyes of their huſbands; for otherwiſe not permitted to ſtir abroad, and ſeldome to ſee any body but thoſe of their own houſes.

The Language ſpoken at the preſent in moſt of the Maritime Towns, except thoſe of Feſſe and Morocco, is the Arabick tongue. In thoſe two Kingdoms, and moſt part of the Country-villages, the Punick or old African, the antient languages of the Country: the Punick, ſpoken in all places where antiently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (whatſoever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not ſubject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder; which though it was the Language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it ſpread ſo far as to extinguiſh or ſuppreſſe the old natural tongues: and in the Colonies themſelves ſo much degenerated in ſhort time, ſo barbarouſly and imperfectly ſpoken; that a Siſter of the Emperor Severus, who lived in Leptic, a Roman Colonie, coming to Rome to ſee her Brother, ſpoke it ſo incongruouſly, that the Emperor was aſhamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of S. Auguſtine, an African Biſhop, were preached in Latine, becauſe preached in Hippo his Epiſcopal See, which was then a Colonie of the Romans; yet he confeſſeth that he was ſometimes fain to uſe ſuch words as were not Latine, to be the better underſtood of his Congregation.

The Chriſtian faith was firſt planted, in that part hereof which was called Africa Propria by Epænetus, one of the 70 Diſciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopſis, affirmed to be the firſt Biſhop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apoſtle, ſirnamed Zelotes. Metaphraſtes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here alſo, when by the Decree of Claudius Cæſar he was forced from Rome; and at his going hence, left Creſcens his Diſciple to promote the work. But by whomſoever planted firſt, it found good increaſe, and was ſo propagated in ſhort time over all this Country, that in the year 250. or before, there were in it above 90 Biſhops; for ſo many were aſſembled in the Synod of Labeſitum: and in the year 398. when the faction of the Donatiſts was of greateſt power, we find no fewer then 214 Catholick Biſhops met together in the Councel of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increaſe of Chriſtianity, in thoſe parts of Africa; ſo it ſhewes alſo that the Church was in ill condition; ſo overpower'd by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at leaſt 270 Biſhops of their own opinion; that the Orthodox party was neceſſitated to increaſe the number of Biſhops, for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary ſide, if ever the difference ſhould come to be examined in a publike meeting. Theſe Biſhops ranked into ſix Claſſes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Biſhops of each Province ſubject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Dioceſe (contrary to the uſage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them ſubordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally inveſted with Patriarchal juriſdiction over all theſe parts. Latius fuſa eſt noſtra Provincia: Habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritanias duas, ſibi cohærentes, are S. Cyprians words. Which ſhew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer then an Hiſtorian or Divine: He would not elſe have told us in ſuch poſitive terms, that thoſe of Barbary remained in their old Idolatrie till 250 years before Mahomets birth, at what time they received the Goſpel, and not before: But the good man miſtook the reviving of the Orthodox faith, in the time of Juſtinian, after it had been long ſuppreſſed by the Vandals of the Arian faction (who at one time baniſhed hence 300 Catholike Biſhops) for the firſt planting of the Goſpel. Otherwiſe not to be excuſed. But after this Reviver, it held not long, when ſuppreſſed by the Saracens; and ſo ſuppreſſed, that except it be in ſome few Towns poſſeſſed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Chriſtianity to be diſcerned in all this Country; Mahometiſm being elſwhere univerſally imbraced amongſt them.

Amongſt the men of moſt note for Souldiery, which have been born in this Country, we may reckon Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three ſons: 2. Annibal, 3. Aſdrubal, and 4. Mago; men hardly to be parallel'd in any Ages: 5. Maſiniſſa, King of the Numidians, one of their Cotemporaries: and in the following times. 6. Septimius Severus, the Roman Emperour. Amongſt thoſe addicted to the Muſes, thoſe of moſt note, 1. Terence, 2 Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the world afforded men of more eminent note, nor better deſerving of the Church. 1. Tertullian, 2. Cyprian, 3. Julius Africanus, 3. Arnobius, 4. Lactantius, 5. Victorinus Afer, 6. Optatus Melevitanus, 7. Victor Uticenſis, and above all, 8. the moſt learned and divine S. Auguſtine, a man of ſuch admirable abilities, and indefatigable induſtry, ſo conſtant a Defender of all Orthodox doctrines againſt the Hereticks of thoſe times, that he deſervedly got the name of Malleus Hæreticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Country, beſides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it ſelf) 1. Phocra, 2. Heptadelphus, and 3. Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitana; 4. Cinnaba, 5. Garas, 6. Madethubadus, and 7. thoſe called Gariphi, in Cæſarienſis, 8. Thambes, 9. Mampſarus, 10. Uſaletus, and 11. Zuchabarus, in Africa Propria. Of which, and others, we may ſpeak more, if occaſion be, in our deſcription of the Provinces in which they are. And for the Rivers of moſt note, though none of any long courſe in ſo narrow a Country: we have in Tingitana, 1. Sala, falling into the Atlantick, out of Atlas minor; 2. another of the ſame name, and the ſame exit alſo, but far more to the North, towards the Streit of Gibraltar; 3. Moſocath, mollified by Saluſt the Hiſtorian into Mulucha, and by him placed betwixt the Numidians and the Moors; 4. Malva, the boundarie at this day betwixt the Kingdoms of Feſſe and Algiers; 5. Phthuth, of more fame then any, of which more anon: in Cæſarienſis, 6. Naſabath, 7. Siſaris, and 8. Sorbetes: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunes, 8. Rubicatus, which riſing out of Mount Thambes, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9. Triton, which iſſuing out of the hill called Uſaletus, and making the great Fen called Tritonia Palus, endeth its courſe alſo in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10. Bagradas, the greateſt in all this tract, which riſing out of Mount Atlas, firſt runneth towards the Eaſt, and then receiving from the hill called Mampſarus the addition of another Stream, paſſeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his courſe.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Land marks, I ſhould now proceed to the deſcription of the ſeveral Provinces hereof, as in other places. But becauſe each part almoſt hath had for theſe later times its particular Hiſtory, and that it is divided at the preſent into ſeveral Governments, and under the command of ſeveral Princes: I will here lay down ſo much of the Storie of it as concerns the whole, before ſuch diviſion; and afterwards purſue the Hiſtorie and Chorographie of the ſeveral parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Country was firſt peopled by Phut the third ſon of Cham: who leaving his brother Mizraim well ſetled in the Land of Egypt, paſſed towards the Weſt; and leaving Lehabim his nephew betwixt him and Mizraim, poſſeſſed himſelf of all the reſt from the greater Syrtis to the Ocean. Remainders of whoſe name we find in the River Phut, (by Ptolomy called Phthuth, with but little difference, ſave that it ſavoureth more of the African roughneſſe) near which Joſephus findeth a Region called the Country of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans:

Phuteans: ſeconded herein by S. Hierome, who ſpeaking of this Regio Phutenſis in Mauritania, (where the River Phuth is placed by Ptolomy) voucheth in generall terms the teſtimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latine. So that of this there is no queſtion to be made. Such Nations as deſcended of this Plantation, ſhall be hereafter ſpoke of in their ſeveral Provinces. Governed at firſt by the Chiefs of their ſeveral families; but in the end reduced under the command of the Kings of Mauritania and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two firſt, Natives of this Country, of the race of Phut; the laſt deſcended alſo of the ſeed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan; who on the conqueſt of their Country by the Children of Iſrael, forced to ſeek new dwellings; and having ſtore of ſhips to tranſplant themſelves and their families, ſetled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa properly ſo called. For, that the people of thoſe parts, though loſt into other names and families, were antiently of a Canaanitiſh or Phœnician race, may be made apparent, 1. By the nearneſſe of their Language, the Punick or Phœnician, and old Hebrew tongue, differing only in the dialect and pronunciation. 2. By the name Pœni, or Phœni, little differing from that of the Phœnices. 3. By this teſtimony of S. Auguſtine, who telleth us in the Comment on S. Pauls Epiſtle to the Romans, begun, but not finiſhed by him; Interrogati Ruſtici noſtri quid ſint, reſpondent Punici Chanani; that is to ſay, that when any of the Inhabitants of this Country (he himſelf was one) were asked what they were, they anſwered, Chanaanites. 4. We find in Herodotus, how Cambyſes having totally conquered Egypt, intended a war againſt the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it ſeemeth) of ſome power: but the Phœnicians, being the onely Sea-faring men Cambyſes then had, abſolutely denied to be imployed in that ſervice; they being ſprung from the ſame tree, that the Carthaginians were. 5. We read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagrius Scholaſticus) how on two marble-pillars, ſituate nigh unto Tingis or Tanger, there was in the Phœnician language and character engraved, Nos fugimus à facie Joſhuah prædonis, filii Nave: that is to ſay, We flie from the face of that Robber, Joſhuah the ſon of Nun. The ſetling of this people there, a great incitement queſtionleſſe unto Dido to come thither alſo; who feared as much danger from her brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whoſe hands had been embrued in the blood of her husband, as the others did from the ſword of Joſuah. Gathering together all her treaſures, which were very great, accompanied with her brother Barca and her ſiſter Anna, ſhe ſet ſail for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after ſtood the City of Carthage, ſhe obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigneſſe then ſhe could compaſſe round about with an Oxes hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byrſa, which at firſt it had. Firſt founded in or about the year of the world 3070. which was about 144 years after the building of Solomons Temple, 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the deſtruction of Troy. By which accompt (I note this only by the way) it is impoſſible that Dido or Eliſa (for by both theſe names we find her called) ſhould ever ſee the face of Æneas, unleſſe it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impoſſible ſhe ſhould either fall in love with him, or be got with child by him, or finally kill her ſelf on her being forſaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a generall belief with moſt ſorts of men. Hereunto conſenteth Auſonius, who honouring the Statua of this abuſed Princeſſe with an Epigram of 18 verſes, among others gives us theſe four.

Invida cur in me ſtimulaſti Muſa Maronem,
Fingeret ut noſtræ damna pudicitiæ?
Vos magis Hiſtoricis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta deûm, concubituſque canunt.

Why didſt thou ſtir up Virgil, envious Muſe,
Falſely my name and honour to abuſe?
Of me let Hiſtories be heard, not thoſe,
Who to the World, Jove's theft and luſts expoſe.

Credible it is, that Æneas being driven on the coaſt of Africk, was by ſome Prince there courteouſly entertained, as a man whoſe fame had been his harbinger: but why the ſtory ſhould be faſtned on Dido, I ſee not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her ſelf, gave occaſion to the Poet to feign, that it was for the love of Æneas: whereas it was indeed to avoid the luſt and fury of Jarbas, a potent King in Africk, who violently deſired to have his pleaſure on her.

But to proceed. This City thus founded in a place commodious for trade and merchandiſe, in ſhort time grew exceeding wealthy; And having wealth enough to hire mercenary ſouldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians & Numidians did afford good ſtore) they conquered all the Sea-coaſts from Cyrene to the Streits of Hercules (now called the Streits of Gibraltar) and ſo much alſo towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which ſpace poſſeſſed of 300 Cities. Grown to ſuch height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongſt them the Kings of Numidia and Mauritania, were at their devotion: They began to caſt their eyes on Sicily, a wealthy Iſland, lying near unto their Coaſt; which queſtionleſs they had poſſeſſed, if the Romans, envious of their greatneſs, and fearing their neighbourhood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mumertines, and under that pretence got ſome footing in it. The end of this war, after many brave exploits on both ſides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicil, their abandoning all the Iſlands betwixt them and and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two millions of Crowns. And ſuch end had the firſt Punick war, managed for the moſt part in Sicil: during which time, and the firſt war there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it ſelf was twice invaded; firſt by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuſe, (or ſo commonly called) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General; but with no other great ſucceſſe, then the ſpoil of the Country. The ſecond followed not long after, but the Scene was altered: begun in Spain, proſecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the ſon of Amilcar, deſcended from Barca the brother of Dido or Eliſa; who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increaſed his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it ſelf; defeated the Army of the Romans, and ſlew ſome of their Conſuls; ſo proſperous in the battel of Cannæ, where the whole ſtrength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made uſe of his victory, he might within four or five dayes after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africk from the forces of Scipio: who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently tranſlated the war to Carthage. The iſſue was, that on the loſſe of the battel of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were neceſſitated to ſubmit themſelves to the will of the Conqueror; that is to ſay, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships and Gallies excepting ten; to make no war without leave of the Romans, to pay for the charges of the war 10000 Talents, and ſuch other extremities. So ended the ſecond Punick war, An. V. C. 602. And the third followed not long after; not any way occaſioned by thoſe of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the people of Rome, who would not think themſelves ſafe whileſt that City ſtood, and therefore ſent another Scipio to lay ſiege unto it; by whom, after a long and ſtout reſiſtance, it was at laſt taken and deſtroyed; the Treaſure which was found in it, notwithſtanding their former loſſes, and the low eſtate it was reduced to, beſides what was conſumed by fire, and reſerved by the ſouldiers, amounting to 470000 pound weight of ſilver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thouſand pounds of our Engliſh money.

Such end had Carthage, and therewithall the reſt of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed againſt her, and aided the Romans in theſe wars, yet they ſoon found their own fortunes buried in the ſelf-ſame Grave. Subverted, one after another, as occaſion was, they became all ſubject unto Rome, their Kingdoms and Eſtates turned to Roman Provinces. Of theſe were reckoned ſeven in all, that is to ſay, 1 Africa Propria, called alſo Zeugitana, and Proconſularis, 2 Byzacena, 3 Tripolitana, 4 Numidia, 5 Mauritania Cæſarienſis, 6 Sitiſenſis, and 7 Tingitana. Of which the laſt (I know not why) was laid to the Dioceſe of Spain, called therefore Hiſpania Transfretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, by ſome elder Writers: the other ſix made up the Dioceſe of Africk, ſubordinate to the Præfectus Prætorius for Italy, who had here his Vicarius or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till ſubdued by the Vandals, a German nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb on the Coaſt of the Baltick, where now lie the Dukedoms of Mecklenbourg and Pomerania. Their memory ſtill retained there in the ſtile of thoſe Princes, who call themſelves Duces Vandalorum; and in the Confederacie of the Hanſe-towns, called by ſome Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalicæ. A Nation of great power, and numbers, (the Burgundians being only a part of theſe) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11. year of the Empire of Arcadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul by the treacherous practiſes of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Weſtern Empire; and after an abode of three years paſſed into Spain, together with the Suevi and Alani their Aſſociates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them alſo. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperours Vicegerent in Africa: who ſtomacking to ſee his Office beſtowed on Caſtinus an unworthy man, and his enemy; betrayed the Country to theſe Vandals, in the laſt year of the life and reign of Gundericus; an Arian in Religion, as were the reſt of the Nation, to which induced by their neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: which Hereſie as they brought with them into Africk, driving thence all the Orthodox Chriſteans; ſo they continued in it till their extirpation.

The Vandal Kings of Africa.

412.	1	Gundericus, who firſt invaded Gaul, Spain, and Africk. 16.
428.	2	Genſericus, who at the requeſt of Eudoxia the widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy and ſacked the City of Rome, the ſpoil whereof for 14 dayes he gave to his ſouldiers: but at the requeſt of Eudoxia, whom he afterward married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was wife to the Weſtern Emperor Valentinian; who having a mind to a Lady of Rome, the wife of one Maximus, he cunningly ſlipped the Ring of Maximus off his finger, and by that token ſent for the Lady to the Court; and when ſhe was come, raviſhed her. To revenge this diſgrace, Maximus ſlew Valentinian, made himſelf Emperor, and forced Eudoxia to be his wife. But ſhe ſtomacking a match ſo unequal to her high birth, and having ſome incling of the manner of her husbands death, ſent for Genſericus into Italy. This Genſericus conquered Carthage and Hippo, and reigned 48 years.

476.	3 Honoricus, ſon of Genſericus. 7.	530.	7 Gilmir, the ſon of Genzo, one of the Deſcendents of Genſericus; overcome by Beliſarius a worthy and politique Leader, whom the Emperor Juſtinian imployed in that ſervice.

And thus ended the Kingdom of the Vandals, (having continued in Spain and Africa, 146 years) by the valour of Beliſarius. Who after this good ſervice, was imployed by Juſtinian againſt the Gothes, then reigning in Italy; againſt whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being on I know not what envy, called to Conſtantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his bread at the Gate of the Temple of S. Sophia. A bad reward for ſo good a ſervant. But to go on: Juſtinian having regained Africk, to honour his new Conqueſt, exempted it from the command of the Prætorio-Præfectus of Italy, to which formerly ſubject; and increaſing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Iſle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of it ſelf; appointing his Præfectus Prætorio Africæ to reſide in Carthage, as the chief City of his charge; which he then alſo raiſed to a Conſular Province, having in former times been Proconſular only. But long it held not in this ſtate: For in the year 647. the Romans were finally expulſed by Hucba a famous Leader, whom Oſmen the third Caliph of the Saracens had deſigned to this ſervice. Africk, from that time forwards, reckoned amongſt the Provinces of the Saracenical or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing leſſe and leſſe, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers getting what he could for himſelf; this Country was diſtracted into many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at laſt reduced to four of moſt conſideration; that is to ſay, the Kingdoms of 1 Tunis, 2 Tremeſen or Algeirs, 3 Feſſo, and 4 Morocco. To the Chorography and Hiſtory whereof we do now proceed, adding hereto in the fifth place the Iſles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

THe Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunetanum) hath on the Eaſt Cyrene, on the Weſt the Kingdom of Algeirs or Tremeſin, on the North the Mediterranean, on the South Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis the chief City of it.

The Country towards the Eaſt barren and deſtitute of water; but in the Weſtern parts ſufficiently plentiful of Corn and other fruits, and generally well ſet with Trees. The people more patient of labour then the reſt of Barbary, and for that cauſe perhaps more healthy; but queſtionleſſe of ſo good conſtitution, that they live commonly to great Age, unleſſe a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of ſickneſs, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as ſome call it) and the Numidia of the Romans, called ſince Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the preſent Numidia, lying on the other ſide of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, beſides thoſe ſpoken of already, were 1 Audas, 2 Buzara, 3 Cinna, 4 Dios, or the Hils of Jupiter, 5 Gillius, by ſome named Gigion, and 6 thoſe called Thizibi. Rivers of moſt eſteem with them, though not much with others, beſides thoſe mentioned before, 1 Ampſaga, now called Collo, and by ſome Sat Gemar, which divideth this Kingdom from that of Tremeſen; 2 Catuda; 3 Cyniphus, iſſuing from the hils called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea not far from Tripolis. Beſides which there were ſome great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1 Hipponites near Mount Cinna; 2 the Lake of Pallas, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was ſaid to have ſhewed herſelf the Inventreſs of Spining and of Oyle, and for that much worſhipped by this People; 3 Sylura, another great Lake, but not ſo famous as the former, becauſe not honoured by a Goddeſſe.

The whole divided by the Romans into theſe four parts, viz. 1. Africa ſpecially ſo called, lying on the Sea, from the River Ampſaga to the Leſſer Syrtis; 2. Tripolitana, from the Leſſer Syrtis to the Greater; 3. Numidia, lying on the Weſt of Zeugitana, or Africa Propria; and 4. Byzacena, ſo called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the territory whereof ſo extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of corn were ſent to Rome in the time of Auguſtus, and 360 in the time of Domitius Nero, growing on one ſtalk. But this Diviſion being long ſince worn out of memory, it is divided at the preſent into the Provinces of, 1. Ezzab, 2. Tripolis, 3. Tunis, 4. Conſtantina, 5. Bugia.

1. EZZAB is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A ſmall Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from tributes) their wealth not riſing from the commodities of their own Country, which affordeth them little elſe beſides Dates and Olives; but from ſuch merchandiſe which they buy of the Venetians, and ſell to the Numidians. The richeſt, thoſe of Meſrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath ſome, but none of note: the chief of which, 1. Meſurata, 2. Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the firſt gives name unto that little Province ſpoken of before. Of more note in the former times was Philæni Villa, ſituate on the Greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Surta; memorable for the adjoyning Altars, called Philæni Aræ, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occaſion. Some controverſies being grown betwixt thoſe of Carthage and Cyrene, about their bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a ſet houre ſhould be ſent out of each

City

City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-ſtone of their ſeveral Territories: The Phileni, two brothers nominated for Carthage, were ſo quick of foot, that they had goten a good way into the Country of the Cyrenenſes, before they were met; wherewith the Cyreneans much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go ſo much back again, or to die in the place: This laſt accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Country before their own; for preſervation of whoſe name and honour to ſucceeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect theſe Altars.

2. Weſt of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana: Not much more fruitful then the other, except in Barley; but more commodiouſly ſeated in regard of the Sea, which is here more ſafe for navigation, the former lying wholly on the greater Syrtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Leptis Magna, ſo called to diſtinguiſh it from another, but of leſſe note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, ſituate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A town of ſo great wealth and trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Carthaginians. 2. Euphranta, called alſo Pyrgos Euphranta from ſome ſtrong Tower in it, on the Weſtern-bank of the greater Syrtis. 3 Cinſterna, on the Eaſtern ſide of the River Cyniphus. 4. Cabis, the utmoſt City of this Province weſtward; the ſame which Ptolomie cals Tacapa, ſituate at the fall of the River Triton into the leſſer Syrtis. 5. Sabratha, and 6. Heva; not elſe obſervable, but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7. Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from thoſe three Cities before mentioned. A City of great name and riches, till deſtroyed by the Saracens: By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colleges, and Hoſpitals; and flouriſhing in much wealth and luſtre, it became a Kingdom of it ſelf, but ſubject to the Kings of Tunis, till taken by the Genoes with a Fleet of 20 ſail, and by them ſold to the King of Feſſe. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, it came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navar, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholique, the firſt Monarch of Spain; whoſe Nephew Charles the 5. conferred it on the Knights of S. John of Hieruſalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Baſa General of Selimus the ſecond, diſpoſſeſſed by force, An. 1551. ſince that the ordinary Reſidence of the Turkiſh Begterbeg for theſe African Provinces, and made an uſual retreat for Pyrats, who infeſt theſe Seas, and do much miſchief to the Coaſts of Sicil, Italy, and others of the Chriſtian Countries.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Weſtward to that of Tripolis, taketh up ſo much of this Kingdom, as antiently contained the Province of Byzacena; and ſo much of the Roman Africk, as lieth on the Eaſt of the River called Guadilharbar, the Hipponites Lacus of the Antient writers. The Country antiently ſo fruitful, that it yielded uſually an increaſe of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, beſides the teſtimony of approved Authors, the wondetfull, if not prodigious Ears of Corn which before we heard of, may ſerve ſufficiently. Now indigent, and ſo unprovided of all Grain for the uſe of their families, that they are fain to furniſh themſelves out of other places: the People not daring to manure or ſow their land, for fear of the Arabians, who ever and anon fall into theſe parts, and ſpoil what they meet with.

Places of moſt note in it, in the elder times, 1. Adrumetum, or Adrumyſtus, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena; by conſequence, in the times of Chriſtianity an Archbiſhops See: walled and repaired by the Emperor Juſtinian, and by his command called Juſtiniana. 2. Zama, the incamping place of Annibal before his battel with Scipio. 3. Nadagora, memorable for the great battel betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage, not parallel'd ſince their own times, nor in thoſe before them. In which the great Controverſie between thoſe Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal ſhewed his ſingular judgment in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in horſe, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage to fight in a place of diſadvantage, he could do no marvels: the Romans with the loſſe of no more then 1500 of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians in the fight and chaſe. 4. Salera, the firſt place took by Scipio after the landing of his Army. 5. Utica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greateſt ſhips; much ſpoke of in the wars of Carthage, and memorable for the death of Cato (hence ſirnamed Utican) who here ſlew himſelf, for fear of falling into the hands of Caſar. It is now called Biſerta. 6. Byzacium, ſeated in liberal and fruitful ſoils, as was ſhewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7. Ruſpinum, made by Caſar the ſeat of his war in Africk, againſt the ſons and faction of Pompey: as memorable in the times ſucceeding, for being the Epiſcopal See of S. Fulgentius. 8. Thyſtrus, remarkable for the Tragedie of the Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was ſaluted Emperor by the Souldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperor, whoſe Procurator they had ſlain in a tumult: but his party being diſcomfited by Capellianus whom Maximinus ſent againſt him, and his ſon killed in the defeat; upon the hearing of the news, he here hanged himſelf. 9. Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longeſt for the Mercinaries, in their deſperate Rebellion againſt the Carthaginians; by which the Eſtate of that great City was in danger of ruine, at the end of the firſt Punick war. 10. CARTHAGE, once the Lady and Miſtreſſe of Africk; ſituate in the bottom of a ſafe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very ſtrongly fortified both by art and nature; Environed with the Sea, except upon one ſide only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Iſthmus about two miles and an half in breadth: In compaſſe 24 miles; but meaſuring by the outward wall, it was 45.

For

For without the wall of the City it ſelf, there were three wals more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of 30 foot deep, wherein they had place for 300 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horſe and all their Provender; and Lodging in thoſe Out-ſtreets for the Riders of the ſaid Horſe, and for 20000 Foot beſides, which never came within the City to annoy or peſter it. On the South-ſide ſtood the Caſtle called Byrſa, which took up two miles and an half in compaſſe; firſt built by Dido, on that ground which ſhe obtained of the Libyans, when ſhe got leave to buy only ſo much land of them, as ſhe could compaſſe round about with an Oxes hide. In that, the ſumptuous Temple of their antient Deities, Juno, Apollo, Æſculapius, Belus. On the Weſt-ſide, a ſtanding Pool made of the Sea-water; let into it by ſo narrow a paſſage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a ſtately Arſenal, with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the foundation and affairs of this mighty City we have ſpoke already. The Government of it firſt by Kings, thoſe abſolute enough at firſt, afterwards limited by the Senate, and finally made meerly titulary by the power of the People: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Ariſtotle in the 2. of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the ſecond Punick war, when they were at the greateſt, extended on the Sea-coaſts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syrtis to the Streits, and ſo unto the River Iberus, for the ſpace of 2000 miles in length: their Revennes anſwerable, and readily brought in, by reaſon of their infinite trading. Which made the Roman people think themſelves unſafe, whilſt this City ſtood. Reſolved on the deſtruction of it, they ſent againſt it L. Martius and M. Manlius, their two Conſuls, with a puiſſant Army: to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preſervation of the City it ſelf, which was faithfully promiſed. But when they had withall given up the ſons of their principal men to be ſent to Rome for Pledges of their future loyaltie; they were told, that a City conſiſted not in wals, but in lawes and government. Theſe with the Co-poration, ſhould remain as formerly; the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was reſolved to abide the utmoſt; but they wanted neceſſaries for reſiſtance. That want ſupplied for want of Iron to make Arms, with Gold and Silver; the Houſes pulled down to furniſh them with timber to build a Navy; and noble Ladies cutting off the hair of their heads, to make Ropes and Cordage; 25000 Women liſted to defend the wals. But the fatal moment being come, a ſecond Scipio is ſent thither to diſpatch the work; by whom at laſt the Town was taken, and for 17 dayes together conſumed with fire; the Queen and multitudes of the People burning themſelves in the Temple of Æſculapius, becauſe they would not fall into the hands of the Romans. Reedified by Julius Cæſar, and made a Colonie, it recovered ſome part of her former luſtre; but ſo, that her chief glory was rather to be ſought for in her antient, then her preſent fortunes. Populi Romani Colonia, olim Imperii ejus pertinax æmula, & priorum excidio rerum, quam ope præſentium clarior; was her character in the times of Pomponius Mela. But in this laſt Eſtate, accompted for the Metropolis of the Dioceſe of Africk, the Reſidence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Biſhops under him in that one Province wherein Carthage ſtood. Deſtroyed in the ſucceeding times by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it is at laſt reduced to nothing but a few ſcattered houſes, not above five and twenty ſhops, one Temple: all the reſt a ruine. So truly ſaid the antient Poet, Sic patet exemplis Oppida poſſe mori.

Thus by examples do we ſee,
That Towns may die as well as We.

Of note at the preſent, 1. Tunis, ſuppoſed to be the Themiſa or Thuniſa of Ptolomie; of ſmall accompt till the laſt deſtruction of Carthage, by whoſe fall it roſe. Situate not far from the ruines of that famous City, in compaſs about five miles, and in that compaſs ſaid to contain 10000 houſholds. Of great traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of forrein nations, chiefly from Genoa and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the ſieges and ſucceſſes of two of our Engliſh Princes; that namely of King Edward the firſt, in his fathers life time; and that of Henry the fourth, then but Earl of Darby: by both which (though the laſt ſerved only under the command of the French) the City was compelled to a Compoſition; Lewis the 9. commonly called S. Lewis, dying at the firſt ſiege of it. 2. Goletta, a ſtrong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a Demy-Iland, divided from the main Land by two narrow paſſages, but ſo that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty, by Charles 5. An. 1535. together with the Turkiſh Navy riding in the Lake faſt by it; but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years after, An. 1574. 3. Cairoan, built by Hucba, who firſt conquered Africk for the Saracens, in a ſandie Deſart, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36 from any part of the Sea, to ſecure himſelf from any invaſion, which the commodiouſneſs of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the firſt founder of it, with an admirable Temple raiſed on Pillars of Marble, who placed alſo in it a College of Prieſts, and made it the chief Reſidence of his poſterity for the ſpace of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs as the Sultans of Africk. Deſtroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco; and ſtill of ſuch eſteem amongſt theſe Mahometans, that their chief men are brought thither to be buried from all parts of the Country, hoping by the prayers of thoſe Prieſts to find a ſhorter way to Heaven then in other places.

4 More Weſtward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, ſo called from Conſtantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hipponites, now named Guadilharbar, to Conſtantine a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the ſame with Mons Audus in Ptolomie. The ſoil hereof ſaid to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of Fruits, and great ſtore of Butter. Rubricatus, by Oroſius called Ordalio, now Ludog, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1. Tabraca, on the Eaſt; and 2. Hippo Regius, on the Weſtern bank of Rubricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this laſt moſt famous, in being the Epiſcopal See of renowned S. Auguſtine. 3. Bona, the birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about an hundred miles from the Sea, but ſituate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: ſo rich and fertile, that the Town flouriſheth to this day, adorned with a ſumptuous Moſque, and never without the company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tunes, and the Iſle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4. Thuburnica, another Colonie of the Romans. 5. Sicca Veneria, another Town of the ſame nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6. Culcua, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moors now called Cucutina, but Conſtantina by the Latines, and moſt Nations elſe; Now the chief City of this Province, ſituate near a Mountain of the ſame name near the edge of Bugia. An antient City, but containing ſtill 8000 families, many ſumptuous Buildings, amongſt which a large Temple, two Colleges, and three or four Monaſteries: frequently viſited by the Merchant, every Trade having here its peculiar Street; their chief commodities, Wooll, Cloth, Silks, Oyl, and ſome ſorts of Fruits; which they exchange for Dates, or Slaves, who are here good merchandiſe. The City for the moſt part fenced about with high craggy rocks; and where thoſe want, with ſtrong wals, of a great height, and moſt exquiſite workmanſhip, declaring the antiquity of it; A further argument whereof may be a fair Triumphal Arch not far from the City, and ſome Hot Bathes, after the manner of the Romans.

5. Moſt Weſtward lieth the Province of BUGIA, extended from Mount Conſtantine to the River Ampſaga, now called Chollo or Sef-Gemar: which with ſo much of Conſtantina as lieth on the Weſt-ſide of Rubricatus, made up that Province which the Romans called by the name of Numidia. The length hereof 150 miles on the Mediterranean, the breadth not above half ſo much. Narrower then Mauritania, as is ſaid by Pliny; ſed ditior & magis culta, but the richer of the two, and the better peopled. The Country of a fat ſoil, plentiful both in fruits and corn, but moſt fit for paſturage; to which the people were ſo addicted, that many of them cared not for building Houſes, (inſtead whereof they uſed the Hold of a Ship with the Keel turned upwards) but removed from one place to another, as their Paſtures failed them. From thence called Nomades by the Grecians, ἀπὸ τῆ νέμειν, ſignifying to feed or graſe. The people of good mettal, ſwift of foot, and well skilled in horſmanſhip; but better in the onſet and to give a charge, then in ſtanding to it: ſuch as the wild Arabians are now ſaid to be.

Chief Towns hereof (beſides Thuburnica, Culcua, Bona, Hippo, ſpoken of before, belonging to Numidia, though not to Bugia) 1. Bugia, built by the Romans on the ſide of a lofty Mountain looking into the Sea; by ſome conceived to have been the Thebuaca of Ptolomy, now the chief City of this Province, adorned with many ſumptuous Moſques, ſome Monaſteries and Colleges for Students in the Law of Mahomet, and many fair Hoſpitals for relief of the Poor; Fenced alſo with a ſtrong Caſtle. Secured by the ſtrength whereof, and growing rich by the fruitfulneſs of the ſituation, the Citizens began to grow proud and wanton; working much miſchief to the Spaniards by their Gallies which they had at ſea, till taught more modeſty by Peter of Navar a Spaniſh Captain, A. 1508. by whom the Town was taken, and the people plundered. 2. Chollo, upon the Sea-ſide, the Chollops Magnus (as I take it) of Ptolomie; reported for a wealthie City. 3. Nicaus, ſeated towards Mount Atlas, in a pleaſant and delightful country; which though interſperſed with many hils, yet being thoſe hils are clothed with woods, yield them good ſtore of Goats and Horſes, and feed the Vallies with freſh ſprings which do iſſue from them; they rather adde then detract any thing from the pleaſures of it. 4. Madaura, by ſome called Madurus, the birth-place of Apuleius. 5. Thunudromum, another of the Roman Colonies. 6. Cirta, or Cirta Julia, the Metropolis of Numidia when a Roman Province, and formerly the Seat-royal of Syphax King of the Maſaſyli, within whoſe country it was reckoned in former times, though afterwards laid unto this Province. Situate near the mouth of the River Ampſaga, and memorable for the tragedie of Sophonisba, the daughter of Aſdrubal of Carthage; a Lady of moſt exquiſite beauty, and yet carried more charms in her tongue then in her eyes. Eſpouſed firſt unto Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, but after upon reaſon of State married unto Syphax: who being took priſoner by his Rival, and brought to Cirta, the Lady upon hopes of liberty and honour both, beſtowed her ſelf on her firſt Lover: but Scipio fearing leſt that marriage might withdraw Maſiniſſa from the Roman party, cauſed the Lady to be ſeized on; which Maſiniſſa not being otherwiſe able to prevent or remedie, ſent her a Cup of poyſon, which ſhe drank and died.

Of theſe Numidians there is much mention in the Stories of Rome and Carthage; imployed by this laſt City in all their wars, both in Spain, Italy, and Sicil. Siding at laſt with Scipio againſt that State, they did good ſervice to the Romans in the weakening and deſtruction of that City; whoſe fall they did not long ſurvive: firſt conquered in the war of Jugurth; after the death of Juba, made a Roman Province. Their Kings, as far as I can trace the ſucceſſion of them, follow in this Order.

The

The Kings of the Numidians.

1 Gala, the Father of Maſiniſſa.

2 Deſalces, the brother of Gala; according to the laws of the Country, which gave the Crown unto the brother, not the ſon of the former King, (like the law of Taniſtry in Ireland) ſucceeded Gala.

3 N. N. a ſon of Deſalces, in the abſence of Maſiniſſa, then ſerving under the Carthaginians in the wars of Spain, poſſeſſed himſelf of the throne: ſlain not long after by a Rebel.

4 Maſiniſſa, ſon of Gala, recovered the kingdome of his Fathers; but again outed by Syphax and the Carthaginians, betwixt whom and Maſiniſſa, touching Sophonisba, there was deadly feud. Aided by Scipio and the Romans, with whom aſſociated againſt Carthage, he not only recovered his own kingdome, but was gratified with the greateſt part of that which belonged to Syphax. A profeſſed Enemy to Carthage, (the final ruine whereof he lived to ſee) till the time of his death, being then ninety years of Age.

5 Micipſa, the ſon of Maſiniſſa; of whom nothing memorable.

6 Jugurth, the ſon of Maſtanabilis, one of the Brethren of Micipſa, having wickedly made away the two ſons of Micipſa, uſurped the kingdom; & manifeſtly withſtood the Romans, whoſe attempts ſometimes by force, ſometimes by ſubtility, but chiefly by money and bribes, he overthrew and made fruſtrate: Et fuit in Ingurtha (ſaith Florus) quod poſt Annibalem timeretur. At laſt, being broken by Metellus, vanquiſhed by Marius, and by Bocchus delivered into the hands of Sylla, he was by Marius led in triumph to Rome. In this Triumph was carried 3700 pound weight in Gold; in Silver-wedges, 5775 pound weight; and in ready Coin, 28900 Crowns: it being the cuſtome of the Romans in their Triumphs, to have carried before them all the riches and mony which they had brought out of the conquered Countries, to put into the common Treaſury.

7 Hiempſal, ſon of Bocchus king of Mauritania; gratified for his Fathers treacherie in betraying Jugurth, with the kingdome of Numidia: Relieved Marius, in his exile.

8 Hiarbas, another of the Marian faction, preferred to the Numidian Crown, but vanquiſhed and deprived by Pompey, at that time one of Sylla's Captains.

9 Hiempſal II. preferred by Pompey to this kingdom.

10 Juba, the ſon of Hiempſal the ſecond, who ſiding with Pompey againſt Caſar, in the Civil wars, gave a great overthrow to Curio one of Caſar's Lieutenants; Curio himſelf ſlain, his whole Army routed, ſuch as were taken priſoners murdered in cold blood. But being diſcomfited by Caſar, after Pompey's death, Numidia was made a Province of the Roman Empire.

Thus by the fall of Carthage, and the death of Juba, came the whole Provinces of Africa Propria, and Numidia (containing the now Kingdom of Tunis) into the power of the Romans. Of which, the Nations of moſt note were the Nigitimi, on the Eaſtern parts of the Mediterranean, the Machyni, near the Leſſer Syrtis; the Libyæ-Phœnices and Mideni, bordering upon Carthage; the Ionii, Navatræ, and Cirteſii, taking up all the Sea-coaſts of Numidia. Such as inhabited more Southwards on the back of theſe, not ſo much conſiderable: None of them to be ſtaid upon, but the Libyæ-Phœnices, a mixt people of the old Libyans and new Phœnicians, as the Liby-Ægyptii were of the ſaid Libyans and the neighbouring Egyptians. The memory of all of them ſo defaced by the violent inundation of the Arabians, that there is ſcarce any tract or footſteps of them in all the Country. When conquered by the Saracens, they were at firſt ſubject to the Caliph or Sultan of Cairoan: after the ſpoile whereof by the Arabians, ſubdued by Abdul Mumen King of Morocco, and by him added to that Kingdom. In the diſtractions of that State, made a peculiar Kingdom by ſome of the Relicts of the Stock of the Almohades, who took unto himſelf the title of King of Tunis, that City being his chief Seat. By him tranſmitted unto his poſterity, till the dayes of our Grandfathers; when Muleaſſes, one of the youngeſt ſons of Sultan Mahomet, having firſt murdered Maimon his eldeſt brother, and put out the eyes of twenty of the reſt, uſurped the Soveraignty. Roſetta, the onely one of thoſe Princes who eſcaped this maſſacre, by the aid of Solyman the magnificent obtained the Crown: outed thereof not long after by Charles the fifth, appearing in favour of Muleaſſes, An. 1535. But the Tyrant did not long enjoy his ill-gotten Soveraignty, when his eyes were were alſo put out by his own ſon Amida, and ſo committed to cloſe priſon: Nor did Amida enjoy it long, diſpoſſeſſed by Abdamelech his fathers brother. To Abdamelech, Mahomet his ſon ſucceeded, and in his life another Mahomet the brother of Amida; who being ſupported by the Turks, recovered from the Chriſtians the ſtrong Fort of Goletta; and dying, left the Turk his heire, who doth now poſſeſſe it.

2. TREMESEN, or ALGIERS.

THe Kingdom of TREMESEN is bounded on the East with the River Ampſaga, (now called Maior) by which parted from the Kingdom of Tunis; on the West with the Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, from which ſeparated by the River Malutha or Malva. So called from Tremeſen or Teleuſine, the chief City of it. Called alſo the Kingdom of Algiers, from the City ſo named, ſometimes the Seat-royal of their Kings.

In the flouriſh of the Roman Empire, it had the name of Mauritania Cæſarienſis: Mauritania, becauſe a part of the Kingdom of Juba King of Mauritania, of which more anon; Cæſarienſis, from Cæſarea the chief City of it, as that ſo called in honour of Auguſtus Cæſar, on whom the Kings hereof depended. Time made more antiently the Kingdom of the Maſæſyli one of the moſt powerful Nations in all this tract, over whom reigned Syphax before mentioned; called therefore by Strabo, Maſæſylilia, with good propriety; and corruptedly, Maſſylia.

The Kingdom extended in length from East to West, for the ſpace of 380 miles, but of breadth not anſwerable: Is generally of the ſame nature (as to the Soil and Air) with the reſt of Barbary; ſufficiently fruitful towards the Sea, more barren and uncomfortable in the Southern parts. But meanly peopled, by reaſon of the continual ſpoils made by the Arabians, who poſſeſs the Deſarts; and the Cities of it much waſted by continual wars. Nor have the People any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of theſe Africans alſo.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1. Guagyda, inconveniently ſeated, as paying their accuſtomed tributes to the King of Tremeſen, their natural Prince, and contribution to the Arabians, who are here ſo numerous and powerful, that the Kings themſelves of this ſmall kingdom were fain to buy their peace of them at exceſſive rates. 2. Tigedent, ſomtimes famous, and abounding with men of learning; now almoſt forſaken, by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of theſe Arabians. 3. Tebocrit, inhabited for the moſt part by Weavers. 4. Breſch, the Inhabitants whereof uſe to paint a black Croſſe on their cheek, and another on the palm of their hands: the reaſon of which cuſtom they are ignorant of, but ſome conceive it to be a remembrance of their Chriſtianity. 5, Ned-Roma, built as the people do pretend, by the antient Romans, as an Epitome or Abridgment of that mighty City, to which it is ſaid to have ſome reſemblance; and that imported by the name, which ſignifieth in their language, Like to Rome. Perhaps the ſame which Ptolomy calleth Novum oppidum or the New-town, then a Roman Colonie. 6. Batha, once a great City, ſince decaied by wars. 7. Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, ſaid to contain no fewer then 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infeſting with their Gallies the Coaſts of Spain; till taken for Ferdinand the Catholick, by Peter of Navar A. 1506. ſince which time peopled & poſſeſſed by the Spaniards: In vain beſieged by the Turks, A. 1562. 8. Maſalquivir, a fair and capacious Haven on the ſame Sea alſo, and taken by the ſaid Peter of Navar, about the ſame time. 9. Hareſgol, in former times of much eſteem amongſt the Moors; but being deſtroyed by the King or Sultan of Cairoan, it bequeathed its greatneſs unto Tremeſen, which after grew into renown. 10. Tremeſen, once adorned with many beautiful Moſques, and five ſumptuous Colleges, curiouſly wrought with Moſaick work. So populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 families; and ſo well fortified, that it held out ſeven years againſt Joſeph the great King of Feſſe: not taken after that, though they were very much weakned by Abulthaſen or Albohacen his ſon, ſucceſſor, under a ſiege of 30 moneths. By thoſe, and the ſucceeding troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in ſtrength and beauty. More antient, 11. Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colonie; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, ſometimes Kings of this Country. 12. Arſenaria, another Colonie of the Romans. 13. Jol, the ſeat-royal of king Bocchus, after ſuch time as this country was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Cæſarea, in honor of Auguſtus Cæſar, whoſe Fendatories the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as ſome ſay, in honor of Claudius Cæſar, by whom made a Colonie: the Metropolis of it alſo when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Cæſarienſis. Situate in or near the place where Oran now ſtands, which ſeemeth to have riſen out of the ruines of it. 14. Saldæ, a Roman Colonie alſo, out of whoſe ruines roſe Algiers. 15. Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezeir, now the chief City of this Kingdom, ſituate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven to it, but neither great, nor ſafe from the north-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautiful; the publike Innes, Bathes, and Moſques, exceeding ſumptuous; every Trade having a ſeveral place or ſtreet by it ſelf. But that which is the greateſt grace of it, is the ſituation of the houſes ſtanding in even ſtreets one above another upon the riſing of a ſteep Hill; ſo that the windows of one ſtreet or row of houſing do all along overlook the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a moſt pleaſant proſpect. A City not ſo large, as ſtrong; and not ſo ſtrong, as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and retrait-place of the Turkiſh Pirats, who domineer ſo infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations, that frequent thoſe ſeas. Famous alſo for the ſhipwrack which Charles the fifth here ſuffered, who beſieging this Town, loſt in the haven of it at one tempeſt, beſides an infinite number of Karvels and ſmall Boats, divers ſtrong Gallies, 140 ſhips, a great many excellent peeces of Ordinance; ſuch a number of gallant Horſes, that in Spain the race of horſes for ſervice had like to have been loſt for ever; and above half his men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes, (but Homagers or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremeſen) till ſuch time as Selimes and Mahomet falling out, made the firſt, and that an irreparable breach in the Government. For Selimes, to ſtrengthen his ſide,

ſide, implored the aid of Hairaccius Barbaroſſa, a noble Pirate; who taking his beſt advantage, ſlew the disjointed Brethren, and ſetled himſelf in the kingdom: which he had ſcarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Barbaroſſa his brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Bugia, and was ſo renowned for Martial proweſſe, that Solyman the magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: which office, when to the prejudice of Chriſtendome he had fortunately and for long time undergone; he died lamented, and made the Turk the heir of his kingdom; the kingdom of Tremeſen being made ſubject to the Turks much about that time. 16. Tetuan, and 17. Sargel, ſituate Weſtward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Pyracie.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpiditani, Taladuſii, Thalaſſii, Malchubii, Maccurebi, Chitua, and others of as little note; the moſt predominant Nation being the Maſaſyli, over whom (and in that over all the reſt) reigned Syphax, ſpoken of before; unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophonisba; for whoſe ſake ſiding with the Carthaginians againſt the Romans, he was vanquiſhed and ſent priſoner to Rome. His kingdom given to Maſiniſſa King of the Numidians, continued in his line till the death of Jugurth; and then beſtowed upon the Kings of Mauritania, part of whoſe kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperor Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens, it followed the fortunes of theſe laſt, while they ſtood and flouriſhed: But growing into many diſtractions, and every Sultan or Provincial Governour ſhifting for himſelf, it became a Kingdom, under the ſtile and title of the Kingdom of Tremeſen. The majeſty of it much impaired by Abulthaſen or Albohacen King of Feſſe, who brought it, not long after, under his command. Recovering after ſome ſhort time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and ſo continued till the time of Abuchemen; who incurring the hatred of his people, becauſe by his ſupine neglect the Spaniards had ſurpriſed and taken Oran and Maſalquivir, their two beſt Havens, made an eaſie paſſage for his brother Abuzeiden to the Regal diadem. Abuzeiden ſcarce well ſetled, loſt it to Hairadine Barbaroſſa, An. 1515. He to Charles the fifth, by whom Abuchemen was reſtored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his ſucceſſor Abdulla, weary of the Spaniſh ſervitude, put himſelf under the protection of Solyman the magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his deceaſe he left the poſſeſſion of his Kingdom alſo; ever ſince ſubject to the Turks; whoſe Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for theſe African Provinces, reſides for the moſt part in Algiers, and hath 40000 Timariots under his command.

3. FESSE, & 4. MOROCCO.

THeſe Kingdoms I have joyned in title, becauſe united for the moſt part in the ſtorie and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Eſtate under the Xeriffes of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of Hiſtory, though of a different conſideration in the way of Chorography.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly ſo called; divided antiently into Tingitana, and Sitifenſis: Cæſarienſis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Maſæſyli and the reſt of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accompted any part thereof, till the death of Iugurth, when given to Bocchus King hereof, in reward of his treaſon for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, when that name firſt given; the word Tania, ſignifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britannia, Luſitania, Aquitania, and perhaps ſome others; and the name of Mauri given them ἀπὸ τῦ Μαυρῦ, which ſignifieth amongſt other things obſcure or black, by reaſon of the darkneſſe of their complexion. Accompted in their times, an hardy, but a bloody people; careleſſe of life, fearleſſe of death; implacable, if once offended, their thirſt of revenge not to be quenched but by blood. Mauri ſunt genus hominum ſuapte natura cædis avidiſſimum, nihilque non facile audens, & deſperatis ſimiles, contemptu viz. mortis & periculorum: the character given of them in Herodians time, and it holds good ſtill; notwithſtanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the ſame nation with them, and paſſing by the ſame name in the Writers of the middle time. Poſt hæc Mauri totam Hiſpaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam &c. dominio ſuo manciparunt, as my Author hath it; where by Moors we are to underſtand the Saracens which came out of Africk.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1. Atlas Minor, ſo called to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is ſeven degrees more North, but ſhooteth as that doth with a point or Promontory into the main Atlantick Ocean, on the South of Salla. 2. Durdus, extended alſo into Cæſarienſis. 3. Diur, 4. Phocra, of which little memorable. Rivers of moſt note, 1. Sala, 2. Subur, 3. Zilia, 4 Phuth, 5. Diur, 6. Cuſa; all falling into the Atlantick: this laſt the ſame, as I conjecture, which our modern Writers call Ommirabili. And for the reſt, we muſt find amongſt them, 1. Sifelmel, 2. Tenſiſt, 3. Niffis, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonitæ neer the Streits, giving name unto Metagonitis an adjoyning Promontory; the Succoſii, Verbicæ, Nectiberes, Vacuatæ, Voli; and on the Eaſt-ſide the Maureſii. Theſe laſt participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Mauruſii: The Etymologie as before. Their deſcent originally from Phut, the ſon of Cham; whoſe memory preſerved here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Chanaanites, of the ſame extraction, ſerved but as an Acceſſory. From thoſe two fountains ſprang the whole Nation of the Mauri. Governed by Kings; the moſt conſiderable of which when firſt known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Jugurth his friend and ſon in law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that treacherie with the Country of the Maſæſyli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hiempſal one of his ſons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole Eſtates of Bocchus, Syphax, and Maſiniſſa, united by this means in the perſon of Juba one of his poſterity; the moſt potent Prince of all theſe parts: who falling in the African war againſt Julius Cæſar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Criſpus Saluſtius being made the firſt Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Ampſagus, he gave to Bocchus and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but deſcended of the old Regal family. Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony againſt Auguſtus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other ſide, diſpoſſeſſed of his part, (that which now makes the Kingdom of Feſſe) in which confirmed for his good ſervice, by the conquering Emperor. Juba the ſon of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of a Priſoner made a Prince; inveſted after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Auguſtus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the marriage of Selene, daughter of Antony and Cleopatra. After whoſe death, and the death of Ptolomy their ſon, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the patrimony of the Roman Empire; divided into two Provinces, viz. Cæſarienſis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Ampſaga, now the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Weſtern Ocean. This laſt divided into Tingitana, and Sitifenſis, (the River now called Ommirobili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperor Conſtantine: who leaving Sitifenſis to the Dioceſe of Africk, laid Tingitana (why I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens; they became members of thoſe Empires; in the declining of the laſt, divided into the two Kingdoms of Feſſe and Morocco, to the deſcription and hiſtory whereof we do now proceed.

3. MOROCCO.

THe Kingdom of MOROCCO hath on the Eaſt the River Malva, by which parted from Tremeſen; on the Weſt, the Atlantick Ocean; on the South Mount Atlas; and on the North the Kingdom of Feſſe. So called from Morocco, the chief City of it; in former times known by the name of Mauritania Sitifenſis, from Sitiphis, in thoſe times the principal City, as Procopius telleth us.

The Country ſaid to be fruitful of all things neceſſary to life, pleaſing to the ſight, and ſweet to ſmell to: particularly, well ſtored with Grain and Pulſe, plentiful of Oyl, Honey and Sugar, liberally furniſhed with Dates, Grapes, Figs, Apples, Pears, and all ſorts of Fruits; exceedingly well ſtocked with Cattel, but with Goats eſpecially, whoſe skins afford a very excellent kind of leather, and of their fleece materials for the fineſt Chamlets, which are here made in moſt of their Cities. The whole Country divided commonly into theſe ſeven parts, viz. 1. Guzzula, 2. Sus, 3. Morocco ſpecially ſo called, 4. Hea, 5. Haſcora, 6. Duccala, and 7. Tedles.

1. GUZZULA, the moſt Southern Province of this Kingdom hath on the Eaſt ſome part of Tremeſen, on the Weſt Sus or Suſa, from which parted by a ridge of Mountains called Ilda; on the South Mount Atlas; and on the North, part of the territory of Morocco, and the reſt of Suſa. The Country rich in Mines of Braſſe, Iron, and other metals, of which are made many Utenſils for domeſtick uſes, exported hence into other places. The People barbarous and rude, not eaſily acknowledging ſubjection to the Kings of Morocco; and at continual wars amongſt themſelves, except only for two moneths in the year; which being the time of their publike Marts, and then much viſited with Strangers from other Countries, they lay aſide their private quarrels, and cheerfully entertain ſuch Merchants as repair unto them. Walled Towns here are not any, but ſome very great Villages; the chief whereof, 1. Guzula, on the Northern bank of the River Sus, whence the name of the Province. 2. Tagreſſa, not far off, but on the other ſide of the water, towards the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Tedza, inclining towards the borders of Morocco. Of theſe nothing memorable.

2. Weſt of Guzzula, lieth the Province of SUS or SUSA, ſo called from the River Sus, (with which well watered) or giving name to it. Rich in Gold-Mines, the cauſe of continual wars amongſt the people; well ſtored with Sugar-Canes, which the Inhabitants know neither how to boyl nor purifie; and on the Sea-ſhores furniſhed with great plenty of Amber, bought by the Portugals of the people at an eaſie rate. Chief Towns hereof, 1. Cape D'Aguer, on a Promontory ſo called; a place of ſuch importance to the Portugals, that the taking of it by Mahomet then King of Sus (after of Morocco alſo) made them all the Forts which they had in this Country. 2. Tagavaſt, a rich and wealthy Town, the greateſt in the Province, and ſituate in a large Plain near the foot of Mount Atlas. 3. Teijent, ſituate in a ſpacious Plain alſo, but on the banks of the River Sus: divided into three parts, each a mile from the other; which joyned together, make the exact figure of a Triangle. 4. Meſſa, or Maſſa, ſeated at the influx of the ſaid River, on the Promontory called Cape Gilon: three Towns in one; not much the better for the Sea, and but ill befriended by the Land, as ſeated in a barren and unpleaſing ſoile; remarkable for a fair Temple, the beams and rafters of which are made of the bones of Whales, which uſually are left dead on the ſhore. 5. Tarodant, a large Town, built by the Africans, before the conqueſt of this Country by the Goths or Saracens; the Reſidence of the Vice-Roy for the Kings of Feſſe, when the Lords of this kingdom, but more enriched of late by the Merchants of France and England, who have here a Staple for their Sugars. By this Commerce the people made more civil then in other parts of this Province: the whole number of them thought to amount to 3000 families. 6. Tedza, more within the land, bigger then Taradant, but leſs wealthy; the chief Ornament of it being a fair Mahometan Temple, liberally furniſhed with Prieſts and Readers of that Law, at the common charge. Not far from hence the Hill Anchiſa, where it ſnoweth at all ſeaſons of the year, and yet the people go extreme thin in the ſharpeſt Winter. Nothing elſe memorable of this Province, but that a little before the Xeriffe made himſelf King of Morocco, it had the title of a Kingdom, and gave the title of King to Mahomet the ſecond Xeriffe, made King of Taradant or Sus, before he diſpoſſeſſed his brother of the Crown of Morocco. 3. Northward of Sus, lieth the Province of MOROCCO, ſpecially ſo called, the moſt fruitful and beſt peopled part of Barbary; not much unlike to Lombardy in wealth, and pleaſures: the very Hills hereof as fruitful as the Vallies in other places. To which fertility of the ſoil, the Rivers 1 Tenſift, and 2 Aſifinuad, give no ſmall advantage, though much defaced by the frequent incurſions of the Portugals, who have extreamly ſpoiled this Country. Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Delgumaba, built upon a very high Mountain, and environed with many other Hills; at the foot whereof the Fountain of Aſifinuad. 2. Elgiumuba, a ſmall but ancient Town, on the River Siſſeva. 3. Teſraſt, a ſmall Town upon Aſifinuad. 4. Imizmizi, ſituate on a Rock, ſpacious, and ſeated neer the entrance of a narrow way leading into Guzzala. 5. Tenezze, an old Town, but very well fortified. 6. Agnet, upon the River Tenſift, all ruined except the Fort, and ſome ſcattered houſes: formerly ſecond unto none but Morocco, (from which diſtant 24 miles) the Hils and Valley about it adorned with pleaſant Gardens, fruitful Vineyards, a fair River, and Fields ſo fertile that they yield a fifty-fold increaſe. 7. Secſina, where they have ſnow at all times of the year. 8. Temnella, an Heretical Town, differing in opinion from the reſt of the Mahometan Sect; and ſo well-grounded in their Tenets, that they challenge all their Oppoſites to a Diſputation. 9. Hantera, very full of Jewes. 10. Morocco, the principal of this Province, and of all the Kingdom, ſituate in or near the place where once ſtood the Bocanum Hemerum of Ptolomy. Once reckoned amongſt the greateſt Cities of the World, at what time it was ſaid to contain 100000 families: ſince ſo defaced and waſted by the depredations of the Arabians, and the removal of the Seat-Royal to Feſſe, when that Kingdom was in the Aſcendent, that it is hardly a third part ſo great as formerly. The founder of it Joſeph, ſirnamed Teleſinus, the ſecond King of the houſe of the Almoravides; but much enlarged and beautified by Abdul-Mumen, one of his ſucceſſors. The principal buildings in it, are the Church and the Caſtle: the Church of Moſque, one of the greateſt in the World, adorned with many ſumptuous pillars, brought out of Spain, when the Moors had the poſſeſſion of that Country; and beautified with a ſtately Steeple, in compaſs at the bottom an hundred yards, and of ſo great height, that the Hils of Azati (one of the branches of the Leſſer Atlas) being 130 miles diſtant, may be thence eaſily diſcerned: the Caſtle very large, and ſtrong, on a Tower whereof ſtand three Globes made of pure Gold, weighing 130000 Barbary-Duckets; which divers Kings have gone about to take down and convert into money, but all deſiſted in regard of ſome croſſe accident or other which befell them in it; inſomuch that the common people think them to be guarded with ſpirits.

4. North of Morocco, on the further ſide of Tenſift and Aſifinuad, is the Province of HEA: Rough, mountainous, and woody, yet watered with many pleaſant Rils, and would be plentiful enough in all commodities, if the induſtry of the people were not wanting to it. A ſort of people little better then meerly barbarous, without all Artiſts either Ingenious or Mechanick; except ſome Chirurgeons, whom they keep to circumciſe their Children; and ſome few Teachers of their Law, which can hardly read. Their food a Pap made of Barley-meal, which in ſtead of Spoons they claw forth with their fingers; the Ground they eat on, ſerving for table, ſtools and napkins. At endleſs feud with one another; yet ſo kind to ſtrangers, that in one of their chief Towns, called 1 Tedneſt, the Gentlemen uſed to caſt lots who ſhould entertain them. A town of good eſteem in former times, ſituate in a large Plain on the River Tenſift: but in the year 1514. almoſt wholly abandoned, upon a rumor that the Arabians had a purpoſe to ſell it to the Portugals. 2. Teculeth, ſeated on a good Port, and once very well traded, there being in it at that time 1000 families, ſome Hoſpitals, and a beautiful Moſque; in the year 1514. deſtroyed by the Portugals. 3. Tenent, a Sea-town in the hands of the Portugals. 4. Elmuridin, a ſtrong peece, as the name importeth, the word ſignifying the Diſciples Fort; ſo called, becauſe a certain Heretick in the Law of Mahomet (whereof this Kingdom yields good plenty) retired hither with his Diſciples, fortified it and defended it againſt the King of Morocco. 5. Iguillinguiguil, ſeated on the top of an hill, and fortified by the Country-people (or old African-Moors) againſt the Arabians. 6. Tefethne, beautified with a pretty Haven, but not capable of any great ſhipping. 7. Tagleſſe, a Den of Thieves and Cut-throats. 8. Teſegdelt; as courteous and civil, as the other barbarous: At the Gates whereof a Guard is ſet for entertainment of Strangers; whom if they have no acquaintance there, they are to provide of Accommodation in ſome Gentlemans houſe, where it coſts them nothing but thanks, and ſome kind acknowledgment.

5. Northwards of Hea, ſtands the Province of DUCALA, bounded on the Weſt with the main Atlantick, and on the North with the River Ommirobili, by which parted from the Kingdom of Feſſe. Of three dayes journy long, about two in breadth; thruſting into the Ocean with a craggy Promontory, which ſome of the Ancients called Vlagium, others the Promontory of the Sun; but by the Chriſtians of Europe called the Cape of Cantin; by the Moors, Gebelelhudic. Populous enough, the quality of the men conſidered, ignorant both of letters and of all good manners: Yet not ſo populous as it hath been in former times, much of the Country being abandoned for fear of the Portugals, who have taken all their beſt towns on the Sea-coaſt, and deſtroyed the reſt. Amongſt theſe, 1. Azaſi, at the foot of the hils ſo called; ſurpriſed by the Portugals, under colour of making a Store-houſe for their Merchandiſe. 2. Azamez, ſeated at the mouth of the River Ommirobili, the furtheſt town of this kingdom towards that of Feſſe; the people whereof were extremely addicted unto Sodomy, till ſubdued by the Portugeze. 3. Elmedina, once the Metropolis of this Province; but now for fear of thoſe Invaders, in a manner deſolated. 4. Conte, of the foundation of the Goths. 5. Tic, built by the old African Moors, but poſſeſſed by the Portugals. 6. Subeit, 7. Teneracoſt, 8 Centpuis, 9. Terga, 10. Bulahuan; all ſacked and ruined by the ſame people, when they took Azamor (the Key of this Province) which was in the year 1513. At which time it is ſaid, that Mahomet King of Feſſe paſsing through this Province with an Army to repreſs theſe inſolencies, at every Altar (whereof here are many in the Roads) kneeled, and ſaid unto this effect: Lord, thou knoweſt that the cauſe of my coming into this Wild place, is only to free this people of Duccola from the rebellious and wicked Arabians, and their cruel Enemies the Chriſtians: which purpoſe if thou doeſt not approve of, let the puniſhment fall upon my perſon, but not upon my followers who deſerve it not. With greater piety then could be looked for from a blind Mahometan.

6. Eaſtward of Duccala, along the banks of Ommirobili, lieth the Province of HASCORA, a fruitful Country, intermixt of rich fields and pleaſant gardens: furniſhed with moſt ſorts of choiſeſt fruits, and amongſt others, Grapes of ſuch extraordinary greatneſs, that they are ſaid to be as big as a Pullets egg; Good ſtore of Honey it hath alſo, and ſome Mines of Iron. Inhabited by a more civil people then any of the reſt, and conſequently more deſerving ſo rich a ſoil. Places of moſt importance in it. 1. Ezo, an old town, ſituate on a lofty mountain. 2. Eluinina, of a later erection. 3. Alemdine, conquered for the King of Feſſe by a Merchant, whoſe Paramour the Prince or Governour hereof had taken from him: Situate in a pleaſant, but little Valley, but begirt with hils, and well inhabited by Gentlemen, Merchants, and Artificers. 4. Tagodaſt, on the top of an hill, environed with four others of equal height.

7. More Eaſt, betwixt Haſcora and the River Malva, is the Province of TEDLES, bounded on the Eaſt with the Kingdom of Tremeſen, and on the North with that of Feſſe, from which laſt parted by the River Servi, which on the North-eaſt border of it meets with Ommirobili. The whole Province in form triangular; of no great either length or breadth, but ſufficiently fruitful, and well inhabited for the bigneſs. Some Towns it hath, and thoſe not meanly populous for ſo ſmall a Province; the chief whereof, 1. Teſza, built by the old African-Moors, and beautified with many Mahometan Moſques; the wals of which made of a kind of Marble, which they here call Teſza, whence the name of the town. 2. Eſza, ſeated on the River Ommirobili, where it receiveth that of Deyme, which riſing out of Atlas-Minor, and paſsing by Teſza laſt mentioned, doth here loſe its name. 3. Chythite, renowned for the ſtout reſiſtance which it hath made from time to time againſt thoſe of Feſſe. 4. Ethiad, abounding in all ſorts of victuals.

Theſe Provinces make up the Kingdom of Morocco: infeſted miſerably while it remained ſubject to the Kings of Feſſe, by the Portugals on the one ſide, and the wild Arabians on the other. Concerning which laſt people we are to know, that when the Saracens conquered Africk, they contented themſelves with the command, and left unto the Natives the poſſeſsion of it; forbidding the Arabians (with whoſe courſe of life they were well acquainted) to paſſe over Nilus. Elcain, the laſt of the ſucceſſors of Hucba in the Kingdom of Cairoan, having ſubdued the reſt of Africk, and added it unto his Eſtate, paſſed forwards into Egypt, which he conquered alſo, aſſuming to himſelf the title of Caliph: But in his abſence, the Lieutenant whom he left in Africk rebelled againſt him, and acknowledging the Caliph of Bagdet for his lawful Lord, received of him for this good ſervice the Kingdom of Africa. Deſpairing to recover his loſt Eſtate, and yet not willing that it ſhould be uſeful unto his Enemies, he licenced the Arabians, for a Ducat a man, to paſſe over the Nile with their tents and families: On which agreement, almoſt half the Tribes of Arabia Deſerta, and many of Arabia Felix, went into Africa; where they ſacked Tripolis, Cairoan, and the reſt of the principal Cities; tyrannizing over all Barbary, till reſtrained at laſt by Joſeph the founder of Morocco, (of whom more hereafter.) Since which time, though they loſt their unlimited Empire, yet they ſtill ſwarm like Locuſts over all the Country; and neither apply themſelves to tillage, or building houſes, or any civil courſe of life; nor ſuffer thoſe to live in quiet, who would otherwiſe manure and improve the Country. The reſt of the Storie of theſe Kingdoms we ſhall have anon, when we have taken a Survey of the Kingdom of Feſſe.

4. FESSE.

THe Kingdom of FESSE is bounded on the South with the Realm of Morocco, on the North with parts of the Atlantick and Mediterranean; on the Eaſt with Malva, parting it from the Kingdom of Tremeſen; and on the Weſt with the Atlantick wholly.

It takes this name from Feſſe the chief City of it. Known to the Ancients by the name of Mauritania Tingitana, ſo called from the City Tingis (now Tanger) then of greateſt note. Called alſo Hiſpania Tranſfretana, Spain on the other ſide of the Sea, becauſe a part of that Dioceſe: and by ſome (Pliny amongſt others) Bogudiania, from Bogud one of the Kings hereof, to whom given by Ceſar: by others Ampeluſia, from its abundance of Vines. The Inhabitants of it, by the Spaniards, now called Alarbes.

The

The Country of good temperature in regard of the Air, if not in some places of the coldest: but very unequally disposed of in respect of the Earth; here being in it many Desarts and large Forrests, not well inhabited; but intermixt with many rich and delightful Fields. So that taking the estimate in the gross, it may be said to be a rich and flourishing Country, hardly inferior unto any. The particularities of which are to be considered in the Characters of the several Provinces, into which it now doth stand divided, that is to say, 1 Temesna, 2 Fesse specially so called, 3 Elchaus or Chaus, 4 Garet, 5 Algara, 6 Erritis, and 7 Habat.

1. TEMESNA hath on the South the River Ommirabili, on the West the Ocean; extended in length from West to East 80 miles, and in breadth 70. A champain Country, very level; and once so populous, that it contained 40 Cities, and 300 Castles; most of them ruined by the wars, and the wild Arabians, the greater destroyer of the two. The principal of those remaining, 1 Teyeget, neer the River Ommirabili, once of greater note, but now inhabited only by poor people, and a few Smiths compelled to live there for the making of Iron-instruments to manure the land. 2 Thagia, on the course of the said River; much visited by those of Fesse, for the Sepulchre of an holy Prophet, who was there interred; the Fessans going thither in pilgrimage with such numbers of men, women and children, that their Tents seem sufficient to lodge an Army. 3 Adendun, more towards the Sea, but on a small River called Guirla, well walled, and fenced on one side by a Lake or Pool. 4 Amsa, on the shore of the Atlantick, once of great trade, and well frequented both by the English and the Portugals, by which last destroyed. 5 Munsor, destroyed in like manner by the wild Arabians. 6 Nuchaida, situate in so fertile and rich a soil, that the inhabitants would have given a Camels burden of Corn for a pair of shooes; Nothing now left of it but one Steeple, and a piece of the wall. 7 Rabut or Rubut, built by Mansor, or Almansor, a King of Morocco, neer the mouth of the River Burugrug, and by him made one of the best peopled Towns in Africk; built after the model of Morocco, but now so wasted, that there are not in it above 500 families; most of the ground within the wals being turned into meadows, vineyards and gardens. 8 Fanzara, on the River Subu, the Subur of Ptolomy, falling not far off into the other. 9 Mahmora, in the same tract also, once possessed by the Spaniards; neer which the Portugals received a great defeat by the King of Fesse, for want of good intelligence betwixt them and the Castilians. 10 Salla, the Sala of Ptolomy, by the inhabitants called Zale, in ordinary Maps by mistaking, Cale; at the mouth of the River Rebato, which the antient Writers called Sala, as they named the Town. Beautified by King Almansor (who is here interred) with a stately Palace, a goodly Hospital, a fair Temple, and an Hall of Marble, cut in Mosaich works: intended for the burial-place of his posterity. A town much traded formerly by the Christian Merchants, of England, Flanders, Genoa and the Golf of Venice. Took by the Spaniards An. 1287. and within ten dayes lost again: and of late times made a nest of Pyrates, as dangerous to those which sailed in the Ocean, as the Pirates of Algiers to the Mediterrean. Whose insolencies the King of Morrcco not able to suppress for want of shipping, desired the aid of His Majesty Charles King of Great-Britain; by whom the Town being blocked up by Sea, and besieged to the Landward by the King of Morocco, it was at last compelled to yield, the works thereof dismantled, the Pirates executed, and 300 Christian Captives sent unto His Majesty, to be by him restored to their former liberty; to the great honour of His Majesty, and the English Nation, An 1632.

As for the fortunes of this Province, they have been somwhat different from the rest of this Kingdom; trained by a factious Prophet to revolt from the King of Fesse and Morocco, whose Estate they very much endangered, sending an Army of 50000 men to the Gates of Morocco. But being discomfited by Joseph, sirnamed Telephinus, he followed them into their own Country, which he wasted with great cruelty for ten moneths together, consuming above a million of them, and leaving the Province to the mercy of Wolves and Lyons. Repeopled afterwards by Almansor with Arabian Colonies: Given about fifty years after that, by the Princes of the Marine family, to more civil Inhabitants, by whom the Arabians were expelled, and the Province consequently reduced into some good Order.

2. Westward of Temesna lieth the Province of FESSE, properly and specially so called. Extended in length from the River Burugrug to the River Inavis, for the space of 100 miles. A very fruitful Province, well stored with Cattel, and exceeding populous; the Villages hereof as big as the better sort of Towns in other places; but contrary to the custom of other Countries, better inhabited on the hils then amongst the vallies; the people making choice of the mountains for their habitation, as places of defence and safety; but husbanding the vallies which lie neerest to them. Places of most consideration in it, 1. Macarmeda, on the River Inavis, in a goodly Plain, but in a manner all ruined except the wals. 2 Gualili, memorable for the Sepulchre of Idris, the first founder of Fesse. 3 Peitra Rossa, where they have some Lyons so tame, that they will gather up bones in the streets like dogs, without hurting any body. 4 Agla, where they have brought their Lyons to so strange a cowardise, that they will run away at the voice of a child; whence a Bracchadochio is called proverbially a Lyon of Aga. 5 Pharao, by reason of the name thought by the Vulgar to be founded by some King of Egypt; but the Latine Inscriptions therein found, declare it to have been some work of the antient Romans. 6 Maquille, of more antiquity then note. 7 Fesse, the Metropolis of this Province, and the chief of the Kingdom, supposed to be the Volubilis of Ptolomy, but much enlarged and beautified by some new Accessions. Situate for the most part upon little hillocks, and watered by a pleasant and gentle Rivers (derived by Aquæducts and Conduits, into all parts of the City) which they now call the River of Fesse, conceived by ſome learned men to be that which was anciently called Phuth, from Phut the firſt Planter of the African Nations. A City ſo beautifull and well ſeated, as if Nature and Art had plaid the Wantons, and brought this forth as the fruit of their dalliance. The Founder or enlarger of it, one of the Race of the falſe Prophet Mahomet, his name Idris, who built on the Eaſt ſide of the River; that on the Weſt ſide, being the Work of one of his ſons: both ſo increaſing that at laſt they were joyned together. To theſe the Suburbs being added, have made a third. The whole called Feſſe, from Fez, an Arabick word, ſignifying Gold, whereof great quantity was found when they digged the Foundations: Divided into three parts, by the River, all of which contain 82000 houſholds, and 700 Moſchees, or Saracenicall Temples: the chief of which is Carne, or Carnven, being a mile and a half in compaſs. It hath 31 gates, great and high; the roof is 150 yards long, and 80 broad: round about are divers Porches, containing 40 yards in length, and 30 in breadth; under which, are the publike ſtore-houſes of the Town. About the walls are Pulpits of divers ſorts, wherein the Maſters of their Law read unto the people, ſuch things, as they think to pertain to their ſalvation. The Revenue hereof is 200 Ducats a day of the old Rents; for ſo it was, Anno 1526. when Leo Afer wrote. The Merchants have here a Court, or Exchange, incloſed with a ſtrong wall, with 12 Gates, and 15 ſtreets. There is alſo a Colledge called Amarodoc, a moſt curious and delicate building. It hath three Cloyſters of admirable beauty, ſupported with 8 ſquare pillars of divers colours: The roof curiouſly carved, and the Arches of Moſaique work of gold and azure. The gates are of braſs, fair wrought; and the doors of the private chambers of inlayed Work. This Colledge did coſt the Founder, King Abuchenen, or Abu Henen, 480000 Crowns. Here are finally ſaid to be in it many Hoſpitals, little inferior to the Colledges in building and beauty, all very liberally endowed; and about an hundred hot Bathes well built, with four Halls to each, and certain Galleries without, where they put off their clothes when they go to bathe themſelves: and beſides theſe 200 Inns, built three ſtories high, each of them having 120 Chambers in it, with Galleries before all the doors for their Gueſts to walk in.

3. Eaſtward of the Territory of Feſſe, lieth the Province of CHAUS, extended in length from the River Gurngrut, or Gurguigarn, by which parted from Temeſna, and Feſſe, to the borders of Tremeſen for the ſpace of 190 miles, and 170 miles in breadth. So that it is thought to contain one third part of the whole Kingdom: but meanly populous for the bigneſs, the Country being poor and barren, and the Inhabitants fierce and warlike; more given to proſecute their quarrels, then to Trade or Tillage. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Ham Liſnan, a Town built in the more mountainous parts of the Country by the old Africans. Famous for the Temple of an Idol here worſhipped; to which at certain times men and women reſorted in the night; where, after their devotions ended, and the Candles put out, every man lay with the woman he firſt touched; the exact platform of the Family of Love, if all be true which is told us of them; and anciently, but falſly, charged on the Primitive Chriſtians. 2 Tezza, adorned with three Colledges, many Baths, and Hoſpitals, and ſome beautifull Temples; one of them larger, though not fairer then that of Feſſe; in both Towns men of the ſame Trade have a ſtreet by themſelves: for greatneſs, wealth, and numbers of People, eſteemed the third City of this Kingdom. 3 Dubdu, an ancient Town, but not much obſervable. 4 Teurert, ſeated on the top of an Hill, in the midſt of a Plain, but compaſſed about with Deſarts. 5 Beni Jeſſeten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greateſt bravery and wealth conſiſteth: the women here wearing Iron-rings for ornaments to their ears and fingers. 6 Tezergui, ſubject to the Arabians. 7. Adaggia, the moſt Eaſtern Town of all this Region, ſituate in a Peninſula, made by the confluences of Muluſo and Malva. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which riſing out of a great Lake in the woods of the Mountain Seligus, and receiving many leſſer waters, with a large and Navigable ſtream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Chaus lieth the Region called GARET, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching Eaſt and Weſt from the River Malva, where it bordereth on Tremeſen, to that of Nochor, where it toucheth on Errif, and Algaria. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The ſoyl in moſt places dry and deſart, like the Sands of Numidia: eſpecially all along the banks of the Malva, neer unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly deſart and unpeopled, not well inhabited in the moſt fruitfull parts of it, being full of mountains; the worſe for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, poſſeſſed of 1 Cheſuſa, and 2 Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3 Pennon de Veles, by ſome called Velez de Gomenera, ſituate on the ſhore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Gothes; but now in the poſſeſſion of the Spaniards alſo. 4 Jafferin, ſituate on the Sea alſo, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family. 5 Tezzora ſtanding on an hill, to which there is but one paſſage only.

5. Weſtward of Garet lieth ASGARA, extended from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South eaſt-ſide with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which laſt runneth the River Luccus, called Lix by Ptolomy. The Aire hereof very temperate, and the ſoyl as fertile; ſupplying with the over-plus of its Commodities, the mountainous parts of Feſſe, and the Deſarts of Garet. Once full of Towns, till ruined and deſtroyed by the wars. A Monument whereof, 1 Ginmba, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches. 2 Larache, in Lutine Lariſſa, the Lixa of Ptolomy, ſituate at the mouth of the Lix or Luccus, and furniſhed with a good Port, but of difficult entrance, garriſoned when poſſeſſed by the Moors with 300 light horſe, and 300 Harcabuziers; but better fortified then before, ſince poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, into whoſe hands it it was put by Muley-Sheck king of Morocco and Feſſe, when worſted by Muley Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the civil Wars betwixt them. 3 Cuſar Elcabin, given by Almanſer to a poor Fiſher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he loſt his Company in Hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a ſtately Hoſpital.

6. On the North of Aſgara is the Province of EL-HABAT, or HABAT coaſting along the Atlantick Ocean to the mouth of the Straits, in length 100 miles, about 80 in breadth. The Country very plentifull of all manner of neceſſaries and very well Peopled; the mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times repleniſhed with many Cities, both of the foundation of the Gothes, Romans, and old African Moors, now much diminiſhed by the Wars. Thoſe of moſt note, 1 Ezaggen, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient Priviledge granted by the Kings of Feſſe, were licenſed to drink wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a mountain, neer the River Guarga, about 35 leagues from Feſſe; and garriſoned with 400 Horſe for fear of the Portugals, who ſometimes make their excurſions thither. 2 Baſra, once a walled Town, and the Walls ſtill ſtanding, but very little or no Town in them. 3 Homar, ſometimes wel-peopled, but now little inhabited by reaſon of the ill neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coaſt. 4 Banirendo, in a manner deſerted for the ſame reaſon. 5 Alcazaer, to diſtinguiſh it from another of this name called Alcazer Guer, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alfonſo the fift of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings Sebaſtian of Portugal, Mahomet and Abdemelech Competitors for this Kingdom, were ſlain in a day. There was alſo ſlain at the ſame time the great Engliſh Rebel Stuckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church: by whom appointed for the Conqueſt of Ireland, and for that end furniſhed with 800 Souldiers paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holineſs created Marquiſs of Leinſter, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viſcount Murraugh, and Baron of Roſſe. Thus furniſhed, he began his journey toward Ireland, Anno 1578. but hearing of theſe Wars, and deſirous to make a party in them, he loſt all his honours with his life. 6 Arzilla a Sea-Town, 70 miles diſtant from the Streits, now poſſeſſed by the Portugals. 7 Tanger a great Town, and very ancient, diſtant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals alſo. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their firſt coming thither, when they fled from the ſword of Joſuah, teſtified by the two Pillars erected neer this City, which before we ſpoke of: and from that name cauſed all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitania. Made afterwards a Colonie by the Emperour Claudius, who named it Traducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and outlived the new. Neer to this Town it is ſaid that Hercules overcame Antæus, a monſtrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, oppoſite to which in the coaſt of Spain was another called Calpe, on which the ſaid Hercules placed his ſo famous Pillars. 8 Sexta, or Senta, ſituate on or neer that mountain unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earl to Julian, who firſt brought the Saracens into Spain, beautified in thoſe following times with many Temples, Colledges, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the Engliſh, Anno 1415. and now in the poſſeſſion of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Eſtates of Portugal, which in the late revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9 Julia Conſtantia, ſo called, and made a Roman Colonie, by Auguſtus Cæſar. 10 Laxus, a Roman Colonie of the plantation of Claudius, in old times ſaid to have been the Court or Palace of the Giant Antæus. Not far from whence (that Antæus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Gerion, as proper a Gentleman as himſelf, in a ſmall Iland of the Streits, called Gerionis Inſula, and by ſome Erythia.

7. Eaſtward of Habat is the Province of ERRIF, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nochor (ſuppoſed to be the Meluchath of the Antient Writers) by which parted from Garet: A mountainous and cold Country in reſpect of the reſt of Barbarie, full of Woods and Forreſts; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without ſome herds of Goats, though otherwiſe not well ſtored with Cattell. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 onely; inhabited by a race of valiant men, but exceſſive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages; The chief of which, 1 Mazagon, neer unto the Streits; a very ſtrong Town, and of great importance, but poſſeſſed by the Portugals; in vain beſieged by Abdalla the firſt, with an Army of 200000 men, Anno 1562. 2 Mezemme, ſeated on a mountain. 3 Beni-Jerſo, of like ſituation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Profeſſors of the Mahometan Law, who here publickly taught it, as in an Univerſity; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Deſtroyed together with the Library of it, by ſome wicked Tyrant, Anno 1509. the Books therein being valued at 4000. Ducats. 4 Terga. 5. Tegaſſa, 5 Gebbe; of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of theſe two Kingdoms, we muſt next look upon them alſo in the general ſtory, from the time of the Saracenical conqueſt; Firſt let into this Country by the Treaſon of Julian, and for a while ſubject to the great Caliph or Succeſſor of Mahomet: afterwards to the King or Caliph of Cairoan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, theſe Provinces with the reſt were afflicted by them; till the riſing of the Kingdom of Fez: begun in the perſon of Idris, of the blood of Mahomet, by Hali, and his daughter Fatima: who perſecuted by the oppoſite faction, fled into Mauritania, where he grew into ſuch reputation, that in ſhort time he got both ſwords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hegira, he left his power unto his ſon, of the ſame name with his father; the firſt founder of Feſſe. Oppoſite whereunto on the other ſide of the water, one of his ſons (but his name I find not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and raiſing by that means a faction in the houſe of Idris, gave opportunity to Joſeph the ſon of Teiſin or Telephine of the houſe of Luntune, then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocco, to ſuppreſs that family: Who killing the Princes of that line, and 30000 of their ſubjects, brake down the wals which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by bridges, and ſo made them one. Drawn into Spain by the diſſention of the Saracens there amongſt themſelves, he added all which they held in that kingdom unto his dominions: held by his ſucceſſors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the houſe or family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades, is this which followeth.

The Kings or Miramomolims of Morocco.

1 Teiſin, or Telephine, the firſt of the Almoravides, that reigned in Africk.
2 Joſeph, ſirnamed Telephinus, the ſon of Teiſin, founded Morocco, ſubdued the Kingdom of Feſſe, and added the Eſtate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions.
3 Hali, the ſon of Joſeph.
4 Albo-Halis, the ſon of Hali, ſuppoſed to be the publiſher of the Works now extant in the name of Avicenne, compiled at his command by ſome of the moſt learned Arabian Doctors: vanquiſhed and ſlain by 5 Abdelmon, or Abdel-Mumen, the firſt of the Almohades; of obſcure parentage, but raiſed to ſo great power by the practiſes of Almohad a jugling Prophet of thoſe times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the kingdom of the Almoravides both in Spain and Africk, An. 1150. to which he alſo added the Realm of Tunis and Cairoan.
6 Joſeph II. or Aben-Joſeph, the ſon of Abdelmon.
7 Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, ſirnamed Almanſor; a puiſſant and prudent Prince, of whom much before; ſon of Joſeph II.
8 Mahomet, ſirnamed Enaſer, or the Green, the brother of Almanſor: Diſcomfited by the Chriſtians of Spain at the battel of Sier-Morena, An. 1214. loſt his dominions; there being ſlain in this battel 200000 of the Moors, as ſome Writers ſay; who adde, that the Spaniards for two dayes together burnt no other fewel but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their ſlaughtered Enemies, yet could not conſume the one half of them.
9 Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enaſer, by his ſon Buxaf: ſlain at the ſiege of Tremezezir, a Caſtle of Tremeſin, which was held againſt him.
10 Almorcada, a kinſman of Caid Arrax, outed of his eſtate, and ſlain by Budebuz, of the ſame houſe of the Almohades.
11 Budebuz, the laſt of the houſe of the Almohades, ſetled in this Eſtate by the aid and valour of Jacob Aben Joſeph the new King of Feſſe: but dealing faithleſly and ungratefully with him, he was warred on by the ſaid Jacob Ben Joſeph, vanquiſhed and ſlain in battel; the ſoveraignty by that means tranſlated unto thoſe of the Marine family, An. 1270. or thereabouts.

But before I do proceed further with this Marine family, I muſt again look back upon Mahomet Enaſer, whom I conceive (the putation of the time being ſo agreeable) to be the Admiralius Murmelius mentioned by Matthew Paris, to whom our king John, An. 1214. is ſaid to have ſent ſuch a degenerous and unchriſtian Embaſſage. Which ſtrange name of Admiralius Murmelius was by that good Writer unhappily ſtumbled at, inſtead of Miramomolim (which alſo is corrupted from Amir Elmumenim, that is to ſay, Princeps Fidelium) an Attribute which the great Kings of the Saracen-Moors did much affect, and retained it long time amongſt them. The Story this. King John being overlaid by his Barons wars, and the invaſions of the French, ſent Ambaſſadors to this great Prince (then ruling over a great part of Spain and Barbary) for aid againſt them, offering to hold his Kingdom of him, and to receive withall the Law of Mahomet. The Moor exceedingly offended at it, told the Ambaſſadors that he had lately read the book of Pauls Epiſtles, which he liked ſo well, that were he now to chooſe a Religion, he would have imbraced Chriſtianity before any other: But every man (ſaith he) ought to die in his own Religion; the greateſt thing which he diſliked in that Apoſtle, being (as he ſaid) the changing of the Faith in which he was born. This ſaid, he called unto him Robert of London Clark, one of the Ambaſſadors (a man ill choſe for ſuch an Errand, if the tale be true) of whom he demanded the form of the Engliſh Government, the ſituation and wealth of the Country, the manners of the people, the life and perſon of the King: in which being ſatisfied, he grew into ſuch a diſlike of that King, that ever after he abhorred the mention of him. This is the ſubſtance of the ſtory in Matthew Paris: But you muſt know he was a Monk, to which brood of men king John was held for a mortal Enemy; and therefore this Relation not to paſſe for Goſpel.

But

But whatſoever opinion King John might have of the power of this King (to whom tis poſſible enough he might ſend for aide) certain it is that he was grown ſo low in his Reputation, after the loſs of that great battell in Siera Morena, that not onely the Spaniſh Moors withdrew their obedience from him (as a Prince unable to ſupport them) but thoſe of Africk did revolt alſo from the Crown of Morocco (extreamly weakned by that blow) after his deceaſe. For Gomoranca Aben Zein of the houſe of Abdalnad ſeized upon Tremeſen, in the time of Caid Arrax his Succeſſour; as Bucar Aben Merin of the noble Marine Family (deſcended from a Chriſtian ſtock) did the like at Fez. Setled in his eſtate by the vanquiſhment of Almorcada the Miramomolim; he left it to Hiaja his ſon, under the governance and protection of a Brother of his called Jacob Ben Joſeph. But the young Prince dying ſhortly after, left his new Kingdom to his Uncle: who aiding Budebuz (before mentioned) diſpoſſed Almorcada of the Realm of Morocco: and afterwards having juſt cauſe of quarrell againſt this Budebuz invaded his Dominions, overcame and ſlew him; and once again transferred the Imperial ſeat from Morocco to Fez. In him began the Empire of the Marine Family, who held their Reſidence in Fez, as the firſt ſeat of their power; Morocco being Governed by an under-King, the reſt of the Provinces of that Kingdom cantonned into ſeveral States; the Sea-coaſts in ſome tract of time being gained by the Portugals. And in his line (but with great confuſions) the Royall dignity remained till the year 1500. and ſomewhat after. Three only were of note in the courſe of buſineſs, that is to ſay, 1 Jacob Ben Joſeph, the advancer of the Marine Family to the Realm of Morocco; the eſtabliſher thereof in that of Feſſe; and of great power and influence in the affairs of the Moors in Spain, where he held Algeir and Tariffe, Towns of great importance; ſlain treacherouſly by one of his familiar friends, at the ſiege of Tremeſen. 2 Aben Joſeph the ſecond, a younger ſon of this firſt Joſeph (the iſſue of Bucalo his elder brother being quite extinct) ſucceeded after Abortade, the ſixt of the Marine Family in the Throne of his Father; and had added thereunto the Realm of Tremeſen, if not diverted by the revolt of Alboali his eldeſt ſon, continually in Arms againſt him. 3 Alboacen, the ſon of this Aben Joſeph and the eighth of the Marine Family, who after a ſiege of 30 moneths took the City of Tremeſen, & with that the Kingdom. But not ſo fortunate in his Wars againſt the Chriſtian Kings of Spain, againſt whom he led an Army of 400000 Foot, and 70000 Horſe, with all other neceſſaries; but vanquiſhed by the two Kings of Caſtile and Portugal, with far leſſer forces (their Army conſiſting but of 25000 foot, and 14000 horſe) at the River of Salado not far from Tariff, Anno 1340, Depoſed ſoon after his return by his ſon Alboanen, who loſt all which his Father and the firſt of the Aben Joſephs had gained in Spain; their Empire after this declining even in Africk it ſelf; the Kingdom of Tremeſen, and the greateſt part of the new Kingdom of Tunis, withdrawing themſelves from their obedience in the Eaſt parts of Barbarie; as the Portugals prevailed upon them in the Weſt. The Kingdom of the Marines thus approaching neer its fatal Period, it fortuned about the year 1508 that Mahomet Ben Amet a Native of Dara, in the further Numidia or Bilodulgerid, pretending a deſcent from their Prophet Mahomet, cauſed himſelf to be called Xeriff, the name by which the kindred and Succeſſors of that Impoſtor uſe to call themſelves; and being a poor Hermit only (with which Mountebanks and the high opinion of their Sanctity, this People have from time to time been extreamly fooled) plotted to make his ſons the chief Princes of Mauritania. To this end he ſent them in Pilgrimage to Meccha, whence they returned with ſuch an opinion of Sanctity, that Mahomet King of Feſſe made Amet the elder of them Governor of the famous Colledge of Amadnrach; the ſecond called Mahomet, Tutor to his Children; the youngeſt named Abdel ſtaying at home with his Father. In thoſe dayes the Portugals grievouſly infeſted the Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; to repreſs whoſe inſolencies Mahomet and Amet obtained Commiſſion; though much oppoſed therein by the Kings brother, who told him how unſafe it was to truſt to an armed hypocriſie; aſſuring him that if they once came unto any power (which under color of Religion they might quickly raiſe) it would not be eaſie to ſuppreſs them. But this good counſel was rejected, and the war went forwards. Furniſhed with an Army, they diſcomfit Lopes Barriga, Commander of the Portugal forces under King Emanuel; compell that King to abandon all his footing there; they ſubdue Duccala, Sus, and Hea, three Provinces of the Realm of Morocco; enter that City poiſon the tributary King, and ſalute Amet King thereof by the name of the Xeriffe of Morocco, inveſting Mahomet the other brother in the kingdom of Sus. In the career of their ſucceſſes died the king of Feſſe; and Amet his ſucceſſor, an improvident young Prince, confirms his Quondam-Tutors in their new Eſtates, conditioned they ſhould hold of him as the Lord in chief, and pay him the accuſtomed tributes.

The Xeriffes of Morocco.

A. C. 1 Amet, denied both tribute and ſuperiority to the King of Fez, whom he overthrew in a ſet field; and was after vanquiſhed and diſpoſſeſſed of his Kingdom, (upon ſome quarrell breaking out) by his brother Mahomet.

1554. 2 Mahomet King of Sus, having got the Kingdom of Morocco, united Feſſe unto it alſo by the vanquiſhment of Amet the King thereof; ſlain after all his Victories by the Turks of his Guard.

1557. 3 Abdalla, the ſon of Mahomet.

1572. 4 Abdalla II. Sonne of the former had twelve Brothers, of which he ſlew

A. C. slew ten. Hamet being spared by reason of his supposed simplicity, and Abdelmelech escaping to the Turks.

5 Mahomet II. Sonne of Abdalla the second expelled by Abdelmelech and the Turks, fled to Sebastian King of Portugal, who together with the two Competitors were slain in one day at the battel of Alcazar Guer, Anno 1578.

1578. 6 Hamet II. the Brother of Abdalla the 2d. who added parts of Libya, and Numidia, to the Realm of Morocco, not absolutely subdued before.

1603. 7 Muley Sheck the eldest son of Hamet, opposed in his Succession by Boferes and Sidan his two younger brethren; in which War he dyed; as did also Boferes his Brother. From whom Abdalla, II. son of Muley Sheck had regained Morocco.

1607. 8 Sidan the third son of Hamet, immediately on the death of his Father caused himself to be proclaimed King of Fez, (where he was with his father when he died) and having won Morocco from Abdalla the son of Muley Sheck, became master of that kingdom also. Stripped afterwards of Fesse and Morocco both by the opposite factions; distressed by Hamet Ben Abdela a Religious Hermit, who hoped to get all for himself; and aided by Side Hean one of like hypocrisie, who seemed to aim but at a Limb of that great Estate; by whose assistance he was once more possessed of Morocco. These tumults on the Land being pacified in long tract of time, and the Country brought to some degree of peace and quietness. (though never absolutely reduced under his command, as in former times) a Rabble of Pirats nest themselves in Salla, a Port-town of the Realm of Fesse: creating thence great mischief to him both by sea and land; and not to him only, but to all the Merchants of other Countries, whose busines led them towards those Seas. Unable to suppress them for want of shipping, he craved aid of King Charles of England: by whose assistance he became Master of the Port, destroyed the Pyrates, and sent Three hundred Christian Captives for a Present to his Sacred Majesty, *An.*1632. Nor staid he here; but aiming at the general good of Trade, and Mankind, he sent a Letter to His Majesty to lend him the like aid against those of Algiers, who did as much infest the Mediterranean, as the Pirats of Salla did the Ocean. The tenor of which Letters, as savouring of more piety then could be possibly expected from a Mahometan, and much conducing to the honour of his Sacred Majesty, I have here subjoyned.

The Letter of the King of Morocco, to the King of England.

WHen these our Letters shall be so happy as to come to your Majesties sight, I wish the Spirit of the righteous God may so direct your mind, that you may joyfully imbrace the Message I send, presenting to you the means of exalting the Majesty of God, and your own Reward amongst men. The Regal power allotted to us, makes us common Servants to our Creator; then, of those People whom we govern: So that observing the duties we owe to God, we deliver blessings to the World; in providing for the publike good of our States, we magnifie the honour of God, like the Celestial Bodies, which though they have much veneration, yet serve only to the benefit of the World. It is the Excellencie of our Office, to be Instruments whereby happiness is delivered unto the Nations. Pardon me Sir! this is not to instruct, (for I know I speak to one of a more cleer and quick sight then my self) but I speak this, because God hath pleased to grant me a happy Victory over some part of those Rebellious Pirats that have so long molested the peaceful Trade of Europe, and hath presented further occasion to root out the generation of those who have been so pernicious to the good of our Nations: I mean, since it hath pleased God to be so auspicious to our beginnings in the Conquest of Salla, that we might joyn and proceed in hope of like success in the war against Tunis, Algier, and other places (Dens and Receptacles for the inhumane villanies of those who abhor Rule and Government.) Herein whilest we interrupt the corruption of malignant Spirits of the World, we shall glorifie the great God, and perform a Duty that will shine as glorious as the Sun and Moon, which all the Earth may see and reverence: A work that shall ascend as sweet as the perfume of the most precious Odours in the nostrils of the Lord; A work gratefull and happy to men; A work whose memory shall be reverenced so long as there shall be any that delight to hear the Actions of Heroick and magnanimous Spirits; that shall last as long as there be any remaining amongst men that love and honour the piety and vertue of Noble minds. This Action I here willingly present to You, whose piety and vertues equal the greatness of your power: that we who are Servants to the Great and mighty GOD, may hand in hand triumph in the glory which this

Action

Action preſents unto us. Now becauſe the Ilands which you govern, have been ever famous for the unconquered ſtrength of their Shipping, I have ſent this my truſty Servant and Ambaſſador to know whether in your Princely wiſdome you ſhall think fit to aſsiſt me with ſuch Forces by Sea, as ſhall be anſwerable to thoſe I provide by Land: which if you pleaſe to grant, I doubt not but the Lord of Hoſts will protect and aſsiſt thoſe that fight in ſo glorious a Cauſe. Nor ought you to think this ſtrange, that I who much reverence the Peace and accord of Nations, ſhould exhort to a War. Your great Prophet CHRIST JESUS was the Lion of the Tribe of JUDAH, as well as the Lord and Giver of Peace: which may ſignifie unto you, that he which is a lover and maintainer of Peace, muſt always appear with the terror of his Sword, and wading through Seas of blood, muſt arrive to Tranquillity. This made JAMES your Father of glorious memory, ſo happily renowned amongſt all Nations. It was the noble fame of your Princely vertues, which reſounds to the utmoſt corners of the Earth, that perſwaded me to invite you to partake of that Bleſsing, wherein I boaſt my ſelf moſt happy. I wiſh God may heap the riches of his bleſsings on you, increaſe your happineſs with your dayes, and hereafter perpetuate the greatneſs of your Name in all Ages.

Such was the Letter of that King; whoſe motion in all probability might have took effect, had not the Troubles which not long after brake out in Scotland, put off the deſign. And therefore laying by the thoughts of his future purpoſes, let us take a view of the Revenues and Forces of this mighty Empire, before the late diſtractions made it leſs conſiderable. And firſt for the Revenues of it, the Xeriffs are the abſolute Lords of the whole Eſtate, and of his Subjects goods and bodies. The tenth and firſt-fruits of all ſorts of Fruits, Corn and Cattel, he demands of courſe, though many times contented in the name of the firſt-fruits with one in twenty. The fifth part of a Ducat he receiveth for every Acre of Land throughout his Dominions; the other four parts for every Fire, and as much for every Head whether male or female, which is above fifteen years of age. In Merchandiſe he receiveth of every Native two in the hundred, of an Alien ten; and hath a large Impoſt alſo upon every Mill. When any of his greater Officers or Judges die, he is ſole Heir of all their Goods; and yet advanceth great ſums by the ſale of thoſe Offices. And in the levying of ſuch Taxes as are extraordinary, he uſeth to demand more then he means to take; that the People finding him content to abate ſomwhat of his Due, may think themſelves to be fairly dealt with.

As for their Forces, it is evident in matter of Fact, that Abdulla the firſt, at the ſiege of Mazagon, a Town held by the Portugals, An. 1562. had no leſs then 200000 men; and that Abdel-Melech at the battel of Alcazar Quez, againſt king Sebaſtian, had 40000 Horſe and 80000 Foot, beſides Voluntaries, and wild Arabians; it being ſuppoſed that he might have raiſed 30000 Horſe more (notwithſtanding the ſtrong party which was made againſt him) had he thought it neceſſary. It is ſaid alſo that Abdalla kept in conſtant pay 60000 Horſe, of which 15000 were quartered in the Realm of Sus, 25000 in Morocco, and the other in 20000 in the kingdom of Feſſe: out of which he called 5000 of the beſt and ableſt for the guard of his perſon, well mounted and as richly furniſhed. Beſides theſe he hath bodies of Horſe in continual readineſs, maintained according to the manner of the Turks Timariots: and by Penſions given amongſt the Chiefs of the Arabians, who live like Outlaws in the mountains, and up and down in the skirts of of his Country, is furniſhed at his need with ſupplies from them. Well ſtored with Ammunition alſo, there being 46 Quintals of Gun-powder laid up monethly, in his famous Arſenal at Morocco: and yet not able to ſtay long (not above 3 months) upon any action, in regard that all his Souldiers live on his daily allowance; which maketh them, when his Proviſions are conſumed, to diſſolve and ſcatter.

THE ISLES OF BARBARY.

THe ISLES of BARBARY, which make up the fifth and laſt part thereof, are ſituate neer the African ſhores of the Mediterranean, aſſigned by Ptolomy to the Province of Africa Propria. In number ſixteen: 1 Hydras. 2 Calathe, 3 Dracontias, now called Chelbi. 4 Ægymnus, by Strabo called Æginarus, and now Guietta. 5 Laruneſia, now Mollium. 6 Lapeduſa, now Lampedoſa. 7 Meſyrus, 8 Pontia, 9 Gaia; all of little note. 10 Inſula Glauconis, with a City of the ſame name in it, now called Goza, and ſubject to the Knights of Malta. 11 Æthuſa, by ſome called Æguſa, and conſequently miſtaken for Ægates, which lieth neer Sicily. Of more note are the five that follow, viz.

1. COSYRA, now called Pantalaria, equally diſtant from Africk and the Iſle of Sicil, 60 miles from each. In length about thirty miles, and in breadth not above ten. Mountainous for the moſt part, and full of a black kind of Stone: the ſoyl not very proper for Corn, and void of Rivers; but plentiful of Figs, Melons, and Cotton-wool; well ſtored with Kine and Oxen, but without Horſes. The People poor; by Religion Chriſtians, and ſubject to the King of Spain: very good Swimmers of both ſexes, and in their ſpeech and habit coming neer the Moors. It hath a Town in it of the ſame name with the Iſland, ſituate on the Sea-ſide in the Northern part of it, defended with a very ſtrong Caſtle.

2 CERCINA,

2. CERCINA, now with little difference called Carchana, ſituate neer the coaſt of Africk, at the entrance (as it were) of the leſſer Syrtis: In length 25 miles, in breadth half as much, but in ſome places not above five. Exceeding fruitfull in old times, able to furniſh (as they did) the wants of Cæſar and his Army, when he warred in Africk; Magno frumenti numero Cercinæ invento, naves onerarias, quarum ibi ſatis magna copia, complet, atque in caſtra ad Cæſarem mittit, are the words of the Hiſtory. It hath a Town of the ſame name; Of no great note in way of ſtory, but for an handſom piece of wit here ſhewed by Annibal. Who flying from Carthage, met here ſome Merchants of that City, who had there ſome ſhipping in the Haven, and ſtanding in ſome doubt leſt by their diſcovery of his flight he might be purſued, pretended a Sacrifice to Hercules, the Tyrian Deity, to which he invited all the Sailers, and borrowed all their Sails to ſet up a tent for their entertainment; which having got into his hands, and leaving them aſleep, he made on for Aſia, ſecure enough not to be purſued untill out of danger.

3. LOTOPHAGITIS, now called Zerby, and by ſome Gerbe, is ſituate in the bottom of the Bay of Tripolis, divided from the main Land by a narrow Ford. The Iland full of Bogs and Mariſhes, without other water, and in the midſt of it ſomewhat hilly; indifferently fruitfull, yielding, Dates, Olives, Barley, Mill, and the like commodities; inhabited by 30000 men, dwelling in low Cottages, and but ſimply apparelled. It had in it anciently two Cities, 1 Meninx, which ſometimes gave name unto the Iland, called Meninx by ſome elder Writers. 2 Gerrapolis, both now deſtroyed: inſtead whereof there is now one of more note then the reſt, called by the ſame name with the Iland, and fortified with a very ſtrong Caſtle. Subject unto the Turks, but governed by a poor King of its own. Both Fort and Iland taken by the Chriſtian Fleet, in the year 1559. for the King of Spain, to whom Caravanus the King thereof did ſubmit himſelf, conditioning to pay the yeerly Tribute of 6000. Crowns, one Camel, four Oſtriches, four Sparrow Hawks, and four Falcons. But the Chriſtians were ſcarce warm in their new poſſeſſion, when beſieged in the Caſtle by Pial Baſſa, to whom after ſome extremities they were fain to yield: there periſhing in this unfortunate Action, by ſword, famine, and ſickneſs, 15000 Chriſtians.

4. GAULOS, or GAUDUS, by the Inhabitants called Gaudica, is diſtant about five miles from the Iſle of Malta; to the Knights whereof it doth belong, given to them by the bounty of Charles the fift. The Iland 30 miles in compaſs, well watered and very fruitfull. So great an Enemy to Serpents and all venemous Creatures, that they neither breed here, nor will live here brought from other places. The People Chriſtians, but they ſpeak the ſame Language with the neighbouring Saracens. The chief Town is of the ſame name with the Iland, beautified with a Capacious Haven, lying betwixt the Weſt and South, and ſtrongly fortified. Cruelly pillaged by the Turks in the year 1551. who carried hence 3000 Souls into endleſs thraldom.

5. MALTA, the chief of the African Ilands, lieth betwixt Tripolis in Barbary, and the Iſle of Sicil: diſtant from this laſt about 60 miles, and from the other 180. In circuit about ſixty miles, in length 20, and in breadth 12. ſituate in the beginning of the fourth Clime, and eighth Parallell; ſo that the longeſt day in Summer is but 14 hours.

Anciently it was called Melite, and by that name occurreth not only in Ptolomy and other Writers, but alſo in the Book of the Acts, in the ſtory of St. Pauls Ship-wrack, this being the place where he and all his company were caſt on land: in memory whereof was built a little Chappell in the place of his Landing. So called moſt probably ἀπὸ τῆς μέλιτος, from the abundance of honey which it yielded in former times: Cicero charging it on Verres, that he came home loaded with 400 meaſures of honey, and ſtore of Melitenſian Rayments: Jam non quæro unde 400 amphoras mellis habueris, unde tantum Melitenſium Veſtium, ſaith that famous Orator. The joyning of which two together, declare that he had robbed the ſame place for both; this Iſland being a neer neighbour of Sicil, which Verres governed then as Prætor. Nor is it ſtrange that an Iſland of the coaſt of Africk, and uſing for the moſt part the Phocinian or Punick Language, ſhould borrow its Appellation from the Greek: many of that Nation coming hither from the Iſle of Sicil, and inhabiting here; and the whole Iſland ſometimes ſubject to the power of the Sicilian Greeks, though for the moſt part under the command of the State of Carthage.

It is ſituate wholly on a Rock, being not above three foot deep in earth; by conſequence, of no great fertility, the want of which is ſupplied with the plenties of Sicil. Yet have they here no ſmall ſtore of Pomegranats, Citrons, Oranges, Melons, and other excellent fruits, both for taſte and colour. They have alſo great abundance of Cotten Wool (Goſſypium the Latiniſts call it) which they ſowe as we do our Corn; the growth and ordering of this Wool, hath been ſhewn already, when we were in Syria. For the commoditie of this Wool, and the cloth made of it, the Romans had this Iland in great eſteem; thinking themſelves happy when they gained it from the Carthaginians.

The natural Inhabitants of it are ſaid to be churliſh and uncivil; of the African Language and complexion; but followers of the Church of Rome, the Religion whereof theſe Knights are ſworn to defend: The Women fair, but hating company, and going covered. The whole number of both Sexes, ſuppoſed to be 20000. poſſeſſed of 90 Villages, and four Cities. Places of note, 1 Malta, ſo called by the name of the Iland, in the middle of which it is ſituate; built on an hill, but counted of no great importance, the ſtrength and ſafety of the Iland lying in defence of the Shores and Havens. 2 St. Hermes a ſtrong Caſtle at the point of a long Languet or tongue of Rock, thruſting out betwixt the two beſt Havens, both which it notably defendeth. Took by the Turks, Anno 1565, but at no cheaper rate then 20000 ſhot of Cannon, and the loſs of 10000 of their men. 3 Valette ſituate tuate on the ſame Languet, not far from the Caſtle of S. Hermes, (or rather lying cloſe unto it) extended the whole breadth of the ſaid Languet from the one Sea to the other: and ſo commanding both the Havens. Built ſince the departure of the Turks, impregnably Fortified, and called thus by the name of Valets, the great Maſter who ſo gallantly repulſed their fury. In this Town the great Maſter hath his Palace, and the Knights their ſeveral Alberges or Seminaries, all very fair and handſome buildings. 4 Burgo, a little Town or City on another Languet, lying in the Eaſtern Haven, at the extremity of which Promontory in a Demy Iland ſtands the ſtrong Caſtle of 5 S. Angelo, built on a Rock, oppoſite to Valette, on the other ſide of the Haven; and found impregnable by the Turks, who in vain beſieged it. 6 Iſola a ſmall Citie and better deſerving the name of a Town, ſituate in another Promontory, on the South of the other; defended on the Weſtſide by a ſtrong Platform, at the point of the Foreland, and on the Eaſtſide by the impregnable Caſtle of S. Michael, in vain aſſaulted by the Turks, who on their ill ſucceſs at the Siege hereof gave over the enterprize, and ſailed home.

The People of this Iland originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with ſome Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicil, as before was ſaid: For the moſt part dependant on the Fortunes of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till ſubdued by the Saracens; By the Spaniards taken from the Moors, and by Charles the fift given to the Knights of the Rhodes, not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, Anno 1522. Theſe Knights are in number 1000; of whom, 500 are always to be reſident in the Iland. The other 500 are diſperſed through Chriſtendom, at their ſeveral Seminaries, in France, Spain, Italy and Germany; and at any ſummons, are to make their perſonal appearance. Theſe Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number ſeven, viz. one of France in general, one of Auvergn, one of Provence, one of Caſtile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which they have a Grand Prior, who in the Countrey where he liveth, is of great reputation. An eight Seminary they had in England, till the ſuppreſſion of it by Henry the 8. yet they have ſome one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the original and riches of theſe Knights, we have ſpoken when we were in Paleſtine; now a word or two only of their places, and the election of their great Maſter. None are admitted into the Order, but ſuch as can bring a teſtimony of their Gentry for ſix deſcents; and when the Ceremonies of their Admiſſion (which are many) are performed, they ſwear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiours, to live upon the Revenues of their Order only, and withall to live chaſtly. Of theſe there be 16 of great authority (Counſellours of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Croſſes; out of whom, the officers of their Order, as the Marſhal, the Admiral, the Chancellour, &c. are choſen: and who, together with the Maſter, puniſh ſuch as are convict of any crime, firſt by degrading him, 2 by ſtrangling him, and 3 by throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Maſter is dead, they ſuffer no Veſſell to go out of this Iland, till another be elected; leſt the Pope ſhould intrude on their election; which is performed in this manner. The ſeveral Seminaries nominate two Knights, and two alſo are nominated for the Engliſh: theſe 16 from amongſt themſelves chooſe eight; theſe eight chooſe a Knight, a Prieſt, and a Frier-ſervant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Croſſes, elect the great Maſter. The great Maſter being thus choſen, is ſtiled (though but a Frier) The moſt illuſtrious, and moſt reverend Prince, the Lord Frier N.N. Great Maſter of the Hoſpital of S. John of Jeruſalem, Prince of Malta, Gaules, and Goza. Far different I aſſure you, from that of the firſt Maſters of this Order, who called themſelves only Servants to the poor Servitors of the Hoſpital of Jeruſalem; or that of the Maſter of the Templers, who was only intituled The humble Miniſter of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Iland is conceived to yield to the great Maſter the yeerly rent of 10000 Ducats, the greateſt part whereof ariſeth out of Cotton-wool; beſides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Eſtate, the tenth part of the prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thouſands of Crowns yearly out of the treaſure of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the beſt Commanderies in every Nation. And for the ſcowring of the Seas, and ſecuring their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 piece of Ordinance; with which they make excurſions many times to the coaſts of Greece.

And ſo much for BARBARY.

MOVNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbarie to Libya Interior, we muſt paſs over Mount Atlas, a ridge of hills, of exceeding great heighth, and of no ſmall length. So high that the top or Summit of it is above the clouds, at leaſt ſo high that the eye of man is not able to diſcern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas (ſaith Herodotus) Ita ſublimis ut ad illius verticem oculi mortalium pervenire non poſſint. Yet notwithſtanding, it is always covered with ſnow in the heats of Summer. Difficult of aſcent by reaſon of the ſharp and craggy precipices which occur in many places of it; the reſt where plainer, and more even, of ſuch wondrous ſteepneſs, that the precipices of the Rocks ſeem the ſafer way. Full of thick woods, and yielding to the Countries on the North ſide of it, the greateſt part of the Rivers, which refreſh and moyſten them: and where it bordereth on the proper or Roman Africa, of ſuch ſelf-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth, not planted, graffed, or inoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it is on the ſhores of the Weſtern Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degree, and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude; and paſſing on directly Eaſtward, draw neer unto the borders of Egypt, part of Marmarica, or the Roman Libya only interpoſing. It is now called Anchiſa, and Montes Clari; And took the name of Atlas from Atlas a King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; fained by the Poets to be turned into this hill by Perſeus, and the head of Meduſa. Of the daughters of this King, their golden fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Heſpirides, we have ſpoke already; though ſome remove the place of their habitation more into the Weſt (then by us diſpoſed of) and others into certain Ilands of the Weſtern Ocean, which we ſhall meet withall hereafter. He was ſaid to have been a man of ſuch wondrous height, that the Heavens reſted on his ſhoulders; of which, when weary, he diſcharged his burden on the ſhoulders of Hercules; the ground of the fiction either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof ſeemeth to touch the skie; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Aſtronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets. In which knowledge he inſtructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick deſcription of it, take it thus from Virgil.

——— Jamque volans apicem & latera ardua cernit
Atlantis duri, Cœlum qui vertice fulcit.
Atlantis, cinctum aſſiduè cui nubibus atris
Piniferum caput, & vento pulſatur & imbri.
Nix humeros infuſa tegit, tum flamina mento
Præcipitant ſenis; & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words.

Then flying, he the top and ſides deſcries
Of Atlas, whoſe proud head ſupport's the skies.
Atlas, whoſe Pinie head with Clouds incloſed
Is to the ſtorms of winde and rain expoſed.
Now hide's the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with ice ore grown.

OF LIBYA INTERIOR.

LIBYA INTERIOR is bounded on the North with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary and Cyrenaica; on the Eaſt with Libya Marmarica, interpoſed betwixt it and Egypt, and part of Æthiopia Superior, or the Habaſſine Empire; on the South with Æthiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Negro's; and on the Weſt with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reaſon of the name we have ſeen before, given to this Country in regard of its contiguouſneſs and reſemblance to the other Libya; or elſe becauſe deſcended from the children of Lehabim, by which that Country was firſt planted. For of King Libs, or Queen Libya (the daughter of Epaphus, and Caſſiopea) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I ſhall take no notice. Diſtinguiſhed from the other, by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main land of Africa, the other being partly a Maritime Country.

Of the nature of the ſoyle and people we ſhall ſpeak anon, when we come to take a view of its ſeveral parts. Look we now on it as it ſtood in the time of the Romans: when, though not ſo well travelled or diſcovered as in theſe laſt times: yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and ſituation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns, then any of our later Writers have preſented to us. The Rivers of moſt note, 1 Salathus, 2 Chuſarus, 3 Ophiodus, 4 Noius, 5 Maſſa, 6 Sobus, 7 Daradus, 8 Stachiris, and 9 Maſitholus; all of them paying tribute to the Weſtern or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of moſt note, 1 Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salathus, 2 Sagapola, which gives being to the River Sobus. 3 Ryſſadius, from whence Stachiris. 4 the Mountain called Deorum Currus (of which more anon) whence Maſſitholus, and Mount Capas, out of which Daradas, have their firſt Originals. Then there are, 5 Mount Uſurgala, and 6 Mount Girgiris, from the

the first of which the River Bagradas, and from the last that of Cyniphus, do derive their waters; and passing thorow the breaches of Atlas (of which these Mountains seem to be some dismembred limbs) cross the whole breadth of the Roman Africk, to make themselves a way to the Mediterranean. Besides these, more within the Land, we finde the famous Rivers of Gir, and Niger: of which the first maketh the two great Lakes of Nuba, and Cheloindas; the second, those as great, or greater called Nigritis, and the Lake of Libya; which makes me wonder by the way, that in a Country so well watered as this seems to be, our Modern Writers should complain of such want of water, as if there were neither Spring nor River, nor Pond, nor Lake, nor any thing to moysten and refresh the earth, but the dews of Heaven, or some pits of salt and brackish water, not worth the tasting. Ptolomy must either be mistaken, which I hardly think; or our late Travellers not so punctual in their observations, which I rather credit: or else the Rivers which were here in the time of my Author, In his arenarum vastitatibus disperduntur, must be dried up and swallowed in these sandy Desarts, as Maginus telleth us; or finally there hath hapned some later conflagration then that of Phaeton, to which the want of water may be better attributed, then it was to his. Of which thus the Poet,

Hinc facta est Libye, raptis humoribus æstu Arida.——Which Geo. Sandys thus rendreth.
A Sandie Desart Lybia then became,
Her full veins emptied by the thirstie flame.

Places of note and name in those elder times, 1 Salathes, on the River so named, 2 Bagaxi, 3 Jarzitha, and 4 Babiba, are honoured with the name of Cities. 5 Garama, 6 Gira, and Nigira, the Metropoles of their several Nations. Then there were two Havens of some good esteem, the one called Magnus Portus, the other Portus Perphosius; besides 43 other Towns and Cities (twelve of these on the banks of the River Niger:) whose names and situation do occur in Ptolomy, which shews the Country not to be so unhabitable and void of people, as was pretended by some other (but less diligent) Writers.

Nations of most note in it in the former times, were the Getuli, on the back of Mauritania, a resolute and unconquered People, Genus insuperabile bello, as we finde in Virgil: 2 the Garamantes, dwelling South of Cyrenaica, and giving name to a large and spacious territory, called Vallis Garamantica; supposed to be the most remote Nation towards the South, as the Indians were towards the East, whence we have ultra Garamantas & Judos, in another Poet: 3 the Pyrrhæi, an Æthiopick Nation, on the South of the River Gir: 4 the Nigritæ, originally Æthiopians also, inhabiting on the North of the River Niger; 5 the Odranguli, of the same original extraction, possessing the Counrry between the Mountains Capha, and Thala; 6 the Perorsori, dwelling neer the hills called Deorum Currus; 7 the Meinaci, at the foot of Mount Thala; 8 the Nabæ on the West of Vallis Garamantica. 9 the Derbici, dwelling on the west of the hill Aranga. And 10 the Psylli, placed by Ptolomie amongst the Inhabitants of Cyrene, but so neer the borders of this Country, and so far from the civilities of those Nations which conversed either with Rome or Carthage, that they may more properly be thought to belong to this. Of a nature so venemous, that they could poyson a Snake. Insomuch, that when their wives were delivered, they would throw their children amongst a bed of Serpents, supposing that childe to be born of an adulterate bed, the very smell of whose body would not drive away a whole brood of the like poysonous vermine. Others there were of less note, which that Author calleth Minores Gentes; many in number, of small fame, and therefore not material to be here inserted; those of most note, the Africerones (whom some Authors call the Gampsaphantes) honoured with the Attribnte of Gens Magna, the greatest as it seems of those lesser Nations. None of them of much note in the way of story, except they were these Libyans which are so famoused in Herodotus for an expedition they made against the South winde. For when this wind blowing abroad the hills and desarts of sand, had dried up those many rills and waters they had among them, they to revenge this injury, by common consent armed themselves, and went to fight against him. But they took not the South winde unprepared. For he mustered up his forces, inconntred them with such a brave volley of sand, that he overwhelmed and slew them all. A better friend was the North wind to the Citizens of Rhegium, in Italy, and better was he rewarded for it; for having scattered a mighty fleet, which Dionysius prepared against them, he was by the common-councell, made free of their City. That part of Cæsars war which was managed here, we shall hereafter meet with on another occasion.

Thus having took a view of the state of this Country, as it stood of old; we will next look upon it in its present condition; as comprehending the whole Provinces of 1 Biledulgerid, or Numidia. 2 Libya Deserta, or Sarra; and 3. a great part of that Country which is now called Terra Nigritarum. But because the greatest part of this last Country is to come under another Accompt, we will here only take the two first into consideration.

1. NUMIDIA.

1. NUMIDIA, is bounded on the East with Egypt, on the West with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North with Mount Atlas which parteth it from Barbarie, and Cyrene; on the South with Libya Deserta.

It was thus first called by John Leo, an African Writer, to whose description of all Africk we are much beholding; because of that resemblance which the People of it have to the old Numidians, which is after the custom of the Nomades, living without houses, under their Wagons, and Carts, as Lucan testifieth of them, thus

Nulla domus, planſtris habitant, migrare per arva
Mos, atque errantes circumvectare Penates.

They dwell in Wains, not houſes; and do ſtray
Through fields, and with them lead their gods each way.

And worthily may they owe their names to them, from whom they borrow ſo much of their nature: for the people to this day ſpend their lives in hunting, and ſtay but three or four dayes in a place, as long as the graſs will ſerve the Camels. This is the cauſe why this Countrey is ſo ill peopled, the Towns ſo ſmall in themſelves, and ſo remote from others. An example hereof is Teffet a great City in their eſteem, which yet containeth but 400 houſholds, and hath no neighbours within 300 miles of it.

The Country aboundeth with Dates, whence it is called Dactylorum regio, and in the Arabick Biledulgerid, which ſignifieth alſo a Date-region. Theſe Dates are (to ſpeak properly) the fruit of the Palm Trees, uſually growing in hot Countries, of which ſome are male, ſome female; the firſt bringing forth only flowers; the other fruit: and yet the male ſo beneficial to the increaſe of the Dates, that unleſs a flowred bough of the male be ingrafted into the female, the Dates never prove good, in caſe they bear any Dates at all, as before was noted. This fruit is the chief diet of the people: but this ſweet meat hath ſowre ſawce; for it commonly rotteth their teeth betimes. As for the ſtones of theſe Dates, they feed their Goats with them, whereby they grow fat, and yield ſtore of milk. The Aire hereof, of ſo ſound a nature, that if a man be troubled with the French diſeaſe, he ſhall there, without any courſe of Phyſick, finde a preſent remedy.

The natural Inhabitants of this Country, are ſaid to be baſe and vile people, theeves, murderers, treacherous, and ignorant of all things; feeding moſt commonly on Dates, Barley, and Carrion; accounting Bread a Diet for their Feſtival Dayes. But the Arabians who are intermingled with them, in moſt part of the Country, affirmed to be (comparatively with the Natives) ingenuous, liberal, and civil. The Garments of theſe Numidians, of the courſeſt cloth, ſo ſhort that they cover not half the body: the richer ſort, diſtinguiſhed by a Jacket of blew Cotton with wide ſleeves. Their Steeds are Camels, which they ride on without ſtirrop, or ſo much as a ſaddle; a leather, thruſt thorow on hole made in the noſe of the Camel, ſerves them for a bridle; and to ſave the charge of Spurs they make uſe of a goad. Their Religion, Mahometiſm, to which perverted (Chriſtianity having once had ſome footing here) in the year 710. the Azanaghi and other people of thoſe parts then ſubdued by the Saracens: who held them for a Nation of ſo little reckoning, that no man of accompt amongſt them would deſcend ſo low, as to be their Prince, but left them to be ruled as in former times, by the Chiefs or Heads of their ſeveral Clans!

The chief River which is left, hath the name of Dara, and poſſibly enough may be the Daradus of Ptolomy: the reſt which are mentioned in that Author, riſing out of Mount Atlas, and falling headily this way, finding theſe barren wilderneſſes to afford them the readieſt Channels, are trained along by the allurements of the Sands, and are either ſwallowed up in great Lakes; or being too liberal to the thirſty ſands in their way to the Sea, die at the laſt for thirſt in the midſt of the Deſarts.

The Principal of their Provinces (if capable of a diſtinction into better and worſe.) 1 DARA; more cultivated then the reſt, becauſe of the River running thorow it, whence it hath its name: 250 miles in length, indifferently fruitful, where the River doth overflow and water it; and of ſo different a nature from all the reſt, that here the Country people have ſome ſcattered Villages, the better ſort their ſeveral Caſtles. 2 PESCARA, ſo called from the chief Town of it, exceedingly infeſted with Scorpions; the ſting whereof is preſent death. 3 FIGHIG, ſo called from the chief Town alſo, inhabited by an induſtrious and witty People (in reſpect of the reſt) ſome of which betake themſelves to Merchandiſe; ſome to the ſtudie of their Law, which they ſtudie at Feſſe, and grow rich upon it. 4 TEGOREARIN, a large Region, and well inhabited, better then any except Dara; as having in it 50 Caſtles or Gentlemens houſes, and 100 Villages. The people wealthy in regard of the gread trade which they drive with the Negroes; and pretty good husbands in manuring their land on which they are forced to lay much ſoil; and will therefore let ſome of it Rent-free to ſtrangers, reſerving only the dung of themſelves and their cattell. 5 BILEDULGERID, ſpecially ſo called, abundantly fruitful in Dates, whence it had the name, but deſtitute of Corn by reaſon of the extream dryneſs of the ſoyle; and yet hath in it many Towns of good note among them. Of leſs note, 6 Teſſet, 7 Segelmeſſe, 8 Zeb, 9 Tebelbeti, and 10 Feſſen, ſo called from the chiefeſt of their Towns and Villages.

Towns of moſt note both now and in former times, beſides thoſe ſpoken of before, 1 Timugedit, in the Province of Dara, the birth-place of Mahomet Ben Amet and his three ſons, the founders of the Xeriffian Empire. 2 Tafilete, in the ſaid Province, to which place Mahomet the ſecond of theſe ſons and firſt King of Morocco of that Family, confined his eldeſt brother Amet, having took him priſoner, Anno 1544. 3. Teffet, a great Town of 400 houſes, but ſo poorly neighboured that there is no other inhabited place within 300 miles of it; but of that before. 4 Techort, the inhabitants whereof are very courteous to ſtrangers, whom they entertain at free-coſt; and chooſe rather to marry their daughters to them then to any of the Natives. 5 Eboacah, the moſt Eaſtern Town in all this Country, distant about 100 miles from the borders of Egypt. 7 Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for Wells or Fountain of the Sun, the waters whereof being lukewarm at the Sun-rising, cooled more and more till noon, was then very cold, and so continued untill midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter, as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hottest when that was furthest off; and cold when neerest. 8 Masucha, seated on a Rock, garrisoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marius, in the prosecution of that War. 8 Capsa, the chief City of all this tract, said to be built by Hercules; but questionless of very great strength, anguibus arenisque vallata, made inaccessible (saith the Historian) by the thick Sands and multitudes of Serpents which were harboured in them; but easily forced by Marius in his Wars with Jugurth, and utterly destroyed by Cesar in his war against Juba.

It seems by this, that those people neighbouring Mount Atlas were much at the disposal of the Kings of Mauritania in the times foregoing; and so they have been also in these latter times! For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wisdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long possessed themselves of those parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698; but within twelve yeers (Anno 710.) they subdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themselves. Nor was Amet, the first Xeriffe of Morocco warm in that estate, when he thought it best for him to secure himself in it by the conquest of this: to whose successors, the chiefes of the Tribes hereof render some acknowledgements.

2. LIBYA DESEETA.

2. LIBYA DESERTA, is bounded on the north with Numidia, or Biledulgerid, to which contiguous; on the East with Nubia a Kingdom and Province of the Land of Negroes; on the South with the land of Negroes wholly, and on the West with Gualata, another Province of these Negroes interposed betwixt it and the Atlantick.

The reason of the name of Libya we have had before. To which Deserta was added upon very good reasons, as well to difference it from the other Libya, a Province of Egypt, as to expres the barren and sandy condition of it: in which respect by the Arabians called Sarra, signifying in their language a rude and inhabitable Desart, as this Country is. So truly such, that men may travell in it eight days together without finding water, or seeing any tree, and no grass at all. The water which they have is drawn out of pits, exceeding brackish, and many times those pits so covered with the Sands that men die for thirst: the Merchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drink a water which they wring out of their guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as these Desarts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Fesse and Tremesen, trading to Agades and Tombatum, in the land of Negroes.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in shape or qualities; but if a worse of quality, it must be the Lybian. They did once worship a God called Psaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then set at liberty, to say these words, viz. Psaphon is a great God: which the simple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine honours. Converted at last to the Christian Faith, they remained a while in the profession of the Gospel: exterminated by the Saracens about the year 710. who having added Numidia or Biledulgerid to their former conquests, planted their Superstitions in this Country also.

This Country is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Desarts, to which those of less note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the borders of Gualata (interposed betwixt it and the Atlantick Ocean) and extending Eastward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South Gualata and Tombutum in the land of Negroes, so destitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end of each hundred mile, brakish and unwholsom; and in the Desarts of Azaoad and Araoan which are parts of this, but one in an 150 or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eastward, to the Desart of Targa; bounded on the North with Segelmesse and Tebelbeti, Numidian Provinces; and on the South with the Desarts of Ghir and Guber. So void of water, (especially in that part thereof which is called Gogden) that in nine dayes travell there is not so much as one drop to be seen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eastward to the Desart of Ighidi; and reaching from Tegorarin in the North, to the Desart of Agader in the South: the best conditioned part of all this Country, well watered, of a temperate Aire, and a soyl reasonably fruitfull. In length from North to the South 300 miles; and liberally stored with Manna, which they gather into little vessels, and carry to Agadez to sell. Mingled in water or with pottage it is very cooling, and drank of in their Feasts, as a speciall dainty.

4. LEMPTA, extendeth from the Deserts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of these two there is little to be said in several, but that this last was discovered lately by one Hamar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the sands wandred out of his way, and causing sand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the smell at last that they begun to draw nigh some inhabited Place, and told them of it 40 miles before they came to it.

Cities

Cities of note we hope for none, where we finde no water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most considerable, 1 Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble, which the Inhabitants, being 20 days distant from any habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine, exchange for Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come hither for it: Much troubled with the South Winds, which doth so drive the sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to loose their sight. 2. Huaden, or Hoden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchant in the midst of these Desarts. 3 Guargata on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy People, 4 Toberaum, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or baiting place to the wearie Traveller. Of which kinde there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desarts; the Havens of such men as sail in these sandy Seas; but not else observable.

Nor is there much, if any thing, observable of them in the way of story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerours, either Greeks or Romans, much of the Country was possessed by Arabian Colonies (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations) at such time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Country since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans, or Families, who as they know no Law themselves, so do the People shew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions: differing but little from brute Beasts, more then shape and speech.

And so much for LIBYA INTERIOR.

OF TERRA NIGRITARVM.

TERRA NIGRITARVM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East with Æthiopia Superior, on the West with the Atlantick Ocean, on the North with Libya Deserta, and on the South with the Æthiopick Ocean, and part of Æthiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigrita, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolomy: and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot, by reason of ifs situation under the Torrid Zone: yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in some places alwayes green; well watered, and exceeding fruitful, specially in those parts which lie within the compas of the overflowings of the River Niger, and on the further side of the River Senaga; abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchins; well Wooded, and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest want (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-trees, few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of fruit only, which is like the Chesnut, but somwhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisting in the overflowings of Niger, as that of Egypt in the inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver, very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New-Worlds as much as Wealth, they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitants, till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto man; of little wit, and destitute of all Arts and sciences; prone to luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Mahumetans. When the Portugals first sailed into these Coasts, they hereof took the Ships for great Birds with white wings; and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were casually painted on the beaks of the ships, were the eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be the works of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be perswaded but that they were the work of Gods own hands. The very Nobles (if so noble a name may without offence be given to such blockish people) are so dull and stupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to civil society; and yet so reverent of their King, that when they are in his presence, they never look him in the face, but sit flat on their buttock, with their elbows on their knees, and their hands on their faces. They use to anoint their hair with the fat of Fishes, which makes them stink more wretchedly then they would do otherwise. Of complexion they are for the most part Cole-black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South-side of the River Senaga, they are only Tawny: the Blacks so much in love with their own complexion, that they use to paint the Devil white; which I find thus versified.

The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
*Neerer extended to th'*Atlantick Main;
Wherein the black Prince keeps his residence,
Attended by his jetty coloured Train:
Who in their native beauty most delight,
And in contempt do paint the Devil white.

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the first, as others the Descendants of Cham: Afterwards it is said that they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occasion of it I do no where find) in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the last, Christianity prevailed in some Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahometism began to get ground amongst them, by the diligence and zeal of some of the Preachers of that Law: the first who were reduced that way being those of Melli; after which Tombuto, Oden, Gualata, were infected with the same poyson also. In the end, all the rest of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, some part of Nubia, and the Coasts of the Atlantick Ocean, which continue in their antient Gentilism: Christianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if still there remaining) and some few Garrisons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, so are they also of several Languages: those of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Melli, and Gngenti, speaking the Language called Sungai; the Guberoi, Canontes, Chasena, and Gangrates, &c. that called Guber; Gualata, a language of its own; and those of Nubia, one resembling the Arabick, Chaldean, and Egyptian.

Mountains of most note in it, in the former times, were those of 1. Arvalles, and 2. Arangus, and 3. that called Deorum currus; this last supposed to be the same which is now called Punta de Lopes Gonsales; but that more probably which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Promontory, thrusting thrusting it self into the Sea; discerned afar off by the Saylor and the Country-people, as well by reason of his height, reaching to the clouds, as the continual lightnings and thunders which do issue thence.

Rivers of most note, besides Nile, which watereth it on the East, 1 Senaga, or Canaga, which riseth out of the Lake of Guoga, supposed to be the same which Ptolomy calleth Lacum Chelonidem; and if so, then must this be the River Gir, of which he saith, that having fallen into that Lake, and there swallowed up, it thence produced another River, whose name he telleth not, little inferiour unto Nilus for the length of its course, the variety of strange Creatures which are bred therein, or the distinction which it maketh in the face of this Country: the people on the one side of it, being Black, on the other Tawnie; the soyl on the one side very barren, on the other fruitfull. In the end having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantick by two great Out-lets. 2 Niger, a River better known to Ptolomy by name then nature; now found to have its rise from a great Lake within two degrees of the Equinoctiall, whence running northwards for a time, he hideth himself under ground for the space of 60 miles together: when rising up again, and making a great Lake called the Lake of Borneo, he bendeth his course directly Westward, and taking in many less Channels, he teareth the earth into many Islands, and at last falleth into the Sea. Of as long course, and the same wondrous nature, as the River Nilus. For from the fifteenth day of June, it overfloweth all the adjacent fields, the space of 40 days together, and in so many more, recollecteth his waters, into their proper Channels; the whole Country being indebted to these inundations, for its fertility, which otherwise could be but small, since the dryness of the soyl can afford no exhalations, whereby clouds may be generated, and the earth refreshed with moystures, or revived with dewes.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Ptolomy, 1 Nigira, the Metropolis of the Country, 2 Panagra, 3 Malachath, 4 Anygath, 5 Thumondacana, 6 Sulice: and others to the number of 17 in all; situate all along the course of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the situation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the Ancient Towns and People being quite defaced, we must look upon it now as it standeth divided at this time into several Kingdoms, 25 at the least in all (some say many more) the chief of which are these that follow.

1. ORA ANTEROSA, A large tract of ground on the Western Ocean, extended from Cape Blance to the River Carthage, sandy and barren, but reasonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanaghi, were accompted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized since the Portugals and other Christian Nations began to trade there; of middle stature, complexioned between black and ash colour; great lyers, very treacherous, poor and parsimonious, and very patient in extreams both of heat, and hunger. The chief Towns, 1 Porto di Dio (we may call it Gods Port) and 2 Porto del Riscatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occasionally by the Portugueze, at their first coming thither. 3 Arquin, a strong Fortress of the Portugals, situate on or neer the Promontory now called Cape Blance, and giving name unto some Ilands, five or six in number, lying neer unto it, called the Isles of Arquin, inhabited by a barbarous People, named the Azanhays; but of no great note. These coasts discovered first by the Portugals, An. 1452. under the conduct of Prince Henry, son of John the first, or by his incouragement and directions.

2. GUALATA, distant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Ora Anterosa being interposed) is but a small Country, though a Kingdom, containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with some Territorie of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitfull only in Dates, Mill, and Pulse; but of these two last no great abundance. The Inhabitants Cole-black, hospitable towards strangers, to their power, but poor and miserable; without Laws, setled form of Government, Gentry and Judges.

3. AGADEZ bordering on Targa, one of the five Desarts of Libya; the People of it generally given to grazing, their houses made of green boughs, which upon every change of Pasture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but these moveable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the most part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremesen. The Town well walled, the houses of a better building then the Country promiseth; the People civiller, and more fair conditioned then the rest of the Negroes, seated commodiously on a River which falleth into the Senaga, and by that means hath correspondence with the Ocean also. The King hereof, a Tributary to the King of Tombuto, payeth him 15000 Crowns of Annual tribute.

4. CANO, a large Province on this side of the River Canaga, full of woods, mountainous, and in some parts desart; but plentifull enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons, and Pomgranats, with good store of Cotton Wool. Well-watered besides that great River with some lesser Streams. Sufficiently populous, and stored with good Towns and Villages, the habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen; as the chief Town called Cano, is of wealthy Merchants. This the Seat-Royal of their King, a Tributary also unto him of Tombuto; environed with a wall, built of a Chalk stone, as most part of the houses are.

5. CASENA, on the East of Cano, but less fruitfull far, the Country over-grown with vast woods, and the soyl untractable; affording only Mill, and Barley, but of that good plenty. The People as black as any Coal, with great noses, and most prominent lips. Their houses very poor and mean, and their Towns accordingly; none of them numbring more then 300 Families.

6 SANAGA,

6. SANAGA, lying on the other ſide of that River, from which thus named, extendeth to the Atlantick Ocean, as far as to the Promontory which by Ptolomy named Arſinarium, is now called Cape Vert, or Caput Viride. The Country full of rich Paſtures, goodly Trees, and moſt ſorts of Fruits; plentifull enough of Mill and Pulſe, but ill provided of other Corn, and no Grapes at all. Well watered both with Lakes and Rivers. No tame beaſts about their fields, but Goats, Cows and Oxen; of Lyons, Leopards, Wolves and Elephants, too great a plenty. The people extreme black, much given to lying, treacherous, very full of talk, exceſſively venereous, and extremely jealous. A King they have, but ſuch a one as holdeth but by courteſie only, having no certain Rents or Revennes, but what given By his Nobles.

7. GAMBRA or GAMBEA, a ſmall Kingdom on the River ſo named, but bordering in ſome places on the Atlantick. In thoſe parts very pleaſant, the Trees always flouriſhing, the air very hot; in other parts of the ſame nature with Sanaga, but that this affords good ſtore of Rice, which the other doth not.

8. TOMBUTUM, on the further ſide of the River Sanaga: exceeding plentiful of Corn, Cattel, Milk, and Butter. Deſtitute of Salt, but what they buy of forrein Merchants at exceſſive rates; and ſmall ſtore of horſes. Well watered by a branch alſo of the River Niger, and many wells of purpoſe made to receive ſuch waters, as by artificial Dikes and Channels are derived from both. The People courteous, rich, and pleaſant, ſpending whole dayes and nights in ſinging and dancing. Their food, Fleſh, Butter, Milk, and Fiſh, which they mingle together, and make it neither toothſom nor wholſom. The chief Towns, 1 Tombuto, which gives name to this Kingdom, ſituate about twelve miles from a branch of the Niger, and founded by the Saracens or Arabians in the 610. year of their Hegira. The houſes all of mud and thatch, except one fair Church, and the Kings palace, both of lime and ſtone. Inhabited by wealthy Merchants, who manage a great trade betwixt this and Feſſe. 2 Gago, the reſidence of the King; large, without wals, the buildings very poor and mean, except ſuch as belong unto the King or the chief Nobility. The Merchants rich, and their wares ſumptuous and precious, but exceſſive dear. The Town about 400 miles diſtant from Tombuto, ſituate in a fruitful Country for Rice, Fruits, and Fleſh, and well repleniſhed with freſh water. 3 Gabra, a large Town, but unwalled, and of no better building then the other two.

9. MELLI, lying on the Eaſt of Tombutum, is a ſpacious and fruitful Province, ſituate all along on a branch of the River Niger, in breadth 300 miles, and abundantly fertile, eſpecially in Corn, Cattel, and Cotton Wooll: the people generally very wealthy; of greater wit, civility and induſtry then the reſt of the Negroes. The chief Town of it is called Melli, unwalled, but large, as containing in it 6000 families; furniſhed with many Temples, Prieſts and Readers of the Mahometan Law, which thoſe of this Country did firſt unhappily admit of. This the Seat-royal of their Kings, who are very courteous unto ſtrangers; but Homagers and Tributaries to the King of Tombutum.

10. GHENEOA, ſituate betwixt Gualata, Tombutum, and Melli, but ſo that it bordereth in one place on the Ocean alſo; is a wealthy Country: but hath neither Town or Caſtle in it, except that wherein the King reſideth, who is a Vaſſal alſo to the king of Tombutum. That town the reſidence alſo of their Prieſts, Doctors, and Merchants: of which the Prieſts and Doctors are apparalled in white, but all the reſt in black, or blew Cotton. The people have great traffick with the Merchants of Barbary; and though made very rich by the overflowings of Niger, and the wealth of the Country, they have great ſtore of Gold uncoined; yet in buying and ſelling at home, they uſe iron-mony.

11. GUBER lieth on the Eaſt of the former Province; of the ſame length, and naturally well fenced with lofty mountains. Exceeding populous, and thick ſet with Villages, in which dwell their Husbandmen and Shepherds, rich in their numerous herds of all ſorts of Cattel, as alſo great quantities of Rice and Pulſe: the people very induſtrious, and good Artificers. Their principal Town is called Guber alſo, a town of 6000 families, the uſual reſidence of their King; full of wealthy Merchants, and rich in Manufactures.

12. GIALOFI lieth betwixt the two great Rivers of Sanaga and Gambia. The people whereof are of ſuch admirable dexterity, that they can leap upon an horſe when he is in his full gallop, ſtand in the ſaddle when he runneth faſteſt; turn themſelves about upon his back, and ſuddenly ſit down. Of their Country I find little, of their Story nothing, but that Bemoin one of their kings, being overlaid with Civil wars, in the year 1489. went for aid to the king of Portugal, and gave great hopes of his Converſion to the Chriſtian faith; But being ſhameſully murdered by Pedro de Vas the Portugal General, the hopes of Chriſtianity in theſe parts fell together with him.

13. GUINEA, is a Sea-coaſt Country, extended from Sierra Leona (ſo called from the Lyon like roaring of the Waves beating on that Promontory) in the tenth degree of Longitude, to the borders of Benin in the 30. But the Portugals comprehend under this name the whole Sea-coaſt of Africk from Cape Blanco and the Country of Ora Anteroſa, to Angola and Congo incluſively, in the Lower Æthiopia. But take it in the proper ſenſe, as before limited, and we ſhall find it to be rich in Gold, Ivory, Rice, Barley, Cotton-wooll, and a ſort of Pepper which the Portugals call Pimienta del Rabo, the Natives Melegueta, and we Guinie-pepper: of double the efficacie of the Pepper which comes from India; and therefore forbidden to be ſold by the Kings of Portugal, for fear their Indian trade ſhould be diſcontinued. Well ſtored with Sheep and Poultry, and of Dates good plenty; All other Fruits which they want or care for, are brought thither from Gualata. Birds in abundance, and

Of Elephants and Apes too many. A Tree they have, by them called Mignolo, the Bark whereof being cut doth afford a moſt excellent liquour, more pleaſant, ſtrong, and nouriſhing, then the choiceeſt Wines; which they drink of in their great Feaſts, even to drunkenneſs. The people of both Sexes very rude and barbarous, aſwel in their habit, as their manners; yet amongſt many barbarous cuſtoms they have one moſt commendable, which is the breeding of their Maidens: When marriageable, they place in an houſe ſevered from the reſt of their Cities like a Cloyſter or Monaſtery: where for 2 yeers ſpace they are trained up by ſome old man of beſt eſtimation. At the yeers end they are brought out well apparalled with Muſick and Dances; where the young men pleaſe themſelves in the choice of their wives, for whom having bargained with their Parents, they ſatisfie the old man for his care and pains in their Education. They keep one day of reſt weekly, but therein differ from all Nations in the world beſides, that they keep their Sabbath upon the Tueſday. Diſtracted into as many Kingdoms as great Tribes or Families: the Kings thereof ſubordinate unto one another, as they lie more within the Land, till they end all in a ſubjection to the King of Mandinga. Places of moſt note, 1 Songus the principal of Mandinga, about 100 Leagues Eaſtward from the Cape of Palmes. 2 Budomel, the chief Town of the Kingdom ſo called. 3 Vxoo, in the Center of all the Country. 4 Mina, a ſtrong hold of the Portugals, ſituate neer the Cape, called Cabo de Trois pentas the three-pointed Cape; named ſometimes alſo S. George de Mina, by the name of the Cappadocian Martyr, and the Mines of Gold which they hoped to finde there; By which, and by the Fort of Arguin, which they have upon Cape Blanco in the North part of this Land of the Negros, they command all the Countries which they call by the name of Guinea. This Town not built untill the year 1485. in the beginning of the reign of John the 2d. though the diſcovery of theſe coaſts had been made before An. 1452. under the conduct of Prince Henry Duke of Viſeo, Son of John the firſt. By whoſe incouragement the Portugueze did firſt imploy themſelves in Forreign Diſcoveries, and became enamoured of the Seas.

14. BENIN, lieth directly Eaſt of Guinea, by the Portugals reckoned for a Province or Kingdom of it: the King whereof is ſaid to have 600 Wives, with all which twice a yeer he goeth out in Pomp. The Gentlemen (if I abuſe not the name) have moſt of them 80 Wives, ſome more; he that is pooreſt, ten, or twelve, and the more the merrier. The people thereof do cut and raſe their skin with three lines drawn to the Navel; eſteeming it neceſſary to ſalvation. They uſe all, both men and women, to go naked till they are Married; and then to be clothed only from the waſt to the knees: ſo that had our Sir Thomas Moor lived in theſe parts, he had in ſome meaſure had his deſire. For he among other ſtrange plots in his Utopian Common-wealth, telleth us, how there it is the cuſtom, for ſome reverend old Sire to bring in naked, the young man; and ſome hoary old Matron, to preſent naked, the young woman; between whom a Marriage is propounded. For, ſaith he, in buying a horſe, the chapman not only vieweth his naked carkaſe, but taketh off all his trappings and ſaddle, leſt under them ſome blame might be hidden: and why then in chooſing of a wife, ſhould we take one, of whom we ſee no more then the face (unius Palmæ ſpatium) and perhaps ſcarce that. The learned and ingenuous Author of the New Atlantis, though he diſlike of Marriages made upon ſuch uncertainties, yet he would have this diſcovery made by ſome friends of the Parties, not by them themſelves: it being as he ſaith very inconvenient, that after ſuch a plain and familiar ſight of each others perſon, there ſhould be a refuſal upon either ſide. But theſe new Projects I refer to your modeſt cenſures.

15. GUANGARA lieth on the North of Benin, a wealthy and well peopled Country; but their Towns and Villages very mean, except that called by the ſame name with the Country, where the King reſideth, which is ſomewhat better then the reſt, well traded, and full of rich Merchants. The King hereof of ſo great Revenues, that he keepeth ſeven thouſand Archers, and five hundred Horſe in continuall pay; but Homager and Tributarie to the King of Bornum.

16. BORNUM, a large and opulent Country on the Weſt of Guangara, is there extended to the length of 500 miles. Diſtinguiſhed equally in a manner into hills, and valleys: the hills inhabited by Neat-herds, and Sheepherds, breeding great flocks and herds of Cattel, with Mill, and many other fruits to us unknown; the Vales repleniſhed with many Market-Towns, and as full of Corn. The People are of no Religion, but live like beaſts, without propriety ſo much as in their wives or children: nor are they differenced by names, as in other places, but by ſome mark upon their bodies. Which though it ſeem ſtrange to us of this preſent Age, yet was it thus in part, with our Saxon Anceſtors. Whence have we elſe the names of White, Brown, Black, Gray, Green, and Tawny; or thoſe of Long, Short, Low, Curle, Criſpe, and others, but from ſuch Originals? not to ſay any thing of the names of Trades, and Occupations, ſo familiar with us. The name of their chief City is Borneo, where the King reſideth. A potent Prince, who keepeth in continual pay three thouſand horſe, and great numbers of Foot, and yet is ſaid to have no other Revenue then what he getteth by ſtrong hand from his Enemies. Which if it be true, thoſe Kings muſt needs be good Warriours, and have great ſucceſſes alſo in their undertakings: it being alſo ſaid of theſe Kings of Borneo, that all the Furniture of their Horſes, all the Diſhes, Cups, and Platters which they eat or drink in, yea the very Chaines for his Dogs were of fineſt Gold.

17. Gaoga,

17. Gaoga lieth betwixt Borneo, and the Deſarts of Nubia: the Country almoſt ſquare, each ſide thereof extended 500 miles. The People ignorant, rude, uncivil, but ſpecially thoſe which dwell in the mountains: their houſes built moſt of boughs and leaves, which once dry, eaſily take fire; but the beſt is, they are ſoon repaired: their greateſt wealth is in their Cattel, which they keep moſt tenderly. About the year 1420. they were brought into ſubjection by a Negro-Slave, who having ſlain his Maſter, by the help of his wealth grew ſtrong enough to incroach on his neighbours; and ſelling ſuch Captives as he took, for horſes of Egypt, became King of Gaoga, and in fine very gracious with the Mamaluck Sultans. His Succeſſors have ſince ſo enlarged their Territories, that they are ſecond unto none but the Kings of Tombutum.

18. NUBIA hath on the Weſt Gaoga, bounded on the North with Egypt, extended Eaſtward unto Nilus, by which parted from Æthiopia Superior, or the Habaſſine Empire. So called from the Nubæ, an antient and potent people of this Tract, ſpoken of by Ptolomie: the great Lake, anciently called Nubæ Palus, being hence denominated. A diſtinct people from thoſe of the ſame name, dwelling on the ſhores of the Red-Sea, neer unto Sinus Avalites, who from the ſhortnes of their ſtature paſſed in accompt for Pigmies; Νῦβαι Πυγμαῖοι, ſaith Heſychius an old Grammarian: theſe being a ſtrong and potent Nation, and well skilled in wars. Inſomuch as Cyriacus once a King hereof, underſtanding of ſome preſſures laid upon the Chriſtians of Egypt, is ſaid to have raiſed 100000 Horſe for their aid and ſuccor; but by the perſwaſions of the Patriarch of Alexandria, went back unfought with. For at that time the Country was wholly Chriſtian, and had been ſo from the very dayes of the Apoſtles; but are now fallen off again to their former Idolatries, or become Mahometans, for want of Miniſters to inſtruct them. It is recorded by Alvarez, the writer of the Æthiopick Hiſtory, that at his being in the Court of the Abaſſine Emperor, there came Ambaſſadors out of Nubia to intreat a ſupply of Paſtors to inſtruct their Nation, and repair Chriſtianity amongſt them; but were unchriſtianly rejected.

Here is a Poiſon in this Country of which the tenth part of a grain will diſpatch a man in a quarter of an hour, and is ſold for ten Ducats an ounce; the Cuſtoms for which unto the King is as much as the price unto the Merchant. But for this one ill Commodity they have many good; that is to ſay, Corn, Sugar, Civet, Sanders, Ivory, all in great abundance; ſome ſtore of Gold, and other Mettals. The Country naturally ſandy, but well refreſhed with Lakes and Rivers, which do much inrich it; inſomuch as the people generally are very wealthy, and manage a great trade with the Merchants of Caire and Egypt. Their chief City is called Dangala, large and well frequented; ſaid to contain no fewer then 10000 families; but their houſes built of nothing but thatch and mortar. In other parts, eſpecially towards the river Nilus, they have many Villages; few or none of them worth the naming.

There are many other Kingdoms in this Land of Negroes, beſides thoſe in Guinea, but of leſſer note; as 19. BITO, 20. TEMIANO, 21. ZEGZEG, 22. ZANFARA, 23. GOTHAN, 24. MEDRA, 25. DAUM. Of which there is nothing to be ſpoken, but of their poverty or riches, bleſſings or curſes common to them with the reſt of theſe Nations; and therefore I purpoſely omit them.

This Country, or a great part of it, was anciently accounted part of Libya Interior; inhabited beſides the Nubæ and Nigritæ ſpoken of before, by the Nabathræ dwelling about the hill Arvates, the Aronca neer the hill Arangus, the Agargina, Xylinces, and Alchalinces, Æthiopick Nations. Not much conſiderable in the buſineſs of former times; nor much diſcovered (not very perfectly at this day) till the year 973. at what time certain Mahometan Preachers, out of a ſuperſtitious zeal to propagate their Sect, firſt opened the way into theſe Countries: the People then living like bruit beaſts, without King, Law, or any form of Government; ſcarce knowing how to ſow their Lands; clad in the skins of as very beaſts as themſelves, and challenging no propriety in wives or children. Firſt conquered by Joſeph King of Morocco, of the race of the Almohades; and after that by the five Nations of Libya Deſerta, who divided them into fifteen parts, every one of thoſe five Nations poſſeſſing three of them. One of the Kings of theſe Libyans, named Soni Heli, being ſlain by Abuaci Iſchia General of his forces, and the reſt terrified with that blow, An. 1526. the Negroes once again recovered their long loſt liberty, and inſtituted divers Kings of their own. Amongſt them, Izchia was moſt deſervedly made King of Tombutum, who managed his affairs ſo well, that he conquered the Kings of Guber, Agadez, Cano, Melli, Zanfora, Zegzeg, Ghenoa, Gambea, and Ceſena; which he made his Tributaries. So that his ſucceſſors are now the greateſt of thoſe five Kings, who have the ſupreme power over all the reſt. The other four, 1. the King of Mandinga, lording it over the Realms of Benin, Gioloſi, and the Kings of Guinea: 2. the King of Borneo, the onely one that is deſcended of the Libyan race, in greatneſs of command next to him of Tombuto; 3. the King of Gualata, whoſe Kingdom is confined within that one Province, but therein abſolute and ſupreme; and 4. the King of Gaoga, Paramount over all the reſt.

But becauſe the greateſt power is in the hands of the King of Tombuto, who poſſibly enough may in ſhort time bring all the reſt under his command, we will take a more particular view of his eſtate; affirmed to be the richeſt Prince in theſe parts of Africk, and to have many Plates and Scepters of gold, ſome of which weigh 1300 pound weight. When any of his Subjects do appear before him, they kneel on both their knees, and bowing their heads unto the ground, caſt ſand over their ſhoulders and upon their heads, going forwards ſtill upon their knees. His Court he keeps in a royal manner, continually guarded with 3000 Horſe, but with many more Foot, all armed with Bowes and empoiſoned Arrows. To the Jewes a very bitter Enemy, whom he admitteth not to trade in his kingdoms, and confiſcateth the goods of all ſuch of his Subjects as hold traffick with them. Zealous of the Mahometan Law, and liberal in ſtipends to the Doctors and Profeſſors of it. Of greater power then any other beyond Atlas, but the Habaſſine Emperor. And though Amet the Xeriffe of Morocco, in the year 1589. had ſome hand upon him, and conquered a great part of this kingdom, even as far as Gago, extending his Empire ſix moneths journey by Camels beyond Morocco; yet it held not long: this King again recovering what was taken from him; and being ſince that time in as eminent power, as ever in any times before.

AETHIOPIA SVPERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR, is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, and the Sinus Barbaricus; on the West with Libya Interior, the Realm of Nubia, in the Land of the Negroes, and part of the Kingdom of Congo in the other Æthiopia; on the North with Egypt, and Libya Marmarica; and on the South with the Mountains of the Moon, by which parted from the main body of Æthiopia Inferior.

It was first called Ætheria, and afterwards Atlantia, as Plinie telleth us. In the end, the Grecians gave it the name of Æthiopia, from the Greek words Αἴθω, signifying to burn, and ὄψ a Countenance; because the violent heats of the Sun had so scorched the Countenances of the Inhabitants. The additions of Sub Ægypto, Superior, and Interior, serve only to distinguish it from the other Æthiopia, which lieth further off from Egypt, on the outside of this. It is called also Regnum Abyssinorum, from the Abaseni, or Abyssini, a people of Arabia Felix, who passing over the Red-Sea (not above seven miles broad in the narrowest place) came and setled here. And in the Scripture it is stiled by the name of Ludim, from Lud the son of Mizraim, who first planted it, as hath been proved by many strong and concluding Arguments in our general Preface.

It is situate on both sides of the Equinoctial, extending from the South Parallel of seven Degrees, where it meeteth with some part of the other Æthiopia; to the Northern end of the Isle of Meroe, situate under the fift Parallel on the North of that Circle. And though by this Accompt it fall short of the dimensions assigned by some, who extend it from one Tropick unto the other; yet is it of a very great length, no less then 1500 miles; the breadth about half as much, the whole circumference amounting to 4300 miles. Yet so, that all this vast tract of ground, is not to be understood of that part of the Country which is under the command of the Abassine Emperour, commonly but mistakingly called Prestor John: but of the whole Country of Æthiopia, as before limited and extended; containing besides his Estate, the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea, and the Provinces of Quiloa and Melindi; which two last are now reckoned of as parts of Æthiopia Inferior: The Isle of Meroe in the North is possessed by Mahometans, the most bitter enemies of this King: all on the West of Nilus, betwixt it and the South-east of Nubia, inhabited by the Anzichi, an Idolatrous and man-eating Nation, subject to a great Prince of their own: and all the Coasts of the Red-Sea, as well within the Streits of Babel Mandel as without, except the Port of Erocco only, enjoyed by Arabians and Moors, who do acknowledge no subjection unto his commands; but are under the Kings of Adel and Adea before mentioned.

But taking it in the largest signification and extent hereof (according unto which we must here describe it) it comprehendeth the three Countries called anciently Æthiopia Sub Ægypto, Troglodítica, and Regio Cinnamomifera. Of these the two last are by some reckoned but as parts of the first: though certainly the Troglodites were a different Nation from the Æthiopians. For past all doubt the Troglodites were Originally an Arabian people, so called quia τρώγας subeunt, from their living in Caves and dens: in which respect their part of this Country had the name of Arabia Troglodítica, in Dioscorides, and some others of the Ancient Writers. Of these it is affirmed by Pomponius Mela, that they were not the Masters of any wealth, and that their speech was rather a gnashing of the teeth, then any articulate and intelligible Pronunciation. Nullarum opum Domini sunt Troglodítæ, strident magis quam loquuntur. As for their houses, they were (saith he) no better then Caves, and their food then Serpents. With whom concurreth Plinie also for their dwelling in Caves, and consequently for the reason of the name, saying positively, Troglodítæ spelúncas excavant. Called for the same reason in the holy Scripture, 2 Chron. 12.3. by the name of Sukchei; the word Succoth (whence that name derived) not only signifying in the Hebrew Tents, or Tabernacles, but Caves, and Dens; and so translated Psal. 10. v. 9. and Job 38. v. 40. As for that part hereof which was called Regio Cinnamomifera, taking up the Southern parts in the time of Ptolomy, it took that name from the abundance of Cinnamon, which was then growing by it, now not a tree of it to be found in all this Country; as the Portugals, who have looked narrowly for it, have affirmed unto us. Shipped at Mosylon, a noted Emporie, placed by Ptolomy in the ninth degree of Northern Latitude; it was thence transported into Egypt and other Countries; as is said by Plinie, Portus Mosylítes quo Cinnamomum devehitur: the Spice in some Authors being called Mosulum, by the name of the Town. ἄριστον δὲ τὸ λεγόμενον Μόσυλον, τὸ ἀπὸ Μοσύλα πόλεως Of Cinnamon the best is that which is called Mosulon, because brought from the City of that name in Æthiopia, saith Simeon Sethi in his Tract de Facultatibus Ciborum. As for this Cinnamen (I note this only by the way) it is the inner bark of a Tree, as big as an Olive, with Leaves like Bay-leaves: the drying of which maketh it roll together, and every three years is renewed, and stripped off again. Some think it came first from the Sinæ or the Country which the Romans called Sinarum Regio, the Moderns China; and that it was so called, quasi Sinæ Amomum, the Amomum of the Sinæ; Amomum being the name of a sweet perfume growing in Assyria and Armenia. But then it should be written Sinamomum, momum and not Cinnamomum: yet to give the greater credit to the former opinion, they of Ormus call it Bar-China, or the wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Æthiopia it self. The people of it in old times were said to have been great Astrologers; the first ordainers also of sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were also noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longest and strongest Bowes of any Nation: the Persian Bow (though those the greatest of all Asia) being only three Cubits long; but these of Æthiopia, four. Utuntur etiam Æthiopes quatuor cubitorum arcubus, as we read in Strabo; the like is said also by Herodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows small, but strong; for the most part poisoned; Æthiopum geminata venenis Vulnera, as we find in Claudian; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to spend our time too much upon these particulars, Pliny reciteth two strange things of this Country: 1. That the Air and ground are so parching hot, that the people not only dare not go out of doors without shooes, but that they rost their meat also by setting it in the Sun. 2. That there is a Lake, whose waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding salt and unpleasing; but at all other times most sweet and delicate to the palate.

This Country being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together, is but meanly populous; the distemperature of the Climate, and the dry barrenness of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cause Africk is by Strabo compared to a Leopards skin, the distance of whose spots sheweth the dispersedness of the towns, and habitations in those torrid countries. A Country scarce in Wheat, but sufficiently plentiful in Rice, Barley, Beans, Pease, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all sorts, and infinite herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Country under heaven fitter for increase of Plants and Living creatures, if industry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are destitute of many necessary things, which otherwise the natural commodities of the Country would supply them with: For they have here great store of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no wine, except it be to serve the palaces of the King and the Patriarch. Abundance of Sugar-canes, and Mines of Iron; but know not how to make use of either unto any advantage. Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or trenches to derive their waters to the rest of the land which want them: those Rivers almost choaked with Fish, their Woods crammed with Venison, which they trouble not themselves to catch.

By this we may conjecture somwhat of the people also; Lazie and given unto their ease, ill-clothed, and not much better housed; extremely inclined to Barbarism, destitute of all learning, not to be credited unless they swear by the life of their Emperours; they hate a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally olive-tawny, excepting only their King himself, who is always of a white complexion, (a wonderful prerogative, if true.) This blackness of their bodies, by the Poet attributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton.

Sanguine tum credunt, in corpora summa vocato,
Æthiopum populos nigrum traxisse colorem.

Which may be thus Englished:

Their blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part,
The Æthiopians grew so black and swart.

But the true cause hereof, whatsoever it be, may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we come to America.

The Christian faith was first made known in this Country by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangelist, and one of the Seven; more generally imbraced by the pains and preaching of S. Matthew the Apostle hereof; but not totally propagated over all this Empire till the reign of Abraham, An. 470. who in his life entituled himself the Defender and Propagator of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppressed in part by the coming in of the Abasenes and other Arabians, it was again revived and more universally received then in former times, in the reign of David king of the Axumite Æthiopians: who in a war against Dunmus king of the Homerites in Arabia Felix, solemnly vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his Followers, if he got the victory: And so accordingly he did, sending his Ambassadors to the Emperor Justinian for some Bishops and other learned men to instruct his people. The particulars of those Opinions wherewith they have since corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I find thus registred. 1. They use to circumcise their Children, both males and females. 2. They baptize the males 40, and the females 80 dayes after their circumcision. 3. After the receit of the Sacrament, they are not to spit till Sun-set. 4. They profess but one nature, and one will in CHRIST. 5. They accept only the three first General Councels. 6. Their Priests live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg. 7. They baptize themselves every Epiphany-day in Lakes and ponds, because that day they suppose Christ to have been baptized by John in Jordan. 8. They eat not of those Beasts which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean. 9. They keep the Saturday or Jewish Sabbath equally solemn with the Lords Day. 10. They administer the Eucharist to Infants presently after Baptism. 11. They teach, that the Reasonable soul of man is derived from their parents by Seminal propagation. 12. That Infants dying unbaptized, are sanctified in the womb by vertue of the Eucharist received by the Mother after her Conception. And finally, they shew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they say, by the Apostles assembled bled at Hieruſalem for that purpoſe; the Contents whereof they obſerve moſt ſolemnly. Theſe are the moſt material points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholique Church; And there are other points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1. Adminiſtring in both kinds; 2. Without either Elevation or Reſervation; 3. Rejecting maſſie Images, and 4. Extreme Unction; 5. Allowing the firſt marriages to their Prieſts and Biſhops; and 6. in renouncing all relation to the Pope of Rome, who to the buſineſs of theſe Churches is a very ſtranger, and ſo hath been from the very firſt foundation of them. For it appeares by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabick, and tranſlated into Latine by Piſanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna, as they call him) of theſe Abaſſine Churches, was in thoſe times ſubordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacie by the Fathers which were there aſſembled; and conſtantly ever ſince approved and practiſed by theſe Churches; in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembred before their own. To this Patriarch, by an antient priviledge belongeth the ſeventh place in the Seſſions of all General Councils; the Archbiſhop of Seleucia (or Babylon) only interpoſing betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hieruſalem. Elected by the Abaſtine Monks of St. Antonies Order remaining in Hieruſalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whoſe juriſdiction he muſt alwayes be) he is ſent into this Country to take his charge: where in ſome points of Civil nature he hath equal priviledge with the Emperour himſelf; and in Spiritual, hath the ſole power of excommunicating an obſtinate Sinner. All other Eccleſiaſtical Dignities, from the Biſhoprick to the loweſt Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour onely.

The principal Mountains of it in the former times, had the names of 1 Prionotus, 2 Iſius, 3 Monodactylus, 4 Gaurus, and 5 Mons Satyrorum; all of them in that part which was called Trogloditica; 6 Garbala, 7 Elephas, and 8 Maſte in the Iſle of Meroe: the reſt of the Country flat and level, or the hils not eminent. Rivers of moſt note, 1 Aſtapus (now Abanni) ariſing out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barcena. 2 Aſtaboras, now Tacaſſi; both falling into the River Nilus. 3 Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whoſe ſpring unprofitably ſought for in the elder times, is now ſaid to be out of the Lake Zembre in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Æquator: whence paſſing through ſpacious Deſarts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms, he at laſt entreth into this. Here in ſome places ſtrugling amongſt broken Rocks, and leſs free paſſages, he falleth with ſuch a wonderful noiſe into the Vallies beneath, that a Colony planted by the Perſians neer one of theſe Cataracts, (ſo they call thoſe huge fals of his) were ſo dulled and deafned with the noiſe, that they were fain to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it only dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hils do ſeem to tremble at the noiſe it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

Cuncta tremunt undis, & multo murmure montis,
Spumeus invictis albeſcit fluctibus amnis.
Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words;
The noiſe the Mountains ſhakes, who roar for ſpite
To ſee th' unvanquiſh'd Waves cloth'd all in white.

Of theſe Cataracts there are two moſt noted: the one called Catarractes Major, in the borders of this Country towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Phila and Pſelcis, Æthiopian cities; the other called Catarractes Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syens, the laſt City of that Country towards this. So turbulent is this River amongſt the Hils. And yet as terrible as theſe fals are ſuppoſed to be, one may divers times ſee the Country people in a little Boat not able to contain above two perſons, to venture down them without fear; appearing after they have been long toſſed in the waters a great diſtance off, as if they had been ſhot out of an Engine. Nor is he of ſuch quiet paſſage in the open Countries, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are fain to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters; which if not curbed and leſned by ſuch wayes as theſe, might by ſome ſudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in reſpect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for long time to the Abaſſine Emperors an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, ſuppoſing it a needleſs charge, had once denied; this people, by the command of their Emperor, did open their Sluces, and break down the Dams; whereby the water fell ſo violently and ſo faſt into Egypt, that the Turk was not only glad to continue the tribute, but to give them great ſums of mony to make up their works. But others ſay, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not ſo much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Habaſſine Emperors ſhould divert the Stream, and ſo deprive that Country of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are alſo ſaid to be ſome Lakes of that poiſonous nature, that whoſoever drinketh of them, doth either immediately fall mad, or elſe is troubled for long time with continual drowſineſs. Of which thus Ovid,

Æthopeſque Lacus, quos ſi quis faucibus hauſit,
Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate ſoporem.
Which may be paraphraſed in theſe words:
Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirſt to ſlake,
Either grows mad, or doth his ſoul oppreſs
With an unheard of heavy drowſineſs.

To

To look upon the State as it ſtood in the former times, we finde in it beſides the Lakes and Rivers before mentioned, three capacious Bayes, that is to ſay, Sinus Adulicus, 2 Sinus Avalites, and 3 Sinus Barbaricus; the two laſt neighboured by the now Countries of Aden and Quiloa. Havens of note, and Rodes for ſhipping, there were five in all, viz. 1 Bathus, or the deep Haven, 2 Dioſcorum Portus, or the Haven of Caſtor and Pollux, 3 Theon Soterum, or the Haven of the Saviour-Gods, 4 Portus Evangeliorum, Goſpel Port, or the Port of good News. And 5 Serapionis, the Port of Serapion, with a Promontory of the ſame name neer adjoyning to it. For other Promontories, which in ſo long a tract of Sea muſt needs be many; the principal were, 1 Baſium, 2 Mnemium, 3 Dimetris, 4 Aſpis, 5 Ara Amoris, 6 Colobon, 7 the Promontory of Saturn, 8 Moſylon, with a noted Empory of the ſame name, 9 Aromata, neer another well frequented Empory of the ſame name alſo; and 10 that of Noti cornu. Then for the Towns of greateſt Trading, beſides thoſe laſt mentioned, we have, 1 Avalites, 2 Malao, 3 Mundi, 4 Cube, and 5 Acane, in the Bay of Avalites, 6 Opone in the Bay of Barbaria, 7 Eſſina, on the South of the Æquinoctial. Then for their Cities, we have amongſt many others, the names of 1 Epitherias, by Ptolomy called Ptolemais Ferarum, 2 Adulis, and 3 Avalites, giving names unto their ſeveral Bays, 4 Rapta, the Metropolis of that part of this Country which was called Barbaria, lying along the ſhores of the Sinus Barbaricus; which as it taketh name from the River Raptus, upon which it is ſituate; ſo they do both agree in communicating it to the Promontory called Raptum. 5 Meroe, the chief City of the Iſle ſo called. 6 Sabath in the Bay of Adulis, which poſſibly might be ſome Colony of the Sabeans in Arabia Felix. 7 Coloe, by Plinie called Tolen, not far from the great Luke ſo named, 8 Cambuſis by Ptolomie called Cambyſi Ærarium, from ſome treaſures laid up here by Cambyſes the Perſian, in his invaſion of this Country. 9 Auxumi the chief City of the Auxumites, a moſt potent people of theſe parts; and the Seat Royal of the old Æthiopian Kings. 10 Napata, as Ptolomy; but by moſt others called Tanape, of old the reſidence of the Æthiopian Emperours, ſacked and ruined by Petronius, preſident of Egypt. For when Candace (the Predeceſſour, I believe, of her whoſe Eunuch was baptized by Philip) had ranſacked and waſted Egypt with fire and ſword; Petronius, Lieutenant to Auguſtus, drave them home, harried the whole Country, put this City to the ſpoyle; and to prevent the like inrodes, fortified the Frontires of his Province. Philæ, upon the borders of Egypt, garriſoned by the Romans till the time of Diocleſian, and by him abandoned. Of ſome of theſe, and others not here mentioned, we may have opportunity to ſpeak more hereafter, in the ſurvey of ſome of theſe particular Provinces, into which this Country ſtands divided at this preſent time.

And for the Provinces comprehended at this time within the bounds and limits of this Æthiopia, as before laid down, they are ſaid to make up 70 Kingdoms, moſt of them ſubject to the Abaſſine Emperor, the principal of which are, 1 Guagere, 2 Tigremaon, 3 Angote, 4 Amgara, 5 Damut, 6 Goijami, 7 Bagamedrum, 8 Barnagaſſum, 8 Adel, 9 Adea, 10 Dancali, 11 Dobas, 12 Fatigar, 13 Xoa, 14 Barus. Concerning which I muſt premiſe, that I finde the Relations of them to be very imperfect, many times diſagreeing, ſometimes falſe: So that I muſt profeſs my ſelf to be leſs ſatisfied in the deſcription of this Country then in any of the reſt which have gone before. Such as it is, I here preſent it to the Reader.

1. GUAGERE.

GUAGERE containeth only the Iſland of Meroe, an Iland of much note and fame amongſt the Ancients; made by the confluences of Nilus and Aſtaborus, the two chief Rivers of this Country. The length hereof 350 miles, the breadth 125. abundantly plentifull of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, Ivory, Precious ſtones, and an excellent kinde of Mineral Salt. Well ſtored with moſt ſorts of beaſts both tame and wilde; and of the laſt ſort with Lyons, Leopards, Rhinocerots, Elephants, and Dragons.

The People are of the ſame nature and complexion with the reſt; Mahometans by Religion, and the profeſſed Enemies of the Abaſſine Emperour, againſt whom they do not only defend themſelves by the advantages and benefit of their ſituation; but confederating with the Turks and Arabians, fall many times with great forces into his Dominions. It is ſaid by Plinie of the Inhabitants of this Iland, that twice a year, viz. When the Sun is in the 16th. degree of Taurus, and the 14th. of Leo, they have the Sun ſo perpendicular above their heads, that he caſts no ſhadow. More anciently memorable for their long lives, then their great exploits, attaining ordinarily to 120 years of Age, and therefore called Macrobii by the old Greek Writers. The women ſaid to be of ſuch great breſts in the former times, that they did ſuckle their children over their ſhoulders (as ſome women are now ſaid to do neer the Cape of good Hope) the dug being bigger then the childe. Of which thus Juvenal.

In Meroe craſſo, majorem Infante mamillam.

In Meroe the Mothers pap
Is bigger then the childe in lap.

The Principal Cities hereof, 1 Meroe, which gave that name unto the Iland, but took the ſame from from Meroe, a ſiſter of Cambyſes King of Perſia, or as Euſebius ſaith, from Merida, the mother of Chenephris, a King of Egypt. Joſephus telleth us, that in former times it had been called by the name of Saba; on authority of whoſe miſtake it hath been made the Regal City of that Queen of Sheba (the Queen of Egypt and Æthiopia as Joſeph calleth her) who came to Solomon. An opinion ſo received amongſt theſe Ilanders, that the name of Meroe being laid by, they have reſtored the name of Saba to this City, as of greater eminence. The City ſaid by ſome to contain about 5000 houſes, great and ſumptuous, the ſtreets thereof to be large and ſpacious with Galleries on each ſide before the doors of their houſes, where men walk ſafe from all extremities of heat or rain. Beautified with four chief Gates, (beſides others of inferiour note) built of Alabaſter and Jaſper, wrought with Antique works: the doors belonging to thoſe Gates, of Cedar, curiouſly wrought; the wayes which lead unto them, for the ſpace of two Leagues beſet with Palms, Orange-trees, Cedars, Cypreſſes, and others no leſs uſefull both for ſhade and fruit. In the place where the four ſtreets going from theſe Gates, do croſs each other, a goodly Arch erected upon ſtately Pillars, fairly wrought and gilded; with the Statue of S. Matthew, made of braſs, but gilded, on the top thereof. Such it is ſaid to be by ſome. Others think there is no ſuch City; it may not be ſo beautiful, as thoſe ſome have made it. The other Towns of note and name in it, in former times, 2 Sacolche, 3 Dararum Vicus, 4 Eſer; of which we have little but the names.

This Iland was once a peculiar Kingdom; he being choſen for their King who excelled the reſt in ſtrength, perſon, or in ſtock of Cattel; but thoſe Kings ſo ſubject to their Prieſts, that by a Meſſenger or Herald they were ſentenced by them unto death, and others advanced unto the throne; And thus it ſtood till one of the more provident Kings, forcing the Temple with his armed Souldiers, ſlew all theſe Prieſts; and freed himſelf and his Succeſſours from ſo great a ſlavery. Afterwards made a Province of the Kingdom of Æthiopia; honoured for the moſt part with the Seat of thoſe Kings, and memorable in thoſe times for the Table of the Sun; which was a place neer the City of Meroe, always furniſhed with variety of roſted meats, ſet there by night at the charge and command of the King (much taken as it ſeemeth with this coſtly vanity) and eaten in the day time by all that would: called therefore the Table of the Sun, becauſe aſcribed unto his bounty by the ignorant People. In the declining of this Kingdom, occaſioned by the inundation of the Saracens and other Arabians, this Iland was ſeized on by that People, and hath been ever ſince kept by them, together with the reſt of the Country lying betwixt it and Egypt, in which are contained as ſome write, the Kingdom of Damote, Sua, and Jaſculum, antiently belonging to this Empire, now diſmembred from it: not much obſervable but for being a thorowfare to great troops of Pilgrims, which every Lent paſs by them out of the Abaſſine Dominions to the Sepulchre, and other like places in and neer Jeruſalem.

2. TIGREMAON.

TIGREMAON, hath on the north Guagere, and the River Marabo, by which laſt parted from Barnagaſſo; on the South the Realm of Angote; on the Weſt, Nilus. On the Eaſt it is ſaid to extend to the Red-Sea, but the Sea parts thereof poſſeſſed by the Turks, and the adjoyning Coaſts by the Moors and Arabians; the inland parts promiſcuouſly inhabited, eſpecially more towards the Sea, by Chriſtians and Ethnicks. Divided into many inferiour Regions, the principal whereof 1. Sabain, 2 Torrates, 3 Balgada, ſo called perhaps from the chief Towns of them, and 4 Tigrai, the moſt large and ample of all theſe ſubordinate Provinces, as containing in it 17 great tracts under ſo many Lieutenants which rule all affairs both of Peace and War. The People black of colour, deformed of ſhape, in condition miſerable, of conditions wicked. Some Rivers they have, but dried up in Summer; yet ſo that with a little digging they finde water in them. Their chief City Caxumo, or Caſſumo, ſuppoſed to be the ſame which Ptolomie calleth Auxume, Stephanus Axomites, Procopius Auzomide: by all of them eſteemed the Metropolitan City of Ethiopia, and the Seat Royal of their Kings. In witneſs whereof are many ancient buildings yet remaining, ſome Pillars which reſemble the Ægyptian Obelisks, admirable for their height and workmanſhip: 60 foot high, and full of Characters or Letters ingraven on them, which now none can read. The Æthiopian Auxumites, the moſt potent Nation of this Countrey, had their name from hence: more probably conceived to be the Regal Seat of Candace, (mentioned in the Acts) then any other of the Kingdom; and ſtill affirmed to be honoured with the Court of their Emperours. Others I know have fixed his Court in Beimalechi, but I know not in what part to finde it: ſome in a Royal Palace neer that Lake of Zembre, built in the year 1570, by ſome European Architects ſent hither by Francis Duke of Florence: and many will allow him no fixed Seat at all, but tell us that he moveth with his Tents in a Royall Progreſs from one place to another, which wandring Court, or moving City, is ſaid to be no leſs then ten miles in compaſs, when the Pavilions which belong to it are diſpoſed of into rank and order.

This Kingdom is governed by a Prince of its own, but one who is an Homager and Tributary to the Abaſſine Emperour, to whom he payeth yeerly 200 horſes of the beſt Arabian breed, infinite quantities of ſilkes, great ſtore of Cotton-Wool, and abundance of Gold; but the determinate proportion, I have nowhere met with.

3. ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North with Tigremon, on the West with Nilus, on the South with the Kingdom of Amara, on the East with Dancali and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of hils and vallies, both extremely fertile, productive of the choicest fruits, and great herds of Cattel. The people eat but once in 24 houres, and for the most part make that meal in the night; their dyet raw Venison, or smoaked Beef: the mony most in use amongst them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which custom of using Salt, pepper, and the like instead of mony, was in former times amongst most people the onely bartery or way of exchange. So in Homer, Glaucus golden Armour was valued at an hundred Kine, and Diomedes Armour at ten only. Afterward in Justice commutative, it was deemed convenient to have some common Judge, or valuation of the equality or inequality of goods: the invention of which the Jews attribute to Cain, the Grecians to Hermodice the wife of Midas, the Romans to Janus. It is called Nummus, or νόμισμα from νόμος, because it was ordained by law: Pecunia, either because in elder times the chief of their wealth consisted in cattel, as now among the Irish; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was stamped on it: and Moneta, à monendo, as Suidas saith; because when the Romans stood in need of money, Juno monebat, Juno admonished them that they should use justice, and there should be no want of money. To this Goddesse, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worshipped it in the figure of a Woman holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and a Cornucopia in the other: by the Poet called Regina Pecunia, and not unfitly, the greatness of her power considered.

But to return again to Angote: I find not much spoken of the Country in the way of story; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns or Cities; unless that 1 Angote it self, as also 2 Abugana, 3 Giannamora, two of the principal Provinces of it, may possibly be so called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4. AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North Angote, on the South Damut, on the West it stretcheth towards the Nile, and on the East bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Country very plain and champaign, little swelled with hils, sufficiently fruitful, and well stored with all sorts of Cattel. The chief City of it called Amara by the name of the Province, situate in the midst of the Empire; and though not much distant from the Æquator, if not plainly under it, yet blessed with such a temperate air, such a fruitful soyl, such ravishing pleasures of all sorts, that some have taken (but mistaken) it for the place of Paradise: So strangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and Humane industry have joyned their helps together to enrich and beautifie it.

But that which is the greatest Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, situate in a large and delightful Plain: the bottom of the Hill in circuit 90 miles, and a dayes journey high; the Rock so smooth and even (but lesser and lesser towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly polished: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; so easie of ascent, that one may ride up with great pleasure, and in the midst of the Ascent a spacious Hall, as it were to rest in: the top it self is a large plain 20 leagues in circuit, compassed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beast fall down upon any chance; beautified towards the South with a rising hill, out of which issueth a sweet Spring, which watering the several palaces and gardens of it, uniteth it self into a Lake for the use of Cattel: the Plain enriched with all sorts both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Monasteries, in each of which are founded 1500 Knights of the Order of S. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger sons of the Emperour are continually inclosed, to avoid sedition: they enjoy there whatsoever is fit for delight or Princely education; and from hence some one of them, who is most hopeful, or best liked, is again brought out, if the Emperor die sonless, to be made successor. This mountain hath but one ascent up, as before was said, which is impregnably fortified; and was destinate to this use Anno 470, or thereabouts, by the Emperor Abraham Philip, advised hereunto, as he gave out, by an heavenly vision. In one of these Palaces is a famous Library, wherein are said to be many books, which with us are either in part or totally lost; as the Oracles of Enoch, with the mysteries which escaped the flood, being by him engraven on pillars; the whole works of Livy, and others. Which being heretofore translated by the Saracens into the Arabick tongue (when having plundered all the most famous Libraries of the East and West, they burnt the Originals, out of a plot to make that language as renowned and as generally studied as the Greek or Latine) are said by some good fortune to be here preserved.

5. DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North Amara, on the West Bagamedrum, on the South Goiamy, and on the East the great Lake of Barcena, and some part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Exterior. The Country plentifully furnished with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits, and Living creatures of all sorts. For none more famed then for their Slaves, sold in great numbers into Arabia, Egypt, Persia, India; and much esteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in war, dexterity dexterity in buſineſs, but ſpecially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cauſe placed in Offices of great truſt and power by many of the Eaſtern Princes, who uſing a tyrannical Form of Government, and not daring to truſt the ſword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court or Counſell, do for the moſt part arm theſe Slaves, and truſt them alſo with the conduct of their chief Affairs. A truſt, in which they never falſified or failed in a true diſcharge, but when preſuming of their power, and thoſe Advantages which ſo great a truſt and power had preſented to them, they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala, and kept it many yeers in a ſucceſſion of the Abaſſine Slaves, wherewith they ſtill made up their numbers, till outed not long ſince by the Great Mongal.

The Oxen of this Country are ſaid to be neer as great as Elephants, their horns ſo large that they ſerve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either wine or water. Here is alſo ſaid to be a kinde of Unicorn, very fierce and wilde, faſhioned like an horſe, but no bigger then an Aſs; but we muſt think theſe Unicorns to be but Rhinocerots, or elſe we ſhall very much miſtake the truth of the matter. And for the People (to go them both over once again) they are for the moſt part Gentiles; ſome Chriſtians intermixt amongſt them, who have ſundry Monaſteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Couche, ſaid to have more Gold in it then all Peru; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Friers ſay true. The People Gentiles, but the Prince not long ſince gained to the Chriſtian Faith, into which he was baptized by the Abbot or chief Governour of the Monaſteries on the hill Amara; Gradeus the Emperour being his Godfather, by whom named Andrew. And here they have an hill of great height, and very difficult aſcent, from the top whereof they uſe to caſt headlong ſuch of the Nobility, as by the Emperours ſentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom or this Principality, I am not able to reſolve, unleſs, 1 Damut, and 2 Couche may be two, and the two moſt eminent, as giving name to thoſe eſtates.

GOIAMY, hath on the North Damut, on the Weſt Bagamedrum, on the South and Eaſt ſome Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Country in the North parts full of Deſarts and Rockie Mountains, in the reſidue plentifully furniſhed with all things neceſſary. Great ſtore of Gold they finde, but droſſie; the people not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loth here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way; for fear of drawing in the Turks and Arabians to partake of the booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall, making a noiſe not much inferiour to a clap of thunder: and amongſt other Lakes, two of ſpecial note, which for their greatneſs ſeem to be Seas; in which, as ſome report, Mermaids, and Tritons or Men-fiſhes uſe to ſhew themſelves; and out of which it is thought by others that the Fountains of Nilus do ariſe; and both true alike. But paſt all doubt the Abaſſines themſelves are of this opinion; and therefore in the ſtile of the Negaz (ſo they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilus. Deceived alike in their opinion touching this particular, the Springs or Fountains of that River being further South: though poſſibly having loſt himſelf in theſe vaſt Lakes, and iſſuing hence into a more contracted Channell, he may be ſaid to have a ſecond birth from hence, though not the firſt. And theſe I take to be the Lakes, which were diſcovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the deſign of ſome other great Potentates, Seſoſtris, Cambyſes, Alexander and Philadelphus, in diſcovering the true Original of this famous River, imployed two Centurions in that ſervice; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiopians, are ſaid to have come at laſt unto certain great Mariſhes (moſt probably the lower and ſedgie parts of theſe Lakes now mentioned) of whoſe extent the Inhabitants themſelves were ignorant; nor poſſible to be diſcovered any further, the weeds having ſo overgrown the water, that there was no further paſſage to be made by boat, and leſs by wading.

Betwixt this Country and Damut, which we laſt paſſed thorow, is ſaid to be a Province of Amazons, warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whoſe Queen knoweth no man, and by the reſt honoured as a Goddeſs. Theſe, they ſay, were firſt inſtituted by the Queen of Saba: as true, as that which ſome have added of the Phœnix viſible in this Country, of Griffons, and of Fowls ſo big that they make a ſhadow like a Cloud. Which ſtrange reports I have here added, to ſupply the defect of Towns and Cities of which I meet not with ſo much as the naked names; as undiſcovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monſters.

7. BAGAMEDRUM.

BAGAMEDRUM, or SAGAMEDRUM (for I finde both names) lieth on the Weſt of Goiamy, betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilus: and keeping all along the courſe of that River, as far as Gnagere or Meroe, encountreth with the Southern point of Barnagaſſo. Some do extend it alſo beyond that Iland, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confute themſelves. The greateſt Province of this Empire it may probably be, cæteris hujus Æthiopiæ amplißimum, as they ſay it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it muſt be 1500 miles, not 600 only.

The Country plentifull in Mines of the pureſt Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long rods or Ropes of Mettall. And yet as large, and wealthy as they ſay it is, I am more to ſeek for Towns and rich Cities in it, then in the Deſarts of Libya, or the ſands of Arabia. Merchants and Travellers for the moſt part go no further then the Sea coaſts of the Country, of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the Inlands; and of the Natives ſuch as have travelled abroad into other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire, then the place they lived in. Or probably their beſt Cities not containing above 2000 houſes, few of them ſo many, and thoſe patched up of thatch, dirt, and hurdles (unleſs ſome of the Nobility or wealtheir Merchants are provided better) they may have no great reaſon to ſpeak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of ſuch ſorry places, as are indeed not worth the naming. VVhich I conceive to be the true condition of moſt or all the Inland Towns in this large Eſtate.

8. BARNAGASSO.

BARNAGNES or BARNAGASSUM, hath on the Weſt Guagere, or the Iſle of Meroe; on the Southweſt as ſome ſay, a point of Bagamedrum; on the South Dangali, and Adel; on the Eaſt, the Red Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it ſtretcheth towards Egypt, the Kingdoms of Jaſculum and Sua, poſſeſſed by the Mahometans, being interpoſed.

The Country very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well ſtored with pleaſant Riverets, beſides the neighbourhood of the Red Sea on the one ſide, Nile and Abanhi on the other. Remarkable for a Mountain in the Weſtern part of it, which being ſpacious in the beginning groweth ſtrait by little and little, and then enlargeth it ſelf again to a League in circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monaſtery, and two very large Ciſterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be aſcended one way only, and that but to a certain mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reaſon of the impoſſibility of aſcent; nor by long ſiege, or any extremity of Family, in regard it yields proviſion enough to maintain it ſelf. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province againſt Turks and Moors.

It containeth beſides Barnagaſſo it ſelf, the two Provinces of Canſila, and Daſila; though rather ſubject to the Governour or Vice-Roy of it, then parts and members of the ſame. Towns of moſt moment in the whole, 1 Beroa, or Barua, conceived by ſome to be the Colony of Ptolomy, the Reſidence of the Vice Roy, ſituate on a pleaſant and fiſh full River. 2 Zameta, honoured ſometimes alſo with the Vice-Royes preſence; but rather as a retiring place in times of leiſure, then a Town of ſtrength. 3 Suachen ſituate in an Iland of the Red Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richeſt Cities of the Eaſtern parts, and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, ſecured by nature from all ſtorms, or ſmooth tides, ſure Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great ſhips of burden. Situate in a little Iland, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up, inſomuch that veſſels of all ſorts, both within the Haven and without, do uſually unlade themſelves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship beaks ſerve for bridges. A wealthy and well traded Town both by Sea and Land, to which from the more in-land parts of the Abaſſine Empire the Mountains open a ſafe paſſage for the carriage and re carriage of their commodities. Taken by the Turks long ſince with all the reſt of the Country lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the ſeat of a Turkiſh Beglerbeg or Baſſa, whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abaſſia; as if by the poſſeſſion of this ſmall part of that Empire, they would entitle the Grand Signeur unto all the reſt. The Town conceived by ſome to be that which Ptolomy calleth Oſtium Sabaſticum, or rather Subaiticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Ptolomais Ferarum, or the Epitherias, as Plinie calleth it of the Ancient Writers. And ſome again will have it to be the Succhæ of Plinie, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are called Succhei in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whoſe part of the Country it is ſeated, and to which name it hath ſome reſemblance. 4 Biſam, not far from Erocco, remarkable for a Monaſtery ſituate on the top of an high Rock environed with dreadful Precipices upon every ſide; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectorie: this being the chief of ſix others in this Province of Barnagaſſo, the fartheſt not above 30 miles diſtant. For maintainance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they daily feed, beſides the Tythes of all the Mountain in which it ſtandeth (fruitful and rich, and at leaſt 30 miles in compaſs) they have many good Farms at the foot of the ſaid Mountain, and an hundred ſmall Villages appertaining to them, out of which they raiſe yeerly great proviſion of Corn, and above 2000. head of Cattell; their Revenues out of Tigremaon being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hoſpitality in regard their Novices or young Monks are ſent abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the husbandrie of the houſe: the elder onely being found at the charge of the Monaſtery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5 Erocco another noted Port on the Red Sea or Bay of Arabia, to which a paſſage openeth thorow the Streits of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen; conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolomy, lony, the Adeliten of Pliny: Now in poſſeſſion of the Turks, or at their command. 6 Santar, 7 Giabel, 8 Lacsari, and 9 Abarach; theſe four laſt in the Province of Dafila.

This Country at the preſent, and for long time paſt, is ſubject both to the Great Negus, or the Preſtegian of Æthiopia, and the Grand-Signeur of the Turks; naturally ſubject to the one, and tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagaſſus, by the name of his Province, a Vaſſal and Homager to the Æthiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly tribute of 150 of the beſt breed of Horſes, beſides ſome quantities of Silk, and ſome other commodities: but ſo ill neighboured by the Turks, that he is fain to pay alſo to the Beglerbeg or Baſſa reſident at Suachen, 1000 Ounces of Gold yearly for a compoſition For the Turks having by the conqueſt of Egypt made themſelves maſters of thoſe Countries towards Æthiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Mamaluck Sultans; within ſhort time (viz. An. 1558.) poſſeſſed themſelves alſo of the town of Suachen and the parts adjoyning; made it the reſidence of one of their Beglerbegs or Baſſa's, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Abaſſia, as before was ſaid: Forgot by the induſtrious Collector of the Turkiſh Hiſtory, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Baſſas of Africk. To this they added not long after all the reſt of the Sea-coaſts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after ſome ſhort breathing made a further inrode; in which they did ſo waſte the Country, that in the end they compelled the Barnagaſſian (not being aided by the Negus) to this Compoſition.

9. DANGALI, & 10. DOBAS.

SOuth and South eaſt of Barnagaſſo, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI and DOBAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahometans or Arabian Moors; both in continual enmity with the Abaſſine Emperors; and both of like nature in regard of the ſoil and people.

DANGALI hath on the North Barnagaſſo, on the South ſome part of the Kingdom of Adel; on the Eaſt the Red-Sea or Gulf of Arabia, on the Weſt Dobas before mentioned. It taketh up ſome part of the Arabick Bay within the Streits of Babel-Mandel; and without thoſe Streits, the greateſt part of that ſpacious Bay which anciently was called Sinus Avaliticus, as far as to the Promontory then called Moſylon, (neighboured by a noted Emporie of the ſame) now the Cape of Docano; neer unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and ſuddenly ſtreitneth it ſelf again, ſo as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve leagues broad; And in this Channel are five or ſix Ilands which hinder the paſſage; ſo as Sailers muſt have good experience, to avoid the Rocks which lie neer thoſe Ilands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Bebul, or Babel, which gives name to the Streits of Babel Mandel; a narrow Frith, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian Ocean. 2 Vella, a well-frequented Port, conceived to be the ſame which Strabo calleth Antiphila; not found by that name in Ptolomy. 3 Zagnani, and 4 Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Lacca. 5 Docano, neer the Cape ſo called, and therefore probably the Moſylon of the antient Writers. 6 Dangali, not far from the Sea-ſide, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing elſe memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-weſt of Dangali lieth the Realm of DOBAS, extended on the Weſt to the borders of Angote. The Country large, containing twelve, or as ſome ſay, 24 ſeveral Prefectures: Of ſo good Paſturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater ſize then in other places, and thoſe for number not eaſily matched in all this Empire. The people ſuch profeſſed Enemies of the Chriſtian faith, that they ſuffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed twelve Chriſtians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Negus; but it is only when they liſt: ſo far from being Contributioners towards the ſupport of his eſtate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their towns, 1 Doba, which gives name to the whole kingdom. 2 Bally, upon the ſame River, but more neer the head, on which Dobas ſtandeth.

11. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North with ſome parts of Dangali and the Red Sea; on the South with Adea; on the Eaſt with the Red-Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the Weſt with Fatigar; extended on the Sea-coaſt from the Cape of Docano, to the Cape of Guardaſu, conceived moſt probably to be the Ardmata of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

The Country plentiful of Fleſh, Hony, Wax, Corn, Gold and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, and many of thoſe Sheep of ſuch burdenſom Fleeces, that their tails weigh 25 pounds: ſome Kine they have, which have horns like a Stag; others but one horn only, and that in the forehead, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The People inhabiting on the Sea coaſts, are of Arabian parentage, and of the Mahometan religion; thoſe towards the Inland Countries, of the old Æthiopick race, and wholly Gentiles.

Chief towns hereof, 1 Zeila, a noted Port town, ſituate in or neer the place where Ptolomy placeth Avalites; ſtored with variety of merchandiſe, and yielding ſome repreſentation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being lime and ſtone, materials not much uſed amongſt them in theſe later times. Of great both beauty and eſteem, till the year 1516. when ſacked and burnt by the Portugals; before that time the moſt noted Emporie of all Æthiopia for the Indian trade. 2 Barbora, ſeated on the ſame Sea-coaſt, well frequented by Merchants, and poſſibly may be the Mundi or Malao of Ptolomy; neighboured by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Fellez. 3. Mette, another of the Sea-towns neer the Cape of Guardafuni, ſuppoſed to be the Acane of the Antient writers. 4 Aſſam, 5 Selir, and 6 Bidar, on the Sea-coaſts alſo. 7 Arar, the principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Country formerly a member of the Æthiopian Empire, is of late grown to ſo great ſtrength and reputation, that the Kings hereof have freed themſelves from all ſigns of ſubjection to that Crown, and think themſelves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power by Gradogna, or Guadameth, who reigned here in the year 1540. by whom Claudius the Neguz was ſo overlaid, and his Country ſo deſtroyed by continual incurſions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himſelf into the heart of his Eſtates, and crave aid of the Portugals. And though by their aſſiſtance and the help of their ſhot, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battel he was vanquiſhed, and in the fourth An. 1559. ſlain upon the place. This King accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual wars againſt the Chriſtians, did ſo eſtabliſh the affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it ſo well ſetled unto his ſucceſſors, that the Abaſſine Emperor hath ever ſince left it out of his Titles; though many other of thoſe ſmall Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial ſtile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this. It is ſaid alſo, that in the battel wherein Claudius was ſlain, and his Army routed, conſiſting of 60000 Foot and 500 Horſe of his own Subjects, beſides the Portugals: the King of Adel got into his poſſeſſion the greateſt maſſe of Coin and treaſure that was ever ſeen. A victory obtained as well by policie as force; the Abaſſines being ſeldom fought with, or their Country waſted and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the ſtrict obſervance of their Lenten Faſt, they were grown ſo weak, that they were not able to diſcharge their domeſtick buſineſſes, and therefore moſt unable to reſiſt a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA or ABEX, as ſome call it, hath on the North the Kingdom of Adel, on the South and Weſt ſome parts of the Abaſſine Empire, on the Eaſt the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greateſt part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reaſon of which name hereafter.

The Country plentifully fertile, ſhaded with Woods and ſpacious Forreſts, and thoſe Woods liberally furniſhed both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagn-Country not leſs fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other neceſſaries, beſides a great ſtore of Horſes. The people of an Olive-colour, in ſome places more inclined to black: Not clothed but from the girdle downward; nor very well armed in time of war, but with poiſoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original extraction, whoſe language they retain with ſome little difference in pronunciation.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1. Adea, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, becauſe the old reſidence of the Kings. 2 Carfur upon the Sea-coaſt, ſometimes called Opone, then a noted Emporie, and ſituate neer the Promontory called Zingis extrema. 3. Azun, and 4 Zazelle, ſuppoſed to be the Eſſina and Tonica of the Antient writers. 5 Magadazo, a petit Kingdom of it ſelf: a wealthy and well traded Town, ſituate in a fruitful and delightful ſoyl, and neighboured by a ſafe and capacious Haven; much traded by the Portugals, who bring from Ada in Arabia Felix, and Cambaia in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian commodities, which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abaſſine Slaves, which laſt they value as the chiefeſt merchandiſe which this Country yieldeth. Firſt built by ſome Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Luza their mortal enemy, under the conduct of ſeven Brethren, came into theſe parts, where they founded this City, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was ſaid; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-coaſts of both Æthiopias, as far as to the Cape dos Corrientes, which is ſomwhat to the South of the Tropick of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times, Vaſſals to the Abaſſine Emperor, to whom they paid an yearly tribute; this Kingdom ſtill remaining amongſt his titles: but ſince the taking of Magadazo. made ſo obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Eſtate of the Abaſſine in it is but meerly titular.

13. FATIGAR, & 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the Eaſt Adel, and ſome part of Adea: on the Weſt the little Realm of Xoa; on the South Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Country Champagne, ſufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furniſhed with pleaſant and delicious fruits. Moſt memorable for a Lake of twelve miles compaſs, on the top of a Mountain, well ſtored with Fiſh; from whence and from the reſt of the Mountain iſſue many Rivers, which much enrich the vallies and fields adjoyning. The chief Town hereof, (if any one be better then other) I conceive to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or ſo called from it.

Weſtward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA bordering Weſt on Amara, Southward upon Damut; furniſhed with great ſtore of Corn and Cattel, but not much beautified with Towns of any conſideration. Nothing obſervable in the Hiſtory or Deſcription of it, but that together with Fatigar and others of the mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abassine Emperours; notwithstanding all those misadventures, which have hapned to that Empire in these later dayes.

Fatigar

15. BARUS.

ON the South East of Adea lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of Sinus Barbaricus; and touching at the Western point upon that of Fatigar. The soyl and People much of the same condition with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians for the generality in the mid-land parts. Those Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abassine Emperour; but he hath neither place of strength, or consideration in all the Country; those of most note, viz. 1 Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Common-wealth by twelve Aldermen or Common Counsellors, deseended from the seven Arabian Brethren by whom first built; the founders of Magadora also, as before was said. But now, together with 2 Pate, and 3 Gogia, all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Tristran de Cugna.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of business, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to finde their names: and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more, there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the body aggregated of these several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elswhere, by Ludim the son of Mizraim and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture have the name of Ludim. A nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Errour of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch, telleth us a story how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moses; the City of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands by Tharbis the daughter of the King who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married to him. All this not only questioned but rejected by discerning men as a Jewish Fable that hath no ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth do the Æthiopians tell the story of their own Original. By whom we are informed that Chus the son of Cham first reigned in this Æthiopia, to whom succeeded his son Regma, and next after Dedan: that from the death of Dedan till the reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the People lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground, as did the Troglodites an ancient Nation of this Country in the times long after: that Arac first built the City of Aruma, and by that pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend is the story of Maqueda a Queen hereof, and the fourth from Aruch, whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which she bestowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with childe by Solomon when she was in his Court, she was delivered of a Son, whom she caused to be called Melech, or Melilech, and at the age of 20 years to be sent to his Father. By whom instructed in the Law, and circumcised, and called by the name of David, he was returned into his Country, with Azarias the son of Zadok the Priest, who had stollen the two Tables of the Law and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen resigned the Empire to her son. His Successors afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace returning home baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel.) That Chus planted in Arabia, hath been shewn already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is that this Countrey was first peopled by the children of Ludim, as before was said. To whom the Abassenes coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added: and in some tract of time be of such great power, as to put their name upon the Countrey. For that the Abassenes were originally an Arabian People, appeareth by Stephanus one of the old Chorographers, who out of Uranius (An ancienter Author then himself) hath told us this, Ἀβασηνοὶ ἔθνος Ἀραβίας. Another Stephanus, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath as he thinks decided the controversie, by making Sheba the son of Chus the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the son of Regma the Father of the Æthiopians; and for this cause hath fitted us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with ס Samech must be rendred Æthiopia; and Arabia when writ with ש Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversie: it being evidently clear that both Sheba the son of Chus, and Sheba the son of Regma were originally setled in Arabia, as there hath been shewn; though I deny not but that some of the Posterity of Chus in those elder time, (before the coming over of the Abassine nations) might either out of too much populosity or desire of change, cross over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such parts of this Countrey as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And as for Mayneda (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtless Queen of the Sabæans in Arabia Felix; not of the Æthiopians, in the waste of Africk. For besides the longsomness of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel, it is very probable that the Son of Solomon by this Lady would never have suffered Egypt to have layen in quiet, whilest Sesac the King thereof thereof made war upon Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon alſo, and ſo by conſequence his half Brother: But to leave theſe uncertain Fables, the firſt action of moment which we meet with in unqueſtioned Story, touching theſe Æthiopians, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyſes the Perſian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Perſia, conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Ethiopia unto Ægypt alſo: Upon this Reſolution he ſent Ambaſſadors to that King, to ſearch into the paſſages of his Country, and diſcover his ſtrengths; and by them ſent a Tun of wine, ſome Bracelets, a Purple habit, and a Box of ſweet ointments to preſent him with. VVhich Preſents being tendred to him, he looked upon the Unguents and the Purple Robe as too ſlight and effeminate: the Bracelets he conceived to be bonds or fetters, and openly laught at them, as too weak to hold in a Priſoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleaſed, and ſorrowed that his Country yielded no ſuch liquour. But underſtanding well enough what this viſit aimed at, he gave the Ambaſſadors at their parting (amongſt other gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and ſtrength, requiring them to tell their Maſter, that untill every Perſian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer then the Perſian, as before was noted) it would be no ſafe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cauſe to thank the Gods for giving the Æthiopians ſo contented mindes, as not to think of conquering their Neighbours kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vaſt mountains, we finde then not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans medled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen hereof, during the Empire of Auguſtus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governour of that Province, brought to ſuch conformity, that ſhe was fain to ſue for peace, and to purchaſe it with the loſs of ſome part of her Country. To keep them quiet for the future, Philæ an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garriſon by the Romans, and the ſeat of their Deputy for theſe parts: held by them till the Empire of Diocleſian, and by him abandoned, becauſe the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire; in ſo much as Juſtinian ſent unto Heliſtheus, as Juſtin his Succeſſour did unto Archetas, the then Kings of this Country, to crave their brotherly aſſiſtance againſt the Perſians.

Of their Converſion to the Faith in the reign of a ſecond Candace (unleſs as Plinie thinketh, Candace was the general name of all their Queens) we have ſpoke already. To which the Æthiopians adde, that after the baptizing of their firſt Philip (the ſon of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours ſucceeding had the name of Philip. Till the religious life of John, a Cotemporary of the Emperour Conſtans, honoured as a Saint after his deceaſe, made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John prefixed that of Presbyter, becauſe (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotall as the Regall Office; Rex idem hominum Divumque Sacerdos; the very Anius of the Poet: And this ſo commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Preſter John, and his eſtate the Empire of Preſter John; with no truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Preſter-John, is but a corruption or miſtake for Prætegian or Precious John; and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no leſs. And yet I more incline to thoſe, who finding that the word Preſtegan ſignifieth an Apoſtle, in the Perſian tongue, and Preſtigani, an Apoſtlical man: do thereupon infer that the title of Padeſcha Preſtigiani, an Apoſtolick King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxie of his belief, which not being underſtood by ſome, inſtead of Preſte-gian, they have made Prieſt-John, in Latine Presbyter Johannes; as by a like miſtake, one Pregent (or Prægian as the French pronounce it) commander of ſome Gallies under Lewis the 12. was by the Engliſh of thoſe times called Prior John. Preſtegian then, not Prieſt-John, is his proper adjunct; contractedly, but commonly called the Prete by the Modern French who uſually leave out ſ before a conſonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, then it is at the preſent, ſhrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks and Arabians: of which the firſt have taken from him all his Countries from the Iſle of Meroe unto Egypt; with all the Sea-coaſts of Barnagaſſo; the later as much encroaching on them on the reſt of the Maritime parts of his Dominions. But from none have they ſuffred more then the Kings of Adel, who have divers times laid waſte their Country, diſcomfited ſome of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558. ſlain their King in battell. Not cured of thoſe wounds to this very day. For Adam, who ſucceeded Claudius that was ſlain in battell, was ſo far from being able to revenge the death of his Predeceſſour, that being ſuſpected to incline to Mahometaniſm, he was defeated by the under-king of Barnagaſſo. Since which time they have ſo languiſhed by inteſtine diſſentions, that though Alexander the third (if there were ever ſuch a King, which I finde much doubted) is ſaid to have ſetled his affairs by the aide of the Portugals; and that ſome ſtrange ſucceſſes have been ſince reported of a later Emperour; yet the truth is, that the eſtate hereof hath been ſo imbroiled in civil Wars, and ſo many of their Emperours ſucceſſively murdered, that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakened, and the Countrey made a prey to impuiſſant Enemies. For in the year, Anno 1603. the Emperour Melech Gogad, ſucceeding in the throne by the depoſition and impriſonment of his Predeceſſour (under colour of Baſtardie) was not long after ſlain by one Zezelezeus, and James or Jacob advanced unto the Empire: James not long after vanquiſhed and ſlain by one Sazinoſius; and he ſo terribly diſquieted with Treaſons aud Conſpiracies, that in the year 1607 he was fain to ſue for aide to the King of Spain, and tender a ſubmiſſion of the Abaſſine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the ſpirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not ſo eaſily be laid down (though there followed a long long calm between) but that it brake out again within few yeers paſt (that is to ſay, about the year 1648) more violently then it did before: a powerfull Rebell ſtarting up, who diſpoſſeſſed the Prete of almoſt all his Kingdoms, and reduced the iſſue of the war unto one Town only, in which he had beſieged his perſon. And in all probability he had got that too, and with that the Empire, had not a French-man then living in the Country, found means to put himſelf into it; who training the people of the place to the uſe of Arms (according to the way of Europe) made a ſally out upon the Enemy, routed him, and ſo raiſed the ſiege, and by that means preſerved the Emperour and the Empire from moſt certain ruine.

Yet notwithſtanding theſe diſaſters, theſe later Emperors have ſtill preſerved their majeſty amongſt their Subjects, whom they hold in ſervitude enough, though they keep not ſuch a diſtance as in former Ages, when the Prete was honoured as a God, and uſed to ſhew himſelf but thrice in a year, viz. on Chriſtmas, Eaſter, and Holirood day: by which retiredneſs it was thought that he made his preſence more acceptable; ſome holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majeſty of a King, then to make himſelf too common an object for the eye of the vulgar. The like kind of ſtate was once kept by thoſe Kings of France of the firſt Merovignian line; who withdrawing themſelves from all publike affairs, uſed only to ſhew themſelves (as we have already ſaid) on May-day. A greater retiredneſs then this, was that which Valleda Queen of the Tenctteri (a people of the Rhene) is reported by Tacitus to have uſed; for when the reſt of the Germans then in arms, ſent Ambaſſadors to her to inform her of their victory againſt the Romans, they were prohibited either to ſpeak to her or to ſee her; Arcebantur aſpectu, quo venerationis plus ineſſet. Such a keeping of ſtate, the politick Prince Tiberius uſed, when the German legions mutined; for he daigned not himſelf to ſee them pacified, but ſent his ſon; the reaſon was, quia majeſtati major è longinquo reverentia. And no doubt the ſame keeping of diſtance ſwayed much with him, when he forſook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propenſion to follow his unnatural pleaſures the more ſecurely, together with his deformities on his face, had alſo their powers upon his reſolution.

The title of this great and mighty Emperour, (but neither ſo great or mighty in power as in title) runneth thus: N.N. Supreme of his Kingdoms, and the Beloved of GOD, the Pillar of Faith, ſprung from the ſtock of Judah, the ſon of David, the ſon of Solomon, the ſon of the Column of Sion, the ſon of the ſeed of Jacob, the ſon of the hand of Mary, the ſon of Nahu after the fleſh, the ſon of S. Peter and Paul after the ſpirit; Emperour of the higher and leſſer Æthiopia, and of the moſt mighty Kingdoms, Dominions, and Countries of Xoa, Goa, Caffares, Fatigar, Angotæ, Balignazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the fountains of Nile, Amara, Banguamedron, Ambea, Vangucum, Tigremaon, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Bernagaſſum; and Lord of all the Regions unto the confines of Egypt.

It ſeemeth by this title, that theſe Æthiopian Emperours, however the truth of ſtory goeth, conceive themſelves to be ſprung from Salomon, & Maqueda, (or Nizaule, as Joſeph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by ſome reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the ſame with thoſe of the Tribe of Juda, which are a Lyon rampant in a field Or: and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah ſhall overcome. But Bara, an expert Herauld, giveth this Prince no ſuch Coat-armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a croſs portate Mars, charged with a crucifix Sol, between two ſcourges of the ſecond. And yet not altogether to diſcredit the old Tradition, ſo generally received amongſt them, it may be probable enough, that when the Abaſſens came into Æthiopia, ſome of the Sabæans their next neighbours came along for company, and amongſt them ſome of the Royal race of the Queen of Sheba; with ſome of which, by reaſon of their great Nobility, ſome of the Abaſſine Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impoſſibility, but that Solomon (conſidering his courſe of life) might get a ſon upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus deſcended.

As for the Government of theſe Emperors, it is abſolutely Regal, or to ſay better, perfectly Deſpotical: the people being treated by them more like ſlaves then ſubjects; taking away Signeuries, and giving them unto whom he pleaſeth, the deprived party not daring to expreſs the leaſt diſcontent. By them ſo reverenced, that it was antiently a cuſtom, if the King were blind, or lame, or maimed, for the Subject to inflict on his own body the like impreſſion: ſtill had in ſo much honour by the greateſt Subject, that at his bare name they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers; and reverence his Pavilion as they paſs by, though he be not in it. He on the other ſide ſeldom appeareth to his Subjects but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a peece of Watchet-Taffata, which he lifteth up and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revennes, ſome of our late Obſervations ſpeak nothing but wonders. Some ſay his Empire reacheth from the Red Sea to the Atlantick Ocean, and from one Tropick to the other: Some, that he is of ſo great Riches, that he is able to purchaſe a moyetie of all the world, if it were to be ſold; others, that he is able to raiſe for any preſent ſervice a million of men; And he himſelf is ſaid to have offered to the Portugals one million of money, and another of men, if they would imploy it in a war againſt the Infidels. But notwithſtanding theſe great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be ſuch a Miracle as ſome of theſe Reports have made of him: For they that ſpeak moſt knowingly of his Revennes, affirm that the ordinary expences of his Court and Army being diſcharged, he coffereth up but three millions of Crowns per annum, which is no great matter; and upon extraordinary emergencies of war and trouble, will be eaſily waſted, or brought into a narrower compaſs.

And yet to make up this Revenue, beſides the Crown Lands or Demain Imperial, he laieth ſome Tax or other upon every houſe, receiveth the tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines, and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaſeth to chooſe, ſo it be not that in which the Lords themſelves inhabit.

This, though it be no great Intrado, conſidering the large extent of his Dominions, and form of his Government, yet it is greater in proportion then his Forces are. For notwithſtanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag of raiſing a million of men for preſent ſervice; it is well known that he was never able to advance half that number in his greateſt neceſſity; and amongſt thoſe whom he can raiſe, there are but few who can deſerve the name of Souldiers: for the people being poor and beggerly, and brought up in a ſervile and baſe condition, are naturally deſtitute of that courage and alacrity of ſpirit which ſhould be in men profeſſing Arms, or fit for noble undertakings; and are beſides, on certain jealouſies of State, ſo diſuſed from war, that they know not how to uſe their weapons when there is occaſion. So that for my part I conſider him as a weak and impuiſſant Prince, of no authority or influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himſelf from the continual incurſions of his neighbours (ſome of them mean and petit Princes) which lie neereſt to him. Land-locked on every ſide from traffick and commerce with the Seas, incroached upon Northward by the Turks; confronted on the Weſt by the King of Borneo, who poſſeſſeth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the Eaſt continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, ſometimes a Vaſſal of his own; and on the South with the Gallæ a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waſte before them whereſoever they come; and finally in theſe later times by his own Subjects alſo. Injuries not to be indured, had he power to help it.

But the chief Stay of this Eſtate, is an Order of Knighthood entituled by the name of S. Antony, to which every Father that is of the Degree of a Gentleman is to deſtinate one of his ſons, if he have above two, but not the eldeſt. And out of theſe they cull about 12000 Horſe, which are to be the ſtanding Guard of the Emperours perſon: their Oath is, To defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preſerve Religion, and to make head againſt the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbats of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara; where they have two Monaſteries, as well for the training up of theſe Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement when grown old and diſcharged from ſervice.

And ſo much for Æthiopia Superior.

Of ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulf of Arabia to the Southern Ocean) on the West with the Æthiopick Ocean; on the North with Terra Nigritarum, and the higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Conus, with the Main Ocean parting it from the Southern undiscovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered. Inferior was added for distinctions sake, because somwhat of a lower situation then the other is. By Ptolomy called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge then the neerer did: and by late Writers for the contrary reason called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolomies Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia Sub Aegypto, and all those Lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Countrey so little discovered in those elder times, that we finde mention onely of some eminent Mountains, as 1. Canchis. 2. Lon. 3. Zipha. 4. Barditis. 5. Moschi, one onely Region known by name, called Agisimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The people not distinguished here, as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kinde of diet; some of them being called Anthropophagi, from their eating of men, and others Ichthyophagi from their living on fish. Of these the first inhabiteth on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of whom had the name of Rapsii: the last on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Hesperii. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus were occasioned by the great abundance of snow which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many parts hereof, there were Rhinocerots, Tygers, Elephants, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Countrey in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is mountainous in the West, sandy in the midst, and desart towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soyl and people, being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several inclosures, then as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills and Rivers of most reckoning in it; the principall of their Mountains are 1 those called Cantaberes, in the Province of Angola; 2 Lunæ Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both Æthiopias, now found to belong unto this alone. A chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropick of Capricorn, full of sharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and savage People; the valleys underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Country is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the world; though it self but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1 Nilus, which passing thorow some part of this Country, and traversing the whole length of the Abassian and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2. Zaire the greatest of all Africk, but unknown to the Antients, which running Eastward thorow the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser streams of 1 Vamba, 2 Barbela, 3 Coanza, 4 Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way, and at the last by a mouth of 28 miles wideness disgorgeeth his full stomack in the Western Ocean. 3 Cuama, which making his passage towards the East and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers, after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is navigable) loseth it self in the Indian or Æthiopick Ocean: and 4 Fluvius Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into these four parts, that is to say, 1 Zanquebar. 2 Monomotapa, 3 Cafraria, 4 Manicongo. Some also add the Country of Aian, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. But these we have ascribed with better reason to the other Æthiopia, within the bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

1. ZANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR is bounded on the East with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean; on the West with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia: on the North with the higher Æthiopia only; on the South with Monomotapa. The reason of the name I finde not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agisimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior & so much of the other as lieth on the South of the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel and Adea. The Country on both sides of that River known in old times by the name of Barbarians, giveth to a large adjoyning Bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus; and was much famed in those elder times for the best sort of Myrrhe: the Myrrha Trogloditica, & Myrrha Barbara, or Barbarica, being used for the same, by some of the Antients, because the Troglodites and the people of this Barbaria, joyned on one another. Here was also in those elder times a good race of Ginger; of which saith Dioscorides, Μάκερ φλοίος ὃς κομιζόμενος ἐκ τῆ Βερβάρα, that it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbara. Where by the way the Scholiasts upon that Author, and Plinie in the 12 Book have been much mistaken; whereof the first takes this Barbara or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh that the Myrrhe of these parts had the name of Barbara, from the drossiness and coursness of it, as if so called only because unrefined. The principal Town hereof called Rapta, by the name of the River; seated not far from the Sea, and by reason of the great Trade of it, esteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolomy. A noted Promontory of the same name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called; The Country is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflown with unruly Rivers; and withall so full of Woods and Forrests, that for want of passage for the wind, the Air is generally (as in all Fenny Countries of the like obstruction) exceeding pestilent. The people of complexion black, and of curled hair: Mahometans on the Sea-coasts; in the Inland parts Idolaters, extremely given to Witchcraft and Divinations. Naked above the waste, and beneath covered only with the skins of Beasts, or some such mingled-colour stuffe as the Scottish Plad. The Moors which dwell on the Sea-coasts, use to adventure on the Seas in little Vessels, sowed together with leathern thongs, and calked with gumme; having no other sails in them then the Leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of as slight a making, as those used anciently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

Primùm cana silix, madefacto vimine parvam
Texitur in puppim; cæsoque induta juvenco
Vectoris patiens, tumidum superenatat Amnem.

Which I find thus rendred to my hand:

The moystned Osier of the hoary Willow
Is woven first into a little Boat;
Then cloth'd in Bullocks hides, upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to say, 1 Melinde, 2 Mombaza, 3 Quiloa, 4 Mosambique, 5 Sofala, all along the Coasts; 6 Moenhemage, 7 Corova, 8 Calen, 9 Anzuga, 10 Monzalo, 11 Badin, 12 Mombra, 13 Mombizo, 14 Embroe, and 15 Macaos, more within the Land. Of the nine last, not being perfectly discovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we shall now be silent. But the first six lying upon the Shores or neer it, and consequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, shall be surveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the Higher Æthiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci: so named from Melinde, the chief City of it; well walled, and seated in a fruitful and delightful soyl; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Flesh, Limons, Citrons, and most sorts of fruits; but not well furnished with Corn, the greatest part whereof is brought out of Cambaia a Province of India. The houses built of lime and stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-coasts of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; those of the Inlands, which are of the original Natives, for the most part Heathens. Most of them of an Olive colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally of as white complexions as in other places; but they have some black people also: And all of them more civil in their Habit, course of life, and entertainment in their houses, then the rest of this Country. Great friends unto the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever since the kind entertainment which they gave unto Vasques de Gama, whom they furnished with Pilots to direct him in his way to India, when first discovered by that People.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of these petit Kingdoms, of the same nature for the temper of the soil and people that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, situate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Iland of 12 miles compass; but of good influence on some part of the Continent also. The Isle and City said to have some resemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a wall, and fortified with a Castle; the Streets thereof very narrow, but well built, most of the houses being brick, and the Mosques capacious. The King hereof a Mahometan, as are most of his Subjects, and a bitter enemy of the Christians. For which cause, and upon some discourtesies received from them, the Town was taken by Vasques de Gama, *An.*1500. but abandoned again by reason of the unhealthy Air, nor well agreeing with the constitution of the Portugals. Afterwards having taken in Alibeg and five Turkish Gallies, the better to enable themselves against the Portugals; the Town was taken and ruinated by Thomas de Cotigno, sent thither *An.*1589. by the Portugal Vice-Roy residing in Goa; there being taken at that time (besides the spoil of the City) all the Turkish Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many lesser Peeces of Ordinance: such of the Turks and Citizens as escaped the slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themselves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a man-eating people, who had before besieged the City; and gathering up such gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King, and as many of the principal Citizens as they could get into their hands. 2 Ampaza, the second Town of note, was taken by the Portugals about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Country rich and pleasant, the Inhabitants for the most part of Arabian Ancestry; of complexion neer unto a white, their women comely, sumptuous in attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houses, which are generally well built and richly furnished. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whose honour they are very tender) the people of this Quiloa are said to have a strange custom amongst them, more to be mentioned for the rarity then the decency of it; which is the sowing up of the private passages of nature in their female children, leaving only a small vent for their urine: Thus sowed, they keep them carefully at home, home, till they come to be married: And she that is by her Husband found to want this sign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kinde of ignominie sent back to her Parents, and by them as disgracefully received.

It took this name from Quiloa the chief Town thereof, situate in a little Iland, but neer the shore, from which parted by a narrow Fryth, opposite to the mouth of the River Couva, by some called Quiloa. First built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the son of Sultan Hiscben, who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, because their Mothers were Persians, and his an Abassine, sought new Adventures in these parts, and bought this Iland. His Successors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land: and so adorned Quiloa, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for sumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in those parts. Proud of their many good successes they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the conduct of Vasques de Gama, An. 1500. the City it self was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave some Fortresses erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a quarrel with Abraham then the King of this Country, whom in the year 1505. they deposed from his Kingdom, and placed another in his Throne, under colour of not paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians rose in Arms, displaced their new King, demolished their Fortifications, and sent them to learn better moderation in their prosperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The business coming after to a composition, the Quiloan covenanted for the yeerly Tribute of 1500 Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quiloa, so called of Mosambique the chief City of it, situate in a little Iland, the principal of three, opposite all of them to the mouth of the River Mogbincats, and bordering on the Promontory of old called Prassum, spoken of by Ptolomy, and by him made the furthest known place of all this Coast. In the Iland there are said to be sheep whose tails are 25. pound weight, as in other places of these Countries, and some parts of Syria; Hens, black in feathers, flesh, and bone; and if sodden make the water as black as ink, but yet sweeter in taste then any other. Of Pork good store, the more because the people are for the most part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all hog-meat is forbidden. The in-land parts more barren, but very populous: so ignorant and rude when the Portugals first came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they sold fifteen Kine, and then fell out among themselves who should have the Bell. The Town conveniently seated on a large and spacious Haven, and fortified with a very strong Castle, in the hands of the Portugals: who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, use to call in here and fit themselves with all things necessary to pursue their voyage. A Town of so great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Castle in the time of his Government (which continueth only for three years) is said to lay up 300000 Ducats for his Lawfull gains of the Gold that cometh from Sofala. A gain so great, that at the end of his three years, he is to serve for three years more at some place or other of the East Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal; and then permitted to return to his native Country. Such of that Nation as are suffred to inhabit here, are enjoyned to be married, to the end the Iland should be well-peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwise perhaps might have few else in it, but the Garrison Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth on the South of Mosambique, from which parted by the River Cuama, the greatest River of those parts; and thence extended to the mountains which they call Manica, by which separated from Monomotapa. So called from Sofala, the chief City of it, situate in a little Iland (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoyning. Both Town and Iland subject unto the power of the Portugals who have a Fort, the better to secure the Factory by them here erected; one of the richest in the world; the People bringing hither great quantity of Gold (of which they have most plentifull Mines) which they exchange with them for their cloth, and other commodities. It is supposed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yeerly. The supposition so agreeable to all other circumstances, that little question need be made of the truth thereof. Insomuch as this Country for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by some thought to be that land of Ophir, to which Solomon sent; and of this opinion Ortelius in his Thesaurus was the first Author; but in my minde, upon no probable conjectures, and against very strong presumption. For first Ophir the son of Joctan of whom mention is made in the 10. of Gen. vers. 29. and from whom the land of Ophir, in all likelyhood took its name; is in the next verse said to have planted in the East: whereas this Sofala is situate South-west from Chaldea; in which the confusion of Tongues, and dispersing of the People, began. And secondly, it is impossible for the Navie of Solomon which lay at Ezion Geber, in the Bay of Arabia, to have spent three years in coming hither, and returning: which we finde to have been the usual times of finishing the voyage to Ophir, 1 Kings ch. 10. Ophir then is some part of India; but whether it were the Iland of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan, or one of the Molucco's, or the land of Malaza, called by the Ancient Aurea Chersonesus, I dare not determine; considering what worthy men maintain these several opinions.

6. MOENHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only inland Province of any note, hath on the East Mombaza, and Quiloa; on the West the famous River Nilus; on the North some part of the Dominions of the Abassine Emperours; on the South Mosambique. The Country very plentifull of Mines of Gold, yet the People use it not for money, but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks & Taffatas, with which they use to cloath themselves from the Girdle downwards, wards. In ſtead of money, they make uſe of Red Counters, much reſembling Glaſs. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacie with the Kings of Mombaza and Quiloa, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are alſo ſubject a wild and cruel people, called Agag, inhabiting on Lake Zembre and the banks of the Nilus; diſperſed about the fields in their homely cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aſpect; more horrible then otherwiſe they would be, by drawing lines upon their cheeks with an iron-inſtrument, and forcing their eye-lids to turn backwards. By the aſſiſtance of this people, the King of Moenhemage hath hitherto preſerved his Eſtate againſt the King of Monomotapa: and they themſelves by ſome of their own Leaders did ſo diſtreſs the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a ſmall Iland, where he hardly ſcaped a violent and untimely death, moſt of his people being ſtarved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the reſt of theſe Provinces, we can ſay but little, and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the moſt part from one another both in ſpeech and behaviour; each Village under a ſeveral King, and each in continual quarrel with its next neighbours, whom if they overcome, they eat. At leaſure times they live by hunting, and the fleſh of Elephants. And amongſt theſe, but more upon the Borders of the Abaſſine Empire, I place the Galla, a Nationleſs nation, as it were, without houſe or dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agags (whom ſome call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be; who watching their advantages, and joyned together in ſome Arts of doing miſchief, have made of late ſuch deſolations in the Countries of the Preſtor-John.

2. MONOMOTAPA.

MONOMOTAPA, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all theſe names it is called) is bounded on the North with the River Cuama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the Weſt and South by the River of the Holy-Ghoſt, by which ſeparated from Cafraria; and on the Eaſt by the main Ocean. So that it is almoſt an Iland: ſaid to contain in compaſs 750 Spaniſh leagues, or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is ſaid to be very temperate, and the Country very good and pleaſant, yet full of Forreſts. Well watered, beſides the two great Rivers before mentioned with the Streams of 1 Panami, 2 Luanga, 3 Arruga, 4 Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their ſands. By means whereof, it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great ſtore of Paſturage, on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beaſts very large and great: ſuch ſtore of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reaſon but to make merchandiſe of their Teeth: their Gold-Mines great and ſmall reckoned to 3000; ſome in the hils of Magnice, others in the Provinces of Matuca and Boro: the places where the Mines are, known without further Art in the diſcovery of them, by the dryneſs and barrenneſs of the ſoil; as if Nature could not hoord up gold in her ſpacious boſom, but ſhe muſt needs be barren of all good works.

The People are of mean ſtature, and black complexions; but ſtrong and active, couragious, and of ſuch footmanſhip, that they out-run horſes. Their Apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make, or buy from ſome other place: their Diet Fleſh Fiſh Rice, Mill, and an Oil called Suſiman. Their Religion Paganiſm for the moſt part; yet they worſhip not Idols, but believe in one God onely, which they call Mozimo: and ſeem not much averſe from the Chriſtian faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They puniſh nothing more ſeverely then Witch-craft, Adultery, and Theft: and in the puniſhment of Delinquents they uſe no Prisons, but execute them as ſoon as apprehended, which is the reaſon that the Vulgar have no doors to their houſes, that being a privilege for the Nobles. They may have as many Wives as they will, but the firſt the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much reſpected (as a ſecond England) the Emperor himſelf, if he meeteth any of them in the ſtreets, giving them the way. Not to be married till their Menſtrua or Natural purgations teſtifie their ability for conception; and therefore they ſolemnize the firſt Flux thereof with a liberal Feaſt.

Provinces of moſt note in it, and adjoining to it, but reckoned as Members of this Empire, are

1. Matuca, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botonghi, who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropick, have in the winter ſuch deep ſnows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not ſpeedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy Ghoſt, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corrientes (Caput Currentium in the Latines) wealthy in fat paſtures and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhauſtible Mines of Gold. Moſt memorable for a large, and in thoſe times an impregnable Fortreſs, built formerly by ſome forrein Prince to ſecure the Mines; built of ſquare ſtones, and every ſtone of marvellous greatneſs, without any ſign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 ſpans thick, but the height not anſwerable; over the Gate certain characters written, which the moſt learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of ſome of the Æthiopian or Abaſſine Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the higheſt. By the Inhabitants, who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils: but by thoſe who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, aſcribed to Solomon. though ſituate 510 miles more Weſtward then Sofala, by their own accompt. The Air here very cold, by reaſon of the ſharp blaſts coming from the Pole-Antartick; ſo much the colder, in that they have no wood or other fewel, but what they make themſelves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO,

3. BORO, and 4 QUITICUI, both furniſhed with Gold alſo in their Mines and Rivers, but not ſo pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet ſuch as ſerve their turn ſo well as to ſpoil all induſtry; the people here being very careleſs in providing neceſſaries, which they preſume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will bring them in exchange hereof.

5. INHAMBAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vaſſal and Tributary to the Emperour of Monomotapa; the King whereof in the year 1560. was Chriſtened by Gonſalvo Silveria a Spaniſh Jeſuite, by the name of Conſtantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further progreſs of Chriſtianity. Touching 6 Matana, 7 Melemba, 8 Quinbebe, 9 Berteca, and 10 Bavagul, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the houſes being here ſo thin, that from the border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is ſaid, there is no ſign of any building either old or new. The principal of thoſe that be, 1. Tongum in the Province of Inhamban, and the Seat royal of thoſe Kings; memorable for the baptiſm of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2 Simbus, ſuppoſed to be ſo called from the Agiſymba of Ptolomie, the chief town of the Province of Torre or Batne, diſtant from Sofala one and twenty dayes journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruines of the old Fortreſs before deſcribed. 3 Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperour makes his uſual reſidence, giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himſelf, whom they call Benomotaxa, or Monomotapa, the word in their language ſignifying a King or Emperour.

The King hereof accounted one of the greateſt of Africk, hath under his command, beſides the Provinces deſcribed, ſome part of Cafraria. Of great riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which ſo abundantly ſupply all the Royal occaſions, that he exacteth no kind of tribute from his Subjects, but ſome certain dayes ſervice in his Works; and from his Nobles gifts and preſents, without which none of them are to come before him. His forces great, the multitudes of men conſidered; but weak, for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern ſervice, the Arms they moſt uſe being only Darts and Targets. For which cauſe, (and in regard the people of the ſubject Kingdoms are ſo prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hoſtages of their Fathers loyaltie) he wageth mercenarie Souldiers of other Nations, whom he diſtributeth abroad in his ſeveral Provinces: and amongſt theſe it is affirmed, that he hath a ſtrong Battaillon of Amazons, a warlike race of women who inhabit about the Lake of Zambre, and the outskirts of Zanzibar; compared by ſome, for their fidelity and proweſs, to the Turkiſh Janizaries. And yet not truſting wholly to the faith of theſe Mercenaries, it is ſaid that he keeps 200 Maſtives for the Guard of his perſon. Much reverenced by his Subjects, by whom he is ſerved upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all thoſe that are about him make ſuch a ſhout, that the town rings of it. In one particular they differ from moſt Nations elſe, which is, that ſuch as are admitted into his preſence are bound to ſit down, in token of reverence; to ſtand before him, being a ſign of the greateſt dignity which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Chriſtianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King hereof was baptized by Gonſalvo the Jeſuite, by the name of Sebaſtian, (that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning.) But afterwards on the ſuggeſtions of ſome Arabians then in great place about him, having cauſed the Jeſuite to be ſlain, he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Franciſco Barretio; to whom he offered very honorable amends for the iujury done: but Barretio having in hope ſwallowed all the Gold in the Country, would not admit of any peaceable agreement, but referred the buſineſs to a battel; in which being overcome himſelf, and his whole forces not long after conſumed by ſickneſs, the hopes of Chriſtianity, and the Portugals intereſſe in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CAFRARIA.

CAFRARIA is bounded on the Eaſt with Rio di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghoſt; on the South and Weſt with the main Ocean; on the North extended to ſome parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Cafars, which in the Arabian tongue ſignifieth an Heretick; a name by them given to Chriſtians, Heathens, and thoſe of their own Religion alſo, which differ in opinion from them; but given to this Region by ſome late Writers, becauſe deſtitute of another name.

The Country for ſo much of it as hath been diſcovered, is ſaid to be full of great Herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Oſtriches, Pelicans, Herons, Geeſe, Ducks, Pheſants, Partriges; in a word all things neceſſary for the life of man, were it ſomewhat better ſtored with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally ſtored with Woods and Forreſts: the Hils thereof ſo intermixt with graſſie Vallies, that pity 'tis ſo beautiful and rich a Country ſhould be inhabited by ſo barbarous and rude a people; who being utterly unprovided of towns and houſes, live in woods like beaſts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat noſes, long ſhaped heads, and moſt monſtrous ears, extended far beneath their ſhoulders, by hanging in them iron-chains, glaſs, bullets, Bels, and ſuch ponderous bables. Theſe Ornaments common to both ſexes, who alſo uſe (for their greater beauty) moſt hideouſly to laſh themſelves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies; as if no lace could better ſort with their naked skins, with which only, except ſome flap of leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

But

But amongſt all the ſeveral Nations which inhabit this moſt flouriſhing Country, none are more barbarous then thoſe whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of good Hope; tall, ſquare, and ſtrong, addicted always to War and Rapine, and feeding on the fleſh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying friends, whoſe death they haſten for the Shambles: The skuls of whom they uſe for their drinking Cups. Their weapons poiſoned Arrows and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they always carry fire before them, menacing thereby to roſte or boil all ſuch as they overcome. Their King (if ſuch a ſacred name become ſuch an impious Monſter) they account for Lord of all the earth, as the Portugals of all the Seas: and he with the old Giantlike Arrogance, not only threateneth the deſtruction of men, but ſhooteth his poiſoned Arrows againſt Heaven it ſelf, as often as the rain or heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an inrode into Zanzibar, laid deſolate all the Country as far as Mombaza, which City they beſieged, ſacked, and devoured the People of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our deſcription of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, ſcarce ſo much as houſes; and thoſe ſo mean that they deſerve not to be ſo called: except it be ſome ſheds on the Sea ſides for the uſe of Saylors. Of moſt note in it is Soldania, ſituate on a large and capacious Road, about fifteen or ſixteen Leagues from the Cape of good Hope: not ſo much noted for the building, as the Bay it ſelf, where ſuch as are to ſail towards the Indies, uſe to take in freſh water, and make proviſion of things neceſſary for ſo long a Voyage.

But that which is of moſt note in all this Country is the Cape it ſelf; diſcovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their firſt Indian undertakings, by whom, for the continual Tempeſts which he found about it, it was firſt called Tormentoſa: But afterwards having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a proſperous voyage, they cauſed it to be called Cabo di Buona Speranza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vaſques di Gama, the firſt diſcoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, An. 1597. It conſiſteth of three great points or head-lands, of which that which is neereſt us, is the Cape of good Hope: the middlemoſt hath the name of Cabo Falſo, becauſe miſtaken for the other by ſome of the Portugals, returning homewards: the third called Cabo della Guglia, or the Cape of Needles, by reaſon of thoſe ſharp points which ſhoot towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, a large and pleaſing plain, adorned with great variety of flowers, and covered with a carpet of graſs; it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large proſpect over the Sea on all ſides. The Sea here is very rough and tempeſtuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkinde: whereupon a Spaniſh Captain being ſore vexed with a ſtorm, expoſtulated with GOD why he ſuffered his good Catholicks to endure ſuch torments, and permitted the Engliſh Hereticks and Blaſphemers, to paſſe ſo eaſily.

The Country is not ſubjected unto any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their ſeveral Clans; nor finde I hitherto that either the Portugals or Spaniards have took poſſeſſion of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the beſt title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom poſſeſſion was taken of it in the reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Aſcent unto the Table King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beget any good title, or whether the title of a Country lying ſo far off be held worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Stateſmen.

4 MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South with Cafraria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the Weſt with the Æthiopick Ocean; on the North with the Realm of Benin and other parts of the land of the Negroes; and on the Eaſt with Zanzibar, and ſome part of the Abaſſine Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of thoſe many Kingdoms which are united in this Name.

The Aire hereof ſo temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome, inſomuch as the People do not uſe to change their garments, or make more fire then, then at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights ſo equal to the dayes that for the greateſt part of the year there is little difference, the Country being ſituate under the Æquator, though more of it on the North then the South thereof. Not over hot notwithſtanding in the heats of Summer, by reaſon of the cool windes which then blow continually, and the great dewes which falling in the night make ſome compenſation for the extream fervour of the day. The ſoyl ſo exceeding fruitfull in the production of herbs, plants, fruits, and ſuch ſtore of Paſturage, that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of Sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies; Elephants of that bigneſs that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of ſo vaſt a bulk that they will eat a whole Deer at once: not to ſay any thing of their fowl both wilde and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The People of mean ſtature, black of complexion, thick lips, and having the apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghaſtly to behold; ſtrong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the moſt part Heathens, ſome worſhipping the Sun and Moon, others the Earth, as the Mother and Nurſe of all things; and ſome again wilde Beaſts and Serpents. So populous, that without any ſenſible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is ſuppoſed that they ſell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yeerly; by whom they are ſent into Braſil, there there to work in the Mines and Sugar houſes. The Chriſtian faith admitted in ſome few of their Provinces, but ſpecially in that of Congo, where firſt preached, in the reign of John the 2. king of Portugal, An. 1490. by Gonzalvo de Suſa, who having converted and baptized the Kings Uncle, and one of his Sons, prevailed ſo far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects did imbrace the Goſpel. Received there by the people with ſuch infinite joy, that when their firſt Biſhop came to live amongſt them, they cauſed the wayes from the Sea-ſide to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chicken, Kids, Partriges, Fiſh, Veniſon, and other neceſſaries, to teſtifie their rejoycings in that happy change. And, though many of the Subjects in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time imbraced the Faith; yet after ſome ſmall trial of it they relapſed to their former Heatheniſm, either unable or not willing to conform to ſo ſtrict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Country, 1 Bengo, 2 Coanza, 3 Dande, 4 Barbela, 5 Ambrizi, 6 Loza, 7 Zaire. This laſt the greateſt of them all, if not of all Africk alſo: of which though we have ſpoke already, we ſhall adde this here; That it falleth into the Æthiopick Sea with ſo great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen ſometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural ſweetneſs, not intermingled nor corrupted with the ſalt Sea-waters; Nor can the people ſail above five miles againſt the ſtream, by reaſon of the Cataracts or huge falls which it hath from the Mountains, more terrible and turbulent then thoſe of Nile. And for the Mountains of moſt note, they are 1 Sierra, Complida, or the Long mountain; 2 Mons Chriſtalli, or the Chriſtalline mountain, ſo called from the abundance of Chriſtal which is found therein; 3 Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of exceſſiue height; 4 Montes Salnitri, ſo called from their abounding in that kind of Mineral; and 5 the Mountains of Cabambe, rich in Mines of Silver.

It conteineth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general muſter in the ſtile Imperial, wherein their King calleth himſelf King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Sandi, Bangu, Batti, Pemba, Abundi, Matana, Quiſoma, Angola, and Cacango; Lord of the Congemes, Amolaze, Langelungi, Anzuichi, Cucchi, and Zoanghi. Many of theſe not ſo well diſcovered as to afford us any matter fit for our diſcourſe; the principal of thoſe that be, are

1. ANGOLA bounded on the South with Cafraria, on the North with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba, on the Eaſt with ſome part of Zanzibar, on the Weſt with the main Ocean. The Countty rich in Mines of Silver, and moſt excellent Copper; ſome ſtore of Kine and Horſes brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, the wearing whereof is held for a ſpecial ornament, then keep for any other uſe: their chiefeſt diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shambles; and to that dainty ſo affected, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would give twenty ſlaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture ſomewhat at the nature of the people, who beſides this are ſaid to be much given to ſorcerie and divinations by the flight of Birds, skilful in medicinal herbs and poiſons, and by familiarity with the Devil able to tell things to come. Permitted as moſt Pagans are, to have as many wives as they will; who with the reſt of the women, whether maids or widows, uſe at the firſt ſight of every New Moon to turn up their bare bums in defiance of her, as the cauſe of their troubleſom purgations.

In this Country are the Mountains called Cantaberes, rich in Mines of Silver; but thoſe Mines not ſuffered to be digged, for fear of drawing ſome unneceſſary war upon them; ſo that they uſe Glaſs-beads for money and therewith alſo do adorn the perſons of greateſt eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal reſidence of their Kings, but not elſe obſervable.

This Country was firſt diſcovered by the Portugals under the conduct of Diego Can, An. 1486. the King hereof at that time Vaſſal unto him of Congo, and ſo continued till that King did imbrace the Goſpel, whereupon they revolted from him, and have ſince ſubſiſted of themſelves without ſuch dependance. At firſt they held good correſpondencie with the Portugals, and allowed them free traffick in their dominions: But after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many of them as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of ſome pretended treaſon. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of theſe parts for the King of Portugal, arming ſuch people as he had, with two Gallies and ſome other Veſſels paſſed up the River of Coanza, waſting the Country on both ſides: Againſt whom the King of Angola raiſed an Army of a Million of men; but amongſt thoſe multitudes of men there were ſo few Souldiers, that an handful of the Portugals, aided with ſome of the forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, A. 158[illegible]. Since that, the trade with Portugal is revived again, and the King hereof hath expreſſed ſome good affections unto Chriſtianity, ſending unto the King of Congo for ſome Prieſts to inſtruct him in it, but obtained them not; the ſtate of Religion in that kingdom being then declining.

To this king belong alſo the two Provinces of Matana and Quiſoma, though both uſed in the titles of the King of Congo: of which the firſt lying towards the Sea, is ſaid to be of a wholſom air, and a fertile ſoil, outwardly furniſhed with fruits, and inwardly with Mines of Chriſtal and other metals; but not very rich, for want of ſome convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Commonwealth; but tributary at that time to the K. of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke, by reaſon of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars againſt him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Conza, by which parted from Angola; on the North the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo, on the Eaſt Pemba; on the Weſt the Æthiopick Ocean.

Ocean. The Country rich in Mines of Silver, well ſtored with Beaſts and Birds, as well tame as wilde: Amongſt the Birds, Parrets both green and gray, and many which are taught to ſing, not much inferior for their muſick to the birds of Canaries. Amongſt the Beaſts of moſt note is that called the Zebre, ſhaped like a Mule, but from the ridge of the back to the belly ſo ſtreaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and thoſe ſtreaks naturally ſet in ſuch even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye a moſt pleaſing object. But wilde, and of ſo ſwift a foot, that Velox ut Zebra, to be as ſwift as a Zebre, is grown into a Proverb amongſt the Portugals. The men ſo ſtrong, that it is ſaid of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or ſtrike a Slave quite thorow the midle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a veſſel of wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a But; and hold it ſo till it be qiute drawn out. It containeth in it many Signeuries, moſt of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1 S. Paul, ſituate on the Sea-ſide, oppoſite to the Iſle of Leanda, inhabited for the moſt part by Portugal families. 2 Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is ſituate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Loſe and Ambrizi.

3. PEMBA hath on the Weſt Bamba, on the Eaſt the Lake Zombre, and the River Barbela; on the North Batta, and on the South Angola. Eſteemed to be the richeſt and moſt pleaſant Country of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beſet with Palm trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are always green. The water of ſo good a nature that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Aire exceeding wholſom, and the earth as fruitfull; productive of all ſorts of grain, but ſpecially of that which they call Luco, in form like muſtard ſeed, but bigger, which they grinde in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferiour to VVheat. The People much reclaimed from their ancient Barbariſm ſince the coming of the Portugals thither, whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparell. So well skilled in the vertues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Phyſitian, Chirurgeon, and Apothecary. Antiently clothed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained ſtill by the Villages and poorer ſort in ſome part of the Country. Their chief City, formerly had the name of Banza, ſo called becauſe the Kings Court (as the word doth ſignifie) but ſince the receiving of the Goſpel it is called S. Saviours; diſtant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (ſince it became Chriſtian) with a Biſhops See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accuſtomably belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it ſelf ſituate on the ſide of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a ſpacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compaſs, full of Villages, Burroughs, and ſcattered houſes, which are thought to houſe 100000. perſons, moſt of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the VVeſt and South Pemba, on the Eaſt the Mountains of the Sun, and thoſe called Sal nitri; on the North Pango. Of the Soile and People there is nothing ſingular to be ſaid, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more military, and better furniſhed for the VVars then the reſt of theſe Provinces: neceſſitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and ſavage People, dwelling about the ſpurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jagges or Giacchi. Theſe naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Seirra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous parts of this Region, under the conduct of one Elembe, where they are ſince grown into a People; and become a terrour to their neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans fleſh, which they prefer before that of Beeves or Mutton; not yet ſo qualified by the change of their Country as to build houſes, ſow or plant, or to breed up Cattell; finding it far the eaſier life to maintain themſelves by the labour and ſpoil of others. And which is yet moſt ſtrange of all, though they have each of them many wives, ten or twenty a piece, yet they have no children; but ſtrangle them aſſoon as born, leſt they ſhould be an hindrance to their often wandrings. But as Plinie once ſaid of the Eſſeni, Gens æterna eſt in qua nemo naſcitur: ſo we may alſo ſay of theſe, that they do not want ſucceſſion, though they breed no children; ſelecting out of their Captives and ſtollen children, ſome of either Sex (but neither ſteal nor take them captive under twenty yeers old) to be the Seminary (as it were) of a new poſterity. Againſt theſe Monſters thoſe of Batta are armed continually, not otherwiſe able to defend themſelves, their wives and children, from their hands and teeth: inſomuch as this one Province, though none of the biggeſt, is able to raiſe 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any ſervice. The principal of their Towns is Batta, which gives name to the Province; ſituate on the banks of the River Lelanda, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy, who is always of the blood Royal, honoured ſometimes with ſitting at the Kings own Table, which none elſe may do, and of ſo great authority in all conſultations that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South with Batta, on the Eaſt extended to the Mountains of the Sun, which cloſe up this Country; on the North with Sunda; and on the Weſt with parts of Pemba, and Sango. Of the People, little ſingular, of the Country leſs. Neighboured on the North-eaſt towards Sierra de Chriſtall, with the Languelungi, ſuppoſed by ſome to be the Æthiopes Heſperii, ſpoken of by Ptolomy; a barbarous Nation, but of ſo conſiderable power, that they are found amongſt the reſt in the Stile Imperial. This once a Kingdom of it ſelf, not ſubject till of late times to the Kings of Congo. The chief Tow of it called Pango, is ſeated on the Weſtern bank of the River Barbele; the ordinary reſidence of the Vice-Roy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA, is bounded on the South with Batta, on the North with the great River Zaire; on the Eaſt with Barbele; and on the Weſt with part of Songo. The Country rich in ſeveral Mettals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other, becauſe it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furniſhed alſo with Martrons, Sables, and other Furrs of great eſteeme amongſt Forreigne Merchants. This is the beſt

Region

Region of this Kingdom,not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire; nor much more in length.Their chief City hath the name of Sunda,which it communicateth to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the East with Batta, and Anzichana; on the West with the Æthiopick Ocean; on the North with the Kingdom of Loanga; and on the South with the River Ambrizi, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of Ilands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo gives this name to the Country; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or People.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the West, part of Songo and Loango, extended thence unto the East as far almost as the Lake of Zembre; on the North some part of the Land of Negroes, on the South the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitants of it. The cruellest Cannibals in the world; for they do not only eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have shambles of mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withall, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when sold joynt by joynt then if sold alive, they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shambles. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to ground: and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather choose to be killed then either to abuse the trust, or betray their Master. For that cause more esteemed by the Portugals, then their other Slaves. And for the same, and that only, worthy of so good a Country; said to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentifull of Sanders both red and gray; which tempered with Vinegar, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the smoak thereof against the head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East Anzichana, on the West the Atlantick Ocean, on the North Benin, one of the Realms of Guinea in the Land of Negroes; and on the South the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loango, whence it hath its name. The Country very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more stored with Elephants, then any other of these parts; stretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants, whom they call Bramas, by Religion Heathens, but of old accustomed (as the Anziqui and other of these barbarous Africans) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, once subject to the Kings of Congo; but of late times, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are also under the command of one Soveraign Prince) have freed themselves from that subjection, though still the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani-Loanga. Their Towns of note, 1 Penga, the Haven to the rest. 2 Morumba, 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the Inhabitants of which Towns being more civil then the rest, apparell themselves with the leaves of Palm trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree as the more civilized People of the Realms of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleansed and purged draw a fine long thred, of which they make Velvets, Damaskes, Sattens, Taffaties, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffes.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom seated on the Continent, Let us next look upon the Ilands. The principal of which LOANDA, situate over against the Town of S. Paul in the Province of Bamba; said to be first made out of the sands of the Ocean, and the mire of Coanza, cast into an heap, and at last made into an Iland. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the same name with the Iland, possessed by the Portugals. The Iland destitute of Rivers, but so well furnished with waters, that every where within less then half a yard digging, they find sweet and good: Waters so contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be salt and brackish; when it floweth towards the Iland then most fresh and sweet. But most remarkable is this Iland for the Cockle fishing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, take up together with the sands, in baskets, and part them from the sand, as they lie on the shore; the shells of which being naturally distinguished into divers colours, serve over all the Kingdom of Congo, instead of money; which is a matter of such moment unto this King that he entertains a Governour in the Iland for no other reason, but to take care about this fishing.

Besides this, there are many Ilands in the River of Zaire, now subject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars against them; fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Liconde. The tree so big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it: insomuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largest of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the shores of these Ilands, and in others of their Bays and Creeks, they have so great numbers of Anchioves, that in winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of these several Members, and of the rest expressed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo, so called from Congo the chief Province, but now distinguished from the rest by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, then any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and name unto them. Discovered by the Portugals under Diego Can, An. 1486. at what times these Kings were at the greatest: called by their subjects Mani-Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani, signifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated since to the Kingdom also. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath since hapned in this Kingdom may best be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of The Kings of Congo.

1486. 1 John not ſo called till converted to the Faith of Chriſt, and then baptized by this name, in honour of John the 2. King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whoſe reign this diſcovery and Converſion hapned.

2 Alphonſo, eldeſt ſon of John, zealous in the advancement of the Chriſtian Faith, and for that oppoſed by Panſe Aquitino his younger Brother: whom with a very ſmall Army, zealouſly invocating the aſſiſtance of Jeſus Chriſt, he is ſaid to have vanquiſhed. A Prince, who during his long reign of 50 years did ſeriouſly promote the Goſpel, and cauſed all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown, and Churches to be built, and furniſhed in convenient places.

3 Pedro, the ſon of Alphonſo, in whoſe time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Croſs, in the Town of S. Saviours.

4 Franciſco the ſon of Pedro, who reigned not long.

5 Diego, or James, one of the kinſmen of Franciſco, in whoſe time Religion growing into diſcredit, by the ſcandalous lives of ſome of the Secular Clergie; John the 3. King of Portugal ſent four Jeſuits thither; who are ſaid to have converted in five moneths 5000 perſons; and to build three Churches.

6 Henry, the brother of Diego, after a ſharp War touching the Succeſſion, in which were ſlain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Prieſts, at laſt ſucceeded; not long after ſlain in battell againſt the Anziques.

7. Alvarez, the ſon of Henry, forced by the Jagges or Giacchi to abandon Congo, and betake himſelf, together with the Portugal Prieſts, to an Iland of the River Zaire: where he continued, till reſtored to his Crown by the aid of Sebaſtian King of Portugal; after by famine he had loſt almoſt all his company.

8 Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the firſt, who much ſollicited Sebaſtian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to ſend him a new ſupply of Preachers; the old ſtore being waſted in the Ilands of Zaire.

9 Alvarez III. Son of Alvarez the 2. not being born in Lawfull wedlock, was oppoſed by one of his Siſters and a younger Brother, both of lawfull birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revennues of theſe Kings of Congo, I am able to ſay nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great power and riches. His Riches viſible by the great treaſures which he draweth from the Mines of ſilver, and of other Mettals in his Kingdome; from the trade of Cockle ſhells; the only money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himſelf; the great gain which he makes by Slaves and from Elephants teeth; the preſents which he hath in way of Tribute from the King of Angola. And though it be not eaſie to ſay what he layeth up yeerly, becauſe he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as moſt Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furniſhed with all things, as any Monarch in Africk.

As for his Forces, they conſiſt moſt in the multitudes of his Subjects, which were they well armed and uſed to the Wars, would make him formidable to the reſt of the African Princes. And though he hath no garriſons or Towns of war, but muſt truſt, if once invaded, unto Caſtles of bones; yet he doth reſt ſecure enough from all fear of danger except out of Europe: being able to raiſe againſt his Rebels, or any of his invading neighbours; 400000 men out of Bamba only; all armed according to their manner; and 70000 men at leaſt well exerciſed in Wars againſt the Jagges, from the Province of Batta; beſides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five ſwords meeting in Baſe Sol, which Coat was taken by Alphonſo, the ſecond King in this Catalogue, becauſe in the battell which he fought againſt Panſe Aquitine, he and his Souldiers ſaw (or ſuppoſed they ſaw) ſuch a number of ſhining ſwords hanging in the Aire, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And ſo much for Æthiopia Inferior.

OF THE ISLES OF AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course then that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Ilands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince, in the accompt of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them independent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorographie of which, and the stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel; begining first with those that lie in the Red-Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope to the Streits of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there σὺν θεῷ καὶ ταῖς Μούσαις, conclude our journey. These then we will consider either joynt or separate, as delivered to us by the names of 1 The Æthiopick Ilands, 2 Socotara, 3 Madagascar, 4 Mobelia, 5 S. Helens, 6 S. Thomas, 7 The Princes Iland, 8 The Gorgades or Ilands of Cape Vird, 9 The Canaries or the Fortunate Ilands, 10 Madera, 11 The Iland of Holy Port, and 12 The HESPERIDES.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ILANDS.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ILANDS, so called because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, which were onely known unto the Antients, are more in number then in weight: some of them situate within the Streits of the Red Sea or the Gulf of Arabia; others without those Streits in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Streits, not reckoning such as lie upon the shores of Arabia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1 Asiarte or Astrata, now called Caiussa. 2 Ara Palladis, so called from some Altar of that Godess, which was there erected. 3 Gypseris, by Plinie called Cyris, but Gypsus in Justinians Code, renowned in former times for its plenty of metals. 4 Macaria, or the fortunate Ilands, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5 Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6 Daphnis, by Ptolomie called Daphnine, opposite to a famous Port-town of the same name in the Continent. 7 Bacchias, so called from Bacchus unto whom consecrated. 8 Anti-Bacchias, so named because opposite to it. 9 Acanthine, supposed by some to be now called Anghotina. 10 Insula Diodori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and giveth name unto the Streits or entrance of the Bay of Arabia, now called the Streits of Babel Mandel. 11 Isidis Insula, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Godesse Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pascua, as Bel-forest thinketh. 12 Mundi, an Iland in the Bay of Avalites, opposite to a noted Emporie of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we find in Ptolomie two Ilands by the name of Thrisitides, two more called Chelonitides or Cathrata, two others passing by the name of Gomadeæ, together with the Isles of Myron, Pan, and that called Insula Magorum; which make up one and twenty in all; but of no note or observation in the course of business, or the conduct of humane affairs.

Those of most note in the Open Ocean, which still preserveth the name of the Red-Sea, and is sometimes called the Indian, sometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hypadis, are but four in number; that is to say, 1 Myrica, by the Translator of Ptolomie called Myrsiaca; 2. 3. two Ilands called by the name of Menan, a degree more Northwards then the other; and 4 Awicusia, as Stephanus; or Amici Insula, as called by Ptolomie, the most North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the most noted Iland of this Sea. I know that many Learned men will have this Iland to be that which Ptolomie and others of the Antients call Dioscoridis: but because Dioscoridis, by all those Antients, is made to be an Iland of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Isle of Africk; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our best modern Geographers, that Socotara lieth over against Cape Guardafu, (the Aromata of Ptolomie, as before is said) from which distant not above 30 leagues: which site and distance sort well with Amicusia, but can by no means be applied unto Dioscoridis; Amicusia being placed but two Degrees on the East of that Promontorie in the Longitude of 85. whereas Dioscoridis is situate from it almost four degrees, in the Longitude of 86, and 40 Minutes; besides as great or greater difference in their several Latitude. So that supposing it for granted, that Socotara is that Iland which was antiently called Amicusia; and having cleered my way so far, I now proceed to the Description and affairs thereof.

2. SOCOTARA.

2. SOCOTARA, the greatest Iland of these Shores, is situate, as before was said, against Cape Guardafu, from which distant about 30 leagues; Abadalemy a small Iland lying in the middest, that is to say, 15 leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Iland. The length hereof 60 miles, 25 the breadth;

divided

divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height, the top of which are for the moſt part covered with ſands. The Iland extremely vexed with winds. and moleſted with dryneſs, inſomuch as it is deſtitute of moſt things neceſſary for the life of man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but ſome ſmall quantity of Mill, Dates, and ſome kind of Fruits. Provided notwithſtanding of ſome good Paſtures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furniſhed with medicinal Druge, as Cinnabar, Dragons blood, which is a Red gum iſſuing from the bark of a tree; and the beſt Aloes in the world, from hence called Aloes Socotrina.

The People of an Aſh-colour, very rude and barbarous; their bread for the moſt part of Dates, the reſt of their food being milk and butter; their hair long, and their clothing only enough to hide their nakedneſs. The Women as good Soldiers as the Men; countenancing or occaſioning the tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazons: And the better Husbands of the two, governing all affairs both within and without. All of them by profeſſion Chriſtians, governed by a Biſhop of their own, with ſome few Prieſts, but ignorant enough of all things which concern Religion. More generally Circumciſed then Chriſtened, though both uſed among them. Jacobites in Sect, as the Abaſſines their neighbours are; and zealous worſhippers of the Croſs, which they alwayes hang about their necks. So pertinaciouſly addicted unto Magick, and therein ſo expert, that they bring incredible things to paſs: not to be weaned from thoſe black Arts, though the Biſhop excommunicate all ſuch as uſe them. They hold opinion that S. Thomas ſuffered ſhipwrack upon their Coaſts, as he ſailed towards India; and that his Ship being drawn to land, was turned into a Church: but it appeareth neither by their life or doctrines, that any Apoſtolical man hath ſet foot amongſt them.

They live for the moſt part in Caves, or Cabbins of no other ſtuffe then the boughs of trees; ſo that we are to look for few Towns among them. The principal, 1 Zocotara, giving name to the Iland, the place of the Kings reſidence, and a Biſhops See. 2 Tamarind, and 3 Deliſha, two Port-towns, and reaſonably well traded, in the hands of the Natives: as 4 Coro, and 5 Benin, two other Ports, poſſeſſed and garriſon'd by the Portugals. The King hereof a Vaſſal to the King of Fartac, one of the petit Princes of Arabia Felix, not far from Aden; in habit and Religion Turkiſh: Attended on when the Relater was there, An. 1614. by five Camels and five Horſes only, yet thoſe all in the Iland.

Nigh hereunto are two Iſlands, (thoſe poſſibly which Ptolomie calleth Monan) the one inhabited by men only, and the other by women; who do meet at their accuſtomed times to preſerve their kind, but make no long ſtay, the Air of the one being found unhealthy for the conſtitution of the other Sex. The other Ilands of theſe Coaſts, ſcattered up and down in the Bay of Barbaria, (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolomie) as 1 Don Garcia, 2 the three Brethren, 3 S. Brandon, 4 Francis, 5 Maſcadenna, 6 Comoro, and many others of as ſmall note, are not worth the ſpeaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greateſt of the world, is ſituate over againſt Moſambique in Æthiopia Inferior, ſuppoſed to be the Menuthias of Ptolomie, the onely Iland by him named on the Coaſt of that Country; but by the Portugals called the Iſle of S. Lawrence, becauſe diſcovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 miles, (which is longer then Italy) and 4000 in compaſs: the middle part hereof oppoſite to the Promontory which Ptolomie calleth Praſſum, now the Point of Moſambique, from which diſtant 170 miles: in reference to the Heavenly Bodies, ſituate from the 17 Degree of Southern Latitude to the 26.

The Country plentifull of all things neceſſary for the life of man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Hony, Wax, Cotton wooll, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wild and tame; Limons and other cooling fruits, ſome ſtore of Ginger, Cloves but little different from thoſe of India, Red Sanders, Saffron, Amber, and ſome Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to ſay any thing of their Beeves and Muttons, ſo large, and good, and ſo good cheap, that for a twopenny Bead or ſome ſuch trifle they will ſell Beeves and Sheep of good taſte and bigneſs: ſuch numbers of Elephants, that they ſend thence yearly great ſtore of Ivory: and amongſt other rare fruits, they have plenty of thoſe which they call Cocos or Coconuts; a kind of Date as big as a Cabbage; the liquor in it, about the quantity of a pint, taſtes like wine and ſugar, the kernel big enough to content two men; and like good Ale it affords not only meat and drink, but clothing; as alſo furniture for their houſes, tackle for their ſhips, fewel for the fire, and timber for building; the body of the Tree being ſtrait and high, and towards the top diverſified into many branches. A Country far too good for ſo bad a people.

For they, as Travellers report, and moſt Writers teſtifie, are treacherous, inhoſpitable, ignorant both of Prayers and Feſtivals, deſtitute of the diſtinction of time into years and moneths, not knowing any proper names for the dayes of the week, nor able to reckon above ten; naked, except their privities which they cover with Cotton. Idolaters in the midland parts, & Mahometans upon the ſhores. Commendable only for their hate to Polygamie, and reſtraining themſelves to one wife; the defiling of the marriage-bed ſeverely puniſhed: but otherwiſe ſo eager upon copulation, that their Boyes at the age of twelve years, and the Girls at ten, think they ſtay too long, if they keep their Virginities any longer; ſome of them, like Quartilla in Petronius Arbiter, begin ſo early, ut nunquam meminerint nerint ſe Virgines fuiſſe, that they remember not the time when they loſt their Maidenheads. Of colour they are black, and of ſtrong compoſition; their breaſts and faces cut and pinkt, to appear more beautiful. Much given unto the wars, well armed according to their Country manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongſt them there are ſome white people, ſaid to come from China.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their names I find not: and at the mouths of thoſe Rivers ſome convenient Havens, into which they admit the forrein Merchants, but ſuffer none to come on land; which the Merchant hath no cauſe to be ſorry for, finding himſelf not ſafe on ſhipboard from their treacherous practiſes. So that we can give but ſmall Account of their Towns and Cities, except it be the bare recital of their names: as viz. 1. S. Auguſtines, on a fair Bay in the South-weſt point, as 2 Gangomar in the North-eaſt of it; 3 Antaboſta, 4 Point-Antogil, 5 Santo-Jacobo, 6 Matatana, 7 Angoda, 8 Herendo, 9 Andro-arco, and 10 Roma or New-Rome, ſo entituled by ſome zealous Romaniſt, in hope to have it thought that the Popes of Rome have got ſome footing in this Iland.

This Iland known, but very imperfectly, in the time of Marcus Paulus Venetus, who telleth us many ſtrange things of it; but none more ſtrange then that of the Bird called Ruck, of ſuch incredible ſtrength & bigneſs, that it could ſnatch up an Elephant as eaſily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Diſcovered by the Portugals in the year 1506. as before was ſaid; and ſince frequented by the Engliſh and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further touching the Eſtate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four parts, under ſo many Kings, each of them in continual wars againſt one another, but well enough agreed to defend themſelves againſt the coming in of Strangers: yet as ſome ſay, they would be well enough content with an Engliſh Plantation; either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more courteous then the Portugals, and not ſo covetous as the Dutch; or elſe by the ſtrength of our Shipping, and the reputation of our intereſſe in it, to keep off all others.

4. MOHELIA, & 5. MAURITIUS Iland.

ADjoyning to Madagaſcar, and as it were attending on it, I find divers Ilands; ſome on the North-weſt, ſome directly Eaſt. On the North-weſt we have 1 Meottey, 2 Chamroe, 3 Mohelia, and 4 Joanna Iland; on the Eaſt, 5 the Iland of Mauritius, and 6 Englands Foreſt. Of theſe Mauritius is the greateſt, but Mohelia the beſt inhabited.

4. MOHELIA ſituate on the North-weſt of Madagaſcar, is about 20 miles in length, and 16 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens, Coconuts, Limons, Orenges, Pom-Citrons, Pulſe, Sugar-Canes; ſtore of Fiſh taken on the ſhores, and other neceſſaries. The People of complexion black, of compoſition large and ſtrong, couragious, affable, leſſe treacherous then their neighbours of Madagaſcar. Of the ſame Language and Religion with thoſe of Arabia, from whence they ſeem to have deſcended; but by reaſon of their commerce and intercourſe with the Portugals, they ſpeak that tongue alſo. The Women of the like complexion: to amend which, and ſeem more lovely, they pink their arms and faces in ſeveral ſhapes. Both ſexes no otherwiſe apparalled then their natural garments, with ſome Plantane Leaves about their middle to hide their ſhame.

Their Religion that of Mahomet, as before is ſaid: their Prieſts in great eſteem amongſt them; ſo their Temples alſo, which they keep clean and neatly matted, not ſuffering any man to enter with his ſhooes on his feet. Their chief Town Merianguea, at the Weſt-end of the Iſle, ſtrong and well-garriſon'd. Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities: one of the laſt Kings leaving two daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger then this, on the Eaſt of Madagaſcar, is the Iſle of MAURITIUS, ſo called by the Hollanders in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whoſe time they firſt ſet footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Cerne, and by ſome Cygnæa. In compaſs about 100 miles: well ſtored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, moſt ſorts of Fiſh; and liberally endowed with all the bleſſings of Nature, ſweet Waters, moſt delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any uſe both of food and building; plenty of Ebonie of all colours, but the beſt coal-black. Yet altogether deſtitute of humane Inhabitants: inſomuch as we may ſay of this, as the Poet of the World, before Man was made:

Sanctius his Animal, mentiſque capacius altæ
Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari in cætera poſſet.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

But yet the Chief, with Supreme power poſſeſt,
Was wanting, he that ſhould command the reſt.

6. S. HELENS, & 7. The Iſles of ASCENTION.

6. AS deſtitute of Inhabitants as the Iſle of Mauritius, is that of S. HELEN, on the Weſt ſide of the Cape of Good Hope, & in the 16 Degree of Southernly Latitude; no other Iland interpoſing betwixt betwixt Madagascar and it, except those of Don Alvarez, and of Tristram de Acugna, neer the Cape it self; but of so little note as not worth the naming. The Iland very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with so steep an ascent, that the Mariners have amongst them a merry saying, that A man may choose whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck coming down.

It was thus called because discovered by the Portugals on S. Helens day: not then inhabited nor since, the King of Spain suffering none to dwell there, because it had been made an unlawful receptacle for uncustomed Goods, whereby he lost exceedingly both in power and profit. Stored by the Portugals at the first Discovery with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as also with Figs, Limons, Orenges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly: and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refresh themselves, and bestow their sick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Used for the same purpose by the English and Hollanders, who so domineer about the Iland, that the Portugals dare not Anchor neer it, or own their property, if they see any shipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruins of a little Chappel, destroyed by the Hollanders: and some fragment of a little Village begun by some Portugal Mariners, but demolished by the King of Spain.

7. Northwest from hence is the Isle of Ascension, so called because discovered on Ascension day: but not inhabited, nor any use at all made of for ought I can finde. Of the same bigness with S. Helens, 30 miles in compass, and about 700 English miles distant from it.

8. S. THOMAS, 9 the PRINCES Iland, and 10 the Isle of ANNIBON.

8. THe Iland of S. THOMAS is situate directly under the Æquator, of Orbicular form, the Diameter being 60 miles; by consequence the Perimeter or compass 180; and just so many from the shore of the Realm of Congo. At the first discovery nothing but a continual Forest, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes: these last brought hither from the opposite Continent, with whom the Air agrees so well, that they attain generally to 110 years of Age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The Aire so vehemently hot that it sorteth not with the constitution of the Europæans.

The Country destitute of wheat, which if sown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear, nor will any fruits here prosper that have any stone in them: but so abundant in Sugar-canes and well stored with Sugars, that 40 Ships are hence loaded yeerly, with that one commoditie; for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houses, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in some 300 which belong to the works; six dayes in seven these Slaves work for their Masters, and the seventh for themselves; which they spend in sowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Provisions. Where by the way, these Sugar-works or Ingenios are a late invention; the boyling and baking of Sugar (as it is now used) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new then that: first found out by a Venetian in the days of our Fathers, who is said to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his son a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Post) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boyling and refining Sugars, our Ancestors not having such luxurous Palates, sometimes made use of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but most commonly pleased themselves with honey, more wholsom, because more natural then these forced Inventions. But to proceed in the description of this Iland, in the midst thereof thereof there is said to be a woody Mountain, overshadowed continually with Clouds, which so moysten the trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a sufficient quantity of waters to refresh their Fields, and feed their Sugar-Canes; notwithstanding the extream heat of the Clime and Aire.

The Religion here allowed of is the Christian only, first preached here by the Portugals or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Bishop, his title the Bishop of S. Thomas, but his charge extendeth also over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The principal City of it hath the name of Pavoasan, a Colony of Portugals, consisting of 700 Families, or about that number: situate on a fine River, and a pleasant Haven: seldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other things more necessary then those Sugars, for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599. but again recovered or abandoned.

9. THE PRINCES ILAND, (Insula Principis in the Latine) so called for that the Revenues of it were alotted to the Prince of Portugal, is situate in three Degrees of Northern Latitude. The Country very fruitfull for the bigness of it; but not much observable: except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerehagen, Anno 1598. abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended, as is fit for a Princes Iland, by a Messe of Chaplains, viz. 1. the Isles of S. Matthew, 2 S. Cross, 3 S. Paul, and 4 S. Conception. and waited on by seven servants (so many Ilands neer Cape Vero) all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbacene. But because the former four yield no matter of History, and these last seven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought having said thus much of them, to have said enough.

10. Southwest hereof, but on the other side of the Line, lieth the Isle of Annobon, (Insula Anniboni as the Latines call it) So named because discovered upon New-yeers day. Inhabited, and of very good fishing all along the Coasts of it; but that Fishing made unsafe by Crocodiles, and other venemous and hurtfull Creatures, which are said to be about the shores in great abundance.

11. The

11. The GORGADES, or Isles of CAPE VERD.

11. THe GORGADES, or Ilands of Cape Verd (Insula Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are 9. in number; called by the last name because situate over against Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their names 1 S. Anthony, 2 S. Vincent, 3 Buenavista, 4 S. Lucies, 5 Insula Salis, the Isle of Salt, 6 Del Fogo, or the Isle of Fire, 7 S. Nicholas, 8 Maggio, or Majo, 9 S. Jago. Some add to these a tenth, called Brava Discovered all in the year 1440 by a Genoese called Antonio de Noli, employed therein at the charges & direction of Henry Duke of Visco one of the younger sons of K. John of Portugal, the first of that name. Of the most little to be said. The principal, and indeed the only ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, S. Jago, 1 Majo is of most repute for a Lake of two Leagues long; the waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2 Del Fogo is so called from the Flakes of fire which it sends forth usually, and fell so thick upon the Ship of Sir Anthony Sherley when he took the Iland, An. 1596. that one might have writ his name in the ashes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3. The principal of all S. Jago, yet but seven miles long; rockie and mountainous, but full of very pleasant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Riblera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; situate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585, and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, An. 1596.

The name of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almost forgotten. Given to those Ilands, as supposed (but I cannot see upon what grounds) to be the seat of the Gorgons; the proper habitation or dwelling place of Medusa and her two fair sisters. This Medusa said, or rather fabled by the Poets, to have been a Woman of great beauty; Who either for suffering her body to be abused by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her self before Pallas, had by the said Goddess, her hair turned into Snakes; and this property annexed unto them, that whosoever looked on her, should be turned into stones: which quality is retained after she was slain, and beheaded by Perseus. Thus and far more fabulously the Poets. The Historians (for as some think, omnis fabula fundatur in historia) relate, how this Medusa was indeed a Lady of such exceeding beauty, that all men that saw her, were amazed: and of such a wise and subtile brain, that for that cause only men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by piracy molesting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Grecians, under the leading of Perseus; who in a single combat slew her. Perseus when he plucked off her helmet, admiring that beauty which he had destroyed, cut off her head, and carried it into Greece: where the people beyond measure wondred at the rare compositure of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her haire; and are therefore said to have by her head been metamorphosed into stones. Pausanias in his Corinthiacks so reports the story.

12. The CANARIES.

THe CANARIES are in number seven, situate over against the Coast of Libya Interior; so called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Plinie, Ptolomy, and other of the Ancient Writers they were called Insulæ Fortunatæ, the fortunate Ilands; and amongst them of greatest note five being made the fixed place of the first Meridian; removed since to S. Michaels one of the Azores. But those Antients knew but six of them by name, and in the naming of these six do not well agree. By Plinie, whom Solinus followeth, they are said to be 1 Ombrio, 2 Junonia Major, 3 Junonia Minor, 4 Capraria, 5 Nivaria, and 6 Canaria. By Ptolomy thus reckoned, 1 Aprositus, 2 Hera (or Junonia) 3 Pluitania, 4 Casperia, 5 Canaria, and 6 Pincuria; Where we may note also to our purpose, that though these Authors disagree in all the rest of the names (Junonia being added by the Translator unto Ptolomies Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one; which sheweth that one to be of eminence enough to give the name of Canarie Ilands unto all the rest. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the Ancients had of their fruitfulness and other excellencies; in which respects, several Countries, in those times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1 Canarie, 2 Palma, 3 Tenaritte, 4 Gomero, 5 Ferro, 6 Lanserotte, and 7 Fuerte Ventura.

1. CANARIA or Canaria Magna, because the biggest of the Cluster is said to be 90 miles in compass, and to contain 9000 persons: Plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which, and of their Cheese, and the skins of Beasts they raise great profit: but from nothing more then from their Wood (whereof they have very great abundance) used by the Clothier for the well colouring of his Cloth. From hence and from the other of these Ilands which bear this name, come the fine singing Birds called Canary Birds; and so do also those rich Wines (the fruit of the Rhenish Grape transplanted) which we call Canaries. A sort of wine, if not sophisticated and abused, which is said to fume less into the head, please the Palat more, and better help the natural weakness of a cold stomack (if moderatly and discreetly used) then any other Wines whatsoever. Brought hence in such abundance to supply our luxury, that no less then 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yeerly into England and the Netherlands onely.

2. PALMA, the one of the least in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in VVine and Sugars; abundantly well stored with Cattell, and great plenty of Cheese; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spanish Fleets, as they passe to Brasil, and Peru. This Iland together with Canary, and Tenariffe, make up the Biſhoprick of the Canaries, one of the Biſhops whereof was that Melchior Canus a Dominican Frier, whoſe works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, ſhew him to have been a moderate and learned man, and Maſter of a perfect Ciceronian ſtile. The reſidue of the Ilands are of the Dioceſe of Madera.

3. TENARIFFE, ſomewhat leſs then the Grand Canarie, but of the ſame fertility and condition with it; is moſt remarkable for a Mountain of ſo great an height, that it may be ſeen 90 Leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 miles high, others 15. Leagues, and ſome advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. VVith truth enough moſt of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the higheſt in the whole world. The Form, Pyramidal, in ſhape agreeing to theſe Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Ægyptian Pyramides. The top whereof ending in a ſharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is ſaid to be ſeldom without ſnow; and therefore problably conceived to be the Nivaria of Plinie.

4. HIERRO, or FERRI inſula, ſo called from the Iron Mines therein, is by ſome thought to be the Pluitalia, by others the Aproſitus of Ptolomy; and ſome again more probably the Ombrio of Plinie, if this and Ptolomies Plvitalia be not one and the ſame, as for my part I think they be. And it might poſſibly have thoſe names in the Greek and Latine, becauſe it hath in it no freſh waters but what they do receive in ſhowres, and preſerve in Ciſterns: it being added by late VVriters (which the Ancients knew not) that theſe ſhowres do daily fall upon them from the Leaves of a tree, which always covered with a Cloud doth diſtill theſe waters, preſerved in a large Ciſtern underneath the tree, for the uſe of Man and Beaſt throughout the Iland.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the reſt, was the moſt barbarous of all when firſt diſcovered: it being here, and here only the ordinary ſign and evidence of their Hoſpitality, to let their friends lie with their wives, and receive theirs in teſtimony of reciprocal kindneſs: for which cauſe here, as in ſome places of the Indies, the Siſters ſon did uſe accuſtomably to inherit.

6. LANSAROTE the firſt of theſe Iſlands which was made ſubject to the Crown of Caſtile, diſcovered by ſome adventurous Biſcains An. 1393. by whom ſpoiled and pillaged, and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality brought away Priſoners into Spain. On this diſcovery the Kings of Caſtile challenged a propriety in all theſe Ilands; of which more anon.

In this of Lanſarote there was an Epiſcopal See erected by Pope Martin the 5. removed unto the Iſle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholique.

7. FUERTE-VENTURA, of the ſame nature with the reſt, ſuppoſed to be the Capraria of Plinie, and the Caſperia of Ptolomy, but not elſe obſervable. Neer unto theſe, but not within the name and notion of the Fortunate or Canary Iſles, are certain others of leſs note, that is to ſay, 1 Gratioſa, 2 S. Clara, 3 Roca, 4 Lobos, 5 Alegranco, and 6 Infierno, ſmall and of no Accompt, nor yielding any matter of obſervation.

The knowledge of theſe Ilands being loſt with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiſcovered till the year 1330. or thereabouts, when an Engliſh, or as ſome ſay, a French ſhip, diſtreſſed by tempeſt, did in that misfortune fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the reign of King Alphonſo the fourth, Lewis de Ordo was deſigned for the conqueſt of them. VVho being repulſed at Gomera, An. 1334. gave the entercourſe over, though on this ground the Portugals build their firſt claim unto theſe Ilands. But the news ſpreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the ſixt thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Lewis of Spain, ſon of Alphonſo de la Cerde the right heir of Caſtile, by the old name of the Fortunate Ilands; and to aſſiſt him in the conqueſt, cauſed Levies of Souldiers to be made both in France and Italy. VVhich coming to the ears of the Engliſh Ambaſſadors in the Popes Court, they feared ſome tranſport had been made of the Britiſh Ilands (then which they thought that none could better deſerve the name of the Fortunate Ilands) and in all haſte diſpatched a Poſt to the Court of England, for the preventing of the danger. The People at the time of this firſt Diſcovery were ſo rude and ignorant, that they did eat their fleſh raw for want of fire; and tilled or rather turned up the earth with the horns of Oxen, for want of Ploughs or Tools of Iron; their Beards they ſhaved with a ſharp flint, and committed the care of their children to the nurſing of Goats. To kill a Beaſt was conceived to be the baſeſt office that could be poſſibly put upon them, and therefore commonly impoſed on Priſoners and condemned perſons, who being thus made the common Slaughter-men, were to live ſeparate from the reſt. Their Government by Kings, in each Iland one: when at their deaths, they ſit up naked in a Cave, propped againſt the wall with a ſtaff in his hand, and a veſſel of Milk faſt by him, the better to enable him for his journey to the other world; and leaving him in the Grave with theſe ſolemn words, Depart in peace, O thou bleſſed Soul. The like Funeral they beſtowed alſo on the chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in thoſe times ſo purely Regall, but that they had a Common Councell (as it were) out of all the Ilands, conſiſting of 130 perſons: who did not only direct in Civil matters, but in Sacred alſo, preſcribing to the People both their Faith and VVorſhip; and for their pains were priviledged with the firſt nights lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to ſome one of them.

But to return unto the Story, nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in purſuance of the Popes Donation, it hapned in the year 1393. that ſome Adventurers of Biſcay, ſetting out certain Ships from Sevil to ſeek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongſt theſe Ilands. And having pillaged Lanſarote as before was ſaid, and obſerved the number, greatneſs, and ſituation of all the reſt, returned into Spain with great ſtore of Wax, Hides, and other commodities, with which thoſe Ilands did abound: extremely welcom to King Henry, who then reigned in Caſtile, and did intend from that time forwards to poſſeſs himſelf of them. By Catharine the Dowager of this King Henry, during the minority of John the 2. the Conqueſt of them was committed to John of Betancourt, an adventurous French-man, (conditioned he ſhould hold them under the ſoveraignty of the Crown of Caſtile) by whom four of the Ilands were ſubdued, though he himſelf periſhed in the action, *An.*1417. Young Betancourt the ſon, not able to ſubdue Canary, to which moſt of the Ilanders had retired, fortified himſelf as well as he could in the Iſle of Lanſarote, and took unto himſelf the title of King: which he left not long after to one Menault, in whoſe time the Ilands under his command received the Goſpel. and had a See Epiſcopal in the Iſle of Lanſarote. But this new King making money by the ſale of his ſubjects (as well of the new Chriſtians, as the old Idolaters) complaint was made of him in the Court of Caſtile; and Pedro Barva de Campos with three ſhips of war is ſent againſt him: with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Caſtile, he ſold his intereſſe in theſe Ilands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who by the wealth and power of that City made good his purchaſe, and left it unto his ſucceſſors. But we muſt know that the poſterity of this Peres enjoyed the four leſſer Ilands only; Canaria it ſelf, Tenariffe, and the Iſle of Palmes, being under the command of their own Kings, and ſo continued till the reign of Ferdinand the Catholick, who in the year 1483. under the conduct of Alphonſo of Muxica, and Pedro de Vera, two noble Captains, became maſter of them; and tranſlated the Epiſcopal See from Lanſarote to the Great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim theſe Ilands in right of the firſt diſcovery, yet the poſſeſſion hath gone alwayes with the Crown of Caſtile. Divided at the preſent into two Eſtates, (but the one ſubordinate to the other) Gomera, Lanſarote, and Hierra, being in the hands of ſome private Subjects; thoſe which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuerte-Ventura, are ſaid to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats; the Seat of Juſtice being fixed in the Iſle of Canaria, unto which all the reſt reſort as they have occaſion.

13. MADERA, & 14. HOLY-PORT.

13. MADERA, the greateſt Iland of the Atlantick, is ſituate in the Latitude of 32 over againſt the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compaſs 140 miles, ſome adde 20 more. So called of the wilderneſs of Trees there growing, when firſt diſcovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latines call Materia, & we Engliſh Timber: with which the Iſle was ſo overgrown, that the beſt way to cleer it and make it habitable, was by conſuming them with fire; which raged ſo horribly for the time, that the people imployed in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refreſh themſelves. But the Husbandry was well beſtowed; the Aſhes making ſo good compoſt to enrich the ſoil, (as burning the Turf of barren lands, and ploughing the Aſhes of it, on ſome grounds with us) that at the firſt it yielded ſixty-fold increaſe. And though the firſt vertue of that experiment be long ſince decayed, yet ſtill it yieldeth thirty fold in moſt places of it; fruitful withal of a kind of Plant uſed in dying Clothes, which is hence called Mader; and of Sugar Canes in ſuch a wonderful manner, that for a time the fifths of the Sugars herein made amounted yearly to 60000 Azzobes; now not half ſo much. The Iſle wonderfully fruitful alſo of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choiceſt Wines, the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more grapes then leaves, and Cluſters of two, three, and four ſpans long. The Hils well ſtored with Goats; the Plains with numerous Herds of Cattel; the Woods with Peacocks, Thruſhes, Pigeons: theſe laſt ſo ignorant of the injury which Man might do them, that at the firſt coming of the Portugals thither, they would ſuffer themſelves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

The whole Iland in all parts well watered, having beſides many pleaſant Springs, eight handſome Riverets, wherewith ~~the Earth refreſh'd and moiſtned, yields the ſweeter~~ Herbage; which otherwiſe by reaſon of the heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be ſo nouriſhing. The chief City of it hath the name of Fonchial the See of an Archbiſhop, and the Seat of Juſtice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonis, or Antolala, as many learned men conceive; and again forgotten, it was of later times diſcovered by one Machan an Engliſh-man, who was caſt upon it by a tempeſt, *An.*1344. who burying there his wife, or ſome other woman which he had in his company, writ on her tomb his name and coming thither, with the cauſe thereof; which gave the Portugals occaſion to look further after it. Deſolate, and unpeopled at the firſt diſcovery; now exceeding populous, and of no ſmall advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which firſt united, *An.*1420. under the conduct of Prince Henry before mentioned.

14. INSULA PORTUS SANCTI, or the Iſle of HOLY-PORT, is diſtant from Madera about 40 miles, neighbouring the Coaſts of Mauritania Tingitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Ptolomie. So called, becauſe diſcovered by ſome Portugal Mariners (by the direction and encouragement of the ſaid P. Henry) on All-hallows day, *An.*1428. Deſolate and unhabited at the firſt diſcovery, but now very well peopled. In compaſs about 15 miles; well ſtored with Corn and Fruits, great ſhoals of Fiſh upon their ſhores, plenty enough of Beeves and Goats; but ſuch abundance of Conies (bred of one Doe Coney brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no leſs peſtered with them in theſe later times, then the Baleares were of old; inſomuch that they were out of hope to withſtand the miſchief, or repair the damages ſuſtained by them: A little Iland not far off, breedeth nothing elſe. The chief Town of it Porto Santo, or Holy-

Port, ſeated on a convenient Rode, but a ſorry Haven: was taken by Sir Amias Preſton, in our wars with Spain, An. 1596. but being ſacked and ſpoiled, was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was ſaid, and reckoned for the moſt remote Colony which the Carthaginians or Phœnicians had in the Weſtern Ocean, beyond which they conceived the Sea to be unnavigable, (proved otherwiſe by Hanno's voyage) choked with mud and weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Æthiopum populos alit ultima Cerne) by Feſtus Ruſus, and others of the Antient writers.

15. THE HESPERIDES.

15. THE HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are ſaid to be two in number, ſituate in the Atlantick Seas, but we find not where. Much memorized and chanted by the Antient Poets, for the giving a ſafe and pleaſant habitation to the daughters of Atlas (which they call by the name of Heſperides alſo); the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by a Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Hiſtorians remove theſe Gardens out of the Sea into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already ſpoken of. Which notwithſtanding, it is granted that there were antiently ſome Ilands in the Atlantick Ocean, noted by this name, and ſaid to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord: and therefore probably the ſame which Plutarch in the Life of Sertorius calleth Inſulæ Atlanticæ, and deſcribes them thus. "Αι δύο μὲν εισὶ, λίαν παντάπασι ποσθμῷ διακεκριμέναι, &c. They are (ſaith he) two Ilands parted "by a narrow Streit of the Sea, diſtant from the main land of Africk 10000 furlongs (which in our "accompt cometh to 1250 miles) called alſo the Iſles of Bleſſed Souls, and the Fortunate Ilands. "They have rain there very ſeldom, but a fine ſweet Dew, which makes the Earth exceeding fruitful "both for tillage and planting fruits, which ſometimes grow without any care or labour of the "husband-man; ſufficient by their plenty and ſweetneſs to maintain the people, much given to eaſe, "and hardly troubling themſelves with any buſineſs. The Air for the moſt part very temperate, never "extreme in any changes of the ſeaſon; the rigor of the Northern and Eaſtern winds being by ſo "long a paſſage thither very much abated; as on the other ſide the Weſtern and South-Eaſtern "winds do much refreſh it with ſuch Miſts as they bring from the Sea, to the great comfort of the "people. A place ſo generally ſweet, that the Barbarous people in it have a conſtant and approved "opinion, that theſe ſhould be the Elyſian Fields, the ſeats of the bleſſed ſouls departed, deſcribed "by Homer: with the report whereof Sertorius was ſo highly taken, that he intended to have given "over the purſuit of the Civil wars, and there to ſpend the reſt of his dayes in peace and happineſs; "which he had done, if the Cilicians, men accuſtomed unto ſpoil and rapine, had not took him off. So far and to this purpoſe Plutarch. But what theſe Ilands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great diſtance from the Coaſt of Africk, they cannot be the Fortunate Ilands ſpoken of before) I cannot eaſily determine: unleſs we ſhould conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Ilands of Cuba and Hiſpaniola, on the Coaſts of America; to the Storie and Chorographie whereof we are now to haſten.

And ſo much for the Iſles of Africk.

CHOROGRAPHY & HISTORY OF AMERICA,

OF AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantick Ocean, and the Vergivian Seas, by which parted from Europe and Africa; which Seas, the Mariners call Mare del Nort; on the West with the Pacifique Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Asia; on the South with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long, but narrow Streit, called the Streits of Magellan; the North bounds of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Iland or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatness of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vespacius an Adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to finde out those parts, came from the directions and example of Columbus who first led the way; and that Sebastian Cabot touched at many places which Americus Vespacius never saw: it might as properly have been called Columbana, Sebastiana, or Cabotia. The most improper name of all, and yet not much less used then that of America, is, the West Indies: West in regard of the VVestern situation of it from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mistook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Seamen used to call all Countries, if remote, and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural presumptions, then Demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries. Their Reasons drawn, 1. From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the Ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the World which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the Antients was by supposition, at the best by Demonstration only, and not in fact; or thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2ly. It is said that Hanno a noble Carthaginian discovered a great Iland in the Weſtern Ocean, and after a long voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Victuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous Voyage, (which ſome conceive to be Hanno himſelf) informs us that he ſailed not Weſtwards, but more towards the South: and therefore this great Iland, whatſoever it was, (whether Madera or ſome one of the Fortunate Ilands, I determine not) could not be America. 3. It is alleaged that Plato in his Timæus ſpeaks of a great Iland of the Atlantick Ocean, Libyam & Africam adæquans (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Libya, and Africk properly ſo called: which he confeſſeth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore poſſibly never extant but in ſome mens fancies. 4. That Ariſtotle in the Book de Mundo (if that Book be his) ſpeaks of an Iland very fruitful, and full of navigable Rivers; diſcovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Iland being affirmed by that Author to be Multorum dierum itinere à Gadibus remota, hath made ſome men conceive it to be this America, or ſome of the great Ilands of it. As if it might not be as well one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera, or ſome other of the Ilands in the Road of Hannos voyage. Certain I am, that one of the beſt friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly loſe ſuch an opportunity of ennobling their performances in Navigation, (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtful credit, and knoweth of no ſuch place as is there deſcribed by that Author, whoſoever he were. 5. Some have produced theſe Verſes of Seneca, to inferre a knowledge of this Country amongſt the Antients. Viz.

Venient annis ſæcula ſeris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat tellus, Novoſq; Typhis detegat Orbes,
Nec ſit Terris ultima Thule.

Which may be Engliſhed in theſe words:

In the laſt dayes an Age ſhall come,
Wherein the all-devouring Fome
Sha'l loſe its former bounds, and ſhew
Another Continent to view.
New-Worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A ſecond Typhis ſhall reveal;
And frozen Thule ſhall no more
Be of the Earth the furtheſt Shore.

But this Argument can bring no neceſſary, nor ſo much as a probable inference of any ſuch Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus ſhewing as well the continual dangers, as the poſſible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were more Lands diſcovered, then thoſe formerly known. 6. Some hold this Country to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is ſaid in the holy Scriptures to have ſent for Gold. But Ezion-Geber, which is there alſo ſaid to be the ſtation where his Navie lay, was ſituate in the bottom of the Red Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had ſent this way, his ſhipping muſt have lain at Joppa, or ſome other Port of the Mediterranean, and from thence ſet forwards thorow the Streits of Gibraltar, and ſo plainly Weſtward. 7. Finally, in the Hiſtory of Wales writ by David Powel, it is reported that Madoc the ſon of Owen Gwinedth Prince of Wales, of purpoſe to decline ingaging in a Civil war raiſed in that Eſtate, in the year 1170. put himſelf to Sea, and after a long courſe of Navigation came into this Country; where after he had left his men, and fortified ſome places of advantage in it, he returned home for more ſupplies, which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the reſt of that Nation. To which ſome adde, that here is ſtill ſome ſmattering of the Welch or Britiſh tongue to be found amongſt them; as that a Bird with a white head is called Pengwin, and the like: in which regard ſome ſorry Stateſmen went about to entitle Queen Elizabeth unto the ſoveraignty of theſe Countries; Others more wiſe, diſſwaded from that vain Ambition, conſidering that Welch men, as well as others, might be caſt upon thoſe parts by force of tempeſt, and eaſily implant ſome few words of their own among the people there inhabiting. And though I needs muſt ſay for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they ſay, then thoſe which look for this New World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Ilands of Ariſtotle and Plutarch, or the Diſcoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet am I not ſo far convinced of the truth thereof, the uſe of the Mariners Compaſs being not ſo antient (without which ſuch a Voyage could not be performed) but that I may conclude with more ſatisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former Ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer ſaid once of Britain, then newly conquered by the Romans; Britannia qualis ſit, qualeſque progeneret, mox certiora & magis explorata dicentur; quippe jam diu clauſam aperit ecce Principum maximus (he means Claudius Cæſar) nec indomitarum modo ſed & incognitarum ante ſe Gentium Victor: ſo may we ſay of America, on theſe late diſcoveries: What kind of Country it is, and what men it produceth, we do, and ſhall know more certainly then in former times; ſince thoſe puiſſant Kings of Spain have laid open all the parts thereof, inhabited not only by unvanquiſhed, but even unknown Nations. For God remembring the promiſe of his Son, that his Goſpel ſhould before the end of the VVorld be preached to all Nations, ſtirred up one Chriſtopher Colon or Columbus, born at Nervy, in the Signeury of Genoa, to be the inſtrument for finding out thoſe parts of the World, to which the ſound of the Goſpel had not yet arived. VVho being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not perſwade himſelf (the motion of the Sun conſidered) but that there was another World to which that glorious Planet did impart both his light and heat when he went from us. This World he purpoſed to ſeek after, and opening his Deſign to the State of Genoa, An. 1486. was by them rejected. On this repulſe he ſent his brother Bartholomew to King Henry the ſeventh of England; who in his way hapned unfortunately into the hands of Pirats, by whom detained a long while, but at laſt inlarged. Aſſoon as he was ſet at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England, where his Propoſition found ſuch chearfull entertainment at the hands of the King, that Chriſtopher Columbus was ſent for to come thither alſo. But God had otherwiſe diſpoſed of this rich purchaſe. For Chriſtopher not knowing of his Brothers impriſonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his ſervice to have been neglected; and thereupon made his Deſires known at the Court of Caſtile: where after many delayes, and ſix yeers attendance on the buſineſs, he was at laſt furniſhed with three ſhips only, and thoſe not for Conqueſt, but Diſcovery. VVith this ſmall ſtrength he ſailed on the main Ocean more then 60 days. yet could ſee no Land, ſo that the diſcontented Spaniards began to mutinie; and partly out of ſcorn to be under the command of a Stranger, partly deſirous to return, would not go a foot forwards. Juſt at that time it hapned that Columbus did diſcern the clouds to carry a cleerer colour then they did before: and probably conceiving that this clearneſs proceeded from ſome nigh habitable place, reſtrained the time of their expectation within the compaſs of three days; paſſing his word to return again if they did not ſee the Land within that time. Toward the end of the third day, one of the Company called Rodrigo de Triane (he deſerves to have his name recorded, being no otherwiſe rewarded for ſuch joyful news) deſcried Fire; an evident Argument that they drew neer unto ſome ſhore. The place diſcovered was an Iland on the Coaſt of Florida, by the Natives called Guhanani; by Columbus S. Saviours; now counted one of the Lucaios. Landing his men, and cauſing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Croſs thereof, which he erected neer the place where he came on Land; and by that Ceremony took poſſeſſion of this NEW WORLD, for the Kings of Spain, Octob. 11. An. 1492. Afterwards he diſcovered Cuba and Hiſpaniola, and with much treaſure and content returned towards Spain: and after three other great Voyages fortunately finiſhed, he died in the year 1506. and lieth buried at Sevil. Preferred for this good ſervice by the Kings themſelves, firſt to be Admiral of the Indies, and next unto the title of Duke De la Vega, in the Iſle of Jamaica; but ſo maligned by moſt part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla being ſent into thoſe parts for redreſs of grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him Priſoner into Spain. Nor did they only ſtick after his death to deprive him of the honour of this Diſcovery (attributing it to I know not what Spaniard whoſe Cards and Deſcriptions he had ſeen) but in his life would often ſay that it was a matter of no ſuch difficulty to have found theſe Countries: and that if he had not done it when he did, ſome body elſe might have done it for him. VVhoſe peeviſhneſs he confuted by this modeſt artifice, deſiring ſome of them who inſolently enough had contended with him touching this Diſcovery, to make an Egg ſtand firmly upon one of its ends. VVhich when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruizing one end of it, made it ſtand upright; letting them ſee without any further reprehenſion, how eaſie it was to do that thing which we ſee another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was ſeconded by Americus Veſpuſius, an old venturous Florentine, imploied therein by Emanuel King of Portugal; from whom the Continent or Main land of this Country, hath the name of America; by which ſtill known, and moſt commonly called. To him ſucceeded John Cabot, a Venetian, the Father of Sebaſtian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the ſeventh of England, who diſcovered all the North-eaſt Coaſts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South, to New-found land and Terra di Laborador in the North, cauſing the American Roytelets to turn all Homagers to that King and the Crown of England. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and undertakers, out of all parts of Europe bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the firſt that compaſſed the whole World, and found the South Paſſage, called Fretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake and Cavendiſh of England. Frobiſher and Davies attempted a Diſcovery of the North-weſt paſſage; Willoughby and Burroughs of the North-eaſt. So that according to that elegant ſaying of the learned Verulam, in his Advancement of learning, this great building the World, had never thorow-lights made in it till theſe our dayes: by which as almoſt all parts of Learning, ſo in eſpeciall this of Navigation, and by conſequence of Coſmographie alſo, hath obtained an incredible proficiency in theſe later times.

For in the Infancy and firſt Ages of the VVorld, (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort but not unprofitable digreſſion) men lived at home, neither intent upon any Forreign Merchandiſe, nor inquiſitive after the Lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours: or in the Language of the Poet,

Nondum cæſa ſuis peregrinum ut viſeret Orbem,
Montibus, in liquidus Pinus deſcenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hils on which it ſtood
To ſeek ſtrange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had inſtructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preſervation of himſelf and his children from the general Deluge: the Poſterity which deſcended from him had thereby a pattern for the making of Ships and other Veſſels (perfected in more length of time) whereby to make the waters paſſable, and maintain a neceſſary intercourſe betwixt Nation and Nation. Tis true, the Heathen Writers which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of ſhipping to ſundry men, according to ſuch informations or traditions, as they had received: Strabo, to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus to Neptune, who was therefore called the God of the Seas, and Tibullus to the People of Tyre, a Town indeed of great wealth and traffick, and the moſt famous Empory of the elder times; ſaying

Prima ratem ventis credere docta Tyrus.

The Tyrians firſt the Art did finde
To make Ships travell with the Winde.

And queſtionleſs the Tyrians, and the reſt of the Phœnicians enjoying a large Sea-coaſt, and many ſafe and capacious Havens, being in theſe times moſt ſtrong at Sea, and making ſo many fortunate Navigations into moſt parts of the then known World, might give the Poet ſome good colour for his affirmation. From the Phœnicians, the Egyptians (their next neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation; though being an ingenuous People they did add much to it. For whereas the firſt Veſſels were either made of the body of ſome great Tree, made hollow by the Art of man; or elſe of divers boards faſhioned into a Boat, and covered with the skins of Beaſts; (ſuch as are ſtill in uſe amongſt theſe Americans) the Phœnicians brought them firſt into ſtrength and form; but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt when he fled from his brother Rameſes, the uſe of ſhipping was firſt brought amongſt the Grecians: who before that time knew no other way of croſſing their narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafters tied to one another. Nave primus ab Egypto Danaus advenit, ante enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Plinie: where we may ſee the true and genuine difference betwixt Ratis and Navis; though now both uſed indifferently for all ſorts of ſhipping. Amongſt the Grecians thoſe of Crete were the ableſt Sea-men; which gave occaſion to Ariſtotle to call Crete the Lady of the Sea; and to Strabo to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following times, the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were moſt conſiderable in this kinde; and by the benefit of their ſhipping much diſtreſſed the Romans. But ſo it hapned (as all things do and muſt concur to Gods publick purpoſes in the alteration of Eſtates) that a Tempeſt ſeparating a Quinqueremis or Gallie of five banks of Oars, from the reſt of the Carthaginian Fleet, caſt it on the ſhore of Italy: by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Ship-wrights, ſoon became Maſters of the Sea. That France and Spain were taught the uſe of ſhipping by the Greeks and Phœnicians; is a thing paſt queſtioning: Marſeilles in the one being a Phocean, and Gades in the other a Tyrian Colony. As for the Belgians and the Britains, it is probable that they firſt learnt it of the Romans (though formerly they had ſome way to tranſport themſelves from one ſhore to the other.) For Cæſar telleth us of the Belgæ, Ad eos Mercatores minimè commeant, that they were not at all viſited by Forraign Merchants. And the ſame Cæſar found the Seas betwixt France and Britain ſo ill furniſhed with Veſſels, that he was fain to make ſhips to tranſport his Army: Singulari Militum ſtudio circiter ſexcentas & duodetriginta Naves invenit, as his own words are. Having thus brought Navigation to the greateſt height which it had in thoſe days; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Veſſels; and the Tackle unto them belonging. That the Phœnicians firſt invented open Veſſels, and the Egyptians Ships with Decks, hath been ſaid before: and unto them alſo is referred the Invention of Gallies with two Banks of Oars upon aſide; which kinde of Veſſels grew ſo large in the courſe of time, that Ptolomy Philopator is ſaid to have made a Gallie of 50 banks. Great Ships of burden, called Cirræa, we owe to the Cypriots; Cock boats, or Skiffs (Scaphas) to the Illyrians or Liburnians: Brigantines (Celoces) to the Rhodians; and Frigots or light Barks (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phaſelis, and Pamphyli (which we may render Men of War) were the invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phaſelis a Town of Lycia, in Aſia Minor. As for Tackle, the Bœotians invented the Oar; Dædalus and his ſon Icarus, the Maſts and Sails: VVhich gave occaſion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete they made wings to their bodies; and that Icarus ſoaring too high, melted the VVax which faſtened his wings unto his ſhoulders, and thereby periſhed; the truth being, that preſuming too much on this new invention, he ran himſelf upon a Rock, and was caſt away. For Hippagines, veſſels for the tranſporting of Horſe, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grapling hooks, to Anacharſis; for Anchors to the Tuſcans; and for the Rudder, Helm, or Art of Steering to Typhis the chief Pilot in the famous Argo: who noting that a Kite when ſhe flew, guided her whole body by her Tail; effected that in the devices of Art, which he had obſerved in the works of Nature. By theſe helps ſome great Voyages were performed in the elder times; the greateſt, thoſe of Jaſon Ulyſſes, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon, and the Egyptian Kings. Of theſe, Jaſon and his companions, ſayled in the ſhip called Argo, through the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulyſſes through the Mediterranean only; ſmall gullets if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's journey ſo famouſed, and accounted then ſo hazardous, was but ſayling down the River Indus, and four hundred furlongs into the Ocean; and for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very very apparant, that they went with great leiſure, and crawled cloſe by the ſhore-ſide: otherwiſe it had been impoſſible to have conſumed three whole years in going from Ezion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the uſual time of theſe voyages, as appeareth in 1 King. 10. 22. After the fall of the Romans Monarchy, the moſt potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean were the Genoeſe and Venetians, in the Ocean the Engliſh and the Hanſ-towns, neither of which ever attempted any great diſcoveries.

But in the year 1300. one Flavio, of Malphi in the Realm of Naples, found out the Compaſs, or Pixis Nautica, conſiſting of 8 winds only, the four principal, and four collateral: And not long after, the people of Bruges and Antwerp perfected that excellent invention, adding 24 other ſubordinate winds or points. By means of this excellent Inſtrument, and withall by the good ſucceſs of Columbus: the Portugals, Eaſtward; the Spaniards, Weſtward; and the Engliſh, Northwards, have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions; which had been utterly impoſſible to have been performed, and had been fooliſhly undertaken, when that help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by ſome learned men, to prove the uſe of the Mariners Compaſs to be far more antient then is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and induſtrious man, but better skilled in the Hebrew tongue, then the Philologie of the Greeks and Latines, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phœnicians (the moſt famous Sea-men of old times) but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the cauſe. Nor is it poſſible that ſuch an excellent invention, ſo beneficial to the common good of all mankind, ſhould have been forgotten and diſcontinued for the uſe of more then 2000 years, if ever the Tyrians and Phœnicians had been maſters of it; who could not poſſibly conceal it (had they been ſo minded) from the Common-Mariners, or they not have communicated it for gain, or deſire of glory, to the Greeks and Romans, under whom ſucceſſively they lived. As little moment do I find in ſome other Arguments, as that the Lapis Heraclius of the Antient writers, or the Verſoria of Plautus, ſhould be by them intended of the Mariners Compaſs. For plainly the Verſoria of Plautus is no other then that peece of tackle which our Mariners now call the Bolin, by which they uſe to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every wind. And ſo much doth appear by the Poet himſelf, in the Comedie which he cals Mercator; ſaying, Hinc ventus nunc ſecundus eſt, cape modo Verſorium. So called from Verſo, to turn often; or from Verſum the firſt Supine of Verto; whence Velum vertere is a common phraſe amongſt the Latines, uſed for the ſhifting of the Sail as the wind doth vary. As for the Load ſtone, it is called indeed Heraclius Lapis, Ἡρακλεὶς λίθος by the Greeks, not becauſe Hercules Tyrius whom the Phœnicians invocated when they were at Sea, had firſt found out the vertue of it, as our Fuller thinketh; but becauſe firſt found neer Heraclea, a City of Lydia. Κίκληται δ' ὅτι ἀπὸ Ἡρακλείας τῆς ἐν Λυδίᾳ πόλεως, ſaith Heſychius the old Grammarian. Called for the ſame reaſon Magnes, by the writers both Greek and Latine, becauſe firſt found in the Territory of Magneſia, a City of Lydia alſo, whereof Heraclea was a part. So Suidas telleth us for the Greeks, Ἡράκλειαν λίθον τινες τὴν Μαγνησίαν ἀπέδωσαν, διὰ τὸ τὴν Ἡράκλειαν τῆς Μαγνησίας εἶναι: Heraclium Lapidem quidam Magneſiam reddiderunt, quia Heraclea pars eſt Magneſiæ. Called for the very ſame reaſon Lydius Lapis alſo, and by them known only as a touch ſtone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latines,

Quem Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Graii,
Magnetum quia ſit patriis de finibus ortus.

Which Stone the Greeks do Magnes name,
Becauſe it from Magneſia came.

But I have rambled further then I did intend, drawn by the vertue of the Load-ſtone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America: where the Spaniards at their firſt Arrival found the People without all manner of Apparel, nought skilled in Agriculture, making their bread either of a Plant called Maize, or a kind of Root called Jucca; a Root wherein is a venemous liquor not inferior to the moſt deadly poiſons; but having firſt queezed out this juice, and after dryed and prepared the Root, they made their Bread of it. They worſhipped Deviliſh Spirits, whom they called Zemes; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton wooll, like our Childrens Babies: to which they did great reverence, as ſuppoſing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them; and to blind them the more, the Devil would cauſe theſe Puppets to ſeem to move, and to make a noiſe: They ſtood alſo in ſo great fear of them, that they durſt not diſpleaſe them; for if their wils were not fulfilled, the Devil ſtrait executed vengeance upon ſome of their Children; ſo holding this infatuated People in perpetual thraldom. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not ſeen, that they thought the Chriſtians to be immortal: wondring exceedingly at the Sails, Maſts, and Tacklings of their Ships; themſelves knowing no Ships or other Veſſels, but huge Troughs made of ſome great-bodied tree. But this opinion of the Chriſtians immortality (in the ſenſe they meant it) did not long continue: for having taken ſome of them, they held their heads under the water till they had quite choaked them; by which they knew them to be mortal like other men. Quite deſtitute of all good learning, they reckoned their time by a confuſed obſervation of the courſe of the Moon: and ſtrangely admired to ſee the Spaniards know the health and affairs of one another, only by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honeſt nature, for the moſt part, they were found to be; Loving and kind in their entertainments, and apt to do good offices both private and publike, publike, according to their underſtandings: encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond ſome certain hills (but they knew not where) thoſe which lived honeſtly and juſtly, or offered up their lives in defence of their Country, ſhould find a place of everlaſting peace and happineſs. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls immortality, and of ſome Ubi for the future reception of it, that we find ſome tract or other of it in moſt barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new come Chriſtians ſo adored, they eſteemed them no otherwiſe then as droſſe; though many times they adorned themſelves therewith for the colours ſake, as they did alſo with ſhels, feathers, and the like fine Gew-gawes.

Of complexion moſt of theſe Americans were reaſonably fair and cleer, little inclining unto blackneſs: notwithſtanding that a great part of this Country lieth under the ſame parallel with Æthiopia, Libya, and the Land of Negroes. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as ſome imagine) the cauſe of that blackneſs: though accidentally it may turn the skin into ſuch a colour; as we ſee in many Country-Laſſes, even in colder Climates, whoſe faces are continually expoſed to the Sun and weather. Others more wiſe in their own conceits (but in no bodies elſe) will have the Natural Seed of the Africans to be black of colour; contrary both to ſenſe and reaſon, Experience and true Natural Philoſophie being both againſt it. And ſome will have this Blackneſs laid as a curſe on Cham, (from whoſe poſterity the African Nations do derive themſelves) becauſe, forſooth, he had carnal knowledge of his wife when they were in the Ark: a fancie as ridiculous, as the other falſe. So that we muſt refer it wholly to Gods ſecret pleaſure, though poſſibly enough the curſe of God on Cham and on his poſterity (though for ſome cauſe unknown to us) hath an influence on it.

Touching the Original of this People, it is moſt probable that they deſcended from the Tartars; for which there are ſome Arguments of eſpecial weight. For firſt, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe, as having no remainder of the Arts, Learning, and Civilities of it: And ſecondly, that they came not from Africk, in regard they have no black men amongſt them, except ſome few which dwell on the Sea coaſts over againſt Guinea in Africk, from whence they are ſuppoſed by ſome tempeſt to have been brought hither: Thirdly, that they have not the leaſt token or ſhew of the arts and induſtry of China, India, or any civil Region on that ſide of Aſia. The affirmative Arguments prove firſt, that they came from Aſia; next in particular from Tartary. That they came out of Aſia, is more then manifeſt, in that the Weſt-ſide of the Country towards Aſia is far more populous then the Eaſt towards Europe: of which there can be no other reaſon aſſigned, then that theſe parts were firſt inhabited, and that from hence the reſt was peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this people, and the particularities thereof, their incivility, and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are moſt like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the Weſt-ſide of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary, is yet disjoyned by a very ſmall Strait, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Cards, as alſo in the Deſcription of theſe Countries: ſo that there is into theſe Countries a very quick and eaſie paſſage. And fourthly, the people of Quivira, which of all the Provinces of America is the the neareſt unto Tartary, are ſaid to follow in their whole courſe of their life, the Seaſons and beſt paſturing of their Cattel, juſt like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes; an evident argument of their Original deſcent.

But from what Root ſoever they did firſt deſcend, certain it is that they had ſetled here many Ages ſince, and overſpread all the parts and quarters of this ſpacious Continent; there being no place which the Spaniards or any other Adventurers found deſolate or waſte, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers much diminiſhed ſince theſe late Diſcoveries; the Spaniards behaving themſelves moſt inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked People, killing them up like ſheep appointed to the ſlaughter, or otherwiſe conſuming them in their Mines and works of drudgery. And had not Charles the fifth ordained with moſt Chriſtian prudence, that the Natives ſhould not be compelled to work in the Mines againſt their wils, but that the Spaniards ſhould provide themſelves of Slaves elſwhere, the Natives in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Chriſtianity and the Goſpel. For ſo exceeding barbarous and bloody were they at their firſt coming thither, that Haithney, a Noble-man amongſt them, being perſwaded to imbrace the Chriſtian faith, demanded firſt what he ſhould get by being of that Religion? and was anſwered, that he ſhould get Heaven & the joys thereof: Then would he know, what place was deſtinate to ſuch as died unbaptized? and was anſwered, that they went to Hell, & the torments of it: Finally, asking unto which of theſe two Places the Spaniards went? and being told they went to Heaven; he renounced his Baptiſm, proteſting that he would rather go to Hell with the unbaptized, then to live in Heaven With ſo cruel a people. The reſt were driven unto the Font like ſo many horſes to the watering place; and received into the Church of Chriſt without any inſtruction: inſomuch that one old Frier (as himſelf confeſſed to Charles the fifth) had Chriſtened 700000 of them, and another of that rank 300000. never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Chriſtian faith, or points of Religious converſation, (except it were to be obedient to their Paſtors and Teachers.) Yet here I muſt confeſs, (for I am loth to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made a great improvement of Chriſtianity: the number of Chriſtians in this Country, being thought by ſome learned men of the Church of Rome to equal all thoſe of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps conſtrained at firſt unto it as a new Religion, and of a ſtricter Rule then that which before they had; yet by long time and education, it is now grown more plauſible and familiar to them. The Church hereof governed by the four Archbiſhops of 1 Mexico, 2 Lima, 3 S. Foy, & 4 Dominico; who have under them 25 Suffragan Biſhops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When

VVhen this new world came first acquainted with the old, Isabel Queen of Castile, would not permit any of her husband Ferdinando's subjects to be planted here, viz. Arragonians, or Valentians, but licensed the Castilians, Andalusians, Biscains. and the rest of her own people only, envying the wealth hereof to the rest. VVhen she was dead, Ferdinando licensed generally all the Spaniards, excluding only the Portugals. But so rich a prize could not so warily be fenced, but that Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low-country-men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniards harvest; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of so wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any rivall or competitor, the possession (I cannot say the love) of a country so abundantly fruitful. For though some of the Kings of Spain, have been used to say, that they loved the East Indies for their Mistress only, in whose favours they could patiently enough endure a Rival; but esteemed America as their wife, in whose love they could not brook a Competitor without fowl dishonour; yet by his leave (or without it rather) some of his neighbours have made bold with his wife in these later times, though in the affections of his Mistress they have greater interest. But these attempts of the English and Hollanders, have been an occasion of great strength to the whole Country. For whereas in our first VVars with Spain, our private Adventures found the Sea-coasts almost naked of defence, and thereupon many a rich and prosperous voyage to these parts: the Spaniards upon sight of that weakness and disadvantage, so strongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, we were not able to accomplish that with great and publick Forces, which before had been performed by small and private; which caused our Captains and Adventurers, failing oftentimes in the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of the Spanish Navies, as they yet do.

This New World is very plentifull of Spices, Fruits, and such Creatures which the old World never knew; stocked with such store of Kine and Bulls, (brought hither out of Europe since the first discovery) that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides only; blest with such abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines more Gold then Earth: a Mettal which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for hammers, knives, axes, and the like tools of iron; for before, they were wont to make their Canoes or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of fire. Other particularities shall be specified in the particular Descriptions of the several Countries. I shall now only take a brief view of such of their Beasts and Fowls, as either this old World did not know, or knew not in such shapes and qualities, as are there presented. Their Lyons less in greatness then those in Africa, are said to be of colour gray, and so nimble as to climb Trees; their Dogs snowted like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark: their Hogs with talons sharp as Razors, and the navil of their bodies on the ridge of their backs: their Stags and Deer without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not only profitable as with us, for food and raiment, but accustomed to the carrying of burdens, some of of 150 pound weight. Amongst such strange Beasts as this old VVorld kew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whose name I find not) whose forepart resembleth a Fox, the hinder part an Ape, except the Feet only which are like a Mans: beneath her belly a Receptacle like a Purse where she keeps her young till they be able to shift for themselves, never coming thence but when they suck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a barbed Horse, seeming to be armed all over, and that with Artificial (rather then natural) Plates, which do shut and open. The Vicugne resembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleece whereof they make Rugs, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly finde the Bezoar, sometimes two or three, a soveraign Antidote against Poisons and venemous Diseases. A kinde of Hare resembling a Want in his feet, and a Cat in his tail, under whose chin nature hath fastned a little Bag, which she hath also taught him to use as a Store-house; for in this, having filled his Belly, he preserveth the remnant of his Provision. The Pigritia, a little Beast (not so named for nought) which in fourteen days cannot go so far as a man may easily throw a stone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in such variety of colours, that the Indians will perfectly represent in Feathers whatsoever they see drawn with Pencils; insomuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers was presented to Pope Sixtus Quintus, whose eye could not discern them to be natural colours, but thought them pencil-work, till he made tryal with his fingers. One called the Tominejo, of all colours, so little that it seems no bigger then a Bee or Butter-flie; the mouth thereof no bigger then the eye of a needle, yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the sweetness of its note and Musick; the Bird and Nest put into Gold Scales, not weighing above 24. grains, yet beautified with Feathers of so many colours, especially in the neck and brest, that the Indians make great use of them in their Feather pictures. Others as big as these are little. The Condores of such strength and greatness, that they will fall upon a Sheep or Calf, open it, and eat it. Like Miracles of nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto Natural History then to this Discourse: and many medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the consideration of the Learned Herbarists. I am too much a Fool to be a Physitian, and therefore will not deal in such things as are out of my Element. Yet somewhat of this kinde we may chance to meet with in the Description and Survey of the several Provinces, into which this new World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninsulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana, from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, supposed (for the most Northern parts of it are not yet discovered) to contain 13000 miles in compass. That towards the South, hath the name of Peruana, from the great Country of Peru, the circumnavigation whereof is reckoned at 17000 Italian miles. The Iſthmus which joyneth theſe two together, very long but narrow; in ſome places not above twelve miles from Sea to Sea; in many not above ſeventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Streite of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana, neer unto the Iſthmus, and is ſo ſmall a Ligament for ſo great a Body, that ſome have thought of turning theſe two Peninſulas into perfect Ilands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Councel of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this ſmall Iſthmus, ſo to ſhorten their common voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly becauſe if he ſhould imploy the Americans in the work, he ſhould loſe theſe few of them, which his people have ſuffered to live; partly becauſe the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa, do but ſuffice for the Mines and Sugar-houſes; but principally, leſt the paſſage by the Cape of good hope, being left, thoſe Seas might become a receptacle of Pirats. Which doubtleſs was a very prudent and Politick conſideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finiſhed. Seſoſtris King of Egypt, Darius of Perſia, one of the Ptolomies, and a late capricious Portugal, had the like Plot, to make a paſſage from the Red Sea to the Mediterranean: ſo had Cæſar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Iſthmus. Another of the ſame nature, had Charls the great, to let the Rhene into the Danow; the like had Lucius Verus to joyn the Rhene, and the Rhone: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicanor alſo King of Syria, intended to have made a channel, from the Caſpian to the Euxine Sea; an infinite project: but neither he nor any of the reſt could finiſh theſe works; God it ſeemeth, being not pleaſed at ſuch proud and haughty enterpriſes. And yet perhaps the want of treaſure hath not been the leaſt cauſe, why the like projects have not proceeded; beſides the dreadfull noyſes and apparitions, which (as we have already ſaid) continually affrighted the workmen.

Not leſs obſervable then this great but unſucceſsful deſign, of cutting a paſſage thorow this Iſthmus from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but a like ſucceſsleſs Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Engliſhman, in a paſſage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, ariving in a ſmall Bark with 70 of his Companions, a little above Nombre di Dios, the chiefeſt Town of all the Iſthmus, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entred the South Sea, went to the Iſle of Pearls, where he ſtayed ten days; intercepted in two Spaniſh Ships (who feared no Enemy on that ſide) 60000 pound weight of Gold, 200000 pound weight in bars of ſilver, and returned in ſafety to the Land. And though by the mutinie of ſome of his own Company he neither returned into his Country, nor unto his Ship: yet is it an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other; and by the Spaniſh Writers recorded with much admiration.

But to return to the Diviſion of this Country, and the two main parts thereof which this Streit uniteth: Mexicana, or the Northern Peninſula, may be moſt properly divided into the Continent, and Ilands: the Continent again into the ſeveral Provinces of 1 Eſtotiland, 2 Nova Francia, 3 Virginia; 4 Florida, 5 Californica, 6 Nova Gallicia, 7 Nova Hiſpania, and 8 Guatimala; each of them branched into many ſub-diviſions, and leſſer Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninſula, taking in ſome part of the Iſthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1 Caſtella Aurea, 2 Nova Granado, 3 Peru, 4 Chile, 5 Paragnay, 6 Braſil, 7 Guiana, and 8 Paria, with their ſeveral members, parts, and particular Regions. The Ilands which belong to both diſperſed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mare del Zur, where there is not any one of note, but 1. Thoſe called Los Ladrones, and 2 the Ilands of Solomon: or in the Northern Ocean, or Mare del Norte, reduced unto 3 the Caribes, 4 Porto Rico, 5 Hiſpaniola, 6 Cuba, and 7 Jamaica. In the ſurvey of which particulars we will begin with thoſe which lie on the North-eaſt of this great Continent, not poſſeſſed by the Spaniard; and paſſing thorow the Plantations of ſuch other Nations as have any footing in the ſame, come by degrees to the Eſtates of the King of Spain, that we may lay them altogether without interruption: beginning with Eſtotiland, the moſt Northern part, and that which (as ſome ſay) was diſcovered firſt.

OF ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend thoſe Regions of the Mexicana which lie moſt towards the North and Eaſt, hath on the Eaſt the main Ocean, on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the Weſt, ſome unknown Tract not yet diſcovered; and on the North a Bay or Inlet of the Sea called Hudſons Straits, and called ſo from Henry Hudſon an Engliſhman, who by this way endeavoured to finde out a more commodious and quick paſſage to Cathay and China, then had been formerly diſcovered. It comprehends, 1 Eſtotiland ſpecially ſo called, 2 Terra Corterialis, 3 Newfound Land, and 4 the Iſles of Bacaleos.

1. And firſt Eſtotiland ſpecially ſo called, is the moſt Northern Region on the Eaſt ſide of America, lying betwixt Hudſons Straits on the North; and Terra Corterialis, on the South. The ſoil ſufficiently enriched with natural endowments, ſaid to have in it Mines of Gold and other Mettals; but I doubt it lieth too much North for Gold, whatſoever it may do for Braſs and Iron. The People rude and void of goodneſs, naked, notwithſtanding the extream cold of the Country; not having either the wit or the care to cover their bodies with the skins of thoſe Beaſts which they kill by hunting; though their Bellies teach them to keep life by the Fleſh thereof. Said by the firſt Diſcoverers to ſow Corn, to make Beer or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Groen-land; as alſo to have many Cities and Caſtles, ſome Temples conſecrate to their Idols, where they firſt Sacrificed men, and after eat them. The Language which they ſpake, expreſſed in Characters of their own; but ſome knowledge of the Latine Tongue there had been amongſt them, and Latine Books in the Library of one of their Kings, underſtood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Country by the firſt Diſcoverers, who were certain Fiſhermen of Freezland, caſt by a Tempeſt on this Coaſt about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died ſave one: who after a long wandring from one Princes Court to another, found means to return into his own Country: the King whereof called Zichumi, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Diſcovery and Conqueſt of it. Animated thereunto by the opportune coming of Nicolo and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice, who deſiring to ſee the faſhions of the World, furniſhed a ſhip at their own charges, and paſſing the Straits of Gibraltar held their courſe northward, with an intent to ſee England and Flanders. But driven by tempeſt on this Iland, An. 1380. they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly proſperous in a War againſt thoſe of Norway: who liked Nicolo ſo well, that he gave him a command in his Navie, and under his good conduct woon many Ilands, diſcovered Groen-land, and provided for the conqueſt of Eſtotiland alſo. But Nicolo in the mean time dying, the buſineſs was purſued by his brother Antonio, the King in perſon making one in the undertaking: who liked the Country ſo well, being once poſſeſſed of it, that he built a City in it, and there determining to ſpend the reſt of his days, ſent back Antonio unto Freezland, with the moſt of his People.

This is the ſubſtance of the ſtory of the firſt Diſcovery, publiſhed long ſince by one Franciſco Marcellino out of the Letters of the Zeni, which had they been conſidered of as they might have been, we had not ſo long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the World. But whether it were that their reports were eſteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Diſcovery; there was nothing done in purſuance of it: Zichumi never going back to his own Country, and Freezland not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite loſt again till theſe later days. Said in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well ſtored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds which they found there for their refreſhing: the Haven where they Landed to be called Cape Trin; the People to be of ſmall Stature, fearfull, and to hide themſelves in Caves, at the ſight of the Freezlanders: that there was a Mountain always burning or caſting ſmoak; together with a certain Spring, whence iſſued a water as black as Pitch; but no ſuch Cities, Forts, and Temples, as the Fiſherman ſpake of. The Country Weſt from Freezland 1000 miles.

To give you the face of it as it ſtands at the preſent, it is ſaid to be well cultivated, fruitfull of all neceſſaries for the life of man, and rich in mettals; but extream cold: watered with four Rivers, which riſing out of an high Mountain in the midſt of the Country, diſperſe themſelves over all parts of it. The People ſaid to be more ingenious, of better judgements, and more skilled in moſt Mechanick Arts then the reſt of the Americans were at the firſt Diſcovery; which argueth ſome more civil People to have been formerly amongſt them. Their Garments of the skins of Beaſts or Sea-Calves; with which alſo they covered the outſide of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whether the name of Cape Trin be ſtill remaining, I am not able to diſcover; this Country lying ſtill for the moſt part hidden in a Northern Miſt. All we can ſay, is, that ſome Engliſh names have been impoſed of late on ſome

Capes and Promontories lying on the Northern ſhores hereof towards Hudſons Straits, by Hudſon and ſuch others of the Engliſh Nation who purſued that enterpriſe. Of which ſort are Prince Henry's Foreland, towards the Eaſt, almoſt at the entries of thoſe Straits: and then proceedng towards the Weſt, Cape Charls, Kings Foreland; and laſt of all, Cape Wolſtenham, at the end thereof, where theſe Straits open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudſons Bay. But of theſe more particularly in another place, where we endeavour the Diſcovery of ſuch parts of the World as are yet unknown, and ſo within the compaſs of a Terra incognita.

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North Eſtotiland, on the South New-France. So called from Gaſpar Corterialis, who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called alſo Terra di Laborodoro, both from the pains required of the Husbandman, and the great recompence which it gives him: in the ſame ſence as Campania in the Realm of Naples is named Terra di Lavoro. By the French, who ſucceeded in the poſſeſſion hereof after the Spaniard had forſook it, it was called New-Bretagne, with reference to Bretagne in France their own natural Country.

The People at the firſt coming of Corterialis were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, ſwift of foot, and very good Archers: their clothing of Beaſts skins, their habitations Caves, or ſome ſorry Cottages; their Religion Paganiſm, or none; their directions South-ſaying. Not ſo forgetful of the Law which Nature had planted in them, as not to know the neceſſary uſe of marriage; but extremely jealous. Better conditioned at the preſent then in former times, by their neer neighbourhood to the French, and commerce with Forreiners: affirmed to be very well diſpoſed, to feed moſt generally on Fiſh, and to adorn themſelves with Bracelets of braſſe or ſilver. Their chief Towns, 1 Breſt, 2 Sancta Maria, 3 Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

The Country firſt diſcovered by Sebaſtian Cabot, the ſon of John Cabot before mentioned: who in the year 1499. at the charges and encouragement of King Henry 7. ſetting ſail from Briſtol, firſt made the diſcovery of theſe parts, as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Eſtotiland within the compaſs alſo of his Diſcoveries.) The Land which he firſt ſaw, he called Prima Veſta; and an Iland lying before it he called S. Johns, becauſe diſcovered on the day of S. John Baptiſt. They found upon the Country plenty of White Bears, Stags greater then ours, Scut-fiſhes of a yard long, and ſuch ſtore of Cod fiſh (which the Inhabitants called Baccalaos) that their multitudes ſometimes ſtaied his ſhips: hence the occaſion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for a war in Scotland: ſo that nothing elſe was done in this Diſcovery by the Engliſh Nation. But three years after, Gaſpar Corterialis a Portugueze, ſetting ſail from Lisbon, fell upon thoſe parts of Cabots Diſcoveries, which ſince bear his name: from whence he brought the peece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanſhip, left there moſt probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of; drowned in the ſea, or ſlain by the Salvages on the land; as was his brother Michael, in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Nova Francia, caſt an eye upon it; who gave the name of Breſt to a town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in little Bretagne): but whether they ſetled any Colonie in it, or only did reſort unto it in the way of trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND-LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latines call it) is a great Iland lying on the South of Corterialis; from which parted by a Frith or Streit called Golfe des Chaſteaux. So called from the late diſcovery of it, when diſcovered firſt, though it be ſome ſcores of years ago: as Wickhams College in Oxford hath the name of New College, though founded divers Ages paſt, becauſe it was the Neweſt when that name was given.

The dimenſions of the Country I have nowhere met with. But for the quantity hereof, it is ſaid to be better inhabited in the North parts then in the South, though the South the fitter of the two for habitation. Furniſhed upon the ſea coaſts with abundance of Codfiſh, as alſo with Herrings, Salmons, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oyſters, and Muſcles with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Country, naturally beautified with Roſes, ſown with Peaſe, planted with ſtately Trees, and otherwiſe diverſified both for pleaſure and profit: the Air hereof never very extreme, more temperate in the depth of winter then with us in England, the Brooks being never ſo frozen over, that the ice is able to bear a dog; & thoſe little Froſts but ſeldom holding 3 nights together. The people of reaſonable ſtature, full eyed, broad-faced, but beardleſs, their faces coloured with Oker; their houſes, Poles ſet round meeting together in the top, and covered over with skins, an hearth or fire-place in the midſt; their Boats of Bark, 20 foot long, and 4 in breadth, not weighing above 100 pound weight, every of which will carry four men, and is by them carried to all places of their Removes.

Places of moſt importance in it are the ſeveral Havens (of which it is conceived to have more, and more commodious, then any one Iland of the World for the bigneſs of it): not beautified with towns or buildings, but yielding very ſafe ſtations to the greateſt ſhips: the chief whereof 1 Rennoſa or Roigneuſe, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-Eaſt Angle of the Iland; of much reſort for fiſhing, from ſeveral Countries. 2 Portus Formoſus, or Fair-Haven, three miles North of the other, capable of great ſhips, and bearing into the main land above 40 miles. Situate in the Latitude of 46. and 40 minutes. 3 Thornbay, by the Portugals named Enſeada Grande. 4 Trinity Bay on the North of Cape S. Francis, by the Portugals called Bahia de la Conception; a large Bay, five miles broad in the narroweſt place, yet ſafe withall and of very good Anchorage. 5 Bona Veſta, the name of a Port and Promontory. 6 White-Bay, or Bay-Blanche, as the French call it, ſafe and capacious, on the North of the promontory of S. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Grat, on the North-eaſt Angle of the Iland, is no Port of note. Then on the South-ſide of the Iland, and the Weſt of

Cape

Cape de Raz, is 7 Port Treſpaſſez, 8 Port Preſenza, and 9 Port des Baſques (or the Biſcains Haven) and on the Weſt-ſide, having doubled the Cape de Raye, in the South-weſt Angle of the Iland, there is 10 S. Georges Bay; all of them ſafe, capacious, and of great reſort.

4. Before the Iland, at the diſtance of 25 Leagues from Cape de Raye, lieth a long bank or ridge of ground, extended in length many hundred leagues, in breadth 24 leagues where broadeſt, in other places but ſixteen; and all about it certain Ilands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAOS (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitudes of Codfiſh (by the Natives called Bacalaos) which ſwarmed hereabouts; ſo numerous, that they hindred the paſſage of his ſhips, as before was noted, and lay in ſuch ſhoals upon the Coaſts, that the Bears caught them with their claws and drew them on land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the People in the moſt formal expreſſions of duty and reverence uſed to rub their noſes, or ſtroke their foreheads: which if the King obſerved or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had ſo adored him, he turned his head to his left ſhoulder as a mark of favour.

The firſt Diſcoverers of this Country (but not known then to be an Iland) were the two Cabots, John, and his ſon Sebaſtian, imployed herein by Henry the 7. 1497. as before was noted: the buſineſs being laid aſide at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot, two of Briſtol; who taking a more perfect view of it then was took by the Cabots, aſcribed to themſelves the diſcovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the enterpriſe, which was done An. 1527 but with ill ſucceſs. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britons of France had reſorted to it; and changed the names which by the Engliſh had been given to the Bayes and Promontories. But the Engliſh would not ſo relinquiſh their pretenſions to the Primier Seiſin: And therefore in the year 1583. Sir Humfrey Gilbert took poſſeſſion of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the uſe of Fiſhing, and intended to have ſetled there an Engliſh Colonie. But being wracked in his return, the ſending of the Colonie was diſcontinued till the year 1608. when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Briſtol, who moſt ſucceſsfully performed it; the Colonie ſo proſpering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turneps, Coleworts of their own ſowing; ſome probability of metals, a certainty of Sables, Muſk, and other precious commodities, beſides their fiſhing, though that the great occaſion of their ſetling there. Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fiſh, all about the Coaſts, that ordinarily our men take 200 or 300 of them within four houres ſpace; which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

CANADA.

CANADA is bounded on the North with Corterialis, on the South with New-England, on the East with the Main Ocean; the Countries lying on the West, either not yet discovered, or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province only, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract, sometimes inlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower channell, with many great windings and Reaches in it. Having emboſomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this Country, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of St. Lawrence, over against the Isle of Assumption, being at the mouth 40 Leagues in breadth, and 150 Fathom deep. It is also called Nova Francia from the French, who following the tract of Cabot and Corterialis made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The business first undertaken by Jaques Cartier, An. 1534. received here gladly by the Natives, with singing, dancing, and expressing much signe of joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542. by King Francis the first, not only to discover the Country, but to plant some parts of it, who built there a fair Fortress for his greater safety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the soil and people we shall best discover in the several parts of it; each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole, 1 Canada, of which before, 2 Pemtegonet or Norumbegue, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3 Quimbeque falling into the Ocean as the others do, 4 Rio S. Johan, ending its course in a large Bay called Bay Francoise, interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Country. 5 Les trois Riviers, which rising far north, and passing thorow two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada, 6 Sagnenay, of the same Original, Course, and Fall. A River of so strong a Current, that it suffereth not the Sea to flow up its Channel; so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards: and having received many lesser streams, looseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it the several Regions of 1 Novia Francia, specially so called, 2 Nova Scotia, 3 Norumbegue, and 4 the Isles adjoyning.

1. NOVA FRANCIA specially so named, is situate on the South of Corterialis, and on the North of the great River Canada towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more in-land parts. The Country naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Matterns and Foxes, whose flesh the People did eat raw (till more civilized) having first dried it either in the smoak or Sun, as they do their Fish. They have also store of Conies, Fowle and Fish great plenty; one Fish more memorable then the rest, which they call Adothnel, whose body and head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Esurgnie; a shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the stanching of blood; which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear, or sell them. Not very plentifull of fruits, or fit for tillage; yet it beeedeth some Corn, and of pulse good plenty. The Aire more cold then in other Countries of like height, partly by reason of the greatness of the River, which being wholly of fresh water, and so large withall, chilleth the Aire on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice, and those hills of snow which the north-winde passeth over in the way to this Country.

The People, when the French first discovered them, very rude and barbarous; few of them furnished with houses, but removing from one place to another, as their food decayed, and carrying all their goods with them (a thing easily done) upon those removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed. For in the day time they fish in their Boats, which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upside down, sleep under them. As ill apparelled as housed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite shaven, excepting one Bush of hair on the top of the Crown, which they suffered to grow to the length of an horses Tail, tied up with Leather-strings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three wives apiece; and they so constant to their Husband that they never marry after his death, but keep themselves continually in a mourning habit, a vizard as it were, made of grease and Coal-dust, which they spread over all their bodies. The women labour more then the men, both in fishing and husbandry; digging the ground instead of Ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they sow their Maiz (a Plant of which they make their Bread, in most parts of America) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are most of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in these Northern parts having added little more unto Christianity, then by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died, they went immediatly to the Stars, from thence conveyed veyed to certain green and pleasant fields full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the immortality of the soul, and that there was some place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1. Hochelaga, round in figure, compassed about with three Course of timber Ramparts, one within the other, sharp at the top, about two Rods high; with one gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kind) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great houses, in the midst of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about six or seven Leagues from the banks of the River Canada, in the most pleasant part of the Country; and therefore made the seat of their King whom they highly reverenced, and carried him on their shoulders sitting on a Carpet of skins. 2 Stadac, or Stadacone, and 3. Quebecque, which the French call S. Croix, on the course of the same River also; this last a Colonie of the French. 4 Tadonsac, a safe but small Haven, not capable of above 20 ships; at the mouth of Saguenay. 5 Franco-Roy, a Castle built by Monsieur Roberval, when he came first into this Country. 7 S. Lewis, designed for a French Colonie by Monsieur de Champlain, An. 1611. but never came to great effect: yet so much Champlain got by the undertaking, that he left it his name to a great Lake of this Country (full of little Ilands) in the Lands of the Vroqueis, inhabiting on the South of the river Canada, into which it emptieth it self at the last.

2. NOVA SCOTIA containeth that part of the Countries of Canada or Nova Francia, which the French call Accadie or Cadie, (being a Peninsula or Demy-Iland) with so much of the main-land as lieth between the River Canada and the large Bay called Bay-Francoise, from the River of S. Croix upon the West, to the Isle of Assumption on the East. So called by King James, in the Grant of these Countries to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles for his approved fidelity most deservedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters-Patents of which Donation bear Date Anno 1621. What time the French having been outed of their holds here by Sir Sam. Argal Governour of Virginia, had abandoned the South parts of Canada, and betook themselves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Course of that River. And in pursuance of this Grant, the said Sir William Alexander in the year 1622. sent a Colonie hither: and having procured a new Map to be made of the Country, caused the Peninsula lying on this side of the Bay Francoise to be called Nova Caledonia; that on the North thereof to be called Nova Alexandria; giving new names also unto most of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accomplishment of which business, he obtained also a Patent for advancing a certain number of Persons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly, distinguished from others by a Ribbin of Orange tawney; the money raised upon which Patent was to be wholly imployed towards this Plantation. But being unable with those helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burden for a private person) or willing to imploy his money to more profit, he sold Port-Royal to the French, and after discontinued his endeavours in it.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Port Royal, in Accadie or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoise, once made a Colonie of the French by Monsieur de Monts, An. 1604. continued with much difficulty till the year 1613. when destroyed by Sir Samuel Argal then Governour of the English Plantations in Virginia, by reason that the Jesuites whose neighbourhood he liked not of, had begun to nest there. Sold since again unto the French, as before is said, by whom still possessed. 2 S. Lukes Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3 Gaspe, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, opposite to the Isle of Assumption. 4 Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the same Coast also.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the North-east Nova Scotia, on the South west Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the soil fruitful, and the people indifferently civil; all of them, as well men as women, painting their faces. The men are much affected to hunting; and therefore never give their daughters to any, unless he be well skilled in that game also. The Women are here very chast, and so well love their husbands, that if at any time they chance to be slain, the widows will neither marry, nor eat flesh, till the death of their husbands be revenged. They both dance much; and for more nimbleness, sometimes stark naked. The Sea upon the Coasts so shallow and so full of sands, that it is very ill sailing all along these shores. The towns, or habitations rather, so differently called by the French, Portugals, and Spaniard, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet most have formerly agreed upon Norumbegua, or Arampec, as the Natives call it; said to be a large, populous, and well-built town, and to be situate on a fair and capacious River of the same name also. But later Observations tell us there is no such matter; that the River which the first Relations did intend, is called Pemtegonet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the place by them meant is called Agguncia, so far from being a fair City, that there are only a few Sheds or Cabins covered with the barks of trees, or the skins of beasts. Howsoever I have let it stand on the first reports, it being possible enough that the Town might fall into decay, deserted on the coming of so many several Pretenders; and that the Sheds or Cabins which the last men speak of, may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoyning to these Countries of Canada are several Ilands not joyned in any common name, but yet deserving some consideration in this place and time. The principal whereof, 1 NATISCOTEC, called the Isle of Assumption, situate in the very mouth of the River, was first discovered by Jaques Carher, An. 1534. in length 35 Leagues, seven or eight in breadth. The Iland very plain and level, of a fruitful soil, beautified with Trees of several sorts, replenished with great plenty both of Fowl and Fish, and furnished with convenient Rodes, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited, for ought I can find. 2 RAMEÆ, a frie of little Ilands in the great Golf of S. Lawrence, on the South of Natiscotec, first found out or frequented by the Citizens of S. Malo in Bretagne, An. 1590. of great resort for the Morse-fishing, used upon the Coasts, which is here so gainfull, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500 of them. These Morses (take this by the way) are a kinde of Sea-Horses, or Sea-Oxen, with two teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, sold dearer then Ivory, because esteemed a Soveraign Antidote against poisons. They have also four feet, no ears, the horns about half an ell in length; the skin when dressed, twice as thick as that of a Bull; their flesh when young, as sweet and tender as a Veal. So fat and unctuous that with the bellies of five of them, there is made usually an Hogs-head of Train-oil, as good as that of the Whale. 3. BRION, a small Iland on the South of the Ramea, about two Leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich soil, fat pasturage, well shaded with tall and lofty trees; and neighboured by a smaller Iland called Isle Blanche, of the like fertility. 4. BRITON, (Insula Britonum) so named from Jaques Breton a Frenchman, in the time of Francis the first, called also the Iland of S. Lawrence, is situate on the South east of the Isle of Brion, in form triangular, in compass about 80 Leagues; pleasant and fruitfull, though for the most part swelled with hils. Destitute of Rivers but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well stored with shell-fish; and in the midst thereof a great Lake full of little Ilands: the Woods repleniished with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a Bird called Pengwin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portugals did sometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the Aire too cold for them, they again deserted it. The chief Hauen is by the English called Newport, by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great resort of the English to it, in regard of their fishing. 5. ISLE DE SABLE, by the French so called from the sands which lie high about it; distant from the Breton Isle about 30 Leagues to the South, 15 Leagues in compass, but more long then broad, and of unsafe Landing. The planting of it, in regard of the safety of the place, attempted twice by the French, and once by the Portugals, but without succes. 6. Others of less note, as Menego, and Les Isles des Oiseaux, I pass over purposely; there being nothing or but little to be spoken of them.

on

So it appears by this Accompt that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia, to all these Countries; yet they never had the honour of the first discoverie, wherein the English and the Portugueze had precedency of them: nor are possessed of any considerable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large share; the English Masters of the best Ports, and all the Inlands of the Country in the hands of the Salvages. Of these some great and powerfull Nations over-sway the rest, the chief whereof are the Iroquois on the North-east of Norumbegua, neighboured by the Ochataignins, the Alboumequins, and the Nebicerines, the Souriquois, and Etechimins, of Accadie and new Alexandria: the Montagnets, and the Attogovantans, on the banks of the Canada. All of them stout and hardy people, false of their words, treacherous in their practises, and mercileſs in their revenges. So well acquainted with the factions and divisions of Europe, that they know how to make use of one Nation against another; and by that means to keep themselves in their first estate, without being subject unto any. So that the footing which the English, French, or Scots have obtained amongst them, serve rather to secure themselves in the way of their Trading, then to entitle them unto any possession or command in the Country; the French being shut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending only to a Bay or two in the South of Accadie; and the English being only Tenants at the Will of the Natives for such conveniency of fishing as they have in the adjoyning Ilands.

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North Canada, on the South Florida; on the East Mare del Noort; the western boundaries not known, or not well discovered. So called in honour of Queen Elizabeth, that Virgin-Monarch; when discovered (to any purpose) by Sir Walter Raleigh, An. 1584. By the natural Inhabitants called Apalchen, from a Town of that name; one of the chief in all the Country.

The Inland parts hereof are Mountainous and barren, full of thick woods, a Receptacle for wilde Beasts, and the wilder Salvages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitfull, as will appear by the Survey of its several Provinces; Premising first that Virginia in the full Latitude thereof extendeth from the 34th. degree where it joyns with Florida, unto the 44th. where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The first Discovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, An. 1497. did first entitle the Crown of England to this Country; The Design after seconded by one Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings or Princes hereof; who did Homage to K. Henry the 8. then sitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Westminster: but nothing further done in pursuance of it. And though John Verazzani, a noble Florentine, at the incouragement and charge of King Francis the first, An. 1524. discovered more of the Country then Cabot did; yet the French too much in love with the pleasures of France, or intangled in Civill Wars amongst themselves, looked no further after it: Insomuch that the Country lying thus neglected, was re-discovered by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, An. 1584. who sending Master Philip Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow upon this employment, did by them take possession of it in Queen Elizabeths name, in honour of whom he caused it to be called Virginia. The next year he sent hither a Colonie under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Greenvile: who not supplied with necessaries for their subsistence, returned home again. In the year 1587, a second Colonie is sent hither, but as successless as the first: the business being undertaken only on a private Purse, not owned as the interesse of the State, or of publick moment, till the year 1606. In the mean time the North parts of this Country being more perfectly discovered by Captain Bartholomew Gosnold, An. 1602. and the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to say, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into these three parts, 1 New-England, 2 Novum Belgium, 3 Virginia strictly and specially so called. To which the Isles of the Bermudas shall come in for a fourth.

NEW ENGLAND hath on the North east Norumbegua, and on the South-west Novum Belgium. So called by the Adventurers by whom first planted, not so much because opposite to Nova Albion, as some men conceive; as in imitation of the like adjuncts of distinction, given by the French and Spaniards to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Gallicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Country situate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41. & 44. equally distant from the Artick Circle, and the Tropick of Cancer; by consequence naturally of the same degree of heat with France or Italy: But by reason of the thick mists which arise from the Seas adjoyning, those heats so moderated, that the Aire is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an Englisb body. The soil not only fruitfull of such commodities as grow there naturally; but also of all sorts of grain which were brought from England. Great store of Woods and trees both for fruit and building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of salt and fish upon the shores; and as for Turkies, Partriges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, such a full variety, as serves not only for necessity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of most note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many sorts of Fish, some Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Masts, Cables, Timber fit for shipping: in a word whatsoever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might be at better rates, and with far less trouble be supplied from hence; at least, if we believe the Relations of it published in the year 1622.

The People for the most part well enough disposed, if not roughly handled, hospitable, and more civil then the rest of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the Englisb at their first setling there Anno 1608. they would use to say that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil Spirit which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worshipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I finde not any great increase of Christianity amongst the Natives: our Englisb Undertakers thinking it sufficient if they and their houses served the Lord, without caring what became of the souls of the wretched People; which hitherto have sate in darkness and the shadow of death, notwithstanding those New lights which have shined amongst them.

And

And as for thoſe New-comers which have planted there, all Engliſh, though ſome immediately out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what ſtrain they were, then in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap 8. where he obſerveth, Primos hoſce Colonos, uti & illos qui poſtea acceſſerunt, potiſſimùm aut omnino fuiſſe ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Anglia Brownitas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium ſuperioribus annis ſe receperunt, & hinc ad ſocios ſunt profecti. They were (ſaith he) either for the moſt part or altogether of that Sect, which in England are called Brownists or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themſelves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to joyn with their Brethren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Tameſcot, where our men found Oyſters of nine inches long. 2 Nanſic, a River of the Tarentines, one of the chief Nations of this tract. 3 Sagahadoc, of moſt note, and deſervedly too: Of a mile and an half broad at the mouth or influx, and ſo upwards for the ſpace of a dayes journey, where it maketh a large Lake three dayes journey broad, with ſix Ilands in it; nouriſhed with two large Channels, the one from the North-eaſt, the other from the North-weſt, each of them riſing from a Lake, the leaſt of which four dayes journey long, two broad, the other double it. Of leſſe note, 4 Apanawapesk, 5 Ramaſſoc, 6 Aſhamahaga, &c.

The Country on the Sea ſide full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited; inſomuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the ſpace of 70 miles above twenty Havens, ſome of them capable of 500 or 1000 ſail; moſt of them ſheltered from the furies of wind and ſea, by the interpoſition of ſome Ilands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coaſt. In the ſpace of 70 miles he reckoneth forty Villages of the Barbarous people, the chief of which, 1 Macadacut, 2 Segocket, 3 Pemmaquid, 4 Nuſconcus, 5 Kennebecque, &c. all called by the name of ſome Brook or water upon which they were ſeated. Since added by the Engliſh, 1 S Georges Fort, the firſt Plantation of the Engliſh, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagahadoc, in a Demy-Iland, An. 1607. 2 New Plimouth, ſeated in a large and capacious Bay; at the firſt building (An. 1620.) conſiſting of nineteen families only, but in ſhort time improved to an handſom Town: which as it was the firſt Town, ſo it was the firſt Church which was ſetled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinſons Church in Holland, that notorious Separatiſt, and after made a pattern to the reſt of theſe Churches, each abſolute and Independent in it ſelf, without ſubordination unto any Superior. For my part, I behold Epiſcopacie as the Primitive Government of the Church of Chriſt: but if there were no other Pretenders to it then Presbyterie and Independencie, I ſhould as ſoon look for the Scepter and Throne of Chriſt (as they pleaſe to phraſe it) in the Co-ordination of New England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3 Briſtow, upon the Seaſide alſo, but more North then Plimouth. 4 Barſtaple, ſo called with reference to a noted Sea town of that name in Devonſhire; as 5 Boſton, with like reference to as noted a Sea-port in Lincolnſhire. 6 Quillipiack, on the Bay of Maſſachuſets; a Town of an old name, but a new plantation.

This part of Virginia firſt diſcovered by Captain Goſnold, An. 1602. and the next year more perfectly ſurveyed by ſome of Briſtol, was by King James An. 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be planted and diſpoſed of for the publike; Sir John Popham, then Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, being one of the Chief alſo in that Commiſſion. By his encouragement, and principally at his charge, a Colonie was ſent thither An. 1607. under the Preſidencie of Captain George Popham, and Ralegh Gilbert, who built the Fortreſs of S. George at the mouth of Sagahadoc. But the Preſident dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief-Juſtice alſo, the Colonie deſpairing of good ſucceſs, returned home again. Succeſſleſly again attempted An. 1614. the Undertakers were reſolved to make further trial of their fortune, and in the year 1616 ſent out eight ſhips more: but it never ſetled into form till the year 1620. when by the building of New Plimouth, and ſome encouragements ſent thence to bring others on, it grew in very ſhort time to ſo ſwift a growth, that no Plantation for the time ever went beyond it. The growth of old Rome and New England had the like foundation: both Sanctuaries, Ad quæ turba omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida confluxit, as Livy telleth us of the one; reſorted to by ſuch of the neighbouring Nations, as longed for innovations in Church and State.

2. NOVUM BELGIUM or NIEUW NEDERLANDT, hath on the North-eaſt New-England, on the South-weſt Virginia ſpecially ſo called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their plantation in it An. 1614. the Country being then void, and conſequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxime in the Civil laws, Quæ nullius ſunt, in bonis dantur occupanti. And yet they had ſome better title then a bare Intruſion, having bought Hudſons Cards and Maps, and otherwiſe contented him for the charge and pains of his Diſcovery, An. 1609. Of which more anon.

This part of the Country extended from the 38. Degree and an half, to the 41. 15. of a good temperature both of Aire and ſoil: fruitfull of thoſe things which the Earth brought forth of its own accord, abundance of wilde Grapes, and Nuts, Trees of great height and bulk for ſhipping; plenty of Herbage, ſtore of Plants, the effects of nature: and where the People did their part, ſuch increaſe of Maize (a Plant of which they make their Bread) as ſhewed their care and induſtry to be well beſtowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furniſhed (within their command) with Wheat and other ſorts of Grain; as alſo of Flax, Hemp, and ſuch other Commodities as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods repleniſhed with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferiour to any in Sturgeons, Salmons, and other the beſt ſort of Fiſh which can ſwim in the water.

The

The People though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the ſame diſpoſition with the other Savages. Clad in Beaſts skins, for the moſt part without certain dwellings, dwelling toegther many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their houſhold ſtuff a Tabacco Pipe, a wooden diſh, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint; their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of fiſhes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worſe, their chief God the Devil, whom they worſhip under the name of Menetto; but with leſs pomp and Ceremony then is uſed in Africk. Of manners, fearfull and ſuſpicious (not without good cauſe) wonderfull greedy of revenge; but if well uſed, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; fickle, but very faithfull unto thoſe who truſt them: conceived to be inclinable to the Chriſtian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of thoſe who had ſtudied godlineſs more then gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want ſupplyed by many large and capacious Bays, all along the Coaſt; the principal of thoſe that be 1 Manhattes, by ſome called Naſſovius, but by the Dutch commonly Noordt Rivier, which falleth into the Sea at May-Port, ſo called by Cornelius May, the Maſter of a Ship of Holland, at their firſt Plantation; another channel of it, which from the noiſe thereof they call Hell-gate, emptying it ſelf againſt an Iland called the Iſle of Nuts. The River about 15, or 16. Fathom deep at the mouth thereof, affordeth a ſafe Road for ſhipping, but of difficult entrance. 2 Zuid Rivier, ſo called becauſe more Southerly then the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not ſo well diſcovered.

Towns here are few either of the old or New Plantations. The Natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of thoſe Tribes under one Roof, as before was ſaid; but thoſe Families ſo remote from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a ſcattered Village. Nor do I finde that either the Hollanders or the Engliſh (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to building; The title of the Dutch being ſubject unto ſome diſputes; and the Poſſeſſion of the Engliſh not confirmed and ſetled. Hudſon an Engliſhman, had ſpent ſome time in the Diſcovery of this Country, and given his name to one of the Rivers of it. With him the Hollanders, An. 1609. as before is ſaid, compounded for his Charts, and Maps, and whatſoever he could challenge in the right and ſucceſs of that his Voyage. But they were hardly warm in their new habitations, when Sir Samuel Argal, Governour of Virginia, ſpecially ſo called (having diſpoſſeſſed the French of that part of Canada, now called Nova Scotia, An. 1613.) diſputed the poſſeſſion with them; alledging that Hudſon, under whoſe ſale they claimed that Country, being an Engliſhman, and licenſed to diſcover thoſe Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or diſmember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour ſubmits himſelf and his Plantation to his Majeſty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for, and under him. But a new Governour being ſent from Amſterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes; but began to fortifie himſelf, and entitle thoſe of Amſterdam to a juſt propriety. To which end, he gave unto the Country the name of New Netherland, conferred new names on all the Bays and Rivers of it; and poſſeſſed himſelf of a little Iland neer that Branch of the Noordt-River, which themſelves call Hell-gate: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New-Amſterdam; and built a Fortreſs by the name of Orange-Fort, which he garriſonned, and planted with five pieces of Cannon, complaint whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him repreſented to the States of Holland: it was declared by the ſaid States in a publick inſtrument, that they were no ways intereſſed in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the Weſt-Indian Company of Amſterdam; and ſo referred it wholly to his Majeſties pleaſure. Which being declared, a Commiſſion was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore to plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND; the like not long after to Sir Edmund Loyden, for planting and poſſeſſing the more Northern parts which lie towards New-England, by the name of Nova Albion. And though the Hollanders did then ſeem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there, for the ſum of 2500. l. yet taking advantage of the troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raiſed their demands to a greater height; but furniſhed the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to uſe their Weapons. A moſt miſchievous and wicked Act; not only tending to the damage and diſcouragement of the preſent Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Chriſtians out of all theſe Countries. But the beſt is, they were the firſt that ſmarted by it; the Salvages thus armed and trained, fell fowl upon them, deſtroying their Farme-Houſes, and forcing them to betake themſelves to their Forts and Faſtneſſes. What hath been ſince done (for the giving of new names to ſome of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the Engliſh, I can hardly ſay: but I fear that little will be acted, or to little purpoſe, till it be made a Work of more publick intereſſe.

3. VIRGINIA ſpecially ſo called, hath on the North-eaſt Nieu Netherlandt, on the South-weſt, Florida, the name reſtrained to this part only, ſince the two laſt Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Country lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. degree of Northern Latitude; by conſequence the Aire inclined unto heats, if not refreſhed and moderated by a conſtant Gale of Eaſtern winds which they call the Brize; and the blaſts driving on it from the open Seas. Diverſified moſt pleaſantly into hills and valleys; the Mountains clothed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The ſoil ſo fruitful that an Acre of Land well ordered will return 200 Buſhels, or 25 Quarter of Corn. Said alſo to be rich in veins of Allom, as alſo in Pitch, Turpentine, ſtore of Cedars, Grapes, Oile, plenty of ſweet Gums, ſeveral ſorts of Plants for the Dyers uſe, ſome Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber trees almoſt infinite numbers; as alſo great abundance of Cattel, Fiſh, Fowl, Fruit, and of Maiz no ſcarcity. Some Chriſtall found amongſt the Mountains, on the ſhore ſome Pearls; nothing deficient either in the ſoil or Aire for the incouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The People are but few in number for ſo large a Country, and thoſe as different in ſize, as in ſpeech or manner; Some of them, whom they call Saſques-hanoxi, of ſo vaſt a greatneſs, that in compariſon of the Engliſh they ſeemed as Giants: clad with the skins of Bears, and Wolves in ſo ſtrange manner that the head of the Beaſt hung before their breaſts inſtead of a Jewel; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other ſide, whom they call Wigcocomoci; of ſo low a ſtature, that in relation to the other, they appear as Pigmies. But generally they are all of tall ſtature, well limbed, for the moſt part without Beards, and the one half of the head kept ſhaven: clothed in looſe Mantles made of the skins of Deer, with an Apron of the ſame to hide their nakedneſs; the reſt of their bodies painted over with the figures of Serpents or of ſome other Creature of as horrid ſhape. Strong and accuſtomed to the cold which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconſtant, crafty, and ſomewhat more induſtrious then the reſt of the Savages; but given to anger, and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they worſhip all things (and them only) which are like to hurt them, as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder &c. So that it may be ſaid of them, as once Lactantius ſaid of the ancient Romans, did not the ignorance of theſe poor Wretches render them excuſable, and make them fitter objects for our Prayers and pittie, then our ſcorns) Digniſſimi homines qui Deos ſuos ſemper haberent præſentes. One Devil-God above all the reſt (they call him Oke) whom they worſhip, as themſelves confeſs, more for fear then Love. Not yet converted from theſe horrible and groſs Idolatries by the long neighbourhood of the Engliſh; accuſed in that reſpect moſt juſtly by thoſe of Rome.

No Country for the bigneſs of it can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers, the principal of which 1 Powhatan (ſo called by the name of that petit Roitelet, whoſe Territory it paſſeth thorow) which having run a courſe of an hundred miles, and Navigable all that way by ſmaller Veſſels, is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2 Apamatuck, 3 Nanſamund, and 4 Chikahamania, all Tributaries to Pawhatan. 5 Pamanuke, fourteen miles more North then Pawhatan, but of leſſer note. 6 Toppahanock, Navigable 130 miles. 7 Patawomeke, paſſable by Boat 140 miles, and ſix or ſeven miles broad where it falleth into the Sea; increaſed by many leſſer ſtreams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well ſtored with Fiſh. 8 Pawtunxut, of a ſhorter Race, but a deeper Channel then moſt of the former (16. or 18. Fathom deep) and of more choiſe of fiſh then the others are.

Along the Banks of theſe Rivers dwell their ſeveral Tribes, ſcarce any one of which making up an hundred men (that of Patawomeke excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160) many not yielding above 30. and ſome not ſo many. Their Habitations not containing above ten or twelve houſes a piece, but in thoſe houſes ſundry particular Families, are for the moſt part covered with the barks of Trees; ſo placed, that the Common Market place ſtandeth in the midſt, at an equal diſtance; the houſes of their Weroances (or the chiefs of their Tribes) and that which ſerveth them for a Temple, being ſomewhat finer then the reſt. And of theſe Habitations ſome are preſented to us by the names of Ooanoke, by the Engliſh called the Blinde Town, 2 Pemeoke, 3 Shycoake, ſaid by my Author to be Civitas ampla, a large City, but we muſt underſtand him with Relation to the reſt of this Country. 4 Chowanoak, 5 Secatan, 6 Mattaken, 7 Weopomioke, 8 Pyſhokonnok, ſaid to be inhabited by none but women, 9 Chipano, 10 Muſcamunge, both upon the Sea; moſt of them called by the name of thoſe ſeveral Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the Engliſh and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the Southſide of a large and goodly Bay for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thruſting it ſelf a great way up into this Country, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before mentioned, is by the Natives called Cheſepoack, and yeildeth the only ſafe entrance into this part of the Country: the Capes thereof for that cauſe fortified by the Engliſh; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of moſt note which have been either ſince built or frequented by them, 1 James Town (Jacobipolis, ſo named in honour of King Iames; on the South-ſide of that Bay, not far from the River Chikahamania: firſt founded in the year 1606, at what time it was trenched about, and ſome Ordnance planted on the Works. 2 Henries Town (Henricopolis) ſo named in honour of Prince Henry, the eldeſt ſon of King Iames, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 80 miles from Iames Town. 3 Dales-gift, ſo called, becauſe built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610. 4 Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis. 5 Ketoughtan, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Cheſepoack, very much traded by the Engliſh. 6 Wicocomoco the chief Town of Pawhatan, one of the Roitelets of this Country; much courted by the Engliſh at their firſt ſetling here, and a long time after: a Crown being ſent him by King Iames with many other rich preſents, the better to ſweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithfull neighbour.

The ſum of the Affairs of this laſt Plantation, is, that the buſineſs being reſumed in the year 1606, and a Commiſſion granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the work, they fell in hand, by the Counſell and incouragement of Capt. Smith, with the building of James Town (having firſt fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. Theſe being almoſt conſumed by famine famine and other miſeries, were the next year recruited with 120 more brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having caſually conſumed their houſes, once again diſcouraged them. But the houſes being reedified, and a Church added to the houſes, by the induſtry of Smith their Governour, the Colonie began to flouriſh, and to increaſe in reputation amongſt the Savages, eſpecially having made (as they believed) a friend of Pawhatan. In the year 1609. the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return; who left here 490 perſons, (and of them 200 expert Souldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns, 300 Muskets, with victuals and ammunition neceſſary; and 39 of their Weroances or Petit-Kings Tributaries and Contributioners to the Engliſh. Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers, ſent thither with 9 ſhips and 500 men, loſt a great part of their numbers in the Iſle of Bermudaz: the reſt not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three Ships more, An. 1610. But falling into a deſperate ſickneſs, and come home to England, he recommended the eſtate of the Engliſh there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furniſhed them with Men, Cattel, and other neceſſaries: after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and ſome heads of Cattel. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earl of Southampton, the affairs here began to ſettle in a proſperous way; when unexpectedly in the year 1621. the Salvages falling on them (fearing no ſuch treacherie) killed 340 of their men; and had alſo then ſurprized James Town, if one of the Savages, who had received the Chriſtian faith, had not diſcovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that blow, it went happily forwards: and might by this time have been raiſed to ſome power and greatneſs, if the Engliſh by diverting on ſome by plantations, and by imploying indigent and neceſſitous perſons in ſo great a work, had not diſcouraged the deſign. For certainly one might ſay of this Plantation, as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few or none were ſent unto it (except the Principals) but ſuch as were in diſtreſs, or debt, or ſome way or other diſcontented: men never likely to advance and purſue a buſineſs of ſuch publike intereſſe. Commendable howſoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themſelves conſtantly to thoſe Forms of Worſhip which were eſtabliſhed and obſerved in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was ſaid) into ſeveral Tribes, every Tribe under the command of their ſeveral Chiefs: which Chiefs though many in number, and of little power, knew well enough how to keep their State unto their Subjects, and to ſhew it alſo unto Strangers. For when Powhatan was pleaſed to give audience unto Captain Newport and the reſt of the Engliſh ſent from Smith, they found him on a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather imbroidered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of skins like an Iriſh Mantle: at his head and feet an handſom young woman; on each ſide of the room twenty others, with their necks and ſhoulders painted Red, and about their necks a great chain of Beads; his principal men ſitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithſtanding this great State, (and great it was indeed for ſuch petit Princes) he and the reſt became ſo ſubject to the Engliſh, that in Smiths time they did not only pay their Tributes or Contributions, but at his command would ſend their Slaves and Subjects to James-Town, to receive correction for wrongs done to the Colonie. And it is probable enough that thoſe of New-England, being the greater and more powerful Plantation (as followed with the ſtronger zeal, and carried on by the united purſes of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence alſo amongſt the Natives; though I find it not expreſſed in ſo many particulars.

4. The Iſles of BERMUDAZ, many in number (ſome ſay 400 at the leaſt) are ſituate directly Eaſt from Virginia, from which they are diſtant 500 Engliſh miles, 3300 of the ſame miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudaz a Spaniard, by whom firſt diſcovered. Called alſo the Summer-Ilands, from the ſhipwrack of Sir George Summers upon that Coaſt; ſo much delighted with the ſadneſs of the miſadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to ſettle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatneſs then all the reſt, to which the name is now moſt properly aſcribed, is ſituate in the Latitude of 32. & 30 minutes. Well ſtored, when firſt diſcovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers fruits, Mulberries, Palmitos, Cedars; as alſo of Silk-worms, Pearls and Amber, and ſuch rich Commodities: of Fowl ſo infinite an abundance, that our men took a thouſand of one ſort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Aire hereof very ſound and healthy, found by experience (the beſt Argument in ſuch a point) to be agreeable to the body of an Engliſh man; yet terribly expoſed to tempeſts of rain, thunder, and lightning: For which, and for the many ſhipwracks happening on the Coaſts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be ſaid to own it; the Mariners have pleaſed to call it the Iland of Devils. The ſoil affirmed to be as fertile as any, well watered, plentiful in Maize, of which they have two Harveſts yearly: that which is ſowed in March, being cut in July; and that which is ſowed in Auguſt, being mowed in December. No venemous creature to be found in all the Iland, or will live, brought hither. And beſides theſe Commodities, of ſo ſafe a being, ſo fenced about with Rocks and Ilets, that without knowledge of the paſſages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with ſuch knowledge, there is entrance for the greateſt ſhips. The Engliſh have ſince added to theſe ſtrengths of nature, ſuch additional helps, by Block-houſes, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidentally then upon design) by John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for setling a Plantation in it; as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets in their return from the Bay of Mexico by the Streits of Bahama. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De la Ware, An. 1609. Who being shipwracked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Iland; which he so liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it, at his coming home. An. 1612. the first Colonie was sent over under Richard More, who in three years erected eight or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordinance. An. 1616. a new Supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing Corn, setting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainful Weed Tobacco. An. 1619. the business is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being interessed in it: Captain Butler sent thither with 500 men, the Isle divided into Tribes or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough; the whole reduced to a setled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things so succeeded, that in the year 1623. here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty peeces of Ordinance; their numbers since increasing daily, both by Children borne within the Iland, and supplies from England.

OF FLORIDA.

FLORIDA is bounded on the North-east with Virginia; on the East with Mare del Noort; on the South and some part of the West with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West with part of New Gallicia, and some Countries hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palmes in the 25 degree of Latitude to Rio de Secco in the 34. which evidently speaketh it for a Country of large dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the conduct of Sebastian Cabat, An. 1497. afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, An. 1527. and by him called Florida, either because he landed there upon Palm-Sunday, which the Spaniards call Pascua di Flores, or Pascha Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh verdure and flourishing estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaquasa.

This Country lying Parallel to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Aire and Soil, but that it is abundantly more fruitfull: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize (the natural bread-Corn of the Country) which they sowe twice a year, viz. March and June, and reap in the third month after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chesnuts, Grapes, and Plums of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wilde and tame of all kindes which these Countries yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forrests full of the largest Okes, and the loftiest Cedars; some Cypress-Trees and Bays of a large proportion; with great plenty of that Wood which the Inhabitants call Pavame, and the French name Sassafras; the bark whereof is Medicinal against some Diseases; and another Tree which we call Esquine, affirmed to be a Soveraign and present Remedie for the French disease. It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold and Silver, neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards and French put a price upon them; and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Turquoises and Pearls. Others report that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongst them came from some ships which had been wracked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalatei, there are found great Veins of a reddish Mettal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The People are of an Olive-Colour, great stature, and well proportioned; naked except their Privities, which they hide with the skins of Stags: their Arms and knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off; their hair black, and hanging down as low as their thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of dissimulation. So stomackfull that they do naturally love War and Revenge, insomuch that they are continually in War with one or other. They are crafty also and very intelligent, as appeareth by the Answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here among them An. 1549. For when he went to perswade the people that he was the son of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not so, replyed a Floridan, for God never bad thee to kill and slay, and work all kinde of mischief against us. The Women when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their hair close to their ears, and strew it on his Sepulchre; and cannot marry again, till their hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. Hermophrodites are here also in great plenty, whom they use as beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kinde of drudgery. They have all a gross belief of the souls immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains this Country hath not many, as being generally plain and level; the chiefest those called Apalatei before mentioned; supposed by the Inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note, 1 Rio Secco, 2 Rio Grande, 3 Serravahi; the two first named so by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives: 4 Garunna, 5 Ligeis, 6 Axona, 7 Sequana, and 8 Charente, so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France; both French and Spaniards having severally and successively the possession of it. Here are also 9 Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers; 10 Rio de Neives, or the River of Snow; and 11 Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost, all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their rise, course, and greatness, I finde not in any of my Authors. Only Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River, called Porto Riale, reckoned the chiefest of this Country, the mouth whereof is three miles broad, where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the VVest, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles, a creature dangerous alike both by Land and VVater.

The Country not so well discovered and planted hitherto as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes, as were all Nations of the VVorld at their first Discovery.

The

The principal of these they reckon the Quevenes, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avavares, and Malicones, the Susolas, Quitones, and other names not usual unto us of Europe; though these more passable then many which have gone before: mollified perhaps by the French and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural roughness; all governed by their Paracousti, or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds, and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as Panuca, Avanares, Abarduosia, Joguazia, Apalchia, Anthia, Samovia, Colas; but they acquaint us neither with their site nor bounds: except it be that Panuca lyeth on the borders of Hispania Nova, beyond the large and spacious Bay of the Holy Ghost; and Calos neer the Cape called Cape di Florida. Others distinguish it by the names of the several Roytelets, which varying with the change of the person, makes that division to be very variable and uncertain also. But it is generally agreed that the Peninsula, which pointeth on the Isle of Cuba, hath the name of Tegesta or Florida specially so called; the name of Florida being first given by John Ponce unto this part only, though afterwards communicated unto all the rest of this Country. A Demy-Iland stretching in length from the South to the North 100 Leagues; in breadth where broadest 30 Leagues, and in some places 20 only. VVell known by the Cape of Martyrs, looking into the Isle of Cuba; the River of the holy Ghost, and three goodly Bays, the chief whereof, that entituled to S. Joseph; all opening into the Gulf of Mexico, or the Bay of New Spain. The whole environed about, save where it is joyned unto the Continent, with Bars of sands, and scattered Ilands, which serve unto it as the out-Works to some notable Fortress.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 S. Helens, on or neer a Promontory, so named where this Country bordereth on Virginia: once fortified and possessed by the Spaniard, but not long since abandoned. 2 Fort de Charles, Arx Carolina in the Latine, built by the French upon the Banks of the River Maio, and so called in honour of Charles the ninth, in whose time the Conquest of this Country was undertaken: but ruined by the Spaniard in the VVar between them. 3 Port Royal, a well frequented Haven on the Mouth of the River, of that name; but whether there be any Town now remaining, I am not able to say. More in the Land (for these lie all upon the Borders towards Virginia, Apalche supposed to be a place of great consideration, and in regard of the opinion which was had of the wealth thereof; (but found to be a small Town, of but 40 Cottages) and therefore first attempted and took in by the Spaniard, in their invasion of this Countrey under Pamphilus of Narvaes, An. 1528. recovered by the Natives after his departure. 5 Ante, an open Burrough, nine days journey from Apalche, where the Salvages gave the Spaniards a sharp encounter, and slew many of them; but being vanquished at the last, they forsook the Town; of it self not tenable. 6 Ocalis, an unwalled Town, but consisting of 600 Sheds (for I dare hardly call them Houses) the chief of the Kingdom of Acuera. 7 Osachile, the chief Seat of the King so called; and, 8 Vitacuchus, a Burrough of 200 Cottages, the principal of the Kingdom of Vitatuchus, both taken by the Spaniards at the same time also. 9 S. Matthews, on the Eastern shore of the Demi-Iland above mentioned, possessed and fortified by the Spaniard. 10 S. Augustines on the same shore, but more South then the other, situate at the mouth of a small River so named, fortified by the Spaniard with many a strong Castle: but for all that taken by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1485. there being found in the Fort of S. John, in which the strength of the Town consisted, 18 brass pieces, and 20000 Florents in ready money, for the pay of the Garrison. Repaired afterwards more strongly then ever formerly. The Spaniards have also Garrisons in two other places of this Country, viz. S. Philip, and S. Jago; but I cannot say distinctly in what part they are.

The Government of this Country, is of one kinde only, though managed by several persons: the Supream power residing in the Chiefs of their several Tribes; at such continual enmity with one another, that they very seldom joyn together in any Counsels, wherein the publick is concerned. So that the Spaniards may affirm of the present Floridans, as the Romans did of the ancient Britans; Nec quicquam adversus Validissimas gentes utilius nobis fuit, quam quod in commune non consulebant. The not communicating of their Counsells, hastned on their bondage. Yet in the Government of these Chiefs there was somewhat of the Parliamentary way used with us in Europe. For as in all matters of concernment those Chiefs advised with their Counsell, so if it were a business which concerned the publike, their Priests and others of most note for gravity and wisdom, were admitted to the Consultation. But being severally too weak for a strong Invader, and never joyned together to defend themselves, they made themselves an easie prey to the French and Spaniards. Et sic dum singuli pugnabant, universi vincebantur; by trusting to their single forces they were all subdued. For in the year 1512 John Ponce a Native of Leon in Spain, setting sail with three ships from the Iland of Porto Rico, on Palm-Sunday fell on the Peninsula before described, and for that cause or from the flourishing verdure of it, called it Florida; but did no more then scowre along upon the coasts, and give new names to such of the Promontories and Rivers as he had discovered; and having only a slight skirmish with some of the Salvages returned back again. The business eight years after was again revived by Vasques de Ayllon, who setting sail from the Haven of Plata, in Hispaniola, attained unto the Northeast parts of this Continent, bordering on Virginia, where he left names unto the Promontory of S. Helen. and the River of Jordan: and having treacherously enslaved some of the Natives (whom he had invited to a Feast) prepared for Spain; where he obtained the Kings Patent for a new Plantation. But his perfidiousness could not prosper. For in the year 1524 coming with his ships upon this Coast, one of them perished on the Rocks, and 200 of his men being killed at their landing, he gave over the Enterprise: the Spaniards hitherto making no more use of these Discoveries, coveries, then wickedly to enrich themſelves by ſtealing Men, whom as wickedly they ſold for Slaves. Nor had the voyage of Pamphilus de Narvaez An. 1528. any better end; though undertaken with a Band of 400 foot and 80 horſe. For having took poſſeſſion of the Country in the name of his Soveraign Charles the fifth, finding ſome hopes of great treaſures to be had at Apalche (diſtant above a moneths journey from the place of his landing) he would needs march thither. In which action, though he got that and ſome other Towns, yet he loſt himſelf; few of his men returning ſafe into their Country, and they not knowing what became of their Generall. As fruitleſs, but more famous was the enterpriſe of Hernandes a Soto, begun in the year 1538. and continued till 1543. who with a little Army of 350 Horſe, and 90 Foot, overran a great part of the Country, and brought many of the Petit Princes under the command of Spain. But making only a Depradatorie war of it to enrich himſelf, and waſte the Country, without ſetling any Colonie, or building any fortifications in it to make good his gettings, the Action ended with his life, which he loſt by a Feaver: the remnant of his Souldiers, whom the war had ſpared, under the conduct of Ludovico Muſcoſo di Alvarado, recovering Mexico not without great difficulties.

And ſo the Spaniards leave the Stage, and the French enter, ſent on this voyage by Gaſpar Coligni Admiral of France, An. 1562. under the conduct of Ribault; who falling on that part of the Continent which lieth on the Eaſt ſide of the Peninſula, gave the firſt Promontory which he touched at the name of Cape Francois: and after running Northward along that Coaſt, new-named the Rivers thereof by the names of the Seine, the Loire, the Somme, the Garund, and others of moſt note in his own Country. Coming as far North as the great River of Porto-Royal, he there built a little Fortreſs which he called Fort Charles, where he left 26 of his men to keep poſſeſſion, and returned for France: his ſoldiers following not long after, as well as they could, deſtitute of ſupplies from home, and not able with ſo ſmall a number to command them there. The Action reinforced about two years after under the conduct of Landonier, who had accompanied Ribault in the former voyage: by whom ſome further progreſs was made in this undertaking, and a little Town built on the banks of the River Maio, (ſo called by Ribault, becauſe in that moneth diſcovered by him) which he named Charles-Fort, Arx Carolina in the Latine. But a mutinie hapning amongſt his men, and ſome complaints made of him in the Court of France; he was called home, and Ribault ſent again to purſue the enterpriſe: Who entring on his charge in Auguſt, An. 1565. was preſently ſet on by the Spaniards both by ſea and land; his ſhips forced violently on the Rocks, the new Town ſacked, the Colonie put unto the ſword, very few eſcaping; Ribault himſelf murdered in cold blood by the Enemy, after faith given him for his life. It was thought that above 600 French were ſlain in this action. So ended the French hopes in Florida, the King being then preparing for a new Civil war, and loth to engage himſelf againſt the Spaniard, till the year 1627. when at the charge of Dominicus Gurgius a private perſon, out of an honeſt zeal to the honour of his Country, and to cry quittance with the Spaniards for their treacherous cruelty, it revived again. And though he found the Spaniards, after the defeat of Ribault, had repaired and fortified Arx Carolina, and raiſed two Caſtles more on the banks of the Maio, which they had furniſhed with ſuch Peeces as they took from the French, and garriſoned with 400 ſoldiers: Yet giving a couragious onſet, by the aid of the Salvages, (to whom the name and neighbourhood of the Spaniards was exceeding odious) he forced them all, demoliſhed the works, and hanged all ſuch of the Soldiers as the ſword had ſpared; and ſo returned into France: where in ſtead of honour and reward for ſo great a ſervice, he was in danger of loſing both his life and fortunes, compelled to lurk amongſt his friends till the times were changed. The Spaniards after this, to keep ſome kind of poſſeſſion, though not finding it in riches anſwerable to their greedy deſires, fortified S. Matthews and S. Auguſtines on the Eaſt-ſide of the Demy Iland, with the Caſtles of S. Philip and S. Jago in other parts of the Country towards the North eaſt: thinking himſelf ſo ſtrong in the Gulf of Mexico, that no forrein forces dare appear on that ſide of the Country. So that it ſeems he playes the part of Æſops Dog in the Manger, neither reſolved to plant there himſelf, nor willing that any others ſhould.

Having thus taken a ſurvey of the main Land of Florida, let us next take a view of ſuch Ilands as lie diſperſed up and down in the Seas adjoyning, called by one general name LUCAIOS or LUCALÆ INSULÆ; many in number, but reducible to theſe three heads, 1 The Tortugas, 2 The Martyres, & 3 The Lucaios ſpecially ſo called.

1 THE TORTUGAS are ſeven or eight little Ilands lying on an heap at the South weſt point of the Peninſula, called the Cape of Florida, in the height of 25 Degrees; diſtant from the Port of Havana in the Iſle of Cuba (oppoſite unto which they lie) about ſix leagues. Well known amongſt the Sailers, becauſe much avoided; or rather avoided becauſe known, the danger of their company making their further acquaintance ſhunned.

2 THE MARTYRES, called alſo the Caios, are three great Rocks rather then Ilands, covered with a white ſand, and full of buſhes; the middlemoſt of the three the greateſt: ſituate over againſt the South-eaſt Promontory of the ſaid Peninſula, called from hence Cabeca de los Martyres, or the Cape of Martyrs. Denominated thus by John Ponce the Spaniard, in his firſt diſcovery of this Country, becauſe they ſeemed afar off to have ſome reſemblance to men impaled upon Stakes, as many of the Martyrs were in the Primitive times. Infamous for the many ſhipwracks which have ſince there hapned; but of great obſervation amongſt Sea faring men, becauſe they know by leaveing theſe Rocks or Ilands on the left hand of them, that they are already entred in the Streits.

3 THE

3. THE LUCAIOS ſpecially lie diſperſed on the Eaſt of the Peninſula; many in number, and ſo called from Lucaioneque, the greateſt and moſt Northern of them, ſituate in the 27 degree of Latitude; of more length then breadth, but hitherto known by name only. Of greater note, though not ſo big, is that called 2 Bahama, in the middle way betwixt Lucaoneyn and the Peninſula; in length 13 Leagues, and eight in breadth; memorable for giving name to the violent current interpoſing betwixt it and the Demy-Iland, called the Streits of Bahama, yet not ſo ſtreit but that they are 16 miles in breadth, though of ſo forcible a Courſe, that many times neither winde nor Oars can prevail againſt it. 3 Guanahani, the moſt famous of all theſe Ilands, becauſe the firſt that was diſcovered by Columbus, being then almoſt out of hope of proceeding further; who thereupon cauſed it to be called S. Saviours; well ſhaded at that time with Trees, full of freſh Springs, and very plentifull of Cotton: now overgrown with ſhrubs, and buſhes. 4 Guanima, by Columbus when firſt diſcovered, called S. Maria de Conception; begirt about with Rocks and quick ſands, but otherwiſe of a pleaſant and fruitfull ſoyl, full of delicate Springs. Others there are to the number of 24. or thereabouts, whoſe names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we finde nothing of them but their very names, I ſhall not trouble my ſelf with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is ſaid that they obeyed their King ſo ſtrictly (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from an high Rock, they performed the ſame; though he gave no reaſon but his Will. The Women of ſo perfect beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forſook their own Countries, to enjoy their Loves: their ſhape and beauty the more diſcernable in regard not ſuffered to wear any thing till their purgations, nor after that but nets of Cotton, filled with leaves of Herbs. But now, and long ſince, there are neither men nor women to be found in any of them: the People being long ſince waſted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hiſpaniola; or conſumed by Famine and Diſeaſes, or otherwiſe made away in Priſons, and by ſeveral Torments; to the number of a Million and 200000, as ſome have told us. And ſo we paſs unto the other ſide of thoſe Northern Conntries; oppoſite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the main Land of Florida: that when we fall into the Countries now poſſeſſed by the Spaniard, we may not wander out of them till this work be finiſhed; except it be to take a progreſs into ſome of the Ilands, which cannot otherwiſe be viſited but by ſuch a ſtart.

OF CALIFORMIA.

CALIFORMIA in the large and general acception of it, containeth all thoſe Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the Weſt-ſide of that Northern Peninſula, beyond Nova Gallicia, and New Spain: though in the ſtricter, limited to that Province onely which lieth like a Demy-Iland on the other ſide of a long and ſpacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of Califormia. But taking it in the largeſt ſenſe, it hath on the Weſt, and ſo unto thoſe undiſcovered parts which lie furtheſt North, to the Streits of Anian. So witneſſeth John de Laet, l. 6. c. 11. CALIFORMIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Novæ Hiſpaniæ atque Galliciæ ad Occidentem objicitur, ad extremos Americæ Septentrionalis terminos, & Fretum quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the ſtricter ſenſe and acception of it, to an Iland (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the Weſt hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorographie and Story of it, we muſt divide it into the Continent and the Iland: the Continent ſubdivided into the two large Provinces of 1 Quivira, and 2 Cibola; the Iland into 3 Califormia ſpecially ſo called, and 4 Nova Albion.

And firſt, the Continent of this part which we call Califormia, hath on the Eaſt ſome parts of Nova Gallicia, and beſides that thoſe vaſt and undiſcovered Countries which lie on the Weſt-ſide of Canada and Virginia, on the oppoſite ſhore: bound on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-weſt, with the Streits of Anian, if ſuch Streits there be; on the Weſt, with the Sea interpoſing betwixt it and the Iland called Mer Vermiglio; and on the South and South-weſt with the reſt of Nova Gallicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Noort: A River, which riſing in the 40 degree of Northern latitude, firſt parteth Tignez a Province of Quivira, from that of New-Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Gallicia; and after a long courſe falleth into the Sea called Mer Vermiglio, above Cinoloa, another of the Provinces of that Diviſion. Divided as before was ſaid, into the two great Provinces of 1 Quivira, and 2 Cibola.

1 QUIVIRA, taking up the moſt Northern parts of this ſide of America, is ſaid to be very plain and level; of few trees, not many houſes, nor much ſtored of people; quite deſtitute of fruits and corn, and yielding nothing for mans life but the fleſh of beaſts, which they eat raw, and ſwallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Buls-skins from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Country, with no other garment then their hair, which they wear ſo long, that it ſerveth them in ſtead of a vail to hide their nakedneſs. They live in Hoords and companies, like the Hoords of the Tartars, not having any certain dwellings (except ſome chief men) but remove from one place to another, like the antient Nomades. Neer neighbours unto Tartary, from whence (not being much diſtant from it) it is ſuppoſed that the Inhabitants firſt came, and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Country being full of herbage, breeds great ſtore of Cattel; differing not much in bigneſs from thoſe of Europe, but that they have an high bunch betwixt their ſhoulders, briſtled upon the back like Bores, with ſomwhat which reſembleth the mane in Horſes, and the beard in Goats; their legs ſhort, and clad with fetlocks, their horns ſhort, but ſharp; the whole Beaſt of an aſpect ſo horrid, that an Horſe will not venture neer them, till well acquainted. Yet in theſe Beaſts lie all their Riches; theſe being to this people, as we ſay with us of our Ale to drunkards, meat, drink, and cloth, and more too: For the hides yield them houſes, or at leaſt the covering of them; their bones, bodkins; their hair, thread; their ſinews, ropes; their horns, maws, and bladders, veſſels; their dung, fire; their Calveskins, budgets to draw and keep water; their blood, drink; and their fleſh, meat. There is thought to be ſome traffick from China, or Cathay, hither: For when Vaſques di Coronado conquered it, he ſaw in the further Sea certain ſhips, not of common making, which ſeemed to be well laden, and did bear in their prows the figure of Pelicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of theſe two. I know ſome place this Country more within the Land: and others are ſo far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it cloſe unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coaſts, upon good authority; though I deny not but that ſome parts hereof may be more remote. Or elſe to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the maritime parts being known by other names, the Inlands might retain more ſpecially the name of Quivira, as we have ſeen in many other Countries before deſcribed.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, becauſe I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Seio, the other called Cicuic, and the third Tignez: which I look upon as the maritime parts of the ſame one Country; but better peopled and frequented then the Inlands are, becauſe lying in the way of trafick. The principal Towns of which Provinces, 1 Acus, or Acuco, a ſmall town, but ſituate in a ſtrong and defenſible place; about which groweth ſome ſtore of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Acuco.

2 Tignez, on the banks of a River ſo called; inhabited by a ſtout and couragious people, who being reſolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when beſieged by Vaſques de Coronado, after they had held out above ſix weeks, laid all their houſhold-ſtuffe and treaſure in an heap together, which they ſet on fire; and taking their wives and children into the midſt of their ranks, made a deſperate Sally on the Enemy. A reſolution worthy of a better fortune, moſt of them being ſlain in the fight, and the reſt trod under the horſes feet, or drowned in paſſing over the River. Yet would not thoſe few which were left give up the Town, till it was fired about their ears, and no longer tenable: the Spaniard buying this victory (notwithſtanding the great odds of their Arms) with the loſs of moſt of their horſes, the death of ſeven of their men, and the wounding of eighty. 3 Cicuic, a ſmall Burrough, but the chief of that Province, four dayes journey from Tignez: from whence the whole way unto Quivira, ſpecially ſo called, being 90 miles, hath in it neither ſtone, nor tree, nor any land-mark; inſomuch as the Spaniards were fain to make heaps of Cow-dung, to ſerve for their direction in their coming back.

The firſt diſcovery of this Country is to be attributed to the diligence of Antonio de Mendoza Viceroy of Mexico, who deſirous to get wealth and honour by ſome new Adventures, imployed in the diſcovery of theſe Northern parts Frier Marco de Niſa. By him and by a Negro which he had for his Guide, there was ſome light gotten of Cibola, the next Province to this; but ſo diſguiſed in lyes, and wrapt up in fictions, that that light was little more then darkneſs. Yet by that glimmering, Franciſco Vaſques di Coronado, in the year 1540. undertook the buſineſs; and ſped ſo well, that having made his way through Cibola, he took the Town of Tignez, as we heard before, and laid his way open to Quivira. Moved to a further journey by the report of the Salvages, (who deſired to haſten him out of their Country) telling him of the wealth of a Tatarax, who reigned in the inland parts of Quivira, a Bearded man (thoſe of this Country wearing none) of a white complexion, and one who in his Chappel worſhipped a Croſſe and the Queen of Heaven. On went the Spaniards towards Quivira, and found out the Tatarax, a poor naked Prince, maſter of no more treaſure then a brazen plate hanging on his breſt, and without any ſuch ſign of Chriſtianity as they did expect. So fruſtrated of all their hopes, and having got nothing but their labour for their pains, and the honour of a new diſcovery, with the loſs of many of their men they returned to Mexico, An. 1542. Some Friers made bold to ſtay behind, but were all ſlain by the people of Quivira, except onely one, who like Jobs meſſenger was left to carry news of the murder: The Spaniards never after looking into theſe cold Countries, where nothing elſe was to be gotten but blows and hunger.

2. CIBOLA hath on the North Quivira, on the South and South-eaſt parts of New Gallicia, from which divided by the River called Rio del Nort, as before was ſaid; the Weſt-ſide of it waſhed with the Mer Vermiglio, interpoſed betwixt it and the Iland, or California ſpecially ſo called. By the Natives it is called Zuni.

The Air hereof indifferently temperate, if not too much ſubject in the winter to froſts and ſnows. The Country for the moſt part level, rarely ſwelled with hils, but thoſe very rockie. No Trees that bear them any fruit; few Trees at all, except it be a Wood of Cedars, from which abundantly ſupplied both with fewel and timber, plenty of Maize, and ſmall white Peaſe, which they make their bread of; great ſtore of Veniſon, but they kill it only for the skin; ſome quantities of Sheep, known for ſuch by their Fleeces only, but otherwiſe as big each of them as an Horſe or Oxe, ſome of their horns weighing fifty pounds. Of Lyons, Beares, and Tygers ſo great a number, that they have more then enough for themſelves, and could well ſpare them to their neighbours.

The People generally well limbed, and tall of ſtature, ingenious in reſpect of ſome other Salvages; and though naked except their Privities only, or covered only with a Mantle, yet thoſe Mantles wrought in divers colours, which with ſome quantity of Cotton which they have amongſt them (none of it growing in their Country) ſhew them to be an induſtrious Nation, and to maintain a courſe of trade with ſome of their neighbours. A further Argument of which is thoſe painted skins, which they have from Cicuique, or ſome other Country which lies towards the Ocean; my Author telling that they travel for them eight dayes journey towards the North; and probably enough may be ſome of thoſe Commodities which the Inhabitants of the maritime Provinces of Quivira do receive from Cathay or China, with which they are ſuppoſed to traffick, as before was ſaid. Like induſtry is noted in the Women alſo, one of which will grind and knead more Maize in a day, then the women of Mexico do in four. In other things not differing from the reſt of the Salvages.

This Country was firſt made known to the Spaniards by the Travels of Frier Marco de Niſa, employed on new Diſcoveries by Antonio de Mendoza, as before was ſaid. Leaving Conliacan, the moſt Northern Province of Nova Gallicia, he overcame a tedious Deſart four dayes journey long, at the end of which he met ſome people who told him of a pleaſant Country four dayes journey further, unto which he went: And ſtaying at a place called Vacapa, he diſpatched the Negro, whom he took with him for his Guide, to ſearch towards the North; by whom he was advertiſed after four dayes abſence, that he had been informed of a large and wealthy Province called Cibola, a moneths journey thence, wherein were ſeven great Cities under the Government of one Princeſs, the houſes of which were built of ſtone, many ſtories high, the Lintrels of their Doors adorned with Turquoiſes; with many other ſtrange reports of their markets, multitudes, and riches. But neither the Frier nor the Negro had the hap to ſee it: the Negro being killed on the very borders, and the Frier ſo terrified with the news, that he thought it better to return, and ſatisfie the Vice Roy with ſome handſome

Fiction,

Fiction, then put himself upon the danger of a further journey. To that end he enlarged and amplified the Reports which the Negro sent him; gave to the Desarts in his way the name of the Kingdoms of Tonteac and Marata; ascribed unto this last a great City called Abaco, once well inhabited, but at that time destroyed by wars; to the other a more civil and well-clothed People, then in other places. Inflamed with which reports Vasques de Coronado undertook the action, but found the Frier to be a Frier; nothing of moment true in all his Relations: the Kingdom of Marata to be found only in the Friers brains; Tonteac to be nothing but a great Lake, on whose Banks had once been many Cottages, now consumed by Wars. And as for the seven Cities of such wealth and bigness, he found them to be seven poor Burroughs; all situate within the compass of four Leagues, which made up that so famous Kingdom which the Frier dreamt of. The biggest of them held about 500 Cottages; the rest of them not above half that number. One of them, lest he might be said to return without doing something, he besieged, and took: but found it such an hot piece of service, that he was twice beaten down with stones, as he scaled the Rampiers: but having taken it at the last, he found in it great plenty of Maize to refresh his Army, and caused the Town (consisting of 200 houses or thereabouts) to be called Granada, for some resemblance which it had to that City in Spain. Such as have since endeavoured the Discovery of these North-west parts, and sailed along the shores hereof on Mer Vermiglio, have added hereunto the names of some points or Promontories: known in the Maps by the names of Po de S. Clara, not far from the mouth or influx of Rio del Nort, 2 Las Plaias, 3 S. Michael, 4 Rio de Toron, 5 Laques del Oro bordering on Quivira; and 6 Rey Coronado, on the East of that.

Betwixt this Region and Quivira specially so called, lieth a Country, which the said Vasques names Tucayan, memorable for the famous River of Huex, on the Banks whereof for the space of 20 Leagues stand 15 Burroughs well-built, and furnished with Stoves, (if he hath not in this part of the Story out-lied the Frier) as in other cold, but more civil Countries, against the extremities of Winter. This Region stretching seven days journey to the River of Cicuique, I reckon to belong to the North-east parts of Cibola. As I do also the fruitfull Valley of Aroia de Corazones which they passed in their way hither from Conliacan; with the Town and Territory of Chichilticala, and the Valley of Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Dale, in the South parts of it: not knowing otherwise what Province to refer them to.

Proceed we now unto the Iland, the other general part of this Division, parted from Cibola and New Gallicia by a narrow Sea called Mer Vermiglio; and by some, the Golf of Californica; environed on all other parts by the main Ocean. Extended in a great length from the 22d. degree of Northern Latitude to the 42d. but the breadth not answerable. The most Northern point hereof, called Cabo Blance, of which little memorable. The most Southern, called the Cape of S. Lucas, remarkable for the great prize there taken from the Spaniards by Captain Cavendish in his Circumnavigation of the World, An. 1587. Supposed in former times to have been joyned, in the North parts of it, above the Latitude of 27. to the rest of the Continent, and so described in most of our later Maps, till the year 1626 and after that in the Chart or Map of John de Laet, An. 1633. which I wonder at: himself affirming, that in many of the old Maps it was made an Iland; l. 6 cap. 11. and that he had seen a fair Map in parchment, a very fair and ancient draught, Qua Californiam in ingentis Insulæ modum, a Continente divideret, in which it was expressed for a spacious Iland, lib. 6. cap. 17. The reason of the Errour was, that those who first endeavoured the Discovery of it, sayling up the Sea of Mer Vermiglio, found it to grow narrower and narrower towards the North; till it seemed to be no bigger then some mighty River; but that of such a violent current that no Boat was able to pass upwards with wind or Oar, unless haled up with Cords by the strength of men. And taking it to be a River, they gave it the name of Rio de Bona Guia; known by that name, and continued in the opinion of being a River till the year 1620 or thereabouts. At what time some Adventurers beating on these Coasts fell accidentally upon a strait but violent passage, on the North hereof, which brought them with a strong current into Mer Vermiglio: discovering by that Accident, that the waters falling into that Sea, was not a River, as formerly had been supposed, but a violent breaking in of the Northern Ocean; by consequence that this part of Californica was not a Demi-Iland or Peninsula but a perfect Iland. And looking on it as an Iland, we have divided it into Nova Albion, and Californica specially so called.

1. And first Californica specially so called, containeth the Southern parts hereof, as far as to the Latitude of 38. where it bordereth on Nova Albion, of which Country though so neer to New Spain, and New Gallicia, and though discovered so long since, we yet know but little: the Spaniards either wanting men for new Plantations, or finding small incouragements here to invite them to it. Furnished on the Sea-coasts with great plenty both of Fish and Fowl, which they finde in great Ilands of Weeds floating on the Seas: and more within the Land, with a kinde of Beast haired like a Goat, and with teats like a Cow, but otherwise resembling Deer, which they kill with their Dogs. Some Mountains in it said to cast Fire Ashes, which the Spaniards for that reason call Cacofogo. The People numerous, and thicke set; insomuch that on the Banks of the supposed River of Bona Guia were numbred three and twenty Nations, all of severall Languages. In their persons like the rest of the Salvages; but of different dresses. Some of them painting their Faces all over, some half way only; others with painted Vizards resembling faces: holes in their nostrils for their Pendants; the tips of their Ears loaded, if not over-loaded, with the bones of Fishes hanging at them. A girdle about their waste, to which they fasten a bunch of feathers that hang down behinde them like a Tail: the Women uſing the like Bunches before them alſo. Their chief God the Sun, (as that of Cibola is the Water) which they moſt affectionately worſhip, as the cauſe of the increaſe of their fruits and plants. Joyned in commiſſion with which God, they were taught by Alarcon a Spaniard to worſhip a woodden Croſſe (the more irrational Idolatry of the two) which he cauſed to be erected at his coming away, with inſtructions to kneel before it every morning, at the firſt riſing of the Sun: ſo teaching them to worſhip their two Idols at once, or to tranſlate their devotions from the Sun a Creature of God's, to a plain wooden Croſs (of which they knew nothing but the form) the work of a Carpenter. It is alſo told us of this people, that each family is ordered by the Father of it, without other government: yet ſo well managed, that they allowed but one wife to a man, and puniſhed Adultery with death; the Maids not ſufferd to converſe or talk with men before their marriage, but to abide at home and work; the Widows not to marry again, till they had mourned at leaſt half a year for the death of their Husbands. Matters more favouring an Utopian Commonwealth, then a Californian.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 The Capes of S.Clara, and S.Lucas; the firſt on the South eaſt point of the Peninſula towards New Gallicia; the other on the South-weſt towards Aſia. 2 S. Croſſes, (Sinus S.Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven neer the Cape of S.Clara, ſo called becauſe diſcovered upon Holy Rood day. 3 Cabo di las Plaias, more within the Bay; ſo named, becauſe the ſhore ſhewed in little hillocks, without graſs or ſhrubs; the Spaniſh word ſignifying as much. 4 Cabo Boxo, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the land on the other ſide may be eaſily ſeen) in the Latitude of 29. 5 S.Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Iland of the ſame name, with ſome Cottages in it. 6 S.Thome, an Iland of 25 Leagues in compaſs, at the mouth of the Gulf; riſing towards the the South in an high Mountain, under which a convenient Road for ſhipping, the Sea being thereabouts 25 fathoms. Then on the other ſide towards the Sea, we have 7 S.Abad, a convenient Haven, ſurrounded with a Country which ſeemed rich and pleaſant. 8 Cape Trinidado, a Promontory well known to Sea men. 9 Cape de Cedros ſo called from the Cedars growing neer it, in the Latitude of 28, & 15 minutes; with an Iland not far off of the ſame name alſo. 10 Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11 Puebla de las Canoas, ſo named from the multitude of Boats (by themſelves called Canoes) which the people uſed: four degrees more Northward then that Cape. And 12 Cabo de Galera, ſo named from the reſemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 36. But theſe two laſt I take to be within the Country of Seyo, one of the Provinces of Quivira. Underſtand here, that theſe are onely the names of places, not of Towns or Villages, (for whether there be any ſuch, I am yet unſatisfied:) and that there are many other Promontories, Bayes, Rivers and Ilands on both ſides of this Region, which I find no names for.

The firſt diſcovery of this Country we owe to Ferdinando Cortez (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534. furniſhed out two ſhips from the Haven of S.Jago in the Weſtern ſhores of Hiſpania Nova, to ſearch theſe Seas: who making ſome ſmall progreſs in it, encouraged him the next year to purſue it in perſon; and paſſing up the Gulf as high as to the River of S.Peter and Paul, (ſo called, becauſe diſcovered on the 29 of June, the Annual feaſt of thoſe Apoſtles) for want of victuals and other neceſſary proviſions, returned back again. The buſineſs having ſlept a while, was in the year 1539. awakened by Franciſco de Ulloa, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before: who did not only ſearch to the bottom of the Gulf, but having thorowly canvaſſed all the Eaſtern ſhores, he turned his courſe, and made as fortunate a Diſcovery alſo of the VVeſtern coaſts. Landing, he took poſſeſſion of the Country with the wonted ceremonies for the King of Spain, and in the place ſet up a Croſs to ſerve as a Remembrance of his being there. After him followed Fernando the Alarcon, who diſcovered many Leagues up the courſe of the ſuppoſed River of Buena Guia, where Naguacatus one of the Chiefs of their Clans or Tribes did ſubmit unto him: advancing ſo far towards the North, that at the laſt he heard news of Cibala; but unprovided at that time for a journey thither. And on the other ſide, Rodorico Cabrillo, in the year 1642. coaſting along the VVeſtern ſhores of this Country, diſcovered two ſmall Ilands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called S. Lukes, and the other the Iland of Poſſeſſion: and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinas, more properly belonging to the Province of Seyo. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver; and hungry Honour yielding but a poor ſubſiſtence: the further ſearch of theſe Countries was quite laid aſide; almoſt as little known now, as before Columbus firſt ſet ſail upon New Diſcoveries.

4. NOVA ALBION formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but ſome part of this Iland; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and ſo Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Diſcovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the World, An. 1577. and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England, his own Country, which was once called Albion.

The Country abundantly repleniſhed with Herds of Deer, graſing upon the hills by thouſands: as alſo with a kinde of Conies, in their feet ſomewhat like a Want, and on each ſide a Sack where they keep ſuch victuals as they cannot eat. The fleſh of theſe Conies ſerves the People for food; and of their skins, the kings or Chiefs of their ſeveral Tribes, make their Royal robes. The men quite naked; the Women with a piece of Mat inſtead of an Apron, chaſte, and obedient to their Husbands. Their houſes made of Turf and Oſier, ſo wrought together, as ſerves to keep them from the Cold:

in

in the midſt whereof they have an Hearth where they make fire, about which they lye along upon Beds of Bulruſhes. VVhat Towns they have, and whether they have any or nor, and by what names called if they have any, muſt be referred to a further Diſcovery: there being nothing to that purpoſe delivered hitherto. And yet not ſeated ſo far North, but that it may be capable of a further light, if any noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The Engliſh were no ſooner landed, but the Inhabitants preſented themſelves before the Generall, with preſents of Feathers, and Kalls of Net-work made of Bull-ruſhes; which he received and requited with great humanity. The news of their Arrivall being carried further, one of their Kings thought fit to beſtow a viſit on them. A perſon of a goodly ſtature, attired in Cony-skins, with many tall men attending on him; one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns; with as many Chains; the Chains of bone, but the Crowns of Knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniouſly compoſed. After him followed many of the common ſort, every one having his face painted with white, black, and ſome other colours; and every one with ſome preſent or other in their hands, even the very Boys. Being brought into the Generals preſence, the Mace-bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not underſtood: and that being ended, the King cauſed the Crown to be put upon the Generals head, and the three Chains about his neck: the Common People offering Sacrifices about the Fields in great Solemnity. Not to be interdicted thoſe Superſtitions, though the Engliſh (whom they took for Gods) ſeemed offended at them. Finally, after much kindneſs expreſſed on both ſides, the General promiſing in the name of the Queen of England, to take them into his protection; he cauſed a Piliar to be erected in the place; on which he faſtned the Arms of England, the Queens name, and his own, and ſo returned unto his Ships. But the Country lying ſo far off that no benefit could redound by it to the Engliſh Nation, but the honour of the firſt Diſcovery: the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at laſt quite left out of the Maps or Charts; only a Point or Promontory, by the name of Po de Franciſco Draco, being left unto us to preſerve his memory. And though we have cauſed the name of Nova Albion to be reſtored unto the Maps, as it was before: yet we muſt let the Reader know, that the name of New Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage, to that part of Virginia which lieth betwixt Mary-Land and New-England, as before was noted.

Oppoſite to Cape Blance, in the extreme North parts of America, the ſuppoſed Kingdome of ANIAN, from whence the Streits of Anian which are thought by ſome to part America from Aſia, do derive their name; is conceived to lie. Suppoſed, and ſuppoſed only; for not certainly known: the very being of ſuch a Kingdom, and ſuch Streits, being much ſuſpected.

NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hiſpania, or New Spain; on the West with the River Buena Guia, and the Gulf of Californ̄ia; the Countries beyond it on the North not diſcovered hitherto. So called becauſe of ſome reſemblance which it was thought to have to Gallicia a Province of Spain in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for diſtinctions ſake.

It is ſituate between the 18. and 28. degree of Northern Latitude, which meaſured from the Port of the Nativity (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Navidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the moſt Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 Leagues: the breadth hereof, for ſo much as is poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, but an hundred only. But taking in New Biſcay, and Nova Mexicana into the Accompt, the breadth will be greater then the length.

The Aire hereof generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat then cold, many times ſubject unto Thunders and great ſtorms of rain; but for the moſt part of ſo ſound a conſtitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old Age; contagious diſeaſes ſeldom known amongſt them. The ground by conſequence ſomewhat of the drieſt; if not moyſtned with the morning dewes, which fall very frequently: and whether by the temperature of the Aire or Soil, apt to produce a kinde of Gnat (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a bean, which by their ſtings do very often plague the People, and raiſe bliſters on their bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Country more Mountainous then plain, and in moſt parts ſandy; Quarries of ſtone in many places, but little Marble, or any other ſtone of value. Good ſtore of Mines of Braſs and Silver, few of Gold or Iron; and amongſt all their Mettals a great Mixture of Lead. The ſoil ſo rich that it yields 60 meaſures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: the Rivers plentifull of Fiſh, and the Woods of Beaſts; great ſtore of Bees without ſtings, which make their Honey in the Forreſts without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malcotons, and other Europæan Fruits, they thrive better here then they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive: of which the laſt is moſt an end undermined by Emmets, and the firſt thruſts out ſuch an harveſt of Leaves (occaſioned by the natural rankneſs of the ground) that they ſeldom come to their perfection.

The people wavering and inconſtant, apt upon any diſcontent to forſake their houſes, betake themſelves unto the woods, and many times to return to their antient Barbariſm. Crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religion: but ſlothful and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages. Much given to ſinging, dancing, and ſometimes to drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquour, few of them would betake themſelves to the cares of Husbandry. Of ſtature reaſonably tall; their garments for the moſt part a ſhirt of Cotton, with a Mantle over it, faſtned with two Buckles about their ſhoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatneſs of their ſeveral Tribes: thoſe Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who ſucceed hereditarily; but ſubject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themſelves generally to merchandiſe, and the ſearch of metals, ſome few to husbandry and graſing; but make not the beſt uſe which they might of the Country: For though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes and of Caccineel, yet they neglect to refine the one, and attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an eaſier or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

Mountains of moſt note in all this Country, is that betwixt Guadalaiara and Zacatecas, a League in height, but of ſuch a precipice withal, that no horſe nor cattel can aſcend it: their other hils rocky, but clothed with woods, full of vaſt Pines, large Okes, and great ſtore of Wolves. The River of moſt name is that called Bazania, which riſing out of the Lake of Mechuacan in Nova Hiſpania, fals down a Cataract about four Leagues from Guadalaiara, of ten fathoms deep, and ſo tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any paſſage over it but on Reeds and Rafts, on which the paſſenger ſitteth with his commodities, his horſe ſwimming by; not ſafe at any time, and at moſt times dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20, ſome of 12 Leagues compaſs; environed with rich Paſtures on every ſide. Thoſe of leſs note ſhall be remembred in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of ~~1 Cinaloa, 2 Conliacan, 3 Xalisco, and 4~~ Guadalaiara; on the Weſtern Shores, 5 Zacatecas, 6 New Biſcay, 7 Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all theſe ſomewhat ſhall be ſaid, though of each but little.

1. CINALOA, is the moſt northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the Weſt with the River of Buena Guia, and ſome part of the Bay of Californ̄ia; on the Eaſt with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepecſuan; on the North with the South parts of Cibola, on the South with Conliacan.

The Aire for the moſt part clear and healthy; the Soil fat and fruitful productive of Maize, Pulſe, a ſort ſort of long Peaſe which the Latines call Phaſeoli, but we have no proper Engliſh name for; of which abundantly plentifull. Great ſtore of Cotton-wooll, wherewith both Sexes are apparrelled. Well watered with the Rivers, 1 Petatlan, 2 Tamochala, 3 Paſcua, 4 Taquimi; of no long courſe, all of them riſing from the hills of Teperſuam, and thoſe but 36 Leagues diſtant from the Sea-ſhores. By reaſon of theſe Rivers here are very rich paſtures, which breed great ſtore of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattell.

The People are generally tall, higher then the Spaniards by a hand breadth, warlike and ſtrong, not conquered by the Spaniard without great difficulty; their Armes a Bow and poiſoned Arrows, with great maſſie Clubs. Their Garments for the moſt part of Cotton-wooll; their hair nouriſhed to a great length, which the men tye up in a knot, but the Women ſuffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes at the firſt coming of the Spaniards thither, without Clothes at all, but to hide their ſhame; moſt miſerably poor, worſhippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongſt them.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 S. Philip and Jacob, ſituate on the bank of a River about 42 Leagues from the Town of Couliacan, but of no great note; 2 S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards planted here long ſince; and re-inforced by a ſupply brought thither in the year 1554 by Franciſco de Tharra; ſcarce able to defend themſelves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon diſturb them with a freſh Alarme. Beſides theſe here are only ſome ſcattered Villages, and thoſe not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Country, when they firſt made themſelves Maſters of it under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People every where ſubmitting without any reſiſtance; or if they gathered to an head, ſoon diſperſed again. For what could naked men do againſt an Army?

2. COULIACAN, or CULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coaſting along the Bay of Californía, which it hath on the Weſt; and part of New Biſcay on the Eaſt. The Country well provided of fruits, inferiour unto none for all ſorts of Proviſions; and not without ſome Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1 Rio de Muchéras or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; ſo called becauſe the Spaniards found there more women then men; occaſioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons. 2 Rio de Sal, a goodly River; both ſides whereof are very well Peopled. 3 Piaſtla, more towards Xaliſco.

The People not much different from the reſt of Gallicia, ſave that their Women were more handſom both for dreſs and perſonage: all clothed in Garments of Cotton-wool, when firſt known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the Sin of Sodom. Their houſes neatly thatched with ſtraw; and over the Lintrels of the Doors ſome Paintings as ſhameleſs as the very fowleſt of Aretines Poſtures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted, to their coſt, with Silver; which they are compelled to dig, and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof 1 Hiuſtla, on the River ſo called, about a dayes journey from the Sea; well built and artificially contrived in reſpect of others; never recovered of that blow which it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conqueſt of this Country waſted all before them. 2 Quinola, neer Rio des Mugeres. 3 Quatrabarrios, an old Town but new named by the Spaniards, becauſe it conſiſted of four parts. 4 El Leon, an old Burrough which from a Lyon there found, had this new name alſo. 5 Couliacan on a River ſo named, once the chief of this Province. 4 S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the Latitude of 25. but afterwards deſerted or removed rather to a fitter place: and now fixed in the Valley of Harroba, two Leagues from the Sea, in a flouriſhing and wealthy Soil both for Corn and Paſturage. The whole Country conquered by the Spaniards, Anno 1531. under Nonnez de Guzman; moſt barbarouſly burning down the Towns, and deſtroying the People; as if they came not to ſubdue but root out the Nation.

3. XALISCO, or GALESCO, as ſome Writers call it, hath on the North Couliacan, on the South New Spain, on the Eaſt the Province of Guadalaiara; on the Weſt the large Bay of Californía. So called from Xaliſco the chief Town of it, when ſubdued by the Spaniards.

The Soil hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good ſtore of, but not often herbage good for Cattel, which is reckoned for their greateſt want. The North parts called Chiametla, of the two moſt fruitfull, and better peopled; having in it ſtore of VVax and Honey, with ſome Mines of Silver. The People formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrell; from which Reformed ſince their Converſion to the Goſpel: Tenacious ſtill of one of their ancient Cuſtoms, which is to carry the ſmalleſt burden upon their ſhoulders, and not under their armes; which to do they think very much mis-becoming.

Chief Rivers hereof 1 S. Sebaſtians, 2 Rio de Spiritu Sancto, and 3 the great and famous River of Baranna ſpoken of before. Upon the banks of which are ſituate their moſt principal Towns, viz. 1 Xaliſco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierra de Xaliſco, thruſting it ſelf into the Bay of Californía, over againſt the Iſlands called the Three Maries; the City taken and deſtroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1530. 2 Compoſtella, now now the chief City of the Country, and a Bishops See; founded by the said Nonnez de Guzman, *An.*1531. when he had fully conquered the Country: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Santo. But founded in so ill a place, and so bad an air, destitute both of food for men and grass for horses, as plainly shewed him to have better judgment in Souldiery then in Architecture. 3 Purification, a small Burrough on the Sea-side, and in the extremity of this Country towards Nova Hispania, neer the Port of Natividad. 4 S. Sebastian in Chiametla, on the River so called, first built by Francisco de Tharra above mentioned; who having found hereabouts some rich Mines of Silver, brought hither in the year 1554. a new Spanish Colonie; and building houses for his Miners in convenient places, occasioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharra.

4 GUADALAIARA hath on the West Xalisco, on the East and South some parts of Nova Hispania, on the North the Province of Zacatecas; well watered with the River Barania which runneth thorow the midst thereof, some of his by-streams moystening the other parts. The Country very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat and such other fruits, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the People we have before applied in generall to all the Natives of New Gallicia, but most peculiar unto these.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Guadalaiara, so called by the name of the Province, situate on the banks of the River Barania, or some branch thereof, in a sweet aire and a most rich and pleasing soile; where founded by Nonnez de Guzman, An.1531. when he had perfected his Conquest: better advised in the choise of the place, then in that of Compostella before mentioned. A City of so good esteem, that it passeth for the Metropolis of all New-Gallicia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the residence of the Kings Treasurers, & a Bishops See, removed hither from Compostella, A.1570. Beautified on this last occasion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciscans, and another of Augustine Friers. 2 Del Spiritu Santo, built by the said Nonnez in that part of this Country which is called Tepique: but not else observable. 3 Sancta Maria de los Lagos, built by the same founder, 30 leagues on the East of Guadalaiara, and the best defence of all this Province against the Chichimecas, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and East parts of this Country: who harbouring themselves in the thickest of the woods, and some unknown Caves, do many times prey upon the Country, which they would utterly destroy, if not thus repressed.

5 ZACATECAS is bounded on the South with Guadalaiara, on the North with New Biscay, on the West with Culnacan and some part of Xalisco, on the East with Panuco one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Country of a different nature. In the west parts, called properly Los Zacatecas, rich in Mines of Silver, (no one Province more) but destitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other provisions; as if it were designed for some wealthy Miser, who could live upon the sight of treasure. The Eastern parts properly called Uxitipa, not so well furnished with Silver, but most abundantly provided with all sorts of fruits; their woods replenished with Deer, their fields with Corn, and every tree giving entertainment to some Bird or other; in a word, nothing wanting in it either for necessity or pleasure. Of the People I find nothing singular, but that they are affirmed to be more industrious then the most of their neighbours; whether by force or nature (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Los Zacatecas, neighboured by most wealthy Mines, 40 Leagues on the North of Guadalaiara; inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciscans. 2 S. Martins, 27 Leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were first opened by Francisco de Tharra before mentioned; who with many slaves, and all things necessary for a war, was sent upon that errand by Lewis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, An. 1554. The town inhabited by a Colonie of 400 Spaniards, besides women and children. 3 S. Lukes, & 4 De Avinno, built amongst Mines as wealthy as those before, by the same De Tharra: as also was 5 Erena, a small Town, but of the same estate for Silver; distant from Zacatecas 25 leagues towards the Northwest. 6 Nombre di Dios, in the most Northern parts of this Country, 68 leagues from Guadalaiara; the foundation of the same De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after some Rebellions by gentle usage, built this Town in a pleasant and fruitful soil: and having got the Government of the Countries which he had discovered, drew hither so many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of some Silver Mines, that it became the chief and best peopled Town of all this Province. 7 Durango, in the valley of Guadiana, about eight Leagues distant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colonie of Spaniards conducted thither by Alfonso Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this treasure. 8 Xeres de Frontera, first built for the repressing of some of the Salvages, who used to infest the borders towards Guadalaiara, during the Regencie of the Marquess of Villa Maurique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for UXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco. subdued by Lopez de Mendoza, imployed therein by Nonnez de Guzman, An.1529. at that time Governour of that Province. Dismembred from it since the Conquest of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Prefecture of New Gallicia. The chief Town of it called S. Lewis, built in a pleasant Valley by the said Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colonie of Spaniards: the town not distant from Panuco above twenty Leagues.

6. NOVA BISCAIA, or New Biſcay, hath on the South Los Zacatecas; on the VVeſt Cinalca; on the North Nova Mexicana; the Countries towards the Eaſt not diſcovered hitherto. So called by Franciſco de Tharra, by whom firſt ſubdued; from the neer neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Gallicia, of which ſince reckoned for a part.

The Country ſubject in the VVinter to great Froſts and Snows; but notwithſtanding well provided for of all things neceſſary; and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have alſo ſome of Lead, which ſerve very fitly for the Melting and Purifying of the other; uſed to this purpoſe not alone in theſe Mines of New Biſcay, but in thoſe alſo of New Spain. The People reſolute and ſtout, not Conquered at the firſt Attempt, nor won ſo much by force, as by fair perſwaſions.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 S. Barbara, and 2 S. Johns, about three Leagues diſtant; built only for the benefit of the Mines adjoyning. 3 Ende, the furtheſt Town which the Spaniards have towards the North, of whom a Colonie was there planted (by reaſon of the adjoyning Mines) by Roderico del Rio, who did alſo Fortifie it, by the direction of de Tharra, under whom a Colonell. Diſtant from S. Barbara, and S. John about twenty Leagues, and an hundred and twenty Leagues from Los Zacatecas. More North by ſeventy Leagues at leaſt, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniard, are ſaid to be thoſe four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Cienagas; but I have nothing of them certain.

This Country firſt ſubdued by Franciſco de Tharra; who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Las Zacatecas, and aſſured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 130 horſe, for the Diſcovery and Conqueſt of his Northern Neighbours. Encountred at the firſt more with hunger and thirſt then with any oppoſition of the Inhabitants; inſomuch that they were fain to eat their Horſes: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greateſt part of ſuch Horſes as were left uneaten. But not diſcouraged herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his paſſage thorow the VVoods by the ſwords of his Souldiers, he prevailed at laſt; and having ſetled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinoloa, which he alſo Conquered; and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. Johns, as was ſaid before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA, is bounded on the South with New Biſcay, on the Weſt with Quivira; the Countries on the North and Eaſt not diſcovered hitherto, though ſome extend it Eaſtwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that none can tell; the Relations of this Country being ſo uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare ſay nothing poſitively of the ſoil or People, but much leſs of the Towns and Cities which are ſaid to be in it ſo named by Antonio de Eſpeio, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom diſcovered and ſubdued.

For firſt, they tell us of the People, that they are of great ſtature (and that like enough, but not ſo probable) that they have the Art of dreſſing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the beſt Leather-Dreſſer in all Flanders: or that they have Shoes and Boots ſo well ſewed and ſoaled, that no Shoo Maker in all S. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the houſes well built of Lime and Stone, ſome of them four Stories, and in moſt of them Stoves for the Winter Seaſon. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent Manner. Particularly they tell us of a Town called, 1 Chia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuames, which is ſaid to contain eight Market-Places, and all the houſes to be plaiſtered and painted in moſt curious Manner. 2. Of Acoma, that it is ſituate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a paire of ſtairs but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well fortified by Nature (they ſay true in that, if any thing were true which they tell us of it) and all their water kept in Ciſterns (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3. Of Conibas, on a Lake ſo called, the City ſeven Leagues long, two broad; (a ſecond Ninive) but the Houſes ſcatteringly built amongſt Hills and Gardens, which takes up a great deal of the room: Inhabited by a People of ſuch ſtrength and courage, that the Spaniards only faced it, and ſo went away. Much of this ſtuff I could afford you, but by this taſt we may conjecture of the reſt of the Feaſt.

The Country firſt diſcovered by Auguſtino Royaz, a Franciſcan Frier, Anno 1580, who out of Zeal to plant the Goſpel in the North, accompanied with two other Friers of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Salvages, the Souldiers plaid the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram a Frier of the ſame Order (from whoſe mouth we muſt have the former Fictions) deſirous to preſerve the lives of his Fellows which ſtaid behinde, encouraged one Antonio de Eſpeio, a Native of Cordula, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in ſuch an holy Cauſe: who raiſing a Band of 150 horſe, accompanied with many Slaves, and Beaſts of Carriage, undertook the buſineſs. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Paſnugates, Toboſi, Patarabyes, Tarrahumares, Tepoanes, and many other as hard names, which he paſſed thorow in his way. But coming at the laſt to a great River which he called Del Nort there he made a ſtand; cauſed the Country on both ſides of it to be called Nova Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, ſituate in the 37th degree of Northern Latitude, and diſtant from old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name ſince changed to that of S. Fogi, but ſtill the Metrrpolis of that Province, the Reſidence of the Governour, and a pretty Garriſon conſiſting of two hundred and fifty Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming hither, viz. 2 Socorro, ſo called by the Spaniards becauſe of that ſuccour and relief they found there for their half ſtarved Bodies. 3 Senecu, 4 Pilabo, and 5 Seviletta, old Towns, but now Chriſtened by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Goſpel; each of them beautified with a Church. 6 S. Johns, built afterwards in the year 1599 by John de Onnate, who with an Army of five thouſand followed the ſame way which Eſpeio went; and having got a great deal of Treaſure laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the moſt I dare relie on for this Country: And this hath no ſuch VVonders in it, but what an eaſie Faith may give credit to: though I had rather believe the Friers whole Relations, then go thither to diſprove any part thereof.

NOVA HISPANIA.

NOVA HISPANIA is bounded on the East with a fair and large Arm of the Sea, called the Bay of New Spain, and the Golf of Mexico; on the West with parts of Nova Gallicia, and Mare del Zur; on the North with the reſt of New Gallicia, ſome part of Florida, and the Golf; on the South with Mare del Zur, or the South-ſea onely. So called with relation to Spain in Europe, as the chief Province of that Empire in this New World; with reference to which the Kings of Spain call themſelves Reges Hiſpaniarum in the Plural number.

It extendeth from the 15. Degree of Latitude to the 26. excluſively, i. meaſuring it on the East-ſide by the Bay of Mexico to the North of Panuco; but ſix degrees leſs, meaſuring it on the Weſt-ſide to the Port of Natividad, where it joyneth with Gallicia Nova. Or making our accompt by miles, it is in breadth from Panuco unto Mare del Zur, 200 Spaniſh leagues, or 600 Italian miles; but hardly half as much on the other ſide. The length hereof from the East point of Jucutan to the borders of Gallicia Nova, 1200 Italian miles, or 400 Leagues, which is juſt double to the breadth.

The air exceeding temperate, though ſituate wholly under the Torrid Zone: the heats thereof much qualified by thoſe cooling blaſts, which fan it from the Sea on three ſides of it; and by thoſe frequent ſhowres which fall continually in June, July, and Auguſt, the hotteſt ſeaſons of the year. Abundantly enriched with inexhauſtible Mines of Gold and Silver, ſome of Braſs and Iron; plenty of Coco-nuts, of which we have ſpoke before; great ſtore of Caſſia; ſuch a wonderfull increaſe of Coccineel, that 5670 Arrobas of it (each Arroba containing 25 Buſhels of our Engliſh meaſure) have been ſhipped for Europe in one year. Where by the way, this Coccineel groweth on a ſmall tree or ſhrub having very thick leaves, which they call a Tuna, planted and ordered by them as the French do their Vines: out of the ſeed whereof ariſeth a ſmall worm at firſt no bigger then a Flea, and the greateſt not much bigger then our common Lady-cows, which they much reſemble; which feeding on the leaves, and overſpreading all the ground in which they are, are gathered by the Natives twice a year, ſtifled with aſhes or with water (but this laſt the beſt) dried to a powder in the ſhade, and ſo tranſported into Europe. Here is alſo great plenty of Wheat, Barley, Pulſe of all ſorts, and of all ſuch Plants and Roots as we ſet in Gardens for the kitchin; Pomgranats, Orenges, Limons, Cittons, Malcotoons, Figs and Cherries, even to ſuperfluitie; Apples and Pears in leſs abundance, few Grapes, and thoſe few they have not fit for wine; Plenty of Maize, and other Plants unknown in Europe; Birds and Beaſts, wild and tame of all ſorts, and of each no ſcarcity. Not thus in all places of it, nor in all alike; but ſome in one, ſome in another, according to the conſtitution of the ſoil and air: which is ſo different in this Country, that in ſuch parts hereof as are hot and dry, their Seed-time is in April or May, their Harveſt in October; but in ſuch places of it as are low and moyſt, they ſow their Corn in October, and reap in May: thus having two Harveſts in a year, and yet but one.

The People more ingenious then the reſt of the Salvages, exquiſite at ſome Mechanick Arts, eſpecially in the making of their Feather pictures; and ſo induſtrious withall, ſo patient both of thirſt and hunger, that they will ſet at it an whole day without meat or drink, turning every Feather to the light, upwards, and downwards, every way, to ſee in which poſture it will beſt fit the place intended to it. No better Gold ſmiths in the world, nor men more expert anywhere in refining Metals. Curious in painting upon Cotton whatſoever was preſented to the eye. But yet ſo barbarous withall, that they thought the Gods were pleaſed with the blood of men, which ſometimes they ſacrificed unto them. So ignorant, that when they firſt ſaw the Spaniards on Horſe back, they thought the horſe and man to have been one creature; and would ask what the Horſes ſaid, when they heard them neigh: So careleſs of the worth of Gold, that they would part with great quantities of it for Knives, Glaſs-beads, little Bels, and ſuch petit trifles. But whatſoever they once were, is not now material: the Spaniards having made ſuch havock of this wretched people, that in 17 years they deſtroyed above 6 millions of them; roaſting ſome, plucking out the eyes of others, conſuming them in their Mines, and mercileſly caſting them amongſt wild beaſts where they were devoured. And as for thoſe who do remain, beſides their own natural ingenioſities, they have ſince learned the Civilities and Arts of Europe. What elſe concerns this ſoil and people, we ſhall ſhew more particularly, if we find it neceſſary, in their proper places.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Country (though there be many Plants in it of a ſingular nature) I reckon that which they call Magney, or Mete, ſaid to be one of the principal: a Tree which they both plant and dreſs as we do our Vines. It hath on it 40 kind of Leaves fit for ſeveral uſes: For when they be tender, they make of them Conſerves, Paper, Flax, Mantles, Mats, Shooes, Girdles, and Cordage; upon them there grow certain Prickles, ſo ſtrong and ſharp, that the People uſe them inſtead of Sawes. From the top of the Tree cometh a Juyce like Syrrup; which if you ſeeth it, will become Honey; if purified, Sugar; they may make alſo wine and vinegar of it. The Bark of it roaſted maketh a good Plaiſter for hurts and ſores; and from the higheſt of the Boughs comes a kind of Gum, a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Poiſons.

Nor is it leſs a Rarity, though leſs uſefull to the good of Mankind (except it be to keep them in continual mind of the Fires of Hell) that they have a Mountain in this Country called Propocampeche (ſituate in the Province of Mexico) which vomiteth Flames of Fire like Ætna: and another in the Province of Guaxaca, which ſendeth forth two burning ſtreams, the one of Red Pitch, and the other of Black; a fit reſemblance of thoſe Fountains of Fire and Brimſtone. Though they have many other Mountains, yet theſe moſt memorable. And as for Rivers, though very well provided of that watrie commodity, yet here are none remarkable for length or greatneſs, but Panuco only, of which more preſently. The want thereof ſupplied by ſome famous Lakes, and the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Mexico. Amongſt the Lakes, the principal are thoſe of Mexico (whereof more anon) and that of Chapala, bordering upon Gallicia Nova, which for its greatneſs hath the name of Mare Chapalicum, out of which there is made yearly great abundance of Salt. But that which is of greateſt beauty is the Golf of Mexico, the greateſt and goodlieſt of the World: in form completely Circular, in compaſs no leſs then 900 miles; environed with the main Land, the Peninſulas of Florida and Jucutan, and the Iſle of Cuba: two onely Paſſages in and out, and both well fortified; the one betwixt the Point of Jucutan and the Iſle of Cuba, where the Tide with a violent current entreth; the other betwixt the ſaid Iland and the Cape of Florida, where it makes as violent an exit: the Sea ſo headie in the middeſt, and yet ſafe enough, that ſhips are not to ſail in it directly forwards, but muſt bend either towards the North or South, as their journey lieth. Upon this Golf the King of Spain hath alwayes ſome ſhips in readineſs; by which he more aſſureth his Eſtates in this part of America, then by all his Garriſons.

It comprehendeth the Provinces of 1 Panuco, 2 Mexicana, 3 Mechoacan, 4 Tlaſcala, 5 Guaxaca, 6 Chiapa, 7 Jucutan. Some others of leſs note, but reduced to theſe.

1 PANUCO, the moſt Northern Province of all New Spain, by ſome called Guaſtecan, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Golf of Mexico; on the Weſt with Uxitipa, a member of the Province of Zacatecas in New Gallicia; on the North with Florida, and ſome Countries not yet diſcovered, from which parted by the River of Palms; on the Southweſt with Mechuacan, and on the South with Mexicana. So called from Panuco the chief River of it, which riſing out of the hils of Tepecſuan, bordering upon Cinoloa and Couliacan, and dividing New Biſcay from the Province of Zacatecas, paſſeth thorow the middle of this Country, and ſo at laſt into the Golf.

The length hereof is reckoned to be 50 leagues, and the breadth as much. Divided into three provinces: That towards Mexicana, called Aiotuxetlan, of a fruitful ſoil, and not without ſome Mines of Gold; once very populous, till in the year 1522. diſpeopled in a manner by Ferdinando Cortez in his war againſt them. The other called Chila, leſs fruitful, but poſſibly for want of People to improve the Land: for being formerly of a ſtout couragious nature, and truſting overmuch to their Fens and Faſtneſſes, they put the Spaniards to ſuch trouble when they warred upon them, that the Conquerours to ſecure themſelves from all future dangers, endeavoured to root them out and deſtroy them utterly. The third lieth towards the River of Palmes, inclined to barrenneſs, and unpleaſant; but the name I find not.

Chief Towns hereof at the coming of the Spaniards hither, 1 Las Caxas, 2 Yxicuyan, 3 Nachapatan, 4 Taquinite, 5 Tuzeteco, deſolate and laid waſte by the cruel Spaniards. Of moſt note now, 6 Tanchipa, and 7 Tamiclipa, two ſmall Burroughs in the Province of the River of Palmes (for ſo I call it) inhabited by the Natives only. 8 S. Kallap, another ſmall Town, but in the Province of Chila, inhabited by a few Chriſtians, with a Convent of Auguſtinian Friers; ſacked by the Savages in the year 1571. 9 Tampice, or S. Lewis de Tampice, a Colonie of the Spaniards, ſituate on the North banks of the River Panuco, and at the very mouth thereof, where it hath a very large Haven, but ſo barred with ſands, that no ſhip of great burden can make uſe of it; the River otherwiſe ſo deep, that Veſſels of 500 tun might ſail 60 leagues at leaſt in it againſt the ſtream. 10 S. Stevan del Puerto, on the Southern ſide of that River, in the Latitude of 23. about 65 Leagues on the North of Mexico, from the Sea eight leagues; now the Metropolis, and town of greateſt trade in all this Country. Built by Ferdinando Cortez in the place where formerly had ſtood Panuco, once the chief City of the Province, but by him deſtroyed. Oppoſite hereunto on the other ſide of the River, lie great ſtore of Salt-pits, out of which the people of this town raiſe their greateſt profit. 11 S. Jago de los Valles, or S. James in the Vallies, 25 leagues Weſtward (but inclining to the South withall) from S. Scevan del Puerto; ſituate in an open Country, and therefore fenced about with a Wall of Earth: to the Inhabitants whereof (all Spaniards, as in that before) the King of Spain hath granted many fair poſſeſſions, to defend thoſe parts (then being the borders of his Eſtates) againſt the Salvages.

This Country firſt attempted by Franciſco Garaio, but the conqueſt of it finiſhed by Cortez, as before is ſaid: each ſtriving, as it ſeemeth, who ſhould moſt deface it, and be enrolled for the greateſt Man-ſlayer of the two. But having carried on the courſe of their Victories almoſt as far as to the River of Palms, they deſiſted there; either becauſe already glutted with humane blood, or that the conqueſt of thoſe parts would not quit the charge. Inſomuch as in all that Country from the River of Palms to the Cape of Florida, though lying all along on the Golf of Mexico, the Spaniards have not one foot of Ground: ſecure enough, becauſe it lieth all along that Golf, that no other Nation can poſſeſs it.

2 MECHU-

2. MECHUACAN hath on the North-east Panuco, on the East Mexicana, on the South part of Tlaſcala, on the West the main Ocean, and on the North the Province of Xaliſco in New Gallicia. So called from the abundance of Fiſh which their Lakes and Rivers did afford them; the word in their own language ſignifying Locum Piſcoſum, or a Country of Fiſh.

The breadth hereof on the Sea-coaſts is 80 Leagues, in the borders towards Mexicana, but ſixty only. The length I finde not yet agreed on. Bleſt with an Aire ſo ſound and ſweet that ſick Folk come hither out of other Countries, to recover their health: Well ſtored with Rivers, ſome Lakes, innumerable Springs of running water, and here and there ſome hot Bathes iſſuing from the Rocks. The Soil ſo plentifully productive of all ſorts of grain (even to admiration) that in ſome parts hereof four Meaſures of Seed have brought forth 600 Meaſures of the ſame grain, in the following Harveſt. Well VVooded, and by reaſon of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Paſtures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all America, for Medecinal Herbs and Plants of very Soveraign Nature for the good of Mankinde. It affordeth alſo ſtore of Amber, Mulberry Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and ſuch other things, as chiefly ſerve for Pomp and pleaſure.

The People tall of ſtature, but ſtrong and Active: of a good wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They ſpeak four Languages of their own; but that moſt generally uſed, is by the Spaniards called the Taraſcuan Tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious Language, yet moſt of them ſpeak the Spaniſh alſo. More pliant to the Manners and Apparell of that Nation, then the reſt of New Spain (the Mexicans excepted only) and ſo inclinable to the Goſpel; that they are almoſt all gained from their old Idolatries. Inſomuch that the whole Country being divided into 50 Pariſhes; every Pariſh hath its ſeveral Prieſts and inferiour Miniſters, who in the Language of the place do inſtruct the People, in which they Preach to them, and hear their Confeſſions: beſides many Convents of Dominicans and Auguſtine Friers.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns or Burroughs, beſides ſcattering Villages; 90 of which have Free Schools in them, and almoſt every one a Spittle for relief of the Sick. The principal thereof, 1 Zinzontza, the ſeat of the old Kings of Mechuachun; in the firſt times of Chriſtianity in this Country, made a Biſhops See, till removed to Paſcuar. The firſt Biſhop Vaſquez de Quiroga. 2 Paſcuar, of no great note at preſent, but that the Biſhops See was removed thither, becauſe neerer to Mexico, from which diſtant 47 Leagues. 3 Valladolit, now the chief City of this Province, and the Biſhops See, removed hither from Paſcuar, and here finally ſetled in a fair Cathedral, Anno 1544. ſituate neer a large Lake (ſaid to be bigger then that of Mexico) which doth not only afford the City great ſtore of Fiſh, but yeildeth them the opportunity of ſeverall pleaſures which they take in Boats upon the Water. The Lake and Citie by the Natives called Guayangareo. 4 S. Michaels, in the way from Mexico (from which diſtant about 40 Leagues) to the ſilver Mines of Zacatecas. Firſt built by Lewis de Velaſco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the People of this Province, from the Chichamechas, a barbarous and hitherto an unconquered People who terribly moleſt the Nations upon whom they border. 5 S. Philips, built at the ſame time by the ſaid Velaſco. 6 Conception de Salaya, ſeventeen Leagues from Valladolit, 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez the Vice-Roy, An. 1570. to be a Stage for Travellers, in their journeys Northwards. 7 Guaxanato, bordering on Panuco, and not far from S. Jago de Los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea, we have 8 Acatlan, on the borders of New Gallicia, two miles from the Ocean; A Town of not above 30 houſes, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and ſafe Road for ſhipping (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it ſeldom without the company of Saylers. 9 Natividad, (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly ſet ſail to the Philippine Ilands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendiſh in his Circumnavigation of the VVorld. 10 S. Jago (or S. Jago de Buena Speranza) a little on the South of Natividad; the ſhores whereof are ſaid to be full of Pearls. 11 Colima ten Leagues from the Sea, but more South then the other, built in the year 1522 by Gonſalvo de Sandovall. 12 Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Conception, ſituate on the Banks of a large (but nameleſs) River, which riſing about the City of Tlaſcala, paſſeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, was a diſtinct Kingdom of it ſelf, not ſubject nor ſubordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were moſt of the Princes of theſe parts: the Frontires of the Kingdom fenced with ſtakes of wood, like a Palizado, to hinder any ſudden incurſion of the Mexican Forces. The laſt King called Tangayvan Bimbicha, ſubmitted of his own accord to Cortez, An. 1522. and willingly offred himſelf to Baptiſm. But the Spaniards were not pleaſed with either, becauſe deprived thereby of the ſpoil of the Country. But at laſt Nonnez de Guzman, then Preſident of the Courts of Juſtice in Mexico, picked a quarrell with him, accuſed him falſly (as is ſaid by the very Spaniards) of ſome practiſes againſt his King; burnt him alive with moſt barbarous and unheard of cruelty, and ſo confiſcated his eſtate.

3. Mexicana, is bounded on the Eaſt with the Golf of New Spain, on the VVeſt with Mechuachan: on the North with Panuco and ſome part of Nova Gallicia; on the South with Tlaſcala, and part of the Southern Sea; ſo called from Mexico, the chief City not of this Province only but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, meaſuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 Leagues; thence growing narrower in the midland parts hardly above ſixty; and on the ſhores of Mare del Zur, not above ſeventeen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other, that is to ſay, from the point of Lobos in the Province of Papantla, on the Golf of Mexico, to the Haven of Acapulco; on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of miles I do nowhere finde. But meaſuring it from 17 degrees grees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22. and allowing ſomething for the ſlope; we may conclude it to be much of the length, as it is breadth, that is to ſay about 130 Leagues.

The Country is inferiour to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical and ingenious Arts which are here profeſſed, and in the abundance of fruits and cattel: of which laſt here is ſuch ſtore, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himſelf. Fiſh is here alſo in great plenty; that only, which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico ſtandeth, being reported worth 20000 Crowns yeerly, to the Kings Exchequer. The People for the moſt part wittie and induſtrious, full of valour and courage; good Handicrafts-men, if they ſtoop ſo low as to Trades and Manufactures; rich Merchants if they give themſelves to more gainfull traffick; And hardy Souldiers, if trained up and employed in ſervice. Their ancient Arms were Slings, and Arrows, ſince the coming of the Spaniards practiſed on the Harcubuize. In a word, what was ſaid before of New Spain in general, as to the ſoil and People of it, is moſt appliable to this.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Los Yopes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlaſcala. 2 Citala, and 3 Mitla, both running Eaſtward towards the Gulf. 4 Papagaio, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair bridge over it. 5 Las Balſas of a violent courſe, and in bigneſs equal unto Tagus in Spain; paſſable only by a bridge made of Kaſts and Reeds, not very ſtrongly joyned together. 6. The River of S. Francis, both large and ſwift, but in ſome parts fordable. Mountains of note I finde not any which require a more particular conſideration; and ſo paſs them over.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1 Mexico, the ſeat of an Archbiſhop, and of the Spaniſh Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give directions and determine controverſies; unleſs it be in ſuch great cauſes which are thought fit to be referred to the Councel of Spain. This City was firſt ſituate in the Lakes and Ilands, like Venice, everywhere interlaced with the pleaſant currents of freſh, and ſea-waters; and carrying a face of more civil government then any of America; though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being deſtroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land, on the Edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and ſpacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth, is ſaid to be 70 Leagues in compaſs, environed with high hills, on the tops whereof the ſnow lyeth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the leaſt of them fourty miles in circuit, the one Salt and the other freſh, each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the Salt Lake ſtandeth the City of Mexico with many other goodly Towns, and ſtately houſes: on which Lake alſo, 50000 Wherries are continually plying. The Town in compaſs ſix miles, and containeth 6000 houſes of Spaniards, and 60000 of Indians. It is a by-word, that at Mexico there are four fair things, viz. The Women, the Apparell, the Horſes, and the Streets. Here is alſo a Printing-houſe, an Univerſity, and a Mint; the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, ſeveral houſes of Jeſuits, Dominicans, Franciſcans, Auguſtinians, and other Religious Orders; ſome Colledges, many Spitles and Hoſpitals, and other publick buildings of great State and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Temiſtatan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occaſion, of which more hereafter: moſt miſerably endammaged by the breaking in of the waters, Anno 1629. which ſwelled ſo high that they not only overwhelmed the meaner houſes, but the Vice-Roys Palace; drowned many thouſands of the People, and deſtroyed the houſhold ſtuff of the reſt. Occaſioned by the avarice of the Kings Miniſters, who had inverted the money to their private uſe which ſhould have fortified the Banks. 2 Tezcuco, ſituate on the ſame Lake, but ſix Leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevil; and for the beauty of the ſtreets, and elegancie of the houſes not inferiour to any. Served with freſh water from the hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though ſeated on the brink of a Salt Lake. 3 Quitlavaca, built wholly in the Lake like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela: a City of 2000 houſholds: the way unto it over a Cawſey made of flints; half a League long, and about twenty ſpans in breadth. 4. Uztacpalapa, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of freſh water, and a beautifull Fountain; A City of 10000 Houſholds, ſix Leagues from Tezcuco, and two from Mexico. 5 Mexicaltzingo, a Burrough of 4000, and 6 Cuyocan, one of 6000 Families, both upon the Lake: beautified in the times of their Paganiſm with many Temples, ſo gorgeouſly ſet out to the eye, that afar off they ſeemed of ſilver, moſt of them now converted into Monaſteries and Religious houſes. 7 Chulula, the faireſt of all the Lake, ſcarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for ſtate and bigneſs: ſaid to contain 20000 Families, and to be beautified with ſo many Temples, that their Turrets equalled the number of the days of the yeer. The People ſo addicted unto their Idolatries, and ſo barbarous in their bloody and beaſtly Sacrifices, that no fewer then 6000 Infants of both Sexes were yeerly murdered on their Altars. 8 Meſtitlan, ſeated on an high hill, begirt about with moſt pleaſant Groves and ſhady VVoods: A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the hill being reckoned in; ſituate 14 Leagues, or two days journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Panuco; the high way on both ſides ſet with fruitfull Trees, to the great comfort and refreſhment of the way-faring man. 9 Clantixolleper, twenty Leagues from Meſtitlan, a Manour to which 40000 of the Natives do owe ſuit, and ſervice. 10 Autepeque, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propopampeche; a Town belonging to the Marquis of Valla, and ſeated in the moſt delicious place of all New Spain. 11 Acachicha, on the North-eaſt of Mexico, betwixt it and the Golf, bordering on the Province of Pepantla. 12 Acapulco, an Haven Town of the South-ſea, ſituate on a ſafe and capacious Bay; at the entrance of it a League broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations and Docks for ſhipping: ſo that it is accompted the ſafeſt Haven of all thoſe Seas. At the bottom of it towards the VVeſt, ſtands the Town and Caſtle, the Caſtle opportunely ſeated on a little fore-land both to command the Town, and ſecure the Port; well walled and fortified with four very ſtrong Bulwarks, on which are planted good ſtore of Ordinance; the Garriſon conſiſting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: ſtrengthened the rather in regard of the uſual entercourſe which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Ilands.

The Original Inhabitants of this Country (as far at leaſt as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the moſt rude and barbarous Savages of all theſe parts; together with the Ottomies, ſomewhat more civil then the reſt, but yet rude enough. By theſe poſſeſſed till about the year 902. as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquiſhed and diſſeized by ſome new comers, whom they called by one name Navatlacos; iſſuing as it is conceived from thoſe parts of Gallicia Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, An. 720. or thereabouts, but lingring in their march and waſting al the Countries as they lay before them. Of theſe there were ſeven Tribes in all, i.e. the Sachimilci, the Chalca, the Tepaneca, the Culva, the Tlafluici, the Tlaſcaltecæ, all of them ſetled in theſe parts, and the five firſt about the Lake, before the coming in of the 7 Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, ſo called from Mexi their chief Captain; who much delighted with the ſituation and conveniences of Temiſtitan then a ruined town, cauſed it to be rebuilt, and beautified by the name of Mexico. This town from that time forwards was reputed the head-City of their Common-wealth; the ſix Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of thoſe Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Ariſtocratical manner. But weary at the laſt of this equal power, which the prevalencie of ſome Tribes had made very unequal, the Mexicans, one of the weakeſt of the Tribes, oppreſſed by the reſt, reſolved to ſeparate themſelves, and to commit the ordering of their affairs to a King of their own: at firſt elected by themſelves; but afterwards when they had conquered moſt of the other Tribes, the choice intruſted unto ſix, one for every Tribe, (the Tlaſcaltecæ which was the ſeventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlaſcala, governing themſelves long before, as a State apart) who in their choice had an eſpecial eye on thoſe which were ſtrong and active, and fit for military employments; the people holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Politie and Inſtitutes of this Mexican kingdom, I forbear to write of, further then as they lie before me in the way of their Story, digeſted by the government and ſucceſſion of their ſeveral Kings, whoſe names and actions do occurre in the following Catalogue, of

The Kings of Mexico.

A. Ch.

1373. 2 Vitzovitzli, ſon of Acamapitzli, ſubdued the Tribe of the Suchimilchi, and others of the neighbouring Nations.

1394. 3 Huizilihuiel ſon of Vitzilovitli, conquered the Tribes of the Chalca and Culva, with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants.

1415. 4 Chimal Pupuca, ſon of Huizilihuiel, won the Town of Tequixſuiac, and reduced the rebellious Chalca under his command.

1425. 5 Iſcoalt brother of Huizilihuiel, by the valour of his Couſin Tlacaellec, freed himſelf from the yoke of the Tepanecæ, to whom the Mexicans had before been Tributaries; and added their dominions unto his eſtate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whoſe death the Electors by a joynt conſent choſe Tlacaellec for their King, as a man of whoſe vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refuſed it, ſaying, that it was more convenient for the Commonwealth, that another ſhould be King, and that he ſhould execute that which was for the neceſſity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the publick, as well as if he were. Upon this generous refuſal they made choice of Motecumo the firſt.

1438. 6 Motecumo, one of the Brothers of Chimalpupuca, brought in the cuſtom of uſing no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of ſuch Priſoners as the new King ſhould firſt take in the wars. By the valour and good fortune of Tlacaellec, he ſubdued ſo many of the Nations (whoſe names I hold unneceſſary to be here repeated) that he extended his eſtate from one Sea to the other.

1467. 7 Axayacaci, the Nephew of Iſchoalt by his ſon Tecozomoeliqueto, enlarged his Empire by the conqueſt of Tetentepeque, 200 miles from Mexico, to fit himſelf with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlatelulco who rebelled againſt him, to ſo hard a ſtreit, that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple.

1479. 8 Ticoicatzi, the ſon of Azayacaci, added twelve Cities, with their Territories, to the Mexican Empire.

1484. 9 Abuczozin, brother of Ticoicatzi, extended his borders to Guatimala, repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico,

A. C. Mexico, and brought thither a channel of freſh water.
1502. 10 Motecuma II. Son of Axaacaci, before his Coronation, conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian ſhould bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18. year of his Reign was ſubdued by Cortez.

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards ſtand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medeline, a Town of Eſtremaduram, 1485. and in the nineteenth yeer of his Age, employed himſelf in the Trade and buſineſs of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clark unto the Treaſurer for the Iſle of Cuba, where he husbanded his Affairs ſo well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep, and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in ſhort time he was able to put in 2000 Caſtellins for his ſtock as Partner with Andrew de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be Partner with James Velaſques in the Diſcovery of Tabaſco, and the parts neer Jucutan, An. 1518. And now reſolved to venture all his ſtock both of friends and money, he furniſhed himſelf of eleven Ships, and with 550 men ſet ſail from Spain, and arrived at the Iland of Acuſamill (now called Santa Crux) and ſailing up the River of Tabaſco, ſacked the Town of Potonchon, the Inhabitants refuſing to ſell him victual. After this by the help of his Horſe and Ordinance he diſcomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themſelves for the ſack of that Town; and received the King thereof in vaſſallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Weſtward he ſhould meet with ſome Mines of Gold, he turned his courſe for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa, where landing he was entertained by Tendilli, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico, who underſtanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of ſo great an Emperour (of which Tendilla had informed him by eſpecial Meſſengers) he ſent him many rich Preſents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the ſight hereof, he reſolved to go unto the place where ſuch Treaſures were; took poſſeſſion of the Country in the name of Charles the fift King of Spain and Emperour; and building there the Town de la vera Crux, left in it 150 of his men. Attended by no more then 400 Foot, 15 Horſe, and ſix pieces of Ordnance, he purſued his Enterprize, by practiſe gained unto him thoſe of Zempoallan, and Tlaſcalla, whom he underſtood to be ill-affected to Motecuma: aſſiſted with whoſe Forces he paſſed on for Mexico, ſacked the Town of Chololla (a Town of 40000 houſholds) in his march, he was kindly received into Mexico by the frighted King, whom he cauſed to acknowledge himſelf a Vaſſall to Spain, and to preſent him in the name of a Tribute with ſo much Treaſure as amounted to 162000 Caſtellins of Gold. A quarrell growing not long after, Motecuma the unhappy King was by one of his own Subjects killed in the Tumult, and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlaſcalans, and a recruit of more Spaniards (ſent thither on a Deſign againſt him) he made up an Army of 100000 Savages, 900 Spaniſh Foot, 80 Horſe, 17 pieces of Ordnance: and having with great diligence made ready a Navie of 13 Galliots, and 6000 Canons or Boats; laid ſiege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a Siege of three moneths, the City is taken, ſacked and burnt, Auguſt 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully then it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer, endowed for that good Service by Charles the fift with the Town and Territory of Tecoantepeque, in the Province of Guaxaca, and many other fair eſtates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the title of Marqueſs of Valla.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are ſaid to have worn a Crown reſembling that which is now uſed by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation held with great pomp, but moſt bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almoſt infinite, raiſed out of all Commodities and paid in kinde, whether Natural or Artificial only, the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and ſharing with them in their wealth; ſome paying in Cups full of powder of Gold of two handfuls a piece; ſome Diadems, and Beads of Gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turkeſſe ſtones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pictures, &c. Not to ſay any thing of matters of inferior value: all which in ſuch a wealthy and large eſtate, muſt needs afford him a Revenue equall to the greateſt Monarch. And for the incouragement of his Souldiers and Men of VVar, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at leaſt ſuch diſtinctions of perſonall merit, as had reſemblance to ſuch Orders) the firſt diſtinguiſhed by a Red Ribband, the ſecond called the Lyon or Tiger Knight, and the third the Gray Knight: all priviledged amongſt other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breeches, to adorn themſelves with gold and ſilver, and to have Veſſell gilt or painted: high points, and not permitted unto any elſe. But it is time that I proceed to the reſt of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALA lieth betwixt Mexicana and Guaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred Leagues; the breadth along the ſhores of the Gulf reckoned 80 Leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their bread of; the word in that Language ſignifying Locum panis, or the place of Bread, the ſame with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Country very plentifull both of Corn and Cattell, full of rich Paſtures, and wonderfully ſtored with Maize: Level and plain except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large chain of craggie Mountains; The richer in the fruits of Nature for thoſe fair and pleaſant Rivers wherewith it is watered; the principal of which 1. Rio de Grijalva, ſo called from John de Grijalva, who firſt diſcovered it; employed herein by James Velaſques, the advancer of Cortez. 2 Rio de Zempoall ſo called from the Town of Zempoallan about which it riſeth. 3 Zahuate, which makes its way thorow the chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Golf. 4 Rio de Zacatula, a River of the longeſt courſe courſe in all this Province; riſing neer Tlaſcala, and falling many Leagues off into Mare del Zur. The People much of the ſame nature with thoſe of Mexico, though upon jealouſies of State their moſt bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good uſe to advance their Conqueſts on that Kingdom.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Tlaſcala it ſelf, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Commonwealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers; and in the middle of a large, but pleaſant Plain, 60 miles in compaſs. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants, now ſcarce 50000. It had four Streets (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of war: and in the middeſt a Market-place ſo fair and ſpacious, that 30000 perſons might aſſemble in it, to buy and ſell, or for any other buſineſs. 2 Puebba de los Angelos, (the City of Angels) but moſt commonly Angelos: built by Sebaſtian Ramirez, An. 1531. in the way from Vera Crux to the City of Mexico, from which laſt 22 leagues diſtant. A Biſhops See, and thought to contain in it 1500 families. 3 Zempoallan, on the River ſo named, the Inhabitants whereof did great ſervice to Ferdinando Cortez in his conqueſt of Mexico. 4 Napuluca; of great reſort for a Fair of Cattel; and ſuch a kind of Court for ordering the trade thereof, as we call the Pie-powders. 5 Guaxocingo, a pleaſant and well-peopled town, ſituate at the foot of the burning Mountain before mentioned, by the aſhes and embers whereof the fields are many times annoied. 6 Segura, or Segura de la Frontera in the Region of Tepeac, built by Cortez the next year after the conqueſt of Mexico, with fair ſtreets and handſome houſes, by whom peopled with Spaniards. 7 Vera Crux, the firſt town built in this Country by the ſaid Cortez, now a Biſhops See: ſituate neer unto the Gulf, and a great thorow-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which diſtant about 60 leagues. 8 S. John de Ulua, the moſt noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Peer againſt the fury both of winds and ſea, defended naturally by Rocks and Quickſands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both ſides of the entrance. 9 Medellin, built by Cortez An. 1525. and planted with Spaniards: ſo called in memory of a town of the ſame name in Eſtremadara, in which he was born: ſituate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlalſcallans were originally one of the ſeven Tribes which drave the Chichimecas out of their poſſeſſions: and either finding no room left for them on the Banks of the Lake, or elſe willing to ſubſiſt alone, withdrew themſelves from the reſt, founded the City of Tlaſcala, and there erected a Democratical Eſtate. Stomacked for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by thoſe of Mexico, after they had ſubdued the reſt: they ſtill maintained themſelves againſt all attempts; and in the end aſſiſted Cortez in the deſtruction of that Kingdom they ſo deadly hated. Privileged for that reaſon by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of tribute (except it be an handfull of Wheat for every perſon) and ſuffered to live under his protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name, ſaid to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards, and in them 150000 of the Natives, beſides Spaniſh Colonies. Diſtributed into 36 Claſſes or Rural Deanries for Eccleſiaſtical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houſes.

5 GUAXATA is bounded on the Weſt with Tlaſcala, on the Eaſt with Jucutan and Chiapa one of the Provinces of Guatimala, on the North with the Bay of Mexico, and on the South with Mare del Zur. Extended on the South-ſea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to fifty only: in breadth from ſea to ſea where it bordereth on Tlaſcala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it confineth on Chiapa. So called from Guaxata once the chief town of theſe parts, now named Antequera.

The Air heteof very ſound and ſweet, and the Soil as fruitfull: plentifull not only of thoſe commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Country; but of ſuch quantities of Silks, and ſtore of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue would ſuffice to endow five Biſhopricks, as good as that which is there already: ſcarce any River of this Country, but hath Sands of Gold: ſuch plenty of Coccinele (a rich grain uſed in dying Scarlets, of which before) as alſo of Caſſia, Gold, Silver, and other metals, that if the people did but adde ſome induſtry to the wealth of the Country, they might be the richeſt men in all America. But being naturally ſlothfull, and impatient of labour, they loſe all opportunities of gathering riches, and live but from hand to mouth, as we uſe to ſay. Docile enough, and ſo indulgent unto thoſe who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friers, beſides other Schools; theſe laſt conceived the greater number

It is ſubdivided into many particular Provinces (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds) as 1 Miſteca, 2 Tutopeque, 3 Zapoteca, 4 Guazacoalco, 5 Gueztaxatla, and 6 the Vale of Guaxata; this laſt moſt memorable, in that it gave the title of Marqueſſo del Valle to the famous Cortez. Towns of moſt obſervation, 1 Teozopotlan, once the chief town of Zapoteca, and the ſeat of their King. 2 Cuertlavaca, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3 Antequera, in the Vallie of Guaxata, a ſtately City, and beautified with a fair Cathedral, as that with Marble-pillars of great height and thickneſs. 4 S. Illifonſo in the Province of Zapoteca. 5 S. Jago in the Valley of Nexapa, ſeated upon a lofty hill. 6 Del Spiritu Santo, diſtant about three leagues from the ſhores of the Golf, in the Province of Guazacoalco; the foundation of Gonſalvo de Sandoval, A. 1526. 7 Aguatulco, or Guatulco, a noted and convenient Port on the South-ſea; much uſed by thoſe which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern ſeas. By conſequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpoſe both by Drake, and Cavendiſh, in their voyages about the world. 8 Tacoantepeque a Port of the ſame Sea alſo, but of far leſs note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650.

inhabited, by 150000 of the Natives liable to tribute, beſides women and perſons under age, not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6 JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Iland, is faſtened to the Continent only where it meets with Guaxaca; the furtheſt point of it oppoſite to the Iſle of Cuba. Diſcovered firſt by Fernandes de Cordova, employed therein by Don Chriſtopher Morante, An. 1517. and called Jucutan, not as ſome conceit it, from Joctan the ſon of Heber, who they think came out of the Eaſt, where the Scripture placeth him (Gen. 10.30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the language of the Country ſignifieth, What ſay you? For when the Spaniards at their firſt coming hither asked the name of the place, the Savages not underſtanding what they meant, replied Jucutan, that is, what ſay you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compaſs of it, taking the Province of Tabaſco into the accompt, is ſaid to be 900 miles, or 300 leagues. The Air hot, and the Country deſtitute of Rivers; not otherwiſe provided of water but by pits and trenches, which abundantly ſupply that want. Sufficiently barren, the ſoile not bearing Wheat, or any European fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people: who muſt either live by trades and labour, or elſe beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Country, but that here ſeemed to be ſome remnants of Chriſtianity, at the Spaniards firſt coming hither: the people conſtantly obſerving a kind of Baptiſm, which they call in their own language a ſecond birth, expreſſing by that word a Regeneration; not ſuffering any one to marry untill ſo initiated. And poſſible enough it is, that this may be the Country upon which Madoc ap Owen fell; who though he might by ſome good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he ſhould make any ſuch ſecond voyage hither, as is ſaid in their Cronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Merida, almoſt in the navel of it, ſituate in the 20 degree of Latitude, the ordinary ſeat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop: diſtant from the Sea on each ſide about twelve leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have ſome reſemblance. 2 Valladolit, 30 leagues from Merida, beautified with a moſt ſumptuous Monaſtery of Franciſcan Friers. 3 Campeche, (or S. Franciſco, as the Spaniards call it) ſituate on the ſhore of the Golf; A town when firſt known to the Spaniards, of 3000 houſes, and beautified with ſuch monuments of art and induſtrie, as ſhewed that there was ſomewhat in this people which was not barbarous. ſince that not more obſervable, then for being ſuddenly ſurprized by Parker an Engliſh Captain, A 1596. who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the town, and many priſoners, beſides a great ſhip full of gold, ſilver, and other the like precious commodities, deſigned for the King of Spains own uſe. 4 Tabaſco, ſituate in the beſt part of this Country, ſo different from all the reſt, that it is made by ſome a diſtinct province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nueſtra Sennora de la Victoria, moſt commonly Victoria only; and that in memory of the firſt fortunate victory which Cortez had upon this people, arming themſelves againſt him for the ſacking of Pontonchan. 5 Pontonchan, ſacked by Cortez for denying to ſupply him with victual. 6 Salamanca, ſo called with reference to a town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coaſt of this Country lie many Ilands, viz. 1 La Zarza, 2 Deſconoſcida, 3 Triangulus, 4 Vermeia, 5 Los Negrillos, 6 Los Alacranes, all within the Golf. Without it. 7 Zaratan, 8 Pantoia, 9 Lamanay, 10 De Mucheres, or the Iſle of Women; 11 Cozamul, by ſome called Acuſamil. This laſt the biggeſt, as 15 leagues long, 5 broad; and the moſt remarkable, as being the uſual way which the Spaniards travelled in their diſcoveries of this Country from the Iſle of Cuba. For here firſt landed Fernando de Corduba, An. 1517. who paſſing over to Jucutan (but four leagues diſtant) brought back nothing but ſtripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the ſame purſuit; who paſſing by Jucutan to the Province of Guaxata, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the moſt fortunate Cortez, who coaſting about the Demi Iland, landed neer Tabaſco, and there firſt hanſelled his good fortune with a notable victory. Yet neither the Iland nor Peninſula diſcovered perfectly, till the year 1527. when both ſubdued by Franciſco de Monteio, to the Crown of Spain. The Iland now called Santa Crux.

GVATIMALA.

GVATIMALA is bounded on the North by Jucutan, and the Golf of Honduras; on the South with Mare del Zur; on the East (or South-east rather) with Caſtella Aurea; on the Weſt with New Spain. Extended 300 leagues in length upon the Coaſts of Mare del Zur; but meaſuring by a ſtrait line, not above 240: the breadth thereof 180 leagues, where broadeſt; in moſt places narrower. So called from Guatimala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the ſeat of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice.

The nature of the ſoil and people (if differing in any material thing from thoſe before) we will conſider in the View of thoſe ſeveral parts into which this Country is divided. The principal whereof, 1 Chiapa, 2 Verapaz, 3 Guatimala ſpecially ſo called, 4 Honduras, 5 Nicaragua, 6 Veragua. The reſt of leſs note, eaſily reduced to theſe.

1 CHIAPA hath on the Weſt New Spain, on the Eaſt Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucutan; and Mare del Zur, upon the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much leſs in breadth; and antiently inhabited by four Nations, all of ſeverall Languages.

The ſoil not very natural for Corn or Fruits: though Pot herbs brought from Spain thrive well, as do Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer fruits ſeldom come to good. Wood-vines they have, which yield a very pleaſant pulp; and if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their trees, moſt of them, greater then in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypreſs, whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not ſo big as thoſe of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Roſin, ſome ſuch precious gums, as in other places are not uſual; and ſome there are whoſe Leaves being dried into a powder, afford a ſoveraign plaſter for exulcerate ſores: And they have need too often to make uſe of theſe Plaſters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venemous Creatures (ſome of the Snakes no leſs then 20 foot in length) whoſe poiſon being ſtrong and deadly, doth require ſuch helps. Of the People nothing ſingular, that I have met with; but that they are more muſical and exact in painting then the reſt of the Natives.

Towns of moſt note in it, 1 Cividad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapenſes, at the foot of an hill, ſituate in a round Plain, encompaſſed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre: afterwards made a Biſhops See, and privileged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by ſuch City-Magiſtrates as they call Alcaides. 2 Chiapa, in a vale adjoyning; before the building of the other, of moſt note in this Province: yet ſtill before it in regard of its ſituation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, then all the reſt of the Country. 3 Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoques, poſſeſſed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monaſtery of Dominican Friers. 4 Capanavatzla, the principal Town of twenty five which the Quelenes held in this tract: remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the ſame Dominicans. 5 S. Bartholmews, another town in the territory of the ſame Quelenes: neer which is ſaid to be a great Pit, or opening of the earth, into which if any man caſts a ſtone, though never ſo little, there preſently followeth a loud and fearfull noiſe like a clap of thunder. 6 Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvaridi, when he was Governour of theſe parts; the chief Town of a little Province called Soconuſco. 7 Caſapualca, a ſmall Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the fields adjoyning; the waters whereof are noted to riſe and fall, as the Ocean doth flow or ebbe, and at equal diſtances of time. Of thirteen Townſhips which the Zeltales were poſſeſſed of, I find no one named; though painted all of them, and ſet forth to the eye of the Traveller, with Coccinele, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon theſe Rarities of Nature, I cannot but take notice (though ſomewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns wood to ſtones: of a Spring in the Cantred of Taſixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry; of another in the ſame Cantred, which for one three years, though it rain never ſo little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and ſo ſucceſſively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many leſſer ſtreams, is ſwallowed up neer a Village of the Chiapenſes, called Otztutan, never after ſeen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are thoſe of Guaxata; though it be thought there be ſome Veins of gold and ſilver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work the Mines.

2 VERAPAZ is bounded on the Weſt with Chiapa, on the Eaſt with Guatimala and Hondura, on the North with Jucutan, and on the South with the Territory of Soconuſco. In Latine called Provincia Vera Pacis; by the Spaniards Verapaz, becauſe not conquered by the ſword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain by the preaching of the Dominican Friers.

The Country 30 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, bac no fruitfull plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which so hinder the free passage of the winds, that the Aire hereof is very shewery: Insomuch that for nine moneths in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reason of this moysture much annoyed with Mosquits a kinde of Gnats, very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwise (as with Fish and other necessaries) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. Instead whereof some of their Trees drop a kinde of Amber, which they call Liquid amber; some Mastick, and some other Gums: they have also many Medicinal woods, as Sarzaparilla, that called China-wood, and many others.

The People tractable and conform to the Spanish Government, except the Lecandones, and Pachuteci, some Rembinders of the ancient Salvages, who keeping in the Mountains and craggie Rocks of this Country, have hitherto retained both their Native Freedom, and their old Idolatries. No Towns herein possessed by the Spaniard, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principall of these S. Augustines, not so much memorable in it self, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains, from which the Rain descending turns into Alabaster, naturally fashioned into Pillars and other Pourtraitures. Into which also many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body, make an handsom River, able almost at the first appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they also have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea called Golfo Dulce; but of so little use and Trading that I finde no name for it, unless it should be that Yztapa which Herrera speaks of, by whom placed in Guatimala.

3. GUATIMALA specially so called, is bounded on the West with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the East with Nicaragua; on the North with Honduras, and on the South with Mare del Zur or the Pacificque Ocean. Extended 30 Leagues from the North to the South, and on the Shores of Mare del Zur, not above seventeen. But reckoning in Tzalcos, Chaluteca, and S. Saviours, three adjoyning Regions, by some made Provinces distinct, the dimensions of it must be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Country Mountainous, but withall very full of Rivers; by consequence commodious both for fishing and hunting. Fruitfull of Wheat, Maize, and other Provisions, but those fruits not lasting. Not so much subject unto rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with winds. Full of rich Pastures, and those Pastures of great Heards of Cattell. Good store of Cotton-wool, some Balsamum, and other Medicinal Liquours; as also of the best Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs which I have no skill of. The People Pusillanimous and fearfull, greater proficients in Christianity and Civility then most of the Savages, but so that it is thought they would relapse again to their ancient Paganism, and revive again their old barbarous customs, if not held in by the bridle of fear, and the curb of power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Women good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Guacapa, a River of a course but of 13 Leagues, yet of great depth, and navigable half the way, which falleth into Mare del Zur. 2 Lempas, watering the Burrough of S. Saviours; which hath its rise from a great Lake, and his fall in the same Sea also. Here is also said to be a Lake neer the Village of Ytzepeque, of the waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Allom. And here is said to be a Volcana or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being spent; yet the said Monuments of his Furies do remain among them; another not far off which still casts out smoak.

Towns of most note, 1 Guatimala, or S. Jago de Guatimala, the chief Town of the Province, situate on a little River betwixt both Vulcanos, by one of which most terribly wasted. An. 1541. But being re-edified, it hath since exceedingly flourished, by reason of the Bishops See, the residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice. 2 S. Salvador, 40 Leagues Eastwards from Guatimala, by the Natives called Cuzculan; situate on the River Guacapa, seven Leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five Leagues compass. 3 Acaxutla, at the mouth of the same River, the Port Town to S. Saviours. 4 S. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samsonate, the most noted Empory of this Country; the Place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain, and those of Peru. 5 S. Michaels, two Leagues from the Bay of Fonseca, which serves unto it for an Haven. 6 Veres de la Fontera, the chief Town of the Cantred of Chulutecan (by which name it was formerly known) situate on the Frontires towards Nicaragua, and to the South east of the Bay of Fonseca; that Bay so named in honour of Roderick Fonseca Bishop of Burges, and President of the Councel for the Indies, An. 1532. by Giles Gonsales de Avila, who first discovered it; About and in this Bay are ten little Ilands, four of which inhabited, and plentifully furnished with wood, water, and salt.

4. HONDURA hath on the South Guatimala, specially so called; on the West, the Bay or Arm of the Sea called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz: on the North and East the Sea called Mare del Nort; on the South east Nicaragua; on the South Guatimala specially so called. In length from East to West by the Banks of that Sea 150 Leagues, and about 80 Leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras imposed upon it from the depth of the Sea about the principall Head land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Country either Hills, or Vallies, little Champagne in it: fruitfull of Maize and wheat, and of very rich Pasturage; made so by the constant overflowings of their Rivers about Michaelmass; which do not only soil their grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1 Hagnara,

2 Chamelucon,

2 Chamalucon, 3 Ulna, all neighboured by fertile fields, and pleasant meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet discovered; the people being so slothful and given to idleness, that they had rather live on Roots, then take pains in tilling of their land; and therefore not easily intreated to toyl for others, but where necessity and strong hand do compell them to it.

Towns of most note, 1 Valladolit, by the Natives called Commyagna, 40 leagues distant from the Sea, situate in a pleasant and fruitful Valley, on the banks of the River Chamalucon; and honoured with a Bishops See, fixed here about the year 1558. built neer the place where once Francisco de Monteio Governour of this Provinee had planted a Colonie of Spaniards, An. 1530. by the name of S. Maria de Commyagna. 2 Gracias di Dios, 30 leagues Westward of Valladolit, built by Gabriel de Royas, An. 1530. to be a place of defence for those who worked in the Mines, against the Savages. But finding himself unable to make it good, he defaced and left it: Reedified again by Gonsalvo de Alvarado, and since well inhabited. 3 S. Peters, eleven leagues distant from the Port of Cavallos, but seated in a most healthy air, and therefore made the dwelling place of the Farmers of the Kings Customs, who have their houses in this town, and follow their business in the other, as occasion is. 4 Porto de Cavallos, so called from some horses thrown overboard in a violent tempest: the most noted Haven of these parts, and strong by natural situation; but so ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Christopher Newport; and An. 1596. by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deserted on those spoils, and not since inhabited. 5 S. Thomas de Castile, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally strong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art: to which as to a place of more strength and safety, Alfonso Briudo de Castilla President of the Sessions of Guatimala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6 Traxillo, seated on the rising of a little hill betwixt two Rivers (one of them that which is called Haguara) distant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the East, and 60 leagues to the North of Valadolit: surprized and pillaged by the English, An. 1576. Not far hence towards the North-east lieth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the shore drawing inwards till it joyn with Jucutan, makes up a large and goodly Bay called the Golf of Honduras. 7 S. George de Olancho, so named of the Vallie Olancho, in which it is seated; a Vallie noted heretofore for some golden Sands, which Guajape, a River of it, was then said to yield.

5 NICARAGUA is bounded on the North with Honduras, on the East with Mare del Nort and the Province of Veragua, on the South with Mare del Zur, on the West with Guatimala. By Didaco Lopez de Salsedo who first subdued it, it was called the New kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither, would not so be lost.

The Country destitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua, called Costa Rica, reckoned a Province of it self. The want hereof supplied by a great Lake or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 leagues in compass, ebbing and flowing like the Sea; upon the banks of which stand many pleasant villages and single houses. A Lake well stored with Fish, but as full of Crocodiles: and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it self into the Sea about four leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (most of which is brought them from Peru) but well stored with Cattel; level and plain, and shadowed with frequent trees; one amongst others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth presently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrets, as England of Crows; stored with great plenty of Cotton wooll, and abundance of Sugar canes. In a word so pleasing generally to the eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mahomets Paradise.

The People for the most part speak the Spanish tongue, and willingly conform themselves to the Spanish garb both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous customes, retained only by some Mountainers, whom they call Chontales. All of good stature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Christianity, a setled and politick form of government: only as Solon appointed no law for a mans killing of his father, so had this people none for the killer of a King; both of them conceiting that men were not so unnatural as to commit such crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be slave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his service he had made satisfaction: A course more merciful, and not less just, then the loss of life.

Chief towns hereof, 1 Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, situate on the Lake aforesaid; the Residence of the Governour, and the Bishops See; built in a sandy soil, and begirt with woods. 2 Granada, on the same Lake, sixteen leagues from Leon, beautified with a fair Church and a strong Castle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova: the City seated in a liberal and wealthy soyl, well furnished with Sugar-canes; for the refining of which here are many Work houses, which they call Ingenios. 3 Segovia, distant from the former about 30 leagues; rich in veins of Silver. 4 Jaen, (all called according to the names of some Towns in Spain) situate at the end of the Lake aforesaid, from whence by a long and narrow channel it disemboqueth into the Sea neer the Port of S. John. 5 Realeio, about a league distant from the Port of Possession, in the Latitude of 12 degrees & 40 minutes, inhabited for the most part by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6 Nicoia, giving name to a little territory, within the bounds whereof standeth 7 Avarines also. 8 Cartago, 40 leagues from Nicoia, equally distant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port: this Town the principal of that part which is called Costa Rica.

6 VERAGUA hath on the West Costa Rica, on the East bounded with the District of Panama; washed on both other sides by the sea: extended 50 leagues in length from West to East; not above 25 where narrowest, from one sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greatest note in it at the first Discovery.

The

The ſoil hereof Mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for tillage, and leſs uſefull in feeding Cattel; ſufficiently provided of Maize and Pot-herbs, but elſe of little neceſſary for the life of man, unleſs the People could eat Silver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Mettals, but eſpecially of Gold, here are ſuch never-periſhing Mines, that the Spaniards think them able to ſupply all wants, and cure all Diſeaſes. Once being asked what made them ſo greedy of that Mettall: it was anſwered, That they were much troubled with grief of heart, for which Gold was a moſt Soveraign Medicine. And as the Country, ſuch the People, hardy, couragious, and warlike, and ſuch as bear the Spaniſh yoke with great impatience: the ſtouteſt and moſt untameable People, being bred moſt commonly in Mountainous and woody Countries.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1 Veragua, which gives name unto it. 2 Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Yebra, at the mouth of which Columbus purpoſed to have ſetled a Spaniſh Colony, for the better tranſporting of his Gold. But finding that the Channel, on the ceaſing of ſome rain which had fallen before, was become ſo ſhallow, that no ſhip could go in or out, he gave over that purpoſe. 3 La Trinidad. 4 La Conception: all falling into Mare del Nort. Their chief Towns, 1 Conception, on the Mouth of that River, the ſeat of the Governour. 2 La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, neer the Port of Belen, and ſix Leagues Eaſtwards of La Conception. 3 S. Foy (oppidum S. Fidis) twelve Leagues from Conception on the South, where the Spaniards melt, and caſt their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4 Carlos, not far from the ſhores of Mare del Zur. 5 Philippina, on the VVeſt of Carlos. Each ſeated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bays lie a Frie of Iſlands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongſt them. Thirty in all; the principall Zebaco, Cabaio, S. Marie, S. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the People being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Countrey oweth its firſt Diſcovery unto divers men, according to the ſeveral Members and diviſions of it: The laſt in order, being the firſt that was diſcovered, but the laſt that was conquered, had the honour to be viſited by Columbus himſelf. VVho driving up and down theſe coaſts in the year 1502 hit on the entrances of the River, which afterwards he cauſed to be called Belen; where hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Hurira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him as was ſaid before; and finding nothing fit to ſuſtain his men, he bent himſelf though unwilling to a further ſearch. He had before touched upon Honduras alſo; but I finde not that he landed on it: the ſetling of theſe Countries being deſtinated to another hand. Twenty yeers after this the moſt fortunate Cortez having fully quieted and compoſed the affairs of Mexico, reſolved to make his Maſter Lord of the reſt of America. And to that end ſent out his Officers and Commanders into ſeverall parts; by Pedro de Alvarado he ſubdued Guatimala; Hondura, by Chriſtopher de Olid: Veragua, and Nicaragua, by Conſalvo de Corduba. But fearing leſt the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he reſolved to viſit them in perſon. Attended by a choiſe Band of 150 horſe, and as many foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October, 1524: and held on his progreſs as far as to Truxillo: where finding that Gonſales de Cordova had ſo plaid his game, as there was no neceſſity of going further, he made a ſtand, having marched above 400 Leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526. he came home to Mexico, with whoſe return we conclude alſo our ſurvey of the Northern Peninſula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

PERVANA the other of the two great Peninſulas into which the vaſt Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now ſtand divided, hath the form of a Pyramis reverſed: more anſwerably thereunto then Africk, though that ſo reſembled. Joyned to the other by a ſtrait and narrow Iſthmus, called the Straits of Darien, whereof we ſhall have opportunity to ſpeak more anon: which looks but like a ſtone miſ-laid in ſo great a building; or the firſt ſtep by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name derived from Peru, the chief Province of it; the Circumnavigation ſaid to be 1700 miles. Nothing elſe to be ſaid in the general, but what will ſerve more fitly for particular places; except it be the deſcription of ſome prime Mountains and principall Rivers: which being of too long a courſe to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deſerve place here. Of theſe the chief 1 Orellana, or the River of Amazons, called by the firſt name from Franciſco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who firſt diſcovered it; by the ſecond from the Amazons a kinde of ſtout and warlike VVomen, who are ſaid to have inhabited on the banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Peru, the fall in the North Sea, or Mare del Nort. A River of ſo long a courſe, that the ſaid Orellana is reported to have ſailed in it 5000 miles, the ſeveral windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of ſo violent a current, that it is ſaid to keep its natural taſt and colour above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accompted 60 Leagues from one point to the other. 2 Orenoque, navigable 1000 miles by ſhips of burden, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces, having received into it an hundred Rivers; openeth into the ſame Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Ilands (ſome equal to the Iſle of Wight) the moſt remote of thoſe Channels 300 miles diſtant from one another. By ſome it is called Raliana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the diſcovery and deſcription of it; or rather in diſcovering it ſo far, as to be able to deſcribe it. 3 Maragnon, of a longer courſe then any of the other, affirmed to meaſure at the leaſt 6000 miles, from his firſt riſing to his fall; and at his fall into the Sea, to be no leſs then 70 Leagues from one ſide to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, then many of thoſe great Lakes, or largeſt Bays, which uſually enjoy that name. 4 Rio de la Placa, a River of a leſs courſe then the other, but equall unto moſt in the world beſides; in length from its firſt Fountain 2000 mile; in breadth at his fall into the Sea, about 60 Leagues; and of ſo violent a ſtream, that the ſea for many Leagues together, altereth not the taſte of it. All theſe as they do end their Race in the Atlantick, ſo they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at the leaſt ſome Spur or branch of that great body.

But before we venture further on more particulars, we are to tell you of theſe Andes, that they are the greateſt and moſt noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Timama a Town of Popayan, in the New Realm of Granada, and thence extended Southwards to the ſtraits of Magellan, for the ſpace of 1000 Leagues and upwards. In breadth about 20 Leagues where they are at the narroweſt; and of ſo vaſt an height withall, that they are ſaid to be higher then the Alpes, or the head of Caucaſus, or any of the moſt noted Mountains in other parts of the VVorld. Not eaſie of aſcent, but in certain Paths, by reaſon of the thick and unpaſſable VVoods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lie towards Peru (for how it is on the other ſide, or by what People it is neighboured, is not yet diſcovered) barren, and craggie too withall, but ſo full of venemous Beaſts, and poyſonous Serpents, that they are ſaid to have deſtroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Peru, in his march that way. Inhabited by a People as rude and ſavage as the place, and as little hoſpitable. The moſt noted Mountains of America, as before was ſaid, and indeed the greateſt of the World. Of fame ſufficient of themſelves not to be greatned by the addition of impoſſible Figments, or improbable Fictions. Among which laſt I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius a right learned man, who will have theſe Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sephar, *Gen.*10.30. and there affirmed to be the utmoſt Eaſtern limit of the ſons of Joktan: the vanity and inconſequences of which ſtrange conceit, we have already noted when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular deſcriptions of this great Peninſula, comprehending thoſe large and wealthy Countries, which are known to us by the names of 1 Caſtella Aurea, 2 The New Realm of Granada, 3 Peru, 4 Chile, 5 Paragnay, 6 Braſil, 7 Guyana, and 8 Paria, with their ſeverall Ilands. Such other Iſles as fall not properly and naturally under ſome of theſe, muſt be referred unto the generall head of the American Ilands in the cloſe of all.

OF CASTELLA DEL ORO.

CASTELLA del ORO, Golden Caſtile, (Aurea Caſtella, as the Latines) is bounded on the East and North with Mare del Noort, on the West with Mare del Zur and ſome part of Veragua, on the South with the New Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Caſtile, with reference to Caſtile in Spain, under the favour and good fortune of the Kings whereof it was firſt diſcovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for diſtinctions ſake, and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the firſt Diſcoverers found in it. It is alſo called Terra Firma, becauſe one of the firſt parts of Firm land which the Spaniards touched at, having before diſcovered nothing but ſome Ilands only.

The Soil and People being of ſuch ſeveral tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will conſider both apart in the ſeveral Provinces, of 1 Panama, 2 Darien, 3 Nova Andaluzia, 4 S. Martha, & 5 the little Province De la Hacha.

1 PANAMA, or the Diſtrict of Panama, is bounded on the East with the Golf of Uraba, by which parted from the main land of this large Peninſula; on the VVeſt with Veragua one of the Provinces of Guatimala in Mexicana; waſhed on both the other ſides with the Sea. So called of Panama the town of moſt eſteem herein, and the Juridical Reſort of Caſtella Aurea.

It taketh up the narroweſt part of the Streit or Iſthmus, which joyns both Peninſulas together: not above 7 or 8 leagues over in the narroweſt place betwixt Panama and Porto Bello, if meaſured by a ſtrait line from one town to the other; though 18 leagues according to the courſe of the Road betwixt them, which by reaſon of the hils and rivers is full of turnings. Of ſome attempts to dig a Channel through this Iſthmus to let the one Sea into the other, and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by land, we have ſpoke already.

The Air hereof foggie, but exceeding hot, and conſequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November: the Soil either mountainous and barren, or low and miery; naturally ſo unfit for grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but ſparingly; better for paſturage, in regard of its plenty of graſs, and the goodneſs of it: ſo full of Swine at the Spaniards firſt coming hither, that they thought they never ſhould deſtroy them; now they complain as much of their want or paucitie. As for the Inhabitants, whatſoever they were formerly is not now material: moſt of the old ſtock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room; ſo that the Country in all parts except towards the Sea, is almoſt deſolated or forſaken.

The Country, as before was ſaid, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1 Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Lagartos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noort betwixt Nombre de Dios, and Porto Beleno. 2 Sardinilla, 3 Sardina, 4 Rio de Colubros, or the River of Snakes; & 5 Rio de Comagre, all falling into the ſame Sea. Then on the other ſide, 6 Chepo, whoſe ſands in former times yielded plenty of gold. 7 Rio de las Balſas, on the banks whereof groweth great ſtore of timber for the building of ſhips. 8 De Congos, emptying it ſelf into the Bay of S. Michaels.

Towns of moſt note, 1 S. Philip, ſeated on a ſafe and ſtrong Haven called Porto Belo, built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the ſecond, but by the counſel of John Baptiſta Antonelli, to be the ſtaple of the trade betwixt Spain and Panama; partly in regard of the unhealthineſs of Nombre di Dios, where it was before, but chiefly becauſe that Town was found to have lien too open to the invaſions of the Engliſh. Fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles (on each ſide of the Haven one) but for all that ſurprized and pillaged by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2 Nombre de Dios, conveniently ſeated in the Upper-ſea, for a Town of trade; and for that reaſon made the Staple of ſuch commodities as were trucked betwixt Peru and Spain; which brought from Spain, and landed here, were from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there ſhipped for Peru; or brought ſo from Peru and landed at Panama, were by land brought unto this place, and here ſhipped for Spain. It took this name from Diduco Niqueſa a Spaniſh Adventurer, who having been diſtreſſed by tempeſts was driven in here, and bid his men go on ſhore en nombre de Dios, in the name of God. In reference hereunto by the Latines, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Theonyma. Of great trade once, on the occaſion before mentioned: but in the year 1584 the trade was removed unto Porto Belo, by the counſel of Antonelli before named; and ſome years after that, the Inhabitants alſo. To haſten which, the taking of this town by Sir Francis Drake, ſerved exceeding fitly. 3 Acla, on the Coaſt of the ſame Sea alſo, but on the South-eaſt of Nombre de Dios. 4 Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, ſituate on the Lower ſea on the borders of Veragua, about 30 leagues on the weſt of Panama. 5 Panama, the chief City of Caſtella Aurea, the Reſidence of the Governour of the Courts of Juſtice, honoured with a Biſhops See, a Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Lima; and beautified with three fair Monaſteries, and a College of Jeſuites. Seated in the 9. degree or Northern Latitude; and ſo near the Sea, that the waves come cloſe unto the wall. A town through which the wealth of Spain and Peru paſſeth every year: yet not containing taining above 350 houſes; the number of the Soldiers greater then that of the Citizens. 6 S. Crux la Real, a League from Panama, inhabited totally by Negroes brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the firſt of thoſe on the Firm land which were diſcovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Iland lying on the ſhore neer Porto Belo, which he cauſed to be called Los Baſtimentos; becauſe being caſt hereon by chance, he found good ſtore of Maize and other proviſions, called Baſtimentos by the Spaniard. But the chief Ilands of this Province, are thoſe which Columbus never ſaw, called the Ilands of Pearls, ſituate in the Southern ſea, oppoſite to Panama, from which diſtant 17 leagues or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called Tarorequi, the other Del Rio; the reſt of them rather Rocks then Ilands. Much famed not onely for the abundance, but the excellencie of the Pearls there found, fairer then thoſe of Margarita and Cubagna ſo much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and covetouſneſs they unpeopled the Ilands, and deſtroyed the Pearls. Inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and ſome Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Maſters Cattel in the fields and paſtures.

2 DARIEN hath on the North the Diſtrict of Panoma, on the South New Granada, on the Eaſt the River of Darien whence it hath its name, and the Golf of Uraba, and on the Weſt the main Southern Ocean.

The Country of a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil: ſo happy in the production of Melons and ſuch other fruits, that within twenty dayes after they are ſown, they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes and other fruits, either natural hereunto, or brought hither from Europe. A tree here is called Hovo, not elſwhere known; the ſhade of which is conceived to be ſo wholſom, that the Spaniards ſeek them out to ſleep under them. Out of the Bloſſoms of it they diſtill a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatorie, good for the opening of the pores, and redreſs of wearineſs; and from the Roots they draw a Liquour which they uſe to drink of. Of Beaſts and Fowl great plenty, whether wild or tame; and ſome of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1 Darien, whence it hath the name; A clear water, and much drank of, but of a ſlow courſe and a narrow channel, able to bear no bigger Veſſels then thoſe of one peece of wood uſed among the Savages: we may call them Troughs. But with this ſlow courſe it falleth at laſt into the Golf of Uraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is ſaid to be eight leagues over. 2 Rio de las Redas, & 3 De la Trepadera, both emptying themſelves into the Golf of Uraba. 4 Corobaci, on the ſame ſide of the Country alſo. 5 Beru, a River of the South-Sea, not much obſervable, but that ſome have laboured to derive the Etymologie of Peru from thence.

Towns of moſt note, though few of any, 1 Dariene, on the Bank of the Golf of Uraba; oftentimes ſo unhealthy by the Miſts which do thence ariſe, that the Inhabitants uſe to ſend their ſick people to the freſh Air of Corobarie to revive their ſpirits. By the Spaniards it wat called S. Maria Antiqua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Enciſus a Spaniſh Adventurer, An. 1510. and grew ſo ſuddenly into wealth and reputation, that within four years it was made an Epiſcopal See: But being built too neer the Banks of the Dariene, in a mooriſh and unhealthy place, both the Epiſcopal See, and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forſaken by themſelves, or deſtroyed by the Savages: ſo that now from Acla to the bottom of the Golf of Vraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but ſome few ſcattered houſes in all that tract, for the uſe of the Natives, who formerly made their Neſts like Birds, on the tops of trees. 2 Bizu, 3 Los Angadeſos, two ſmall villages on the other ſide of the Country, poſſeſſed by the Savages. Beſides theſe, and ſome ſorry ſheds here and there diſperſed, all the reſt a Deſart. So that not being able to maintain the reputation of a diſtinct Province, the government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Prefect of Panama.

3 NOVA ANDALUSIA hath on the Weſt the River Darien, and the Golf of Uraba; on the Eaſt the Province of S. Martha, on the North the main Ocean, and on the South the new Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andaluſia a Province of Spain. Called alſo by ſome Writers Carthagena, from Carthagena now the chief City of it.

It is in length from the Golf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen 80 Leagues, and neer upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of woods, but in thoſe woods great ſtore of Roſin, Gums, and ſome kinds of Balſams. Here is alſo ſaid to be a Tree, which whoſoever toucheth, is in danger of poiſoning. The Soil, by reaſon of the abundance of rain which fals upon it, very moyſt and ſpewie; inſomuch that few of our European fruits have proſpered in it. Few veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena, where the Spaniards at their firſt coming found great ſtore of treaſure: But it was taken out of the graves and Monuments of the dead, not found in Mines, or digged for as in other places: ſuch being the reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and neer did carry the bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and ſtout, whiles they were a People: But giving the Spaniards many overthrows before fully conquered, they have been ſo conſumed and waſted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Rio de los Redos, & 2 Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3 Zenu, which paſſing thorow the Province above-mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean over against the Iland Fuerte. 4 S. Martha, of long course, and much estimation: For rising in the most Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada, neer the Æquinoctial, it passeth thorow the whole length of that Kingdom, and at the last mingleth its streams with that of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Cauca. And as for Mountains, those of most note are a continual Ridge of hils by the Spaniards called Cordillera, by the Natives Abibe; craggie, and difficult of ascent; in breadth affirmed to be 20 leagues, but the length uncertain, the furthest ends of them towards the South not discovered hitherto.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Carthagena, situate in a sandie Peninsula, ten degrees distant from the Æquator: well built, and for the bigness of it of great wealth and state; consisting of 500 houses or thereabouts, but those neat and handsom. Beautified with a Cathedral-Church, three Monasteries, and one of the best Havens of all America. Well fortified on both sides since the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585. took it by assault, and carried thence besides inestimable sums of money, 240 Brass-peeces of Ordinance. 2 Tolu, by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve miles from Carthagena; memorable for the most soveraign Balsam of all these parts, called the Balsam of Tolu; little interior, if at all, to the Balsam of Egypt. 3 Mopox, or Santa Crux de Mopox, neer the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalens. 4 Baranca de Malambo, on the Banks of the River Magdalen, six leagues from the Ocean; where such Commodities as are brought by sea for the New Realm of Granada, use to be unshipped, and carried by Lighters or small Boats up the River. 5 Sebastian de Buena vista, built by Alfonso de Oieda, An. 1508. in his first attempt upon this Country, situate on a rising ground neer the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a league and an half from the sea. 6 Villa de Maria, 30 leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4 S. MARTHA hath on the West Nova Andalusia, on the East Rio de la Hacha, on the North the main Ocean, on the South the New Realm of Granada: about 70 leagues in length, and as much in breadth. So called from S. Martha the chief City of it.

The Country mountainous and barren, not fit for pasturage or tillage; productive notwithstanding of Limons, Orenges, Pomgranats, and such other fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The Air on the Sea-coasts very hot and scalding, and in the midland parts as cold, because of the neighbourhood of some Mountains alwayes covered with snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long Ridge of Hils by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nievadas, or the Snowy mountains; discernable by the Mariners 30 leagues at sea, by whom called the Mountains of Tairona, from a Vallie of that name beneath them; the Inhabitants whereof by the advantage of those hils have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant and ill-natured people; made worse perhaps then indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards, whose government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province, 1 Rio Grando de la Magdalena; which hath its fountain in the hils of the new Realm of Granada, not far from the Æquator, but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and S. Martha, in the Latitude of 12 Degrees; where dividing it self, it maketh an Iland of 5 leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernible for ten leagues space from the rest of the Main, by the taste and colour of the water. 2 Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen, as doth also 3 Cæsar, by the Natives called Pompatao; which having its fountain neer the City of Kings in the Vale of Upar, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4 Ayumas, another River of this Tract; accompanied with whom he runneth westward for the space of 70 leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalens, as before is said, neer the Forrest of Alpuerte. 5 Bubia, 6 Piras, 7 Don Diego 8 Palamini, 9 Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation, 1 S. Martha, situate on the shores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten Degrees & 30 Minutes; neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the winds by an high Mountain neer unto it, and honoured with an Episcopal See. Small, and ill built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. and by Sir Anthony Sherley the next year after. 2 Tenariffe on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40 leagues from S. Martha. 3 Tunalameque, by the Spaniards called Villa de las Palmas, twenty leagues to the South of Tenariffe. 4 Cividad de los Reges, or the City of the Kings, situate in the Vale of Upar, on the banks of a deep and violent River called Guatapori, which not far off falleth into the Cæsar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Toirona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5 Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upar; as liberally furnished with veins of Brass, as it is with stones. 6 Ocanna, on the western Reach of the River Cæsar, equally distant from its confluence with Ayumas, and its fall into Magdalen.

5 RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-east of S. Martha: environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the East) with a large and spacious Arm of the Sea called Golfo de Venezuela: the Extremities hereof North-west called Cabo la Vela; on the North-east, Cabo di Coquiboccoa.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more then an hundred houses, but big enough to give name to so small a Province. Built on a little hill about a mile from the Sea; the Haven inconvenient and exposed to the Northern winds, but the Soil about it very rich, fruitfull of all such Plants as are brought from Spain; well stored with veins of Gold, excellent Salt-wiches, and some Gems of great worth and vertue. Distant 8 leagues from New Salamanca, manca, and 18 leagues from the Cape la Vela: ſurprized and ſacked by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. 2 Rancheria, ſix leagues on the Eaſt of De la Hacha, inhabited for the moſt part by ſuch as get their living by Pearl-fiſhing. 3 Topia, five leagues from La Hach, and almoſt as much from the Sea: the Fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca, were terribly waſted by the Engliſh, in the year aforeſaid; becauſe the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not ſtand to his bargain.

Theſe Countries diſcovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was ſaid; were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two ſeveral men, imployed in the ſubduing of their ſeveral parts, An. 1508. To Didaco Niqueſa was allotted the government and conqueſt of thoſe parts hereof which lie on the Weſt of the Bay of the Uraba, containing the Præfectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Caſtella del Oro: And to Alfonſo Oreda, all that lay on the Eaſt of that Gulf, by the name of Nova Andaluſia. But theſe two finiſhed not the work, though they firſt begun it: Enciſus diſcovering further on the River of Dariene, then Niqueſa had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South ſea, where Panama and the beſt of their trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Præfectures of S. Martha and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and ſubdued by the Spaniard) being added to it. One of their laſt Kings which held out againſt the Spaniards, was called Abibeia, who had his Palace on the top of a tree, (as moſt of his ſubjects had their houſes) from which when Franciſco de Vaſques a Spaniſh Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to deſcend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which ſeen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

OF NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the new Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North with Caſtella Aurea; on the Weſt with Mare del Zur; on the Eaſt with Veneznela. The Countries lying on the South, are not yet diſcovered, ſhut up with vaſt Hils, and impaſſable Mountains; except only in thoſe parts which lie near the Sea, where the Way lyeth open to Peru. Thus called by Gonſalvo Ximenez, the firſt Diſcoverer, who being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 Leagues, and as much in breadth; reckoning Popayan for a part of it, though by ſome made a diſtinct government. So that we may divide the whole into theſe two parts, Granada ſpecially ſo called, lying on the Weſt: and 2 Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA ſpecially ſo called, hath an Ayr for the moſt part well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and ſhortneſs of dayes. The Country full of Woods, but of great fertility; well ſtored with Corn and Paſturage, many Herds of Cattel; ſome veins of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds: and amongſt their woods, that called Guajacan, Medicinable for the French diſeaſe, grows in great abundance. The People tall and ſtrong of body, not very induſtrious, the greateſt part of their time being ſpent in ſongs and dances. The Women of a white and more clear complexion then any of their neighbours, and more handſomly habited; apparelled in black, or party-coloured Mantles, girt about their middles; their hair tyed up, and covered moſt an end with Chaplets intermixt with flowers, and artificially compoſed.

Rivers of note I find not any, but thoſe of S. Martha, and S. Magdalen, deſcribed before: nor any diſtinction of it into ſeveral Provinces, but that the names of Tunia, Bagota, Panches, Colyma, and Muſi, by which the Savages were diſtinguiſhed, when firſt known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the principall of their Towns are by ſome deſcribed.

Towns then of greateſt note, 1 S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbiſhop, and the ſeat of the Governour. Built by Gonſalvo Ximinez de Queſada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the banks of which they uſed to ſacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, beſides thoſe of the Natives; and ſituate in the fourth Degree of Northern Latitude. 2 S. Michael twelve Leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well-traded market. 3 Tocayma in the territorie of the Punches, a barbarous and man-eating People, till reclaimed by the Spaniards, and maſters of the richeſt part of all the Country. The Town about 15 Leagues from S. Foy, towards the North eaſt; and ſeated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is ſwallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4 Tudela is the Country of the Muſi and Colymæ, two warlike Nations; ſituate on the banks of the River Zarbi, and made a Colonie of the Spaniards at their firſt coming hither; but deſerted by them not long after, for fear of Savages, though the want of Proviſions was pretended. 5 Trinidado, on the ſame River, but ſomewhat lower, and more remote from the Savages; by whom notwithſtanding much annoyed: the fields thereof full of veins of Chriſtal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonians. 6 La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the ſame territorie of the Muſi and Colyma, Anno 1572. 7 Tunia, ſo called according to the name of the Tribe or Province in which it is ſituate; built on the top of an high Hill that it might ſerve for a retreat and Fortreſs againſt the Savages; now a well-traded Emporie, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impreſs 200 horſe for preſent ſervice. 8 Pampelona, 60 Leagues from S. Foy, towards the North eaſt, rich in Mines of Gold, and Herds of Cattel. 9 Merida, on the North of Pampiona, the furtheſt Town of all this Province on the North eaſt towards Veneznela; As 10 S. John de Los Lianos, or S. John upon the Plaines is in the South-eaſt, 50 Leagues from S. Foy, and ſeated in a corner full of veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lyeth on the Weſt of new Granada, ſtrictly and ſpecially ſo called; from which parted by the River Martha, which hath its original in this Country; on the North bounded with Nova Andaluzia, or Carthagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the Weſt. Extended in length from North to South 130 Leagues at the leaſt; and from the River to the Sea betwixt 30 and 40.

The Country, over-cloyd with rain, breeds but little Maize, leſs Wheat, and almoſt no Cattel; though in ſome places richer then it is in others. The People anciently Man-eaters, and as rude as any; now more induſtrious and affable then the other Americans; eſpecially about Popayan, where the ſoyl is alſo better tempered then in other places. The Rivers of moſt note beſide that of S. Martha, which we have ſpoken of already; and ſome leſſer ſtreams which fall into it; are 1 Rio di S. Juan, 2 Rio de Cedros, 3 Rio de S Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greateſt note, 1 Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when firſt known to the Spaniards; ſituate on a nameleſs but pleaſant River, in the midſt of a Plain, of great wealth, and a healthy Ayr; in two Degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude; the ordinary reſidence dence of the Governour, and See of a Bishop. The building fair unto the eye, but slight; excepting the Cathedral, and a Monastery of the Fryars called De mercede, which are strong and lasting. 2 Antiochia, (or Santta Fides de Antiochia) on the borders of Nova Andaluzia, 100 Leagues distant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which fals into the Martha, from which twelve Leagues distant. 3 Caramanta on the Martha it self. 4 Patia in a pleasant Valley, on the banks of a small River, but of excellent water. 5 S. Anne in the Cantred of Anzerman, by which name it is sometimes called: Built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant Fruits. 6 S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Cantred of Arma; situate in a territorie very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessaries: Fifty Leagues to the North-east of Popayan. 7 Carthage in the Province of Quimbaia, 22 Leagues from S. Jago de Arma, seated in a Plain betwixt two torrents, seven Leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8 Cali, a League from that River, but on the banks of another, in the Latitude of four Degrees: neighboured by a vast and mighty Mountain, at whose foot it standeth; where built by Sebastian de Betalcuzar, the first discoverer of this Country. 9 Bonaventure on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean; a smal Town, but of great use for the conveyance of the Commodities of new Spain unto Popayan, and other Towns of this Province. 10 Timana, 80 Leagues from Popayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far Southwards as the Streits of Magellan. 11 S. Juan de Pasto, situate in a pleasant Valley, but one Degree from the Æquator. 12 Sebastian de la Plata, so called of its Silver Mines, in the South-east confines of the Province. 13 Almaguer, on the sides of a plain but barren Mountain. 14 Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Chicu; in a barren soyl, were not Gold a supplement of all wants, which is there found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Ilands in the Southern Ocean, that is to say, 1 The Isle of Palmes, South of the Cape of Corrientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2 Gorgona, opposite to the mouth or outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Iland of three Leagues in compass, the Hils so high, the Vallies so extreamly low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some have likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking place unto Francis Pizarro, in his attempts upon Peru, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3 Del Gallo, a small Iland, not a League in circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Country thus divided into two Prefectures, but both subordinate to the Juridical Resort in the City of S. Foy de Bagota; is indebted for its first Discovery to two several persons. Granada specially so called, was first discovered by Gonsalvo Ximinez de Quesada, employed therein by Ferdinand de Lugo, Admiral of the Canarie Ilands, Anno 1536. who passing up the River of Magdalen without molestation (more then the difficulties of the wayes thorow Fens and Forrests) as far as the Cantred of Bagota, was there encountred by that King, whom he easily vanquished: and wasting all his territories, carryed with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emeralds, and other treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes which then governed in their several Tribes, either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murdered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches; he caused it to be called The new Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the spoyles he had gotten in this easie war, he found them to amount to 1800 Emeralds, 191294 Pezoes of the finest Gold, 35000 of a courser and inferiour alloy. In his return he heard the news of Sebastian de Betalcazars marching on the other side of the River of S. Martha; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Popayana, was beating out his way towards the North Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Francisco Pezarro the Conqueror of Peru, made Governour of the Town and Province of Quito; and having secured all the Country to the very Sea, resolved to open a way homewards thorow those Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province, and Mare del Noort: And this he did resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Country, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Popayan and Columbaz, two Petit Princes, but yet the greatest in those parts. Encountred in his march by the Roytelets of Patia and Pasto, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassable Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Popayan. Where though the Savages entertained him with some frequent skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possess themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such places as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies: The first Conquest being finished Anno 1536. when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximinez.

OF PERV.

PERV is bounded on the East with that vaſt ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the Weſt with Mare del Zur, on the North with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada, on the South with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the firſt of note which the Spaniards met with in this Country, occaſioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 Leagues, but the breadth not equal. In ſome places 100 Leagues broad, in others 60. in the reſt but 40. more or leſs according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of ſo different a nature from one another, as if they were far diſtant both in ſite and ſoyl. Theſe parts the Plains, the Hill Countries, and the Andes the Plains, extended on the Sea ſhore, in all places level without Hils; the Andes a continuall ridge of Mountains without any Vallies; the Sierra, or Hill Countries compoſed of both. Each part ſtretched out from North to South, the whole length of the Country: the Plains from the Sea ſhore to the Hill-Countries, for the moſt part ten Leagues broad, in ſome places more; the Hill-Countries 20 Leagues in breadth where narroweſt, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill Countries Rain from September to April, after that fair weather. In the Hill Countries the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his ſetting forth, and ſcorched with heat before he come to his journies end. Some other differences there are, as that the Andes are covered with VVoods and Forreſts, whereas the Hill Countries are bare and naked; the Plains, where there are ſtore of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea beſides, ſandy and dry, and in moſt places deſtitute both of Fruits and Corn; in ſome parts of the Hill Countries where there are no Rivers, and a Rain but ſeldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other neceſſaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly wind, though it bring no rain with it; and in the Hils, winds from every Coaſt, and of every nature, ſome bringing Rain, ſome Snow, ſome claps of Thunder, and others fair weather at the heels of them. Inſomuch that it is obſerved, that ſuch of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find ſuch pains in the head and ſtomack, as freſh-water ſouldiers when firſt Sea-ſick.

Not to purſue theſe differences any further in the ſeveral parts, we will look upon the whole in groſs: which we ſhall find but meanly furniſhed for the bigneſs, with thoſe Commodities which ſo large a Country might afford: inſomuch as many of the People live moſt on Roots, here being little VVhear, and not ſuch quantities of Maize (the ordinary bread grain of the Americans) as to ſerve their multitudes. Nor find I that the Cattel of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increaſe. Inſtead of which they have in their woods and paſtures infinite numbers of beaſts ſomewhat like wild Goats, (which they call Vicagues) and great ſtore of a kind of ſheep by them called Pacos, profitable both for fleece and burden; as big as a ſmall breed of Horſes, but in taſt as pleaſing as our Mutton, and no leſs nouriſhing. A Creature ſo well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himſelf over-loaded, no blows or violence ſhall make him move a foot forwards till his load be leſſened; and of ſo cheap a dyet, that he is content with very little, and ſometimes paſſeth three whole dayes without any water. The Camels of theſe parts, and not much unlike them.

This as it is by ſome accompted for a Creature proper to this Country only (though in that miſtaken) ſo may it paſs amongſt the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beaſts, and Plants, and in inanimate bodies alſo. Amongſt their Plants they have a Fig tree, the North part whereof looking towards the Mountains, bringeth forth its Fruits in the Summer only; the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitful only in Winter. Some as deſervedly do count the Coca for a wonder, the Leaves whereof being dryed, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding uſeful in a journey. For melting in the mouth, they ſatisfie both hunger and thirſt, and preſerve a man in ſtrength, and his ſpirits in vigour: and generally are eſteemed of ſuch ſoveraign uſe, that it is thought that 10000 Baskets full of the Leaves of this Tree are ſold yearly at the Mines of Potoſia only, each of which at the Markets of Cuſco would yield 12.d. or 18.d. a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a ſick perſon, will inſtantly diſcover whether he be like to live or die. For if on the preſſing it in his hand he look merry and chearfull, it is an aſſured ſign of his Recovery: as on the other ſide, of death, if ſad and troubled. Amongſt their Beaſts, beſides thoſe ſpoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanacu: of which it is obſerved that the Males ſtand Centinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Vallies: and if they ſee any men coming towards them, they ſet out their throats, to give their Females notice of ſome danger near: whom when they come up to them, they put in the front of the Retreat, interpoſing their own bodies betwixt them and their enemy. Nor want they Rarities of nature even in things inanimate: here being ſaid to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potoſi, whoſe water is ſo hot, though the Country be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themſelves are not able to endure the heats thereof if they go but a little from the Banks: there being in the midſt thereof a boyling of above 20 foot ſquare. A Lake which never doth decreaſe, though they have drawn a great ſtream from it to ſerve their Mettal-Mills.

More profitable though leſs rare, thoſe Metals, which thoſe Mills are made for; and not leſs profitable, one of thoſe Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here then in other Countries of America: for which cauſe, and the reſemblance which it hath to Henbane, in form and quality, it is called the Henbane of Peru by Gerrad and ſome others of our Modern Herbaliſts. A Plant, which though in ſome reſpect being moderatly taken, it may be ſerviceable for Phyſick: yet beſides the conſumption of the purſe, and impairing of our inward parts; the immodetate, vain, and phantaſtical abuſe of this ſtinking weed, corrupteth the naturall ſweetneſs of the breath, ſtupifieth the brain, and indeed is ſo prejudicial to the general eſteem of our Country-men, that one ſaith of them, Anglorum corpora qui huic plantæ tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degeneraſſe videntur. The two chief Vertues aſcribed unto it (pardon me I beſeech you this ſhort digreſſion) are that it voideth Rheume, and is found to be a ſoveraign Antidote againſt Lues Venerea, that loathſom Diſeaſe of the French Pox: For this laſt, like enough it is, that ſo unclean a Diſeaſe may be helped with ſuch an unſavory Medicine. But for the ſecond it may perhaps conſiſt more in opinion, then truth or reality; the Rheume which it is ſaid to void, being no more then what it breedeth at the preſent. We may as well conclude that Botled-Ale is good for the breaking of winde (which effect we finde commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the ſame winde which it ſelf conveyed into the Stomack. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times grown a Good-fellow, and fallen from a Phyſitian to a Complement. An humour which had never ſpred ſo far amongſt us, if the ſame means of prevention had been uſed by the Chriſtian Magiſtrates, as was by Morat Baſſa among the Turks: who commanded a Pipe to be thruſt thorow the Noſe of a Turk whom he found taking Tobacco, and ſo to be carried in deriſion all about Conſtantinople. It is obſerved that the taking of Tobacco was firſt brought into England by the Marriners of Sir Francis Drake, An. 1585. And that it hapned not unfitly in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate uſe of drinking, which our Low Country Souldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, An. 1582. Before which time, the Engliſh of all Northern People were deemed to be moſt free from that Swiniſh Vice, wherein it is to be feared that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken ſo exceſſively by both theſe Nations, that I may juſtly ſay with a learned Fleming, Herbæ ejus non dicam uſus ſed abuſus, non modo in Anglia, ſed in Belgio, & alibi, inſanum in modum jam adolevit.

But the greateſt riches of this Country is moſt out of ſight hid in the Bowels of the earth, but found in thoſe never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver; more eminently abounding in this one Province then in all America. For inſtance whereof we may take the Silver Mines of Potozi, diſcovered in the yeer 1545. the fift of which, payable into the Kings Exchequer, amounted in forty yeers to a 111 millions of Pezoes, every Pezo being valued at ſix ſhillings and ſix pence; and yet a third part of the whole was diſcharged of that payment. By this one we may gueſſe ſomewhat of the reſt; as by the proportion of one member the dimenſions of the whole body may be probably aimed at; unleſs the riches of theſe Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by ſome knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold then Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arias Montanus, and ſome other very learned men, that this Peru is that land of Ophir to which Solomons Navy went for Gold, induced thereunto by that Text of the Chron. lib. 2. cap. 3. ver. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Paruaim. A fancy not of ſo ſandy a foundation, as many others of that kinde, if Peru had been the old name of this Country, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof not only Spain, but all Europe alſo is better furniſhed with gold and ſilver, then ever formerly. For in the firſt Ages of the VVorld our Anceſtors the Britains (I muſt digreſs here once again) had no other money then Iron-rings, and Braſs-rings, which they uſed for inſtruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the moſt uſual Materials of their coyn, was moſt times Braſs, and ſometimes Leather. Corium forma publica percuſſum, as it is in Seneca Of which laſt ſort we finde that Frederick the Emperour made uſe at the ſiege of Millain; and the Engliſh, in the time of the Barons VVars. And why not ſo? conſidering that no longer ſince in the year 1574 the Hollanders being then reduced to ſome extremities, made money of Paſt boord. But this hapneth only in Caſes of neceſſity, the two Mettals of gold and ſilver having for many hundred years (though not in ſuch abundance as in latter times) been the chief inſtruments of Exchange and Bartery betwixt man and man, & queſtionleſs will ſo continue to the end of the VVorld. I know Sir Thomas More in the ſecond Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, becauſe more neceſſary for all uſes; Ut ſine quo non magis quam ſine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring gold and ſilver into contempt, telling us how the Utopians uſe to employ thoſe Metals, in making Chamber pots, and Veſſels of more unclean neceſſities; eating and drinking for the moſt part in glaſs or earth. He telleth us alſo how they make chains and fetters of Gold, to hold in their rebellious ſlaves, and Malefactors; how they puniſh infamous perſons by putting Gold Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their ears, and chains of gold about their necks: how they adorn their little children with precious Jewels, which gayeties when they come to Age, and ſee them worn by none but ſuch little children, they uſe to caſt away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys leave off without conſtraint their Babies, Cobnuts, and other Crepundia. He further telleth us how the Ambaſſadors of the Anemolii (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongſt them richly and gorgiouſly attired, were took for ſlaves, by reaſon of their Golden Chains, and the meaneſt of their Followers thought to be the Ambaſſadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing jewels, as if they had been children ſtill; and how the People laught at their chains of Gold, as being too weak to ſhackle ſuch ſturdy Fellows. Now though it pleaſed that wiſe State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongſt them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any eſteem which themſelves had of it, but therewith to provide themſelves of Forreign aids, and pay their Armies, when the neceſſities of their affairs, or other reaſon of State did require the ſame. How this device would ſort with the humours of thoſe People whom Lucian antiently did Fable, and ſome of later times more reall, do fancy to have their dwelling in the Moon: I am not able to ſay, as having hitherto had no commerce nor correſpondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though poſſibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and finde it to ſort well enough with their condition. Certain I am this ſublunary World of ours will never brook it. And ſo I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of gold and ſilver which thoſe and the reſt of the New World, have furniſhed the old World withall, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men, to be the cauſe of the dearneſs of all commodities at the preſent times, compared unto the cheapneſs of the times foregoing: for where much is, there greater prices will be given, then in other places. And yet there want not ſome that add alſo other cauſes, of the high prizes of our days: viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Craftſmen; tranſportation of Grain, pleaſure of great perſonages, the exceſs of private men, and the like: but theſe laſt I rather take to be con-cauſes, the firſt being indeed the principal. For, (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil, hath it in the end of his notes on Tacitus) the exceſſive abundance of τὰ τῦ πόρῳ μείζονα ὄντα, things which conſiſt meerly on the conſtitution of men; draweth neceſſarily τὰ τῦ δεῖν ὄντα, thoſe things which nature requireth, to an higher rate in the Market. Captâ ab Auguſto Alexandriâ (ſaith Oroſius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quam antehac, rerum venalium pretia ſtatuerentur. As for that queſtion, whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which ſupplieth it ſelf with money, by Traffick and the works of Art; or that which is ſupplied by Mines growing, as the gift of nature, I finde it by this tale in part reſolved. Two Merchants departing from Spain to get gold, touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buyeth Moors to dig and delve with; the other fraughteth his veſſell with ſheep: and being come to the Indies, the one finding Mines, ſet his ſlaves to work, and the other hapning in graſſie ground, put his ſheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for food and cloathing; which the ſheep-maſter by the increaſe of his ſtock had in great abundance: ſo that what the one got in gold with toil, charges and hazard both of life and health, he gladly gave unto the other in exchange or Bartery, for the continual ſupply of Victuals, Clothes, and other neceſſaries for himſelf and his ſervants. In the end the Mines being exhauſted, and all the money thence ariſing exchanged with the Shepherd for ſuch neceſſaries as his wants required: home comes the Shepherd in great triumph, with abundance of wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the Engliſh and the Hollanders by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick, did in concluſion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the ſecond, and out-vied him (as it were) in wealth and treaſure; notwithſtanding his many Mines of Gold and ſilver in Barbary, India, Mexicana, Guinea, ſome in Spain and Italy, and theſe of Peruana which now we handle, and which have given occaſion unto this Diſcourſe or Digreſſion rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People alſo, affirmed to be (for the moſt part) of great ſimplicity; yet ſome of them (thoſe ſpecially which lie neer the Æquator) to be great diſſemblers, and never to diſcover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in the Wars, well skilled in managing ſuch weapons as they had been uſed to, and fearleſs of death; the rather prompted to this laſt by an old opinion held amongſt them, that in the other world they ſhall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great perſon who was attended on in his life, they uſe to kill and bury with him one or more of his ſervants to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living much like the Jews; but not in habit: conform therein to the other Savages, but that thoſe cover their upper parts with ſome decent garment, and leave the other Members bare. But this is only neer the Æquator; both Sexes elſwhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one faſhion over all the Country, except the dreſſing of their heads, wherein ſcarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his faſhion to himſelf. The Women leſs eſteemed here then in other places, treated as Slaves, and ſometimes cruelly beaten upon ſlight occaſions: the men (as S. Paul ſaith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural uſe of the woman, and burning in their luſts towards one another. For which if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompenſe which was meet.

Rivers of moſt note 1 S. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent courſe, and ſo great a depth, that it is 180 Fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2 Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over againſt the Iſle of Puna, on the further ſide of the Æquator; an Iland of twelve Leagues in compaſs, and exceeding fruitfull. 3 Guagaquil, of a longer courſe then any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur on the South of Tombez; over againſt the Iſle of Lobos. No Iland after this of note upon all this Coaſt. If any come in our way which runneth towards the Eaſt, we ſhall meet with them in the view of the ſeveral Provinces; and ſo we ſhall of the Hills or Mountains which are moſt conſiderable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to loſe themſelves; in compaſs 80 Leagues, and uſually Navigable with ſhips and barks. The waters of it not ſo ſalt as thoſe of the ſea, but ſo thick that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a fair water courſe or River it paſſeth into a leſs Lake, which they call Aulaga, and thence moſt probably bably findeth a way into the Sea, or elſe is ſwallowed in the Bowels of that thirſty earth; but the firſt more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Reſorts, viz. of 1 Quito, 2 Lima, and 3 Charcos; each having under it many ſeveral and ſubordinate Provinces; too many and of too ſmall note to be here conſidered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greateſt reckoning, 1 Quito, 2 Los Quixos, 3 Lima, 4 Cuſco, 5 Charcos, and 6 Collao; three on the Sea, and the other three in the midlands; to which the Ilands of it ſhall be joyned in the cloſe of all.

1. QUITO is bounded on the North with Popayan, on the Weſt with Mare del Zur; on the South with the Province of Lima, and on the Eaſt with that of Los Quixos. So named from Quito the chief Town and Province of the firſt diviſion.

The ſoil as fertile and as fit for the fruits of Europe, as any other in Peru: well ſtored with Cattell, eſpecially the Pacos or Peruvian ſheep; and plentifully furniſhed both with Fiſh and Fowl. In many parts great ſtore of Nitre, of which they make moſt approved good Gunpowder: and in ſome Rivers, eſpecially that of S. Barbara, many veins of Gold. The people generally induſtrious, eſpecially in the making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almoſt to ſilks for fineneſs; of conſtitution ſtrong and healthy; but given to lying, drinking and ſuch other vices: with which they are ſo much in love that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Chriſtian Faith, nor willingly reclaimed from their ancient Barbariſm. Extreamly puniſhed with the Pox, an hereditary diſeaſe amongſt them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins ſo infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guajacan, nor Sarſa-parilla, all which this Country doth afford in a great abundance, is able to preſerve them from it.

Towns of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Carangues, a large and ſumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings, ſo named becauſe ſituate in the Territory of the Carangues, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating people; ſubdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightieſt of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withall killing many of his Miniſters and Garriſon-Souldiers, they were upon a ſecond conqueſt brought to the banks of a great Lake into which 20000 of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Yaguarcocha or the Lake of blood. 2 Otavallu, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferiour to the other; yet giving name unto the Cantred in which it ſtandeth. 3 Quito, the chief of this Reſort, and once the Regal ſeat of its proper Kings (till made ſubject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the ruines of whoſe Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Franciſco, built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Equinoctial, well fortified, and as well furniſhed with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500 Spaniards beſides the Natives. The ſtreets whereof ſtrait and broad: the buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Juſtice, and two Convents of Dominican and Franciſcan Friers. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a Flaming Mountain, or Vulcano; which in the year 1560 caſt out ſuch abundance of cinders, that if a rain had not hapned beyond expectation, had made great ſpoil upon the place. 4 Tacunga fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5 Rhiobamba in the Territory of the Purvaſii, 40 Leagues from that; each of them honoured with another of thoſe ancient Palaces. 6 Thomebamba neighboured by another of the Kings Palaces, but more magnificent then the former; ſituate in the Country of the Canares: amongſt whom anciently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors; whiles the Men ſtaid at home and ſpun, and attended houſewifry. 7 Cuenca 64 Leagues from Quito, on another Road, ſituate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Braſs, Iron, and veins of Sulphur. 8 Loxa, ſixteen Leagues ſouthwards of Cuenca, ſituate in the fift Degree of Southern Latitude, and in a ſweet and pleaſant Valley called Guxibamba, between two fine Riverets. The Citizens well furniſhed with Horſe and Armour, but not otherwiſe wealthy. 9 Zamora, twenty Leagues on the Eaſt of Loxa; and 10 Jaen, 35 from that: both ſituate in the Province of Quachimayo, and both ſo called in reference to two Cities of thoſe names in Spain: Then on the Sea coaſts, there are, 11 Portus Vetus (Puerto Veio as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea-ſide, but in ſo ill an Air that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the firſt Towns of this Country poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monſtrous Giant; whoſe Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12 Mantu the Port Town to Porto Veio, from whence the trade is driven betwixt Panuma and Peru; the town it ſelf ſituate in a rich vein of Emeralds. 13 Guayaquill, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called alſo Gulata; ſeated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, neer the influx of the River Guayaquil; a noted and much frequented Empory. 14 Caſtro, a Colonie of Spaniards planted, An. 1568 in that part of this Country which they call Provincia de los Eſmeraldos, bordering on Popayan. 15 S. Michael, by the old Natives called Piura, the firſt Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwiſe of no eſtimation. 16 Payta, a ſmall Town, but neighboured by the ſafeſt and moſt frequented Haven of all this Country; as guarded from the winde by the Cape of S. Helens on the North, and Punta Piurina on the South; two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt An. 1587. by Capt. Cavendiſh; Who at the ſame time alſo pillaged the Iſle of Puna, the moſt noted Iland of this Tract, ſituate in the Bay of Tombez, as was ſaid before. Fruitfull of all things neceſſary to the life of man; Parats for pleaſure, Sarzaparilla for his health. The people in preceding times ſo ſtout and Warlike that they maintained a long War with thoſe of Tombez, till in the end compoſed by the mediation of the King of Peru (to whom the King hereof (for a King it had) became an Homager; as ſince their embracing of the Goſpel, to the Kings of Spain.

2 LOS QUIXOS, lieth on the East of Quito, and the west of El Dorada, (one of the Cantreds of Guiana, so called from its abundance of Gold) but little different in the nature of the soil and people from the Province of Quito, but that this is somewhat the more barren, and less stored with those rich metals which the Spaniards come for. The People have also a distinct tongue of their own, though they both understand and speak the Peruvian language.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Baeza, built in the year 1559. (which was within two years of the first discovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avila; 18 leagues from Quito towards the East: now the seat of the Governour. 2 Archidona, 20 leagues on the the South-east of Baeza. 3 Avila, on the North of Archidona; so called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before mentioned, or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4 Sevilla del Oro, a Colonie of the Spaniards, as the others are.

On the East of this Province lieth the Cantred of Canelam, inhabited by a blockish and ignorant People, and destitute of all things necessary for the comforts of life. Most mercilesly tormented, and cast to dogs to be devoured, by Pizarro, because they could not shew him the readiest way to some richer Country then their own; this being the most barren Region of that part of Peru which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eastwards yet in that part which they call the Andes, lie the Cantreds of the Bracomori, commonly called Juan de Salinas, by the name of the first Discoverer of it: A Country not inferior unto many for the quantity of Gold, superior to any for the pureness of it. Chief Towns of which, 1 Valladolit, 2 Loiola, by the Natives called Cumbinama; 3 S. Jago de las Montannas (or S. James of the Mountains) all Spanish Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinis à Loiola, once the Pro-Prefect of the Province, by whom first thorowly subdued to the Crown of Spain.

3 LIMA, called also LOS REYES, is bounded on the North with Quito, on the South with Charcas, on the West with Mare del Zur, on the East with Collao and the Province of Cusco. So named from Lima or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the 6. to the 16. Degree of Southern Latitude: or measuring it from the Promontorie del Aguja North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250 leagues. The soil of the same nature with that of Quito, but more distributed into Vallies, and better peopled.

Places of most observation, 1 Miraflores in the valley of Zanu, 110 leagues on the North of Lima, and about five leagues distant from the Sea, on which it hath an Haven belonging to it, called Chencepen. The Town well seated, and inhabited by a wealthy people, made such by the abundance of Sugar canes in the neighbouring Valley. 2 Truxillo, in the rich and flourishing Valley of Chimo, on the banks of a small, but pleasant River, and about two leagues from the sea; where it hath a large, but unsafe Haven, which they call El Azzecife de Trugillo. The Town it self situate in the 7. Degree and 30 minutes of Southern Latitude: well built and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500 Spaniards besides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of several Orders. 3 La Parilla, in the valley of the Santa, in which it standeth, and by which it is furnished with a safe and convenient Road for shipping; 20 leagues Southwards of Truxillo, and neighboured by rich Mines of silver not long since discovered. 4 Arnedo, seated amongst Vineyards in the Valley of Chancay, ten leagues North of Lima. 5 Lima, by the Spaniards called Cividad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Valley of Lima, the most fruitful part of all Peru, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees and an half. Built with much art, for all the chief streets answer to the Market-place; scarce any private house which hath not water conveyed into it from the River; environed round about with sweet fields, and most pleasant gardens. The founder of it Francisco Pizarro, who laid the first stone on Twelf day (which the Spaniards call the Feast of Kings) whence it had the name, An. 1553. A Town of greater wealth then bigness, the Riches of Peru passing yearly thorow it: well housed, whether we respect the private or publike edifices: the Cathedral Church, made after the the model of that of Sevil; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Justice, and the Palaces of the Archbishop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly buildings; the Cathedral Church so well endowed, that the Revenues of the Archbishop do amount yearly to 30000 Ducats, besides what belongeth to the Canons and other Ministers. 6 Collao, the Haven town to Lima, from which two leagues distant: a Town of 600 families, for the most part Sea-men; every house having some Cellar in it for the stowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the use of Mariners; besides those, publike ware-houses for the several commodities which pass from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579. when sacked and spoiled of infinite treasures by Sir Francis Drake; since that time strengthened by two Bulwarks, and a wall of earth, with 30 peece of Brass Ordnance planted on the works. 7 Pachacama in the Valley so called, but four leagues on the South of Lima: memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 900000 Ducats of gold and silver, not reckoning in those infinite treasures which the souldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8 Guarco, a Colonie of 300 Spaniards, sixteen leagues on the South of Pachacama; environed with the best fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9 Valverde, in a Valley of the same name, so called from the perpetual greenness of it; best furnished with Vines, and those affording the best wines of all this Country. A large Town, consisting of 500 Spaniards, besides women and children, and other inhabitants of the Country: well traded, considering its distance from the Sea, Puerto Quemado the Haven to it, being six leagues off; and beautified with a fair Church, an Hospital, three Frieries, and the handsomest women of these parts. Distant from Lima 35 leagues. 10 Castro Verreyna, in the Valley of Chocolococha, 60 leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the purest Silver, digged out of a dry and barren hill, alwayes covered with snow, and standing in so sharp an air, that the Spanish women women will not be delivered in it, but are carried further off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that vein of Tobacco, which our Good-fellows celebrate by the name of the right Verreinas. 11 Arequipa in the Valley of Quilca, 120 leagues from Lima, a pleaſing and delightfull town; which ſituate at the foot of a flaming mountain, (from which in the year 1600 it received much harm) enjoyeth a freſh and temperate Air, and a ſoil alwayes flouriſhing. The ſilver of Plata and Potoſi paſſeth thorow this town, and is ſhipped for Panama, at an Haven belonging to it, ſituate on the mouth of the River Chile (upon which Arequipa ſtandeth) but diſtant from the town about 14 leagues. 12 Caxamalca, more within the land, but more towards the North; heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru; memorable for the impriſonment and murder of Atabilaba, or Athnalpa, the laſt King of this Country, vanquiſhed not far off by Franciſco Pizarro. 13 Cachapoyaro, in the Cantred ſo called, the beſt inhabited of any one Cantred of thoſe parts, ſuppoſed to contain in it 20000 of the Natural Inhabitants which pay duties to the Kings of Spain; and ſo eſteemed for beautiful women, that from hence the Kings were antiently furniſhed with their Concubines. 14 Leon de Guanuco, (the addition given it from the Province in which it ſtandeth) a Colonie of Spaniards, rich, ſweet, and very pleaſantly ſeated: beautified heretofore with a moſt magnificent Palace of the Kings; as now with ſome Religious houſes, a College of Jeſuites, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purpoſely paſſed over.

4 CUSCO comprehendeth, as the chief, all thoſe ſeveral Provinces of the Hill-Countries, and the Andes, which lie Southwards of the Province or Cantred of Guanaco. Bleſt with a ſweet and temperate Air, not over-ſcalded with the Sun, nor dulled with the diſtempers of the Evening-miſts: the Country full of freſh Rivers, notable good paſturage and great herds of Cattel; well ſtored with Coca, which is gathered here in ſome abundance, and moſt excellent Veniſon.

Places of moſt repute in it, 1 Bombon, in the ſame Latitude with Lima; neighboured by a Lake called Laguna de Chinca cocha, ten leagues in compaſs, begirt about with pleaſant hils, and built upon with many rich and as pleaſant villages; out of which runneth the River Marannon, one of the greateſt of theſe parts, ſuppoſed by the Inhabitants to end his courſe in the Mare del Noort. 2 Parcos, once beautified with a Regal Palace, ſeated on the top of a little hill, and begirt about with craggie mountains. 3 Guamanga, by the Spaniards called S. Juan de la Vittoria, ſituate under the 13 Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of a freſh and pleaſing ſtream: well built, the houſes being all of ſtone, and tiled or flatted; three Churches, one of them a Cathedral, beſides divers Convents. 4 Bilcar, ſuppoſed to be built in the very Center of Peru; where ſtill remain the ruines of a ſumptuous Palace. 5 Guancabelica, a new Town, or but newly raiſed into eſteem, ſuppoſed to contain at the preſent 2000 Spaniards, and double that number of the Natives. Increaſed ſince the year 1566. from a beggerly Village to this greatneſs, by the Mines of Quick-ſilver then diſcovered: Mines of ſuch Riches, that the Kings part out of them amounteth yearly to above 40000 Pezoes, which is about 130000 l. of our Engliſh money. And yet this is not all the benefit he receives from them neither; that Mineral being found ſo neceſſary for the purifying and ſpeedy extraction of their Gold, that it is not ſaid without cauſe by the Chymiſts, that Quick-ſilver gives the matter to Gold, and Sulphur the form. 6 CUSCO, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees and 30 minutes, about 130 leagues on the Eaſt of Lima; and ſituate in a rugged and unequal ſoil, begirt with Mountains; but on both ſides of a pleaſant and commodious River. Once the ſeat-royal of the Ingas or Peruvian Kings; who the more to beautifie this City, commanded every one of his Nobility to build here a Palace for their continual abode: ſtill of moſt credit in this Country, both for beauty and bigneſs, and the multitudes of Inhabitants; here being thought to dwell 3000 Spaniards, and 10000 of the Natives, beſides women and children. The Palace of the Kings advanced on a lofty mountain, was held to be a work of ſo great magnificence, built of ſuch huge and maſſie ſtones, that the Spaniards thought it to have been the work rather of devils then of men. Now miſerably defaced, moſt of the ſtones being tumbled down to build private houſes in the City; ſome of the Churches raiſed alſo by the ruines of it, and amongſt them perhaps both the Biſhops Palace and Cathedral, whoſe annual Rents are eſtimated at 20000 Ducats. Yet did not this vaſt Building yield more luſtre to the City of Cuſco, then a ſpacious Market-place; the Center in which thoſe highwayes did meet together, which the Ingas had cauſed to be made croſs the Kingdom, both for length and breadth, with moſt incredible charge and pains, for the uſe of their Subjects. Of which more hereafter. 7 S. Franciſco de la Vittoria, at the foot of the Andes, a Spaniſh Colonie, and about 20 leagues from Cuſco. 8 S. Juan del Oro, in the Valley of Caruayan, neighboured with rich Mines of the pureſt Gold, whence it had the name; a Colonie of Spaniards alſo. Beyond the Andes lie ſome Countries much famed for wealth; the diſcovery whereof hath often been attempted by the Spaniards, ſometimes with loſs, not ſeldom with ſome hopes of a better fortune, but hitherto without ſucceſs.

5 COLLAO lieth on the South of thoſe Provinces which we have comprehended under the name of Cuſco; having on the Weſt the reſt of Lima, on the South Los Charchos, on the Eaſt thoſe unknown Countries beyond the Andes. Shut up on the Eaſt and Weſt by two mountainous Ridges; which keeping in one main body till they come beyond the City of Cuſco, do there divide themſelves, and grow wider and wider, not to meet again.

The Country plain and full of Rivers; well ſtored with rich paſtures, and thoſe paſtures with great herds of Cattel: barren of Corn, and not well furniſhed with Maize; inſtead whereof they make their bread of a Root called Popa, dried in the ſun and bruiſed to powder; of which the Spaniards make great gain at the Mines of Potosi. Yet notwithstanding this great want, it is thought to be the most populous part of all Peru; the soundness and temperature of the Air (which is here very much commended) as much conducing to the populositie of a Country as the richness and plenties of the Soyl. The people also of a clearer and more solid judgement then the rest of Peru: and so well skilled in the observations of the course of the Moon, that the Spaniards at their coming hither, found the year distinguished into Moneths, weeks, dayes; for each of which they had a proper and significant name. The famous Lake of Titicaca is within this Province.

Places of greatest note in it, 1 Chuquinga, naturally strong and almost inaccessible, invironed either with unfordable waters, or impassable Mountains: one Causey only leading to it, which for the space of three Leagues, is said to be capable but of one at once. 2 Ayavire, enobled with many fair and costly buildings; specially with Monuments of the dead which exceed the rest both in cost and number: for that cause by the Spaniards called Las Sepulturas. The Inhabitants of this Tract much wasted by the Civil Wars which the Spaniards had amongst themselves. 3 Hatuncolla the Metropolis or chief Town of this Province, as the name doth signifie: not far from which the famous River Caravaya, famous for the abundance of Gold in the sands thereof, hath its first original. 4 Chiquita, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the banks of the Lake of Titicaca; a Town of so great trade and riches, that the Governour hereof is named immediatly by the King; his place being estimated at the worth of 50000 Ducats yeerly. 5 Tiaguanaco, at the mouth or out-let of that Lake; supposed to be the most ancient Burrough of Peru: now most remarkable for the ruines of certain great and stupendious buildings, some of the stones whereof are said to be 30 foot long, fifteen foot in breadth, and six in thickness: not to be brought thither without the help of Iron Engines (which this People had not till of late) but by some strange Arts. 5 De la Paz, or Nuestra Sennora de la Paz, by the Spaniards called also Pueblo Neuvo, and by the Natives Chiquiabo, according to the name of the Cantred in which it standeth, is situate at the foot of a little Mountain, by which defended from the injuries of winde and weather; but over-looking a large plain of great fertility, well watered, and well wooded both for fruits and fewell. 7 Chilane, 8 Acos, 9 Pomata, 10 Cepita; and others of as little note.

6. LOS CHARCAS on the North is bounded with Lima, and Collao; on the South with Chile; on the West with Mare del Zur; on the East with some Countries not yet well discovered, interposed betwixt it and the Province of Rio de la Plata. This also called by the name of Plata, according to the name of the chief City of it.

The Country extended in length from North to South, but 300 Leagues; but measuring by the Sea-shores, above 400. Not very rich in corn or cattel, though in many places furnished with good Pasture-grounds; but for the inexhaustible Mines of Gold and Silver, not to be equalled in Peru. Of these the principal those of Porco and Potosi, but these last the chief: out of which comes that mass of Silver, which yieldeth the King so much profit yeerly, as before was mentioned. The Mine 200 Fathoms deep, to which they do descend by Ladders made of raw Hides, 800 steps: some of the workmen not seeing the Sun many moneths together; many fall down with their loads of silver on their backs, pulling others after them; and many dying in the Works for want of Air. For the refining of this Silver there are 52 Engines or Silver-Mills upon a River neer unto it; 22 more in the Valley of Tarapia not far off, besides many which they turn with horses. The Poets words never more literally verified then in these deep Mines; where speaking of the Iron-Age, he describes it thus;

Nec tantum segetes, alimentaque debita dives
Poscebatur humus; sed itum est in viscera terræ;
Quasque recondiderat, Stygiisque admoverat umbris,
Effodiuntur opes, irritamenta malorum.

Which I finde thus rendred by George Sandys.

Nor with rich Earths just nourishments content,
That powerfull evil, which all power invades,
By her well hid, and wrapt in Stygian shades.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Plata, so called from the rich Mines of Silver, found in Mount Porco neer adjoyning, well emptied by the ancient Ingas, but searched into again by Francisco Pizarro, who (it is thought) might have raised hence 200000 Ducats of yeerly income, if hopes of greater at Potosi had not took him off. The town commodiously seated in a fruitfull soil, in the 19th. Degreee of Latitude, and 180 Leagues distant from the City of Cusco; honoured with the seat of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice; and beautified (besides many Religious houses) with a fair Cathedral; the See of the best endowed Bishoprick of all Peru; his Revenues being estimated at 80000 Ducats of yeerly Rents. By the Natives it is called Chuquisacay. 2 Oropesa, twenty Leagues from Plata, built by Don Francis de Toledo, when Vice-Roy here, in the rich and pleasant Valley called Cochabamba, An. 1565. 3 Potosi, neighboured by those wealthy Mines already mentioned. Discovered first in the year 1545. before which time this Town was but a sorry Village; now the best peopled and frequented in all the Province; said to be constantly inhabited by four or five thousand Spaniards, many more of the Natives;

Natives; not ſo few as 30000 VVorkmen appertaining to it, but lodged in the Villages adjoyning: beſides the infinite reſort of Merchants in purſuit of profit, and idle Gallants who come hither for their Luſts and Pleaſures. Situate in the 21 degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, in a cold and very barren ſoil; yet plentifully furniſhed with all commodities, both for neceſſity and delight. For as the money is, ſo the Market always. 4 Miſque, a ſmall Town, but one which furniſheth Potoſia, with good plenty of wine, as 5 Lagunilla, and 6 Tarixa, do with VVheat, Maize, Sugar, and choice of fruits. 7 Arica, the moſt noted Haven of this Country, in the Latitude of 19 Degrees, and 80 Leagues or thereabouts from the Mines of Potoſia; the wealth whereof brought hither on the backs of their ſheep, is here ſhipped for Lima; the truth hereof experienced by Sir Francis Drake, who ſeized here on three Spaniſh Ships, in one of which was 57 Bars of ſilver, each of them twenty pound weight apiece. Few other Towns, if any, upon all this coaſt, which is altogether Rockie, barren, and unfit for habitation; accordingly but little peopled, or not at all.

Come we now to the Peruvian ſtory, which we ſhall ſum up with as much brevity as we can: The People generally governed by the Chief of their Tribes, as in all Countries elſe where neither the Arms of Forreiners, nor the ambition of ſome few of the Natives, had not diminiſhed any thing of thoſe Natural Rights. Not ſubject to any one Supream till theſe latter times; the Ingas, or Monarchs of Peru growing unto their greatneſs but a little before their Fall. Their Territory at the firſt ſo ſmall that it was not above five or ſix Leagues in compaſs; ſituate in that part of the Country where the City of Cuſco now ſtandeth. Oppoſed at their firſt incroachments by the Cannares, a valiant Nation, and likely to have had the better, if the Ingas had not helped themſelves by a piece of wit: giving it out, that their Family had not only been the Seminary from which mankinde came; but the Authors of that Religion alſo which was then in uſe; particularly that the whole world having been deſtroyed by a Flood, except only ſeven (ſo far they hit upon the truth) which ſeven had hid themſelves in a Cave called Paticambo; where having lived in ſafety till the fury of the waters had been aſſwaged, they came abroad at laſt and re-peopled the Country; that Viracocha the Creator, and great God of Nature had appeared to one of them, and taught him how, and with what rites he would be worſhipped; which rites were afterwards received over all Peru. And finally that the ſame Viracocha had appeared lately to the chief of their Family; aſſuring him that he would aid him with inviſible forces againſt all their enemies. This tale ſoon gained belief amongſt thoſe Barbarians; and that belief drew many to take part with the Ingas, by that aid victorious. This is ſuppoſed to have hapned 400 years before the Spaniards put an end to this flouriſhing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. VVithin which time they had brought all this Country which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoyning Provinces under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Ingas, as the Ægyptians Pharaoh, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga ſignifying an Emperour, as Capa Ingas (by which they alſo ſometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much reverenced by their Subjects, and ſo faithfully ſerved, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treaſon. Nor wanted they good arts whereby to indeer their Subjects, and keep them out of leiſure to foment new factions. The way of indeerment, by the fair and ſatisfactory diſtribution of the ſpoils gotten in the wars, whether Lands or Goods: all which they divided into three parts: allotting the firſt unto the ſervice of the Gods; the ſecond for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third to the relief of the common people. A diſtribution far more equal then that of Lycurgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cauſe of wars, they kept the people buſied in their Works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the Conquered Provinces, which ſerved not only as Forts to aſſure the Conqueſt, but were employed as Store-houſes to lay up Proviſions, diſtributed amongſt the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of great trouble, ſo of chiefeſt uſe, was the croſs-wayes they made over all the Country, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 Leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome and Ægypt. For they were forced to raiſe the ground in many places to the heighth of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flatteſt Plains; to cut thorow ſome Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even ſuch wayes as were uneaſie, and ſupport the Precipices: and in the Plains to vanquiſh ſo many difficulties, as the uncertain foundation of a ſandy Country muſt needs carry with it. Kept to theſe tasks, the people had no leiſure to think of practiſes: yet well content to undergo them, in regard they ſaw it tended to the Publike Benefit. And for the Caciques (ſo they call the Nobility) the Inga did not only command them to reſide in Cuſco, to be aſſured of their perſons: but cauſed them to ſend their Children to be brought up there; that they might ſerve as Hoſtages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered alſo that all ſuch as repaired to Cuſco the Imperial City, ſhould be attired according to his own Country faſhion; ſo to prevent thoſe Leagues and Aſſociations, which otherwiſe without any note or obſervation might be made amongſt them. Many ſuch Politike Inſtitutions were by them deviſed, which had little of the Barbarous in them, and clearly ſhewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads beſides thoſe of China. What elſe concerns the ſtorie of them, offereth it ſelf in the following Catalogue of

The Kings of Peru.

1. Manga-Capac, deſcended of the chief of the firſt ſeven Families, the firſt who laid the foundation of this puiſſant Monarchie; ſubdued the Cannares, and built the City of Cuſco.

2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldeſt ſon of Mango, ſubdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancara.

3. Loque-

3. Loque-Yupanqui, the ſon of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayavire, the Canus, and the Inhabitants about Titicaca, the firſt advancer of the ſervice of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many viſits.

4. Mayta-Capac, the ſon of Yupanqui, ſubdued all the reſt of Collao, the Province of Chuquiapa, and a great part of the Charcas.

5. Capac Yupanqui, or Yupanqui II. the ſon of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Weſtward unto Mare del Zur.

6. Rocha II. or Yncha Rocha, eldeſt ſon of Yupanqui the ſecond, enlarged his Kingdome towards the North, by the conqueſt of the great Province of Antabuyallam, and many others.

7. Jahuar-Huacac, ſon of Rocha the ſecond, added to his Eſtates (by the valour of his brother Mayta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Depoſed by the practiſe of his ſon.

8. Viracocha, the ſon of Huacac, having ſetled and inlarged his Empire; raiſed many great and ſtately works, and amongſt others many Aquæducts, of great uſe but charge. For fear of him, Hancohualla, King of the Chuncas, with many thouſands of his People forſook their Country.

9. Pachacutec-Ynca, ſon of Virachoca, improved his Kingdom by the conqueſt of many Provinces lying towards the Andes, and South-Sea; with that of Caxamalcu Northwards.

10. Yupanqui III. or Yncha Yupanchi, ſon of Pachacutec, ſubdued the Conches, and Moxes, with ſome part of Chile.

11. Yupanqui IV. or Tapac Ynca Yupanchi, ſon of Yupanqui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.

12. Huayna-Capac, or Guaynacapac, ſon of Yupanqui the fourth, the moſt mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is ſuppoſed to be the founder of thoſe two great Roads ſpoken of before.

13. Huaſcar, or Guaſcar Ynca, the eldeſt ſon of Guaynacapa, after a reign of five years depoſed and ſlain by his Brother.

14. Athualpa, or Atubaliba, the third ſon Guaynacapa, by the daughter and heir of the King of Quito: into which Kingdom he ſucceeded by the will of his Father. Commanded by his Brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with ſuch power, that he overcame him, and ſo gained the Kingdom. Vanquiſhed afterwards by Pizarro at the battle of Caxamalca, he was taken Priſoner. And though he gave in ranſome for his life and liberty, an houſe piled up on all ſides with Gold and Silver, valued (as ſome ſay) at ten millions of Crowns; yet they perfidiouſly ſlew him.

1533 15. Mango-Capac II. the ſecond ſon of Guaynacapac, ſubſtituted by Pizarro in his Brothers Throne; after many viciſſitudes of Fortune, was at laſt ſlain in the City of Cuſco; and ſo the Kingdom of the Ingas began and ended in a Prince of the ſame name; as it had happened formerly to ſome other Eſtates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who ſubdued this moſt potent and flouriſhing Kingdom, and made it a member of the Spaniſh Empire; and we ſhall find that he was born at Truſiglio, a village of Navarr; and by the poor whore his mother, laid in the Church-porch, and ſo left to Gods providence: by whoſe direction (there being none found that would give him the breaſt) he was nouriſhed for certain daies, by ſucking a Sow. At laſt, one Gonſalles, a ſouldier, acknowledged him for his ſon, put him to nurſe, and when he was ſomewhat grown, ſet him to keep his Swine: ſome of which being ſtrayed, the boy durſt not for fear return home, but betook himſelf to his heels, ran unto Sevil, and there ſhipped himſelf for America; where he attended Alfonſo de Dioda in the diſcovery of the Countries beyond the Golf of Uraba; Balboa in his voyage to the South Sea; and Pedro de Avila in the conqueſt of Panama. Grown rich by theſe Adventures, he aſſociated himſelf with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Luques a rich Prieſt: who betwixt them raiſed 220 ſouldiers, and in the year 1525. went to ſeek their Fortunes on thoſe Southern Seas, which Balboa had before diſcovered. After divers repulſes at his landing, and ſome hardſhip which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took ſome of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the wealth of the Country; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commiſſion for the conqueſt of it; excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furniſhed he landeth in Peru again, at ſuch time as the wars grew hot betwixt the two Brethren for the Kingdom; and taking part with the faction of Guaſcar, marched againſt Atubaliba; whom he met with in the Plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a parley, then to fight a Battel. Pizarro taking this advantage, picked a quarrel with him, and ſuddenly charged upon him with his Horſe and Ordnance, ſlaying his Guard without reſiſtance; and coming near the Kings perſon (who was then carryed on mens ſhoulders) pulled him down by the Clothes, Clothes, and took him Priſoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 80000 Caſtellans; and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his houſhold Plate; and in the ſpoil of Caxamalca, almoſt infinite riches. This, with the Kings ranſom, came to ſo great a ſumme, that beſides the fift part which Pizarro ſent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his Brethren kept unto themſelves; every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horſeman twice as much, for their part of the ſpoyl; beſides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miſerable King, their Priſoner, hath been ſhewn already. Upon which Act, though they put many fair pretences; yet God declared that he was not pleaſed with their proceedings; few of the greateſt undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro in reward of ſo great a ſervice was made the firſt Viceroy of Peru, and created Marqueſs of Anatilla; yet having put to death Almagro, his chief companion, who had raiſed a ſtrong faction in that State; he was after ſlain at Lima, by ſome of that faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befell all the reſt; his brother John ſlain by the Peruvians, Martin, in Lima with himſelf; Ferdinando ſecretly made away in priſon; and finally Gonſales the fourth Brother (with the ſon of Almagro) ſeverally executed for their Treaſons and Inſurrections which they had acted in this Country againſt their King. So little joy doth wealth ill-gotten bring along with it, to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whoſe ſtrange both fortunes and misfortunes in the courſe of his life, are to be paralelled only with the like of Sinan, a great Baſſa in the Court of Selimus the firſt; who being born of baſe parentage, as he being a child was ſleeping in the ſhade, had his genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkiſh Officers which uſually provided yong boyes for the ſervice of the Grand Signieur, being in Epyrus (for that was Sinans Country) and hearing of this ſo extraordinary an Eunuch; took him among others, along with them to the Court; where under Mahomet the great, Bajazet the ſecond, and his ſon Selimus, he ſo exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Baſſa of the Court; and ſo well deſerved it, that he was accounted Selimus right hand, and was indeed the man, to whoſe valour eſpecially, the Turks owe their Kingdom of Ægypt; in which Kingdom, then not fully ſetled, he was alſo ſlain.

But to return unto Peru, no queſtion but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For though we find no particular muſters which they made of their men; or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field; yet by their great ſucceſſes, and many victories, we may conclude them to be maſters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of conduct. Nor can we otherwiſe conjecture at the greatneſs of their yearly income, but by the greatneſs of their treaſure; ſo infinite and almoſt incredible, that all the Veſſels of the Kings houſe, his Table, and Kitchin were of Gold and Silver; Statues of Giants in his Wardrope, together with the reſemblances in proportion and bigneſs, of all the Beaſts, Birds, Trees, Plants, and Fiſhes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the pureſt Gold; Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Cheſts, all of Gold or Silver; Billets of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billets of Wood cut out for the fire; three houſes full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, beſides infinite other treaſures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew ſo wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an horſe, 60 Crowns for a ſmall Veſſel of Wine, and forty for a pair of Shooes: Conſuming all upon their Luſts, and ſacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

CHILE.

CHILE is bounded on the North with the Deſart of Alacama, 90 Leagues in length, interpoſed betwixt it and Peru: on the Weſt with Mare del Zur: on the South with the Streits of Magellan; and on the Eaſt as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick; the Countries lying on the Eaſt betwixt it and Paragnay, not yet well diſcovered.

This Country lyeth wholly beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by conſequence in the temperate Zone: extended in length from the borders of Peru, to the mouth of the Streits, 500 Leagues, but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile, from the word Chil (which in more tongues then ours doth ſignifie as much as cold) from the extream coldneſs of the Aire and Clime; ſo vehement here in our Summer Solſtice, that many times both the Horſes and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardned like a piece of Marble.

The ſoil hereof in the midland parts Mountainous and unfruitfull; towards the Sea-ſide, levell, fertile, and watered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and moſt excellent paſturage; plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, ſtore of Cattel, and Wine enough for the uſe of the people; the Vines brought hither out of Spain proſpering here exceedingly; as do alſo all the Fruits and Plants which are ſent from hence into this Country. The people very tall and warlike, ſome of them of a Gigantine ſtature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with this greatneſs, where not much provoked. Their garments of the skins of Beaſts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: white of complexion, but as hirſute and ſhaggie-haired, as the reſt of the Salvages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its ſeveral Provinces: Divided commonly into 1 Chile, ſpecially ſo called, and 2 Magellanica.

1. CHILE ſpecially ſo called, is bounded on the North with the Deſart of Alacama; on the South with Magellanica; on the Weſt with Mare del Zur; and on the Eaſt with ſome unknown Countries, lying betwixt it and Paragnay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata, not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reaſon of the name, together with the nature of the ſoyl and people, we have ſeen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Rio de Copayapo, giving name unto a Promontorie near the influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2 Rio de Coquimbo, 3 La Ligua, 4 Topocalma, 5 Cacapool, 6 Canten; all falling into Mare del Zur; and beſides theſe, a nameleſs, but more famous River, which in the day time runneth with a violent current, and in the night hath no water at all. The reaſon of it is, becauſe this River having no conſtant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains; which in the heat of the day melted into water, is precipitately carryed into the Sea; but congealed in the coldneſs of the night, yields no water at all, whereby the Channel becometh empty.

Places of moſt obſervation in it, 1 Copiapo, giving name to a fertile Valley, in the moſt Northern tract hereof; and neighboured by a ſmall, but commodious Haven. 2 Serena, a Colonie of the Spaniards, on the Sea-ſide, not far from the influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whoſe banks it is ſeated; where built by Baldivia the Conquerour and firſt Governour of this Province, An. 1544. The territory round about it rich in Mines of Gold: the Town it ſelf of 200 houſes, but ſo well peopled, that at the landing of ſome of the Engliſh under Captain Drake, they preſently ſent out 300 Horſe and 200 Foot to compell them back unto their ſhips, which they did accordingly. 3 S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 houſes in it) becauſe the Reſidence of the Governour, and the Courts of Juſtice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and ſome Convents of Dominican and Franciſcan Friers; ſituate in the 34 Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of the River Topacalma; at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val paraiſo, the beſt and moſt noted of this Country; out of which the Engliſh under Drake took a Spaniſh ſhip, and therein 25000 Pezos of the pureſt Gold, beſides other Commodities. 4 Conception, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, ſituate on the ſhores of a large and capacious Bay (by the Natives called Penco) by which and the mountains on all ſides ſo ſtrongly fenced, that the Governour when diſtreſſed by the Savages (as ſometimes they are) retireth hither for his ſafety. Well fortified in ſuch places as are acceſſible, and garriſoned with 500 ſouldiers, beſides the Townſmen. Oppoſite hereunto lyeth the Iſle of S. Marie, ſo near the ſhore, that it ſeems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea; fruitful, and very well provided of Swine and Poultrie, but the people ſo in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Conception, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5 Auracona (ſo I think they call it) a ſtrong Fortreſs in the Country of the Auracans, the moſt potent Nation of theſe parts, who weary of the Spaniſh yoke, revolted againſt Baldivia, overcame him in a ſet fight, and at laſt killed him: this piece being thereupon forſaken, & of no more uſe. 6 De los Confines, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Country of thoſe Auracans, to ſerve for a defence to the Mines of Ongol near adjoyning:

joyning: distant from the Sea shores about 18 Leagues, enlarged by Garsias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Nueva de los infantes. 7 Imperiale, in the 38 Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude, situate on the banks of the River Cauten, an Episcopal See, and the best Fortress of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colonie of Spaniards in the year 1551. and by Baldivia called Al Imperiale, because they found an Eagle with two heads made in wood, on the doors of their houses; a monument perhaps of some Germans, who had here been shipwrackt. A Town of so great wealth and power before known to the Spaniards, that in a war betwixt them and the Araucans, spoken of before, they are said to have brought into the field 300000 men. 8 Villa Rica, another Colonie of Spaniards, 16 Leagues on the South-east of Imperiale, and 25 Leagues from the shores of Mare del Zur. 9 Baldivia, the most noted Town of all these parts, situate in the Valley of Guadallanguen, in the Latitude of 40 Degrees or thereabouts: adorned with a safe and capacious Haven, and neighboured by Mines of Gold of such infinite riches, that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of those Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each single workman, 25000 Crowns a man, and sometimes more. Sacked by the Savages An. 1599. since repaired by the Spaniards. 10 Osorno, on the Banks of the Bay of Chilve, (or Ancud, as the Savages call it) situate in a barren soyl, but well stored with Gold, and thought to be more populous then Valdivia it self. 11 Castro, the most Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44. built in a large and fruitful Iland of the Bay of Ancud, said to be 50 Leagues in length, but the breadth unequal; in some parts nine, in others not above two Leagues. 12 S. Juan de la Frontera, on the further side of the Andes, towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong also certain Ilands lying on the coasts and shores hereof. 1 S. Marie's, spoken of before. 2 Mocha, upon the South of that, five Leagues from the Continent, fruitful of grain, and very good pasturage; sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the descendants of those Americans who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their liberty against that Nation: of which so jealous, that they would not suffer the English under Drake and Cavendish to land amongst them, for fear they had been Spaniards, or some friends of theirs. 3 Castro, which we have spoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata; on the South with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Streits of Magelan; on the West with Mare del Zur; on the East with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick. So called from Magellanus, by whom first discovered; of whom we shall speak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Streits, 300 Leagues: in breadth from one Sea to the other, where broadest, above 400 Leagues; in some but 90 only, and in others less, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramis. The inland parts of the Country not yet discovered: those on the Sea side observed to be rockie and unfruitful, exposed for the most part of the year to such bitter colds, that the Snow lyeth alwaies on the Mountains. The people said to be tall of stature, and some of them of a Gigantine bigness, reported to be ten or eleven foot high; and by the Spaniards for that reason are called Patagons. Both great and less, sufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurnished of any houses, notwithstanding the rigour of the cold.

No Houses doth imply no Towns, and therefore we must look for none, in so rude a Country, as hath not hitherto conversed with more civil Nations. So that the most that we can do, is to coast the shores, and see what names of Ports or Promontories we can find therein. And first upon the Sea coasts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and so descending) 1 The Promontorie called Cabo de las Islas. 2 The Port or Haven of S. Stephen. 3 The Valley of Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Valley. 4 The Promontorie called Punta Delgado. 5 Porto de los Reyes. 6 Ancon Sinsalida, on the banks of a semi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few Ilands. 7 Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victorie, situate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Streits, so called from the name of the Ship in which some of Magellanes souldiers did first compass the world. For Ferdinand Magellano a noble Portugal, and well skilled in Navigation, at the perswasion or command of Charles the fifth, to whom (upon some discontents received in the Court of Emanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his service, undertook the finding out (if possible) a shorter cut to the Moluccos, then discovered formerly. In the year 1520 he began his voyage, and keeping on the coast to the South of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October, fel upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very entrance of this Streit, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon; and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of these narrow Seas, since called Fretum Magellanicum, and entred into Mare del Zur. Afterwards passing the Moluccos, he was killed in a fight against the Ilanders of S. Matthew, a little Iland not far off, but more near the Pilippins; which notwithstanding the ship called Victoria, returned to Spain in safety, and brought the welcome news of their good success.

We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that sayled round about the world, which may be true in a mitigated sense; viz. that he was the first Captain, or man of note that atchieved this enterprise, Magellanus perishing in the midst of it; and therefore is reported to have given for his device, a Globe, with this motto, Tu primus circumdedisti me. This navigation was begun, An. 1577. and in two years and an half with great vicissitude of fortune, finished; concerning which his famous voyage, a Poet then living, directed to him this Epigram.

Drake pererrati novit quem terminus orbis,
Quemq́, ſimul mundi vidit uterq́, polus:
Si taceant homines, facient te ſydera notum;
Sol neſcit comitis non memor eſſe ſui.

Drake, whom th'encompaſs'd earth ſo fully knew,
And whom at once both poles of heaven did view:
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forbear
To chronicle his fellow travailer.

This Fretum Magellanicum, theſe Magellan ſtraits, are in the 52 degree; and are by M. John Davis, who profeſſeth to know every Creek in them, thus deſcribed. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. "Marie, lyeth the firſt ſtrait, where it ebbeth and floweth with a violent ſwiftneſs: the ſtrait not be- "ing fully half a mile broad, and the firſt fall into it very dangerous and doubtful. Three leagues this "ſtrait continueth, when it openeth into a ſea, eight miles long, and as much broad; beyond which, ly- "eth the ſecond ſtrait, right Weſt, South-weſt from the firſt; a perilous and unpleaſing paſſage, three "leagues long, and a mile in breadth. This ſtrait openeth it ſelf into another ſea, which is extended even "to the Cape of victory; where is the ſtrait properly called the ſtrait of Magellane; a place of that na- "ture, that which way ſoever a man bend his courſe, he ſhall be ſure to have the wind againſt him. The "length hereof is 40 leagues; the breadth in ſome places two leagues over, in others not fully half a "mile. The Channel in depth 200 Fathoms, ſo no hope of Anchorage; the courſe of the water full of "turnings and changings; withal ſo violent, that when a ſhip is once entred, there is no returning. On "both ſides of it are high Mountains continually covered with ſnow; from which proceed thoſe counter- "winds, which beat with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place aſſuredly not pleaſing to view, and ve- "ry hazardous to paſs. So far, and to this purpoſe M. Davis.

But to proceed, the way thus opened, was travelled not long after, An. 1525. by Garſias de Loyaſa; next in the year 1534. by Simon de Alcazavo, and four years after by three ſhips of the Biſhop of Placenza in Spain; but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure thorow; till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1577. after which it grew more familiar amongſt the ſeamen; Howſoever, we are ſo much debtors to the attempts of others, as that we owe to them the moſt part of the names of thoſe Bayes and Promontories, which they diſcovered in the ſearch: though many of them ſince new named by the Engliſh and Hollanders. Thoſe of moſt note, proceeding from Cabo de la Victoria, 1 Cabo de Quade. 2 Cape Gallant 3 Cordes Bay. 4 Cape Froward, being the very point or Conus of this great Pyramis. 5 Porto Famine. 6 A little Iſle called Elizabeths Iland; and at the exit of the ſtrait into Mare del Noort, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending Northward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the main Ocean 1 Rio de la Crux, neighboured by a Promontorie called Cabo de las Bareras; where Magellano ſtaid all September, and the greateſt part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to diſcover further. 2 The Bay of S. Julian, out of which he ſet ſayl for this adventure, about the later end of Auguſt, leaving there two of his companions condemned of mutinie. 3 The Port of Deſire. 4 A large Promontorie called the Cape of S. George. 5 The outlets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6 A goodly Haven entituled Puerto de los Leones. 7 The Cape called Punta de terra plana. 8 The Bay of Anegada. 9 The Promontorie called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10 the River of S. Anne, beyond which lyeth the Province of the River. This is the moſt that I can ſay touching Magellanica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points and Promontories; and this is nothing (as we ſee) but a Nomenclator. It muſt be better peopled and more diſcovered, before it can afford diſcourſe of more variety. All we can adde, is that the paſſage back again from Mare del Zur to the Atlantick, hath not been found ſo ſafe and eaſie, as from the main Atlantick unto Mare del Zur. Attempted firſt by Ladrilliro a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile; and attempted only: performed not long after the voyage of Sir Francis Drake, by D. Pedro Sarmiento, imployed therein by Francis de Toledo, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no leſs danger; ſo much, that few have ſince endeavoured to return that way.

As for the fortunes & affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to underſtand that it was firſt diſcovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief friends and aſſociates. But he having other deſigns in his head about Peru, which he intended for himſelf, and to out Pizarro, did diſcover it only: the conqueſt of it being reſerved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro on the ſetling of his affairs by the death of Almagro, had imployed in that action. He going ſouldierlike to work, not only did ſubdue the people; but as he gained ground, built ſome Fortreſs, or planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. This done about the year 1544. his ill luck was to meet with a more ſtubborn and untractable people, then either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who quickly weary of the yoke, beſieged one of his Forts, encountred Baldivia himſelf coming with too ſmall a power to relieve his people, vanquiſhed and ſlew him in the field. Some adde that they poured Gold into his throat (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Craſſus) bidding him ſatiate himſelf with that which he ſo much thirſted. After this blow given in the year 1551. the Savages recovered the rich vallies of Aranco, Tucapel, and Purene; which they keep from them till this day: The Towns of Los Confines, and Villa Rica, both on the borders of thoſe Vallies, then deſerted alſo. Nor ſtaid they there, though they took time to breathe a little. For in the year 1599 (having provided themſelves of 200 Corſlets, and seventy Muskets) they brake out again; surprised and sacked the Town of Baldivia; forced Imperiale, after a whole years siege to surrender without any conditions; and in the year 1604. took Osorno by famine. Of thirteen Cities which the Spaniards had possessed amongst them, they had taken nine; some of them since recovered, but the most demolished. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Pedro de Starmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies to command those Streits, An. 1584. The one he setled near the mouth of the Streit, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jesus, and left therein 150 of his men; the other he intended on the narrowest place of the Streit, to be called Cividad del Roy Philip, which he resolved to fortifie, and plant with Ordnance. But winter coming on, he left there others of his men, promising to relieve them shortly with all things necessary. But such was his unhappy fate, that after many shipwracks and disappointments which befell unto him in the pursuit of his design; he was at last taken by the English, under the command of Sir Walter Rawleigh, who was there in person: and his two Colonies for want of timely succours, either starved at home, or eaten by the Savages as they ranged the Country.

OF PARAGVAY.

PARAGVAY is bounded on the South with Magellanica; on the East with the main Atlantick; on the North with Brasil; on the West with some unknown Countries betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay (one of the greatest of the world) which runneth thorow it: the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great store of Silver they expected from it.

The Country (for so much as hath been discovered) is said to be of a fruitfull soil; capable of Wheat and other fruits of the Fruits of Europe, which thrive here exceedingly: nor do the Cattell increase less which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horses multiplying in a wonderfull manner. Well stored with Sugar Canes; and not unfurnished with Mines both of Brass and Iron; some veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethysts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkeys almost infinite numbers; not to say any thing of Lyons, Tigers, and such hurtfull Creatures, which a few would be thought too many. Of the People there is nothing said, but what hath been before observed of the other Savages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1 De la Plata, whose course we have described already. 2 Rio de Buenos Ayres so called from the chief Town by which it runneth. 3 Zarcaranna, which riseth in the Country of the Diaguitas, and falling into a Lake at the end of his course, doth from thence pass into the body of De la Plata. 4 Estero, which rising in the Valley of Chalcaqui, and passing thorow two great Lakes, meets with 5 the Bermeio, and both together fall into De la Plata neer the Town of S. Foy. 6 Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain neer the Mines of Potosi, in the Province of Charcos; but his fall in the same River with those before. Then on the North side of that River, there is 7 that of S. Saviour, or S. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it; 8 Rio Nigro, or the Black River, of a longer course; but buried in the end, as the other is, in the Deeps of La Plata. 9 Tquaan, and 10 several others, whose united streams make the great River Parana, the second River of esteem in all this Country: But swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these 11 Rio de S. Martin, and 12 Rio Grande falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of 1 Rio de la Plata, 2 Tucaman, and 3 La Crux de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniard, or not well discovered, cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River; ascending many Leagues up the water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the soil and people, we have seen before.

Chief Towns hereof 1 Buenos Ayres, or Neustra Sennora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Cividad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern bank of the River of Plata, where built by Pedro de Mendoza, An. 1535. Deserted by the Inhabitants, and again new-Peopled by Cabesa de Vacca, An. 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally in the year 1582 re-edified and planted with a new Colony. Situate on the rising of a little hill, in the 34 Degree and 45 Minutes of Southern Latitude, and about 64 Leagues from the Mouth of the River; fortified with a mud Wall, and a little Castle, with some pieces of Ordnance; yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2 S. Fe, or S Fidei, 50 Leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the water neer the confluence of it with the River Estero: of the same bigness as the other, but somewhat richer: the People here being given to clothing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar, Rice, & other necessary Commodities. 3 Neustra Sennora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption only, higher up the River, from the mouth whereof 300 Leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25. and almost in the midst betwixt Peru, and Brasil; well built and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Country. Inhabited by three sorts of men, first natural Spaniards, of which here are accompted 400 Families; 2. The Mestizos, begotten by the Spaniard upon the Natives; and 3 Mulatos born of the Spaniards and the Negroes; of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake called Ytupuam, in the midst whereof an huge Rock, above 100 Fathom high above the water. 5 Cividad Real, by the Spaniards called also Ontiveros, by the Natives Guayra, 80 Leagues North from the Town of Assumption; situate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitfull soyl, but a sickly Air: for which cause, and the frequent insurrections of the Savages, but meanly peopled. 6 S. Anne, on the banks of the same River Parana; 7 S. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption, three noted Ports. 8 Puerto de Guaybiamo, 9 Puerto de la Candelaria, and 10 Puerto de Los Reyes, but whether Towns, or only Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last save one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas and the death of 80 of his men by the hands of the Savages.

2. TU-

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the confines of Chile, thorow which they make their way unto Mare del Zur, as thorow the Province of Rio de la Plata unto Mare del Nort: the exact bounds hereof to the North and South not yet resolved on.

The Country, for so much hereof as lieth towards Chile, well manured and fruitfull; that towards Magellanica, barren, untilled, and not well discovered; no veins of Gold or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable Air. Watered by the two Rivers of 1. Salado, so called from the brackishness and saltness of it; and 2 Del Estero, spoken of before, so named because sometimes it breaketh out of his banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and habit, in both which they conform to the garb of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof 1 S. Jago del Estero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco: the principal of this small Province, honoured with a Bishops See, and the seat of the Governour; and distant about 180 Leagues from Buenos Aires. 2 S. Michael de Tucuman, seated at the foot of a rockie mountain, but near a very fruitful soyl both for Corn and Pasturage, distant 28 Leagues from S. Jago. 3 Talavera, or Nuestra Sennora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Esteco; situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitful soyl, and inhabited by an industrious People, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-woolls, which grow hereabouts in great abundance: with which they drive a great trade at the Mines of Potosi, from hence distant but 140 Leagues. 4 Corduba, in a convenient place for trade, as being equally distant from S. Juan de la Frontera, in the Praefecture of Chile; and S. Foy, in Rio de la Plata; 50 Leagues from each; and seated in a Rode from Peru unto Buenos Aires; much travelled consequently by those who go from Peru to Brasil or Spain. 5 New London, and 6 New Cordura, built at such time as Garsias de Mendoza, son of the Marques of Cannete. and Vice Roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7 Morata, 8 Chocinoca, 9 Sococha, & 10 Calabinda; Townships belonging to the Natives.

3. S. CRUX DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guapay, and in the Country of the Chiquitos and Cherignanaes, two Tribes of the Savages: by some accounted to Peru, because under the Juridical Resort of Charcos, but so far distant from the neerest bounds of that Province (100 Spanish leagues at least) that I think fitter to accompt it to the Province of Paraguay, betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guapay it is wholly seated.

The soil abundantly productive of Maize and Wines; plenty of most sorts of American fruits, which I can give no English name to; a kind of Palm, of whose trunk they make great store of meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither soil nor Air agreeable to the fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So destitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water, preserved in pits: the cause of no small wants, and of many great murders, the people either dying for thirst, or killing one another for some water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Sancta Crux, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in open field, inlarging it self into many Plains, and thirsty Vallies: neighboured by a Brook or Torrent breaking from the Rocks; which four leagues from the town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the town with Fish. 2 Baranca, 60 leagues from the Mines of Potosi. 3 Tomina, 4 Lagunilla, and 5 Tarixa; three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the incursions and Alarms of the Cherignanaes. 6 Neyva Rioja, once a Colonie of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Cherignanaes, when the Count of Neyva was Vice-Roy of Peru: at what time Nuflo de Chaves, who in the year 1548. first discovered those parts, was treacherously slain by one of the Savages.

The principal Nations of this Country, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Quirandies, Timbues, and Carcares, the Chanes, Chiminei, Guaranyes, the Guayacurves, Cacoves, Guaxarapi, &c. on both sides of the River of Plata: the Tucumanes, Juries, and Diagnitas, in the Cantred of Tucuman; more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no hold, the Chnnesses, Xaquesses, Xacoaes, and the Xarayes, great and powerfull Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first discovery of this Country ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish Adventurer; who in the year 1515. passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees, and 40 minutes; and unadvisedly landing with too small a power, was there unfortunately slain. The design after prosecuted by Sebastian Cabot, An. 1526. who sailed against the stream as high as the River Parana: at the reception of which, the great River called till then by the name of Paragnay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortress called Fort Cabot; and 30 leagues more up the River, that called S. Anne, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcias a Portugal found him, in the year next following. In the year 1535. the business was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres; and sent John de Aiolas to discover Northwards; of whose unhappy end we have heard before: Not fully setled till the year 1540. when Alvares Nonnez, commonly called Cabesa de Vacca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the further planting of the Country, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

BRASIL.

BRASIL is bounded on the East with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick; on the West with ſome undiſcovered Countries, lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragnon; and on the South with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reaſon of the name I find not, except it came from the abundance of that wood called Braſil wood, which was found amongſt them; as the famous Iſle of Cyprus from its plenty of Cypreſſes.

It reacheth from the 29. to the 39. Degree of Southern Latitude; or meaſuring it by miles, it is ſaid to be 1500 miles from North to South, and 500 miles in breadth from the Sea to the Andes: which muſt be underſtood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwiſe all that which is poſſeſſed by the Portugals under the name of Braſil, is ſo ſhort of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they poſſeſs nothing but the Sea coaſts, and ſome few Leagues (comparatively) within the land, the greateſt part of it being ſo far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been diſcovered.

The Country full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forreſts, diverſified into Hils and Plains always pleaſant and green. The Air for the moſt part ſound and wholſom, by reaſon of the freſh winds which do reign amongſt them; there being all along the Coaſts certain quick winds riſing from the South, about two houres before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants: yet in regard it is ſomewhat moyſt, it is held to be more agreeable to old men then to young. The ſoil in moſt parts very fruitful, were it not cloied with too much rain; but howſoever liberally provided of Sugar canes, (no one Country more) for refining of which they have their Ingenios (as they call them) or Sugar houſes in moſt parts of the Country, in which they entertain many thouſand ſlaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea and Congo, and other maritime parts of Africk. A trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years in each of which they bring not out of Braſil to Portugal 150000 Arrobes of Sugar, every Arrobe containing 25 Buſhels of our Engliſh meaſure. Here is alſo infinite quantities of that red Wood uſed in dying Cloth, which we commonly call Braſil Wood; (but whether the wood took that name from the Country, or the Country rather from the wood, I determine not) the trees whereof are of that incredible greatneſs, that whole families live on an Arm of one of them, every tree being as populous as the moſt of our villages. In other Commodities common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular inſtance.

Amongſt the Rarities hereof, are reckoned 1 the Plant called Copiba, the bark of which being cut doth ſend out a Balm, the ſoveraign vertue whereof is ſo well known to the very Beaſts, that being bit by venemous ſerpents, they reſort unto it for their cure. 2 The Herb called Sentida or Viva, which roughly touched will cloſe the leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of ſight. 3 A kind of Wheat in the Valley neer unto S. Sebaſtian, which is continually growing, and alwayes ripe; or never wholly ripe, becauſe alwayes growing: for when one Ear doth grain, another doth bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4 The Oxeſiſh, with eyes and eye-lids, two arms a cubit long, and at each an hand with five fingers and nails, as in a man; under the arms two teats, inwards, like a Cow, in every female. 5 A Creature found of late about the Bay of All Saints, which had the face of an Ape, the feet of a Lion, and all the reſt of a man; of ſuch a terrible aſpect, that the Souldier who ſhot him fell down dead: but this I rather look on as an aberration of Nature then a rarity in her. 6 Beaſts of ſuch ſtrange ſhapes, and ſuch ſeveral kinds, that it may be ſaid of Braſil, as once of Africk, Semper aliquid apportat novi; every day ſome new object of Admiration.

The people here are endowed with a pretty underſtanding: as may ſeem by him, who tartly blamed the covetouſneſs of the Spaniſh, for coming from the other end of the world to dig for Gold; and holding up a wedge of Gold, cryed out, Behold the God of the Chriſtians! But in moſt places they are barbarous, the men and women go ſtark naked, and on high feſtival dayes hang Jewels in their lips: theſe feſtival days are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry, over the roſted body of a fat man; whom they cut in collops, called Boucon, and eat with great greedineſs, and as much delectation. They have two vile qualities, as being mindfull of injuries, and forgetfull of benefits. The Men cruel without meaſure; and the Women infinitely laſcivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reaſon of which one being demanded, made anſwer; becauſe they had amongſt them neither Law, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able Swimmers, as well Women as Men; and will ſtay under water an hour together. Women in Travel are here delivered without any great pain, and preſently go about their buſineſs belonging to good houſe-wives. The good-man (according to the faſhion of our kinder ſorts of Husbands in England, who are ſaid to breed their wives children) being ſick in their ſtead, and keeping their Bed; ſo far that he hath Brothes made him, is viſited by his Goſſips or Neighbours, and hath Junkets ſent to comfort him. And amongſt theſe there are ſome

Rarities,

Rarities, if not Monſtroſities in Nature: it being ſaid of thoſe which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like Beaſts, ſuch as Orſon is fained to have been in the old Romance; and probably ſo ingendred alſo; that the Guaymares disbowell women with childe, and roaſt the children; and finally that the ſavage Nation of Camucuiara have their Paps almoſt down unto their knees, which they tie about their waſte when they run, or go faſter then ordinary.

Rivers of note I finde not any till I come to Maragnon, though that a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, then proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way, as we croſs the Country, we ſhall not paſs them over without ſome remembrance. And ſo proceed we to the diviſion of the Country, not into Provinces or Nations, as in other Places, but into Prafectures, or Captainſhips as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we ſhall ſeverally touch on as we trace the coaſt, from the Province of Rio de la Plata, unto that of Guiana; that is to ſay,

1. The Captainſhip of S. VINCENT bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the moſt civil People of all Braſil. Chief Towns whereof 1 Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, capable of good Ships of burden, but diſtant from the Main three Leagues. A Town of no more then 120 houſes, yet the beſt of this Prafecture; beautified with a Pariſh Church, and two Convents of Friers. Taken and held two moneths by Sir Tho: Cavendiſh, An. 1591. ſince that environed with a Wall, and fortified with two Caſtles. 2 S. Vincents better built, but not ſo well fitted with an Haven; of about 70 houſes, and 100 Inhabitants. 3 Itange, and 4 Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of leſſer Veſſels. 5 S. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleaſant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River of Iniambis. A Town of about 100 houſes, one Church, two Convents, and a Colledge of Jeſuits; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains called Pernabiacaba. 6 S. Philips a ſmall Town on the banks of Iniambis, which there begins to inlarge it ſelf, and paſſing thence falleth at the laſt in the River Parana, one of the greateſt Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. Of RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, ſo called becauſe entred into that moneth by John Diaz de Solis, An. 1515. neglected by the Portugals, it was ſeized on by the French under the conduct of Villegagnone, employed herein by Admiral Chaſtillon, a great friend of the Hugonets, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge (as New-England afterwards for the like) but within three years after their firſt coming hither (An. 1558) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the ſword. Places of moſt conſideration in it, 1 Collignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, ſo named in honour of Gaſpar Colligni (commonly called Chaſtillon) by whoſe incouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River Janeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2 S. Sebaſtians, built at the mouth of the ſame Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four ſtrong Bulwarks. 3 Angra des Reyes, diſtant twelve Leagues Weſtward from the Mouth of the Bay; not long ſince made a Portugal Colony. Beſides theſe, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Braſilians, in which are ſaid to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. Of the HOLY GHOST (del Spiritu Santo) one of the moſt fertile Provinces of all Braſil; well ſtored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large and full of Fiſh. The only Town of note in it, is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief buildings of it, a Church dedicated to S. Francis, a Monaſtery of Benedictines, and a Colledge of Jeſuits; the chief conveniency, a ſafe and commodious Haven, capable of the greateſt Veſſels.

4. Of PORTO SEGURO, the ſecure Haven, ſo called by Capralis who firſt diſcovered it, when being toſſed at ſea by a terrible tempeſt, he had here refreſhed himſelf. Chief Towns hereof 1. Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven; of more Antiquity then Fame; of more fame then bigneſs; as not containing fully 200 Families. 2 Santa Crux, three Leagues from the other; a poor Town, with as poor an Harbour: the Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Avera in the Realm of Portugal. 3 Santo Amaro, or S. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars; for which uſe here were five Ingenios, or Sugar Engines; deſerted by the Portugals for fear of the Savages, againſt whom they had not power enough to make good the place; and the Sugars deſtroyed of purpoſe, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous People.

5. Of DES ILHEOS, or of the Iſles, ſo named from certain Ilands lying againſt the Bay on which the principal Town is ſeated, called alſo Ilheos, or the Iland (with like Analogie as a Town of good note in Flanders, hath the name of Inſula, or Liſle) The town conſiſting of about 150 or 200 Families, ſituate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 Leagues in compaſs (out of which that River doth ariſe) full of a great but wholſom Fiſh, which they call Monates, ſome of which are affirmed to weigh eight and twenty pounds. This Colony, much endangered by the Guaymuri, a Race of Savages more Savage then any of their Fellows: who being driven out of their own Country fell into this Prafecture, which they had utterly deſtroyed, if ſome of S. Georges Reliques, as the Jeſuits tell us (but I binde no man to believe it) ſent by their General from Rome, An. 1581. had not ſtayed their fury, and given the Portugals the better.

6. Of

6. Of TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All Saints, ſo called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth; in breadth two Leagues and an half, 18 Fathoms deep, and full of many little Ilands, but flouriſhing and pleaſant, and well ſtored with Cotton-Wooll. A Bay in which are many ſafe Stations and Roads for ſhipping, and therefore of great uſe and conſequence in thoſe furious ſeas. Memorable for the hardy Enterpriſe of Peter Heynes, a Dutch-man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces; who in the year 1627 ſeized on a Fleet of Spaniards, conſiſting of 26 Sail of ſhips (four of them being Men of VVar) all lying under the protection of the Forts and Caſtles built for the ſafety of that Bay. For thruſting in amongſt them with his own ſhip only (the reſt not being able to follow) he ſo laid about him, that having ſunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the reſt, conditioning only for their lives; notwithſtanding all the ſhot which was made againſt him from the Ships and Caſtles, and 42 Pieces of Ordnance planted on the ſhore. Chief Towns hereof 1 S. Salvador, built on a little hill, on the North ſide of the Bay, by Thomas de Souſa; adorned with many Churches, and Religious houſes; and fortified (beſides the wall) with three ſtrong Caſtles, the one called S. Antony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapeſipe. Yet not ſo ſtrong by reaſon of ſome hills adjoyning which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, An. 1624. recovered by the Spaniards the next yeer after, and ſince loſt again. 2 Paripe more within the Land, four Leagues from S. Saviours. 3 Seregippe del Rey, a ſmall Town, and ſeated on as ſmall a River, but amongſt many rich Paſtures, and ſome veins of ſilver.

7. Of FERNAMBUCK, one of the richeſt Præfectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Braſil-wood, which is brought hence yeerly for the Diers, in all this Country; but deſtitute of Corn, and moſt other neceſſaries, with which ſupplied from the Canaries, and ſometimes from Portugal. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Olinda, the largeſt and beſt peopled of all Braſil: containing above 2000 perſons, not reckoning in the Church-men, nor taking the great number of ſlaves which they keep for their Sugar-Works into the Accompt: for whoſe uſe they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious houſes, and ſome Hoſpitals. Situate neer the Sea-ſide, but on ſo uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a Regular fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well-built Caſtle; and that well planted with Braſs pieces. VVhich notwithſtanding, in the year 1595 the Caſtle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they uſed to ſtow all their chief Commodities) were took by Capt. James Lancaſter, and ſome few of the Engliſh, who having tarried in the Haven above a moneth, brought home with him eight of his own ſhips, four Frenchmen, and three Hollanders which came in by chance; all laden with the choiceſt Merchandiſe of Braſil and India. 2 Amatta de Braſil, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by ſelling the Braſil-wood. 3 S. Laurenzo, a well frequented Village, but as yet unwalled. 4. Poincur, upon a River ſo named. 5 Antonio de Cabo, neer the Cape of S. Auguſtines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6 Garaſu, about five Leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the moſt part by poor and Mechanical perſons, till the year 1632. when taken by the Hollander, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Præfecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque (a great houſe in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the town of Olinda being took by them in the year 1629. the Port and all the Avenues unto it ſo ſtrongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. Of TAMARAÇA, ſo called from an Iland of that name, diſtant about five miles from Olinda; of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Caſtle on the top of an hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a ſtrong Bulwark at the mouth of the Port, and ſo blocked it up, that it hath ſince been of no uſe to the Spaniard. This the leaſt Præfecture in Braſil, but withall the ancienteſt; extended three Leagues onely in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earles of Monſanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thouſand Ducats. But his Rents much diminiſhed, if not quite inverted, ſince the loſs of the Haven.

9. Of PARAIBA, ſo called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniard called Domingo) of moſt note herein. On the banks whereof ſtandeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, about three Leagues from the Main, but capable of pretty good ſhips to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long ſince by 500 Portugals, beſides Slaves and Negroes. Not walled, till they began to ſtand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loſs of Olinda, but more ſecured by a ſtrong Caſtle on the Promontory called Cabo Delo, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, then by any works within the Land. A Caſtle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were poſſeſſed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoyning Haven called Port Francois; but outed by the Portugal, Anno 1584. who have ſince held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders, eſpecially ſince their taking of a little Iland lying over againſt them, called the Iſle of Noronha.

10. Of

10. Of RIO GRANDE, ſo called from the River Poteingi (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River, not made a Præfecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender, ſome of the French began to fix here, Anno 1597. But the King of Spain not willing to have any ſuch neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba, to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Savages beginning to riſe up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to ſeek aide from him of Fernambuck; by whoſe help having ſlain five thouſand, and took three thouſand of them, the reſt became Vaſſals to the Portugals: who built here an impregnable Caſtle (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned and furniſhed with Ammunition and all other neceſſaries; very few Portugals, except thoſe of the Garriſon, being yet come over.

11. Of SIARA, a late Præfecture alſo, in which the Portugals have no more then a Caſtle, with a dozen houſes or thereabouts, beſides that of the Governour adjoyning to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Veſſels. Of ſome trade in regard of the Chryſtall, Cotton-wooll, and ſome precious ſtones, found in the Country hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and purſue the Conqueſt; here being great plenty of Sugar Canes, but no works to make it.

12. Of MARAGNON, an Iland lying in the mouth of the great River ſo called, in the furtheſt parts of Braſil Northwards, and many Leagues diſtant from Siara the laſt of their Præfectures; the Country intervening not yet diſcovered, or otherwiſe made known unto us then by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coaſt. An Iland of a fruitfull ſoil, if pains and huſbandry were not wanting: affording naturally Maize, and a Root called Maniot, both which the Savages uſe for bread; good ſtore of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Braſil-wood, and the beſt Tobacco; and in ſome places Balm and Amber. Watered with many freſh Rivers, and pleaſant Springs: well-wooded both for Timber and Fewell: and in a word, bleſſed with ſo temperate an Aire (though ſo near the Æquator) that no place can be more commodious for the life of man. The People ſtrong of body, healthy and long lived without any baldneſs; induſtrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their hair, fruitfull in Child-bearing, and that till 50 years old and ſometimes more. Both Sexes naked till their Marriage; and then apparelled onely from the waſt to their knees.

The Villages hereof poſſeſſed by the Natives, conſiſted but of four great Houſes; each of them two or three hundred foot in length, and twenty or thirty foot in breadth; ſo placed as they reſembled a Quadrangular Cloyſter: And in each Houſe ſo many Houſholds, that commonly each of their Villages or Taves (for ſo they called them) contained three hundred perſons, and ſome twice that number: Of theſe were twenty ſeven in all, whoſe names I hold impertinent to be muſtered here: The totall eſtimate of the People when the French came thither, amounting to 12000 Souls. For the French Trading in this Iland, and carrying themſelves courteouſly amongſt the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colonie of that Nation, if ſent over to them: by whoſe aide they might free themſelves from all other Pretenders, and be inſtructed in the Goſpel. Accordingly a Colonie, and four Capuchin Friers, are ſent over to them Anno 1612. Some Savages gained unto the Faith, and a ſtrong Caſtle called S. Lewis commodiouſly built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance; the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not reſted there when diſ-ſeized by the Portugals, ſent thither under the Conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Caſtle of S. Lewis which the French had built, added thoſe of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Iland by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever ſince have held it without moleſtation.

13. Of PARA, the moſt Northern Præfecture of Braſil, towards Guiana; ſo called from the River of Para (ſuppoſed to be a branch of the River of Amazons) which runneth thorow it. The River at the mouth of it, two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Channel fifteen Fathoms deep: on the Banks whereof (but on an higher ground then the reſt) the Portugals have built the Caſtle of Para, in form Quadrangular, and well walled except towards the River: the Country thereabouts inhabited by 300 Portugueze, beſides the Garriſon.

Now for the Fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supream. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countries. Theſe Tribes ſo many, and the Muſter of their names ſo uſeleſs, that I now forbear it. In this eſtate they lived when diſcovered firſt; but by whom firſt diſcovered, will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get ſome colour of a Title for the Crown of Caſtile, aſcribe it to John Pinſone, and Diego de Lepe, two of their own Countrey; who as they ſay, had Landed on it in the year 1500, before the coming of Capralis, though the ſame year alſo. The Portugals attribute the Diſcovery of it to Pedro Alvarez de Capreli, ſent by their King Emanuel to the Eaſt-Indies: who being driven over hither from the Coaſt of Guinea, took poſſeſſion of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Croſs, giving the name of Sanctæ Crucis, or the Holy Croſs, to this new Diſcovery. That name changed afterwards to Braſil from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongſt them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Veſpucius a Noble Florentine, and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation in the year 1503. were by Emmanuel employed in a further Diſcovery. Who ſpeeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly ſend over ſome Plantations thither. But a great controverſie growing betwixt them and the Spaniard, to whether of the two it of right belonged: the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull or Edict of Pope Alexander the ſixt (by whom the whole undiſcovered World was divided betwixt thoſe two Kings) it ſeemed to fall within the Grant to the Crown of Caſtile. Enjoyed by this Emmanuel, and the Kings ſucceeding till the death of Sebaſtian (which Sebaſtian the Jeſuites look on as the Founder of all their Colledges in this Country) and by the Spaniards ſince the death of Henry (whoſe reign continued but a yeer) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being ſo prudently jealous of their intereſs in it, that they would ſuffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongſt them. By them poſſeſſed entirely without any Rivals (I mean for ſo much of the Country as they had ſubdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part; and got the Prafectures of Fornanback, and Todos Los Sanctos (or the Bay) by the Right of War. The reſt with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, ſubmitting unto John the 4th. of the houſe of Bragance, whom the Portugueze had made their King, Anno 1639.

OF GVIANA.

GVIANA is bounded on the East with the Main Atlantick; on the West with the Mountains of Peru, or rather ſome undiſcovered Countries interpoſed betwixt them; on the North with the River Orenoque, and on the South with that of the Amazons. The reaſon of the name I find not, unleſs it be ſo called from the River Wia, of which more anon.

It is ſituate on both ſides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern, to the eighth of the Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithſtanding this ſituation under the Æquator, affirmed to be temperate, the Eaſtern winds (which they call the Brizes) conſtantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extreme heats thereof by their cooler blaſts. The Country towards the Sea ſide flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and ſwelled with hils: in all places ſo adorned with Natures Tapeſtrie, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, (fruit either ripe or green growing ſtill upon them) that no Country in the world could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we ſhall ſee anon, when the particular parts hereof come into Diſcourſe.

Of the People it is ſaid in generall, that they have amongſt them no ſetled Government; and though they acknowledge ſome ſuperiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they pleaſe. Adultery and Murder, which are only puniſhable, not otherwiſe expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer ſort have two or three Wives, and ſomtimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, alike jealous of them; and if they take them in Adultery, without any further ceremony or formalities of Law, they beat out their brains. Their wives, eſpecially the elder, they uſe for Servants; and he which hath moſt ſuch, is the greateſt man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not ſo far onwards on the way to the worſhip of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatrie be miſtaken in the proper Object, it ſuppoſeth a Deitie; and they who have this Principle, That there is a God, have learned one, and not the leaſt of the points of their Catechiſm. Their Accompts amongſt themſelves they keep with a bundle of ſticks; which they diminiſh or increaſe according to the times of their contract. Their Funerals they ſolemnize with a Feaſt, but with ſuch diverſity in the deportment of both Sexes, that whiles the Women howl extremely, the Men perform the Obſequies with ſinging and exceſſive drinking; the one as improper for a Feaſt, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of moſt note in it, beſides 1 Orenoque, & 2 the River of Amazons, and thoſe rather boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, then proper unto this alone. 3 Arrawari, 4 Conawini, 5 Caſſpurough, or Caſſipure, all falling into the ſame main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the laſt ariſing out of the Lake of the Arachoſi, half a mile broad at the mouth or influx into the Sea, and but five ſpans deep. 6 Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7 Wia, 8 Cajane, 9 Marwine, 10 Eſſequebe, a River of twenty dayes journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenoque or Raliana.

The whole divided commonly into theſe four parts, 1 Rio de las Amazones, or the River of Amazons, 2 Wiapoco or Guiana ſpecially ſo called, 3 Orenoque, and 4 the Iſles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the tract of that famous River. The ſoil in ſome places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choiceſt fruits. Full of large Woods, and in thoſe Woods moſt ſort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongſt others of moſt note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the Totock; a tree of great bulk, and as great a fruit; this laſt as big as a mans head, and ſo hard withall, that when the fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the woods without an helmet or ſome ſuch ſhelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their brains. The kernels of it, for the moſt part ten or twelve in number, have the taſte of Almonds, and are ſaid to be provocative in point of Venerie. Of which the Savages have this By-word, Pigue ſecke in Saccowe pingean Totocke; that is to ſay, Eat Totock, if thou wouldſt be potent in the Acts of Venus. Here are alſo Sugar-canes in ſome places; and the Plant called Pita, the taſte whereof is ſaid to be like Strawberries, Claret-wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Yaos, Cockettuway, Pattecui, Tockianes, Tomoes, and Wackebanes dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons, and Aroüians poſſeſſed of the Ilands. Towns of note I have met with none amongſt them; though every houſe (moſt of them 150 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the leaſt an hundred perſons) might paſs ſufficiently for a Village. Yet they are ſafer houſed then ſo, for otherwiſe their houſes would afford them but little comfort in the overflowings of the River, which drown all the Country: and therefore they betake themſelves to the tops of trees, and there remain, like Birds, with their ſeveral families, till the waters be drawn in again. and the earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find ſome of theſe their dwellings called by proper names, as 1 Matarem, 2 Roakery, 3 Anarcaprock, 4 Haaman, 5 Womians, and 6 Cogemymne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The firſt Diſcoverer of this River and the parts adjoyning, was Orellana the Lieutenant of Gonſales Pizarro, whom his brother Franciſco Pizarro then Viceroy of Peru had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noiſe of ſome rich Countries beyond the Andes, he raiſed ſufficient forces, and paſſed over thoſe Mountains; where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a Boat, and ſent this Orellana to bring in proviſions. But the River which he chanced into, was ſo ſwift of courſe, that he was not able to go back; and therefore of neceſſity to obey his fortune in following the courſe of that ſtrong water. Paſſing along by divers deſolate and unpeopled places, he came at laſt into a Country planted and inhabited; where he firſt heard of the Amazons (by thoſe Savages called Comapuyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people: And in the end having ſpent his time in paſſing down this River from the beginning of January to the end of Auguſt 1540. he came at laſt into the Sea; and getting into the iſle of Cubana, ſailed into Spain: the courſe of his voyage down the water he eſtimated at 1800 leagues (or 5400 Engliſh miles) but found no Amazons in his paſſage, as himſelf affirmed; only ſome maſculine women ſhewed themſelves intermixt with the men, to oppoſe his landing; and in ſome places he found men with long hair like women; either of which might make theſe parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, Arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commiſſion for the conqueſt of the Countries by him diſcovered; and in the year 1549. he betook himſelf unto the ſervice. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at leaſt, he could never hit upon the Channel which brought him down, though attempted often. Which ill ſucceſs, with the conſideration of his loſs both in fame and fortunes, brought him to his grave; having got nothing but the honour of the firſt diſcovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, ſince called Orellana. The enterpriſe purſued, but with like ſucceſs, by one Pedro de Orſua, An. 1560. after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the Engliſh and the Hollanders have endeavoured an exact diſcovery, and ſeverally begun ſome Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the others; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were ſufficiently fortified to make any reſiſtance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA ſpecially ſo called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both ſides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath its name. A River of a long courſe, but not paſſable up the ſtream above 16 miles, by reaſon of a Cataract, or great fall from the higher ground: in breadth betwixt that Cataract and the Æſtuarium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Æſtuarium or influx a whole mile at leaſt, and there about two fathoms deep.

The Country on both ſides of this River very rich and fertile; ſo natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfuls long. Sugar-canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the ſhrubs great ſtore of Cotton, and the Dye by ſome called Orellana. Plenty of Veniſon in their Woods, and of Fiſh in their Rivers; their fields well ſtored with Beaſts, which themſelves call Moyres, in ſhape and uſe reſembling Kine, but without any horns. The people generally of a modeſt and ingenious countenance; Naked, but would wear cloaths if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their bread is made of a Plant called Caſſavi; of which alſo being dried and chewed, and then ſtrained thorow a wicker-veſſel, they make a kind of drink in colour like new Ale, but not ſo well taſted, and of leſs continuance. The greateſt part of their food is Fiſh, which they intoxicate with a ſtrong-ſented wood, and ſo take them up as they lie floating on the top of the water. Much troubled with a worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Nignas) which get under the nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no leſs torture of the Patient, without ſpeedy prevention: No better remedy found out, then to poure Wax melting hot on the place affected; which being pulled off when tis cold draws the Vermin with it, ſometimes 800 at a pull. The women of ſuch eaſie child birth, that they are delivered without help, and preſently bring the child to his father (for they have ſo much natural modeſty as to withdraw from company upon that occaſion) who waſheth it with water, and painteth it with ſeveral colours, and ſo returneth it to the mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleaſant and goodly ſtreams. The names of ſome of them on both ſides of the Wiapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long courſe, a goodly River all the way, and at the mouth thereof to be large and broad; which paſſing thorow the heart of the Country, in the 4 Degree & 40 minutes of Northern Latitude, may poſſibly occaſion both the whole, and this part more ſpecially to be called Wiana, & by the Dutch who cannot pronounce the double VV, Guyana. Certain I am that by the name of Wiana I have found it written in approved Authors. But what need further ſearch be made after leſſer Rivers, (which will offer themſelves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to paſs over like a Sea for bigneſs, (magnum, famoſum, & vaſtum inſtar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Yaos or Jaos called Raponowinin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimen? Situate about a dayes journey from the River Eſſequebo: and neighboured by the great and famous City Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in coin, plate, armour, and other furniture, which was ſaid to be in it. The greateſt City, as ſome ſay, not only of America, but of all the world. For Diego de Ordas, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican wars, and by him condemned for a mutinie, put into a Boat alone without any victual, and ſo caſt off to ſeek his fortune; affirmed at his return, that being taken by

ſome of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King then reſiding at Manoa, he entred the City at high-noon, travelled all the reſt of that day, and the next alſo untill night, before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he ſaith that he was led blindfold all the way: And therefore poſſibly enough this City might be no ſuch miracle as the ſtory makes it; Don Diego being either abuſed by the reports of the Savages, or willing to abuſe the world with ſuch empty fictions. For though the Spaniards and the Engliſh have ſeverally ſought, and that with incredible diligence to find out this City, yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be ſaid in the Poets language, ——Et quod non invenis uſquam,

Eſſe putes nuſquam——i.e.

That which is nowhere to be found,
Think not to be above the ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingas; who being forſook, one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba the laſt King of Peru, at the conqueſt of that Kingdom with many thouſands of his Followers came into this Country, and ſubduing the Caribes, erected here a ſecond Peruvian Monarchy. For beſides that Atabaliba had no brethren but Guaſcar and Mango who both died in Peru, how improbable muſt it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing ſo well the thirſt of the Spaniards after Gold, would either ſuffer him to return and diſcloſe the ſecrets of his State; or ſend him away loaded with Gold, as tis ſaid he did? VVho ſheweth his Treaſure to a Thiefe, doth deſerve to loſe it. And therefore letting paſs theſe dreams of an El Dorado, let us deſcend to places of leſs Magnificence, but of greater reality. Amongſt which I reckon 1 Caripo, moſt memorable for a Colonie of Engliſh there planted by Capt. Robert Harcourt, An. 1608. ſituate on the banks of the Wiacopo, near the mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock ſo difficult of acceſs, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Ayr ſo ſound and anſwerable to the conſtitution of an Engliſh body, that of 30 which were left there for three years together, there dyed but ſix, and thoſe ſix rather by misfortune, and ſome croſs accident, then by any diſeaſes. 2 Gomeribo, on the top of an hill near the mouth of the Bay of Wiacopo, poſſeſſed awhile by ſome Hollanders, but ſoon deſerted. 3 Moyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Marwinen., 4 Crewinay, on the other ſide of the ſame River, poſſeſſed by the Caribes: the King of the firſt (for each Tribe had its ſeveral Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a vertuous man, and kind to ſtrangers; of the later, Minapa. 5 Tanparamunen, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River. And 6 Moreſhego, four dayes journey from the other; both poſſeſſed by the Caribes. The King, or Cacique of thoſe laſt, at Cap. Harcourts being there (of which time we ſpeak) named Areminta; affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, beſides the Yaos, or Jagos, and the Maraons ſpoken of before, who poſſeſs almoſt all the Sea-coaſts of this Country, are ſaid to be Arwacca, the Sapayoy, the Mayos, and the Aracouri; of different Languages, and Cuſtoms, though neer neighbours unto one another. Originally inhabitants of the Iland of Trinidado, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Country, poſſeſſed themſelves of the Sea ſhores, and the parts adjoyning: each Tribe or Family being governed by its ſeveral Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had ſome footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their ſhort ſtay amongſt them, then to make the People diſ-affected to the Engliſh; of whoſe pretenſions to theſe parts, and deſigns to plant them they had good Intelligence. And ſo much was confeſſed by ſome of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance, how much the Engliſh were abuſed in thoſe miſ-reports. Afterwards in the year 1604. Captain Charles Leigh ſet Sail from Woolwich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wiapoco, where he was kindly entertained, gratified with an Houſe and Garden, and his Aide craved againſt the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took poſſeſſion of the Country in the name of King James and the Crown of England; and cauſed the River of Wiapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh: but that name ended with his life, and that ſhortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The deſign went forwards notwithſtanding, and in the year 1608 an Engliſh Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new poſſeſſion taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before mentioned; the Country further ſearched into by that Noble Gentleman, then ever formerly by any, or by many ſince. After three years, the Colony wanting fit ſupply, returned home again; the Plantation never ſince purſued, though by ſome projected. Yet ſo far are theſe Savages beholding to the Engliſh Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there againſt the Caribes, ſo at their going off they taught them the uſe of Arms, and put them into a poſture of defence; inabling them thereby to preſerve themſelves againſt all their Enemies.

3. ORENOQUE, or the Province of the River of Orenoque comprehendeth the North parts of Guyana, lying upon and towards the Banks of that famous River of which we have already ſpoken. The Country very rich and pleaſant, conſiſting of large Plains, many miles in compaſs, adorned with the embroydery of Flowers, and unknown Plants, exceeding pleaſant to the eye; and ſometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furniſhed with rich Mines of Gold and Silver. The Rivers liberally ſtored with Fiſh, and the Forreſts both with Beaſts and Fowls. No Country in America, not Peru it ſelf, ſaid to be comparable to it for abundance of Treaſure. Some alſo add a whole Mountain of Chryſtall to be ſeen afar off from Winecaporo: and tell us (but in generall terms) of more goodly Cities then elſwhere in all Peruana, but neither the Spaniards nor the Engliſh could ever ſee them, though they diligently ſearched into moſt parts of this Country.

The People, as of ſeveral Nations, ſo of ſeveral Natures: The Capuri, and Macureos, for the moſt part Carpenters, live by making Cunoas or Boats, which they ſell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinadado for Tobacco, in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dyeth, they make great lamentation; and after the fleſh is putrified and fallen from the bones, they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the houſe where he dwelt, decking his skull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging gold Plates about the bones of his arms and thighs. Of the Tivitivas dwelling upon ſome of the Northern branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that are a goodly and valiant People, and to have the moſt manly and moſt deliberate ſpeech of any Nation in the World. A People which eat of nothing that is ſet or ſown: the children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholding for their lively-hood unto Art, or Induſtry; uſing the tops of the Palmito Tree for Bread; Fiſh, Deer, and Swines-fleſh, for the reſt of their ſuſtenance. The Aſſawy, Sayma, Wikeri, and Aroras, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with ſmoother hair: And to uſe Arrows dipt in ſo ſtrange a poyſon, as doth not only bring death, but death with moſt unſpeakable torments, eſpecially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arwaca of this Tract I finde nothing ſingular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their wives and neereſt of the kindred beat their bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink like ſpice.

Places of moſt importance in it (for to ſpeak any thing particularly of thoſe many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque, were an endleſs labour) 1 Comolaha, on the South of Orenoque, but ſomewhat diſtant, in which they keep ſome Annual Fairs for the ſale of Women. One of our Engliſh men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595. affirmeth that he bought eight of them (the eldeſt not above eighteen) for a half-penny red hafted knife, which he brought from England: But withall telleth us for his credit that he gave them to ſome Savages of his acquaintance. 2 Morequito, a known Port upon ſome branch of the Orenoque; of much uſe to the Engliſh in their firſt Diſcovery of theſe parts. 3 Wenicapora, ſo called from another branch of that River bearing this name; from whence was ſhewed an high Hill ſaid to be of Chryſtall, but ſo far off, that it was thought better to believe then to go and ſee. Others report of this Mountain that above it there is a mighty River, which falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noiſe, as if 1000 Bells were knocked one againſt another. And poſſible enough it is, that this great fall of water diſcerned far off, may (with the help of Sun-ſhine) carry ſome reſemblance of a Chryſtalline Mountain. 4 S. Thome, ſituate on the Main Channel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 houſes, ſtretched out in length for half a mile, but ſlightly built; a Pariſh Church in the midſt of it, and at the Weſt end a Convent of Franciſcan Friers. The only Town of all Guiana poſſeſſed by the Spaniards; not fortified till againſt the laſt coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617, but taken by him at that time, and ſince that by the Hollanders, An. 1629. though by both quitted not long after, it returned to the Spaniards.

The ſeverall Nations of this Tract have been named before, Diſcovered firſt by Diego de Ordas, An. 1531. furniſhed with a Patent for the conqueſt of it by Charles the fift. But not hitting on the right Channel, or otherwiſe not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain: effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierom de Ortal, Anno 1533. and after by Herrera, who proceeded further then the others, Anno 1536. and finally by Gonſalvo Ximenez de Queſada and Antonio Berreo with far better fortune; who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the ſearch of Guiana, fell caſually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazons. But yet not perfectly diſcovered till the yeer 1595. in which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Priſoner this Antonio Berreo, and learning of him the ſucceſs of his Expedition, reſolved upon the undertaking: and ſearched ſo far into the Countrey by the courſe of this River, that ſome have ſince called it Raliana. The buſineſs followed the next yeer (after his return) by Captain Lawrence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that ſervice, who at his coming found the Country poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houſes of the Savages had been laid together like a Town; and all the Natives who wiſhed well to the Engliſh, diſperſed and ſcattered. So that without any other effect of his journey, then the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he firſt diſcovered) he ſet ſail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of Engliſh ſhould be planted there, and ſome proportionable force ſent over to make good the Action. But the motion upon good advice rejected, firſt in regard of the diſtance of it from the main body of our ſtrength: and 2. becauſe the Spaniards bordering neer upon it, might eaſily caſt out our ſmall Forces and make the enterpriſe diſhonourable to the Engliſh Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of Honourable Atchievements. It was permitted notwithſtanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh, and Harcourt, before ſpoken of. But they not being able to go thorow with ſo great a buſineſs, let it fall again. And ſo it reſted till the laſt unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licenſed by Commiſſion under the great Seal to ſearch into ſome Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Country. A deſign followed with great hopes by the Undertakers, moſt of them being perſons of honour, and well attended: but ſo unfortunate in the iſſue (the Spaniards being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Thome, he he loſt his own Son, and a great part of his Forces; and after his return (not able with the reſidue to make good his ground againſt the Enemy) was executed on a former Attaindure, in the old Palace of Weſtminſter, Octob. 29. An. 1618. Of whom I cannot chooſe but note what is ſaid by Camden Clarentieux, in his Annals: Vir erat nunquam ſatis laudato ſtudio & Regiones remotas detegendi, & Navalem Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And ſo I leave him to his reſt in the bed of peace.

4. THE ILANDS which properly are accompted of as parts of Guiana, lie either ſcattered on the ſhore, or in the mouths or bodies of the greater Rivers: ſome of them not inhabited, others of no name; and none at all of any reckoning. Only the Iſle of 1 Trinidado, and 2 Tabago, are of ſome eſteem: which though ſomewhat further off from the ſhores of this Conntry, yet being that of Trinidado lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana paſs but for one Prefecture or Provincial Government, we ſhall deſcribe them in this place.

1. TRINIDADO, or Inſula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque over againſt Paria, from which ſeparated by a Frith or Streit, by Columbus who firſt diſcovered it called Boca del Drago, or the Dragons mouth, becauſe of the dangerouſneſs of the paſſage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the moſt Southern Angle of it called Punta del Gallo, as that on the North-eaſt Punta de Galera. The Frith or Streit but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the interpoſition of four or five little Ilands, which the Sea breaketh thorow with great violence, leaving only two entrances for ſhipping into the Golf, called the Golf of Paria. The length hereof 25 leagues, the breadth 18. of a cloudy and unhealthie Air, but a fertile Soil, abundantly well ſtored with ſuch commodities as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-canes, Cotton-Wooll, and the beſt kind of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidado. Here is alſo a ſufficiencie of Fruits and Cattel for the uſe of the Natives; and here and there ſome veins of Gold and other metals: ſuch ſtore of Pitch, that innumerable ſhips might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the calking of ſhips, becauſe it ſoftneth in the ſun. The place in which it groweth, by the Spaniards called Terra de Brea, by the Natives Pichen.

The People of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with the other Americans: diſtinguiſhed into ſeveral Tribes, but moſt of them reduced under the power of two petit Princes. But the greateſt part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the tyrannie of the Spaniards, forſook their Country, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joſephs, ſituate on the South-ſide of the Iland, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary reſidence of the Governour, who hath under him beſides this Iland the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado (for ſo go his titles) yet a ſmall Town, conſiſting but of 40 houſes, when it was taken An. 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made priſoner, who furniſhed his taker with many notions (and ſome meerly fabulous) towards the diſcovery of Guiana.

This Iland firſt diſcovered by Chriſtopher Columbus in his third voyage, An. 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with ſome reference to the form hereof, ſhooting into the Sea with three Points or Promontories. Nothing elſe memorable in the fortunes and ſtory of it, but what is touched upon before.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North-eaſt of La Trinidad, from which 8 miles diſtant: full of ſafe Harbours for the bigneſs, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well ſtored with Woods; amongſt which ſome Palmito trees, ſome like that of the Braſil-Wood, others not elſwhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fiſh ſufficient to maintain it ſelf. Now called New Walcheren, with reference to an Iland of that name in Zealand, by ſome of the Low-Countrymen, who begin to plant there.

OF PARIA.

PARIA is bounded on the East with Guiana, and the Ilands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the West with the Golf or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada; on the North with the main Atlantick Ocean, or Mare del Noort; the Countries lying on the South not discovered hitherto.

It took this name from a mistake of the Spaniards (as Peru, and Jucutan on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of those new Regions which they discovered, and pointing to the hils afar off, were answered Paria, that is to say, high hils, or Mountains (for here begins that ledge of Mountains which are thence continued for the space of 3600 miles, to the streits of Magellane) and so hath it ever since held the name of Paria. By some Writers it is also called Nova Andalusia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the soyl and people being very different, will be more properly considered in the several parts: The whole divided into the Continent and the Ilands; which with their subdivisions, may be branched into these particulars, viz. 1 Cumania. 2 Venezuela. 3 S. Margarita. 4 Cubagua, and 5 the lesser Ilands.

1. CUMANA hath on the East the Golf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the West Venezuela: on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it; on the banks whereof some Dominican Fryers (who first set footing in this Country) built themselves a Monasterie; that name communicated afterwards unto all the rest of this Tract.

It is extended East and West to the breadth of 110 Leagues; the length thereof from North to South, said to be 400. But there is little of it known, and less of it planted by the Europæans; except some places near the Sea: there being no part of all America, the description whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands, as they have of this. For except it be the names of some Bayes or Promontories, and of two or three most noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our consideration.

The Country, for so much as hath been discovered, neither rich nor pleasant; and consequently the less looked after: covered with shrubs, and overgrown with unprofitable Bryers and Bushes. Heretofore famed for Pearl fishing, all along the Coast, from the Golf of Paria to that of Venezuela, called therefore Costa de las Perlas; but that gainful trade hath long since failed it. Now only of esteem for a vein of most excellent Salt, found near the Promontorie of Araya, and the Bay of Cariaco; gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and yet never diminishing. The parts adjoyning take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontorie bordering on the Frith called Boca del Drago, the title or appellation of Cape Salinus. Of some strange Creatures in this Country, as the Beast called Capa, the soles of whose feet are like a shoo; a kind of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants or Pismires; Parrots, and Bats, of more then ordinary greatness, I forbear to speak.

Of the People I find nothing singular, except it be, that having plenty of good fruits, as of Fish and Flesh, they use themselves to a far worse dyet, feeding on Horseleeches, Bats, Spiders, Grasshoppers, Worms, Lice, and such other Vermin. In other things they seem to have a mixture of all ill customs used amongst the Savages of Asia, Africk, and America; as multitudes of wives, prostituting these wives for the first nights lodging, to the Piacos, or Priests; and for any after, to their Guests; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting strange colours on their bodies instead of garments; high-minded, treacherous, and revengeful; accustomed to the use of poysoned arrows, which they envenom with Snakes blood, and other mixtures. In one thing only different from the rest of their neighbours, which is the fencing of their Grounds or Orchards with a Cotton-thred, as high as ones Girdle; and an opinion which they have, that whosoever breaketh it, or goes over or under it, shall die immediatly. More safe in that perswasion, then by brazen walls.

Rivers of most note, though of little, 1 Rio de Canoas. 2 Rio de Neveri. 3 Cumana de Bordones. The chief Havens or Roads for shipping, 1 Moxino. 2 S. Foy. And 3 that called Commenagot. The places of most consideration, 1 Cumana, a Colonie of Spaniards, on the bank of the River of that name; but distant about two miles from the Sea, on which it hath a safe and convenient Harbour; the Town so hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be seen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governours house, seated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2 S. Jago, a strong Fortress built by the Spaniards for defence of the salt Lake, or Salinas, in the year 1622. on some intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpose to take them from him; fortified by the rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of Brass. 3 S. Michael de Neveri, on the River so called, a Fort of the Spaniards. 4 Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Country first discovered in the third voyage of Christopher Columbus; but the possession of it was first taken by two Dominicans; who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Gospel in these parts; founded themselves a little Cell in the place where the burrough of Cumana was after built, An. 1513.

and

and doubtleſs had ſped very well in their holy purpoſe, if ſome covetous Spaniards had not treacherouſly ſeized upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes, and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spaniſh bondage. For this the poor Monks ſuffered death; I may call it martyrdom; their death revenged by Alfonſo de Oieda, An. 1520. and he not long after ſlain by the Savages, who alſo at the ſame time deſtroyed two Convents of Dominican & Franciſcan Friers which had bin founded in the year 1518. A ſecond force ſent hither under Gonſalvo de Ocampo, waſteth a great part of the Country, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs ſome of his people. But that ſtrength being withdrawn or defeated alſo, Diego de Caſtellon is ſent over by the Councel reſident in Hiſpaniola, to ſecure the poſſeſſion of the Country; by whom the Caſtle firſt, and after the Burrough of Cumana, was built and planted. Some other Attempts there were for a further conqueſt, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Caſtle of S. Michael de Neveri by Hierome of Ortal, and the diſcovery of ſome of the inland Provinces 150 leagues from the Sea-ſide, by Antonio Sedenno, An. 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Regiſtring of that tedious March.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the Eaſt with Cumana; on the Weſt with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the New Realm of Granada. So called by Alfonſo de Oieda, one of the firſt Diſcoverers of it, An. 1599. becauſe he found a Burrough of ſome of the Savages ſituate in the middeſt of the waters, to which was no paſſage but by Boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt 130 leagues; in breadth where broadeſt about 80. The ſoil ſo plentiful of all ſorts both of fruit and grain; the Country ſo repleniſhed with all kind of Cattel, and excellent paſtures to maintain them, that the neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granarie. Such ſtore there goeth from hence of Wheaten meale, Biſcoct, Cheeſe, Hogs-fleſh, Oxe hides, and Cloth of Cotton ready made, as very well deſerves that title. Here is alſo very great plenty of Fiſh, Wild-beaſts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other metals; beſides an infinite deal of Sarzaparilla ſent to Europe yearly.

The People of the ſame nature and diſpoſition with thoſe of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and ſwim, as well as the men; to till the land, and look to the buſineſs of the houſe, whileſt the men hunt or fiſh, to bring in proviſion. They count it a great part of beauty, to have very thick thighs; which they effect, by binding their legs hard below the knee, from their very childhood. Shameleſs enough till married, after more reſerved; though rather for fear of a divorce, then for love of modeſtie.

Rivers of note I meet with none; in ſtead of which many convenient Harbours and capacious Bayes. The chief, that called Golfo triſte, from ſome ſhipwracks or the like misfortune hapning to the Namer of it. 2 The Bay of Coro or Venezuela, large and ſpacious, which by a Frith or Streit of half a league over, receiveth the tribute of 3 The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lugo de Nueſtra Sennora, or our Ladies Lake, in compaſs about 80 leagues; on the banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Savages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain commerce with one another.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Maracapana, the furtheſt Port upon the Eaſt, and one of the beſt on all this Coaſt; in which the Spaniards of Cubagna had once a Garriſon, under colour of defending the Country againſt the Savages, but in plain truth to uſe it for an opportunity to ſeize upon their perſons and carry them away for Slaves. Thoſe parts hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2 Venezuela, the moſt Weſtern Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro, ſituate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees: built on the Sea, where it hath an Haven on each ſide; the one capacious, but not ſafe; the other ſafe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a ſweet and healthie aire, and neighboured by the richeſt ſoil of all the Country, it hath been long the ordinary ſeat of the Governour, and the See of a Biſhop (Suffragan to the Archbiſhop of Domingo in Hiſpaniola.) Once ſuddenly ſurprized by the Engliſh, An. 1595. and burnt to aſhes, but as ſuddenly repaired again. 3 Caravalleda, or Nueſtra Sennora de Caravalada, 80 leagues from Coro towards the Eaſt, ſeated upon the Sea neer an unſafe Haven, and defended from aſſault by the Caſtle of Caracas, ſo called from the name of the Tribe in which it ſtandeth. Neer unto which the hils ariſe to ſo great an height, that they ſeem to equal the Pike of Tenariffe ſo much talked of. 4 S. Jago de Leon, in the ſame tribe of the Caracas, took by the Engliſh the ſame year. 5 Nova Valentia, 25 leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6 New Xeres, lately built, fifteen leagues on the South of New Valentia. 7 Nova Segovia, one league only from New Xerez; ſituate on the banks of Baraquicemiti, the moſt noted River of this tract. 8 Tucuyo, in the Valley ſo called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich Sugar-canes, for which ſome Sugar works or Ingenios are here lately built. 9 Truxillo, or Nueſtra Sennora de la Paz. eighteen leagues on the South of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants hereof have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factorie for the ſale of their wares. 10 Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake it ſelf; not elſe obſervable but for the multitude of Tygers which do haunt about it.

This Country diſcovered by Columbus, and named by Alfonſo de Oreda, as before is ſaid, was firſt pretended to for Neighbourhoods-ſake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagna. Afterwards John de Anpuez, by order from the Counſell reſident at Domingo in Hiſpaniola, was employed in the Diſcovery of it, An. 1527. But Charles the fift having taken up great ſums of money of the Velſeri, a wealthy thy Family of Augſpurg, pawned this Country to them; by whom Ambroſius Alfinger was ſent with 400 foot and 80 horſe, to take poſſeſſion. But he and his Succeſſors in that imployment, not minding ſo much the Conqueſt as the ſpoil of the Country; the Counſell of Domingo undertook the buſineſs once again; and in the year 1545. ſent over one John de Caravajal, who treading in the ſteps of the Germans, or rather outgoing them in all ſorts of Rapine, was outed on a ſecond order by one John Perez de Toloſa, by whom the Province was reduced into ſome good order. In the year 1550. the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africk, began to mutiny; but their Deſign diſcovered, and themſelves all ſlain. Peace and contentment following after all theſe troubles, the Country was in little time ſo thorowly planted, and the Natives ſo incouraged in their ſeveral Tribes, that notwithſtanding the deſtructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long ſince above 100000 of the Savages, not numbring thoſe above fifty or under eighteen years of Age; who by an Order of the Counſell of Spain for theſe parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

3. MARGARITA is an Iland ſituate over againſt the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana; from the Main-land whereof it is diſtant about ſeven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the firſt Diſcovery, which the Latiniſts call Margaritæ, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it ſignifie no other then the Vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were alſo ſtore of thoſe of the greater eſtimate, ſuch as the Romans by the figure of Antiphraſis called Uniones, becauſe they always grew in couples. Nulli duo reperiuntur indiſcreti, ſaith Plinie; unde nomen Unionum ſcilicet Romanæ impoſuere deliciæ.

The Iſle affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and ſix in breadth; ſituate under the 11. Degree of Northern Latitude. Well ſtored with Pearls upon the Shores, when firſt diſcovered; but even then when moſt plentifully ſtored with that Commodity, ſhe had not water of her own to quench her thirſt, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwiſe plentifull enough both of Maize, and Fruits. The People obſequiouſly ſervile to their Lords, the Spaniards; ſo long accuſtomed unto bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Monpater, in the Eaſt corner of the Iland, a Fort of the Spaniards, built for ſecuring their rich Trade of Pearl fiſhing, and to defend their ſhips which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the houſe of the Governour. 2 El valle de Santa Luzia, two Leagues from the Sea, a Spaniſh Colony. 3 Makanao, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Iland firſt diſcovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, Anno 1498. grew ſuddenly into great eſteem, by reaſon of the rich Pearl fiſhing, which they found on the ſhores thereof. And in regard the Natives were ſo ready to betray their Treaſures (of which themſelves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more liberties from the King, then the reſt of the Savages. Inſomuch that the Spaniards either could not or would not compell them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negro ſlaves from Guinea, and the Coaſts of Africk, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive unto the bottom of the Sea, many times ſeven or eight Fathom deep, to bring up the ſhels, in which that Treaſure was included: where many of them were drowned, and ſome maimed with Sharks, and other Fiſhes. But that rich Trade is much diminiſhed of late, if it fail not quite. The cauſe thereof to be imputed to the unſatiable avarice of the Spaniards, ſo greedy upon Pearl, that they deſtroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatſoever they could meet with, for a little preſent profit loſt the hopes of the future. The Iland ſince leſs famous, and not much frequented. Viſited to its coſt in the year 1601, by the Engliſh under Captain Parker, who received here 500. l. in Pearls for the ranſom of Priſoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coaſt of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes, to be ſold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Iland lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroya upon the Continent; from the firſt diſtant but one League, from the other ſix; it ſelf in compaſs about three. Rich on the ſhores, by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the Land. Deſtitute both of graſs and water, by conſequence of Cattel alſo, except only Conies, and but few of thoſe. So that like many a Gallant who ſpend all upon the back, and nothing on the belly, ſhe had her out-ſide laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their bread and water brought them out of other Countries; and their Fruits too, if they deſired to have any; here being very few Trees, and thoſe moſt of Guyayacan. But ſo abundant in this Treaſure, that the Kings Fifths for many yeers amounted to 15000 Ducats yeerly out of this poor Iland.

In this reſpect it was preſently reſorted to, and poſſeſſed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony which they called New Cadiz: and grew in ſhort time unto ſo great power, that they made themſelves Maſters of the Port of Maracapana Venezuela, one of the beſt upon thoſe Seas. But in the year 1521. hearing that the Savages of Cumana had deſtroyed the Convent of Franciſcans on the oppoſite Shore, they cowardly forſook the Iland, and fled to Hiſpaniola. Sent back again by the Counſel there, under the conduct of James de Caſtellon, by whom the Town was made more beautiful and ſtrong then ever formerly. In great eſteem as long as the Pearl fiſhing did continue; now, with that decayed. Yet ſtill the Iland doth deſerve ſome conſideration, for a Fountain on the Eaſt part of it neer unto the Sea: continuing, though the Pearls be gone; which yieldeth a Bituminous ſubſtance like oyl, Medicinable for ſome diſeaſes, and is found two or three Leagues off, floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of Mankinde, and more eaſily found, then the Pearls which ſunk unto the bottom, and maintained our pride.

Four

Four miles from hence, but appendant to it, lieth a little Iland called Coche, three miles in compaſs, but ſo abundantly ſtored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity for ſome moneths together, above a thouſand pounds a moneth of our Engliſh money. Firſt peopled, upon that occaſion, An 1529. but the occaſion failing, the Plantation ended, the Iſle being now unpeopled, as not worth the looking after.

5. THE LESSER ILANDS of this Praefecture or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coaſt of Venezuela, from Eaſt to Weſt; the principal of which 1 Tortuga, 12 or 14 miles on the Weſt of Margarita; four miles in length, hardly one in breadth; but yielding ſuch good ſtore of Salt, that three or four ſhips are laded with it every year. Well furniſhed with Goats and Guayacan; but not elſe conſiderable: except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks, and yielding a convenient Harbour for the uſe of Mariners. 2 Bonaire, oppoſite to the Bay of Golfo triſte, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees; well-furniſhed with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattell, brought out of Spain, and peopled with ſome Savages out of Hiſpaniola, whom the Spaniards Chriſtened and ſent thither: ſome Spaniards with their Governour intermixt amongſt them. The Iland 16 miles in compaſs; not fruitfull naturally but in Trees, which are great and numerous. 3 Curacaos, nine miles on the Weſt of Bonaire, and as many in compaſs. Of a more fertile ſoyl by far, and of very rich Paſtures: the People given to grazing, and make great ſtore of Cheeſe, tranſported thence to other places: the Iland having towards the North, a convenient Harbour. 4 Aruba, on the North-eaſt of Curaçaos, from which nine miles diſtant; in compaſs not above five miles, for the moſt part level. One hill it hath (amongſt ſome others) faſhioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Ilands on this Coaſt, as the Toſtigos, lying Eaſtwards of Margarita; 2 Blanca, 3 Orchilla, 4 Rocca, and 5 the Iſle des Aves, or of Birds, interpoſed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire; ſome of them rather Rocks then Ilands: few ſtored with any living Creatures for the uſe of men; and none of them at all with men to manure and dreſs them: I paſs over here. And ſo proceed from theſe Ilands of the Province of Paria, to thoſe which are ſubordinate to the Counſel of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themſelves. But firſt we muſt go back, and bring up ſome of the Ilands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And ſo much of PERUANA.

OF THE AMERICAN ILANDS:

And first of those which are in MARE DEL ZUR.

THE AMERICAN ILANDS, scattered up and down the Shores of this New World, are commonly divided into those of Mare del Zur, or the Pacifique Ocean; and those of the Atlantick, or Mare del Noort. The first so called by Magellanus, the first Discoverer: who passing thorow those troublesome and tempestuous Streits which now bear his name, found such a change upon his coming into the Main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur (quod à tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, saith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it. By the Latines called Mare Pacificum, in the same regard. Called also the Southern Ocean, because of its situation on the South-side of America, in reference to some part of the Golf of Mexico, and the Streits of Anian. Not known unto the Spaniards till discovered by Nonnius Vasques de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Caciques or petit Kings of the Country about Nombre di Dios; Who seeing the Spaniards so greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirst should be satisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the opposite shore, this Balboa being the chief man in that Adventure: who discovering further on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the rest that followed to the golden treasures of Peru: Executed notwithstanding this good service by Don Pedro de Avila, within short time after. But the more full discovery of it is to be ascribed unto Magellanus and some later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly, as long as this Southern Sea was unknown to any but themselves, they conveyed their Gold and treasures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loss or charge, and thought their Ports upon that shore to be unaccessible. But after the way unto this Sea was found out by Magellanus; Drake, Cavendish, and the rest of our English Adventurers did so scoure these Coasts, that they left them neither Port, nor Ship, which they did not ransack; as hath been evidenced before in some particulars.

As for the Ilands of this Sea, they lie most of them so neer the shores, as if placed there by Nature to serve as Out-works to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of consideration; and of those few some of the chief have been described already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The residue which lie too far off to come under such consideration, must be mentioned here; and those reduced to these two Heads, 1 Los Ladrones, & 2 the Ilands of John Fernandes.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Ilands situate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Ilands, in the Longitude of 185. and the 4. Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus who first discovered them, because of the thievishness of the Inhabitants, (Insula Latronum is their name in Latine) who had stollen his Cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue still both their name and nature. Found such by Cavendish and Noert in their several Voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron (a commodity which they highly prize) but either closely or openly stealing whatsoever they met with. The people tall of stature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulencie; extremely active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the water, as if alike fitted to both Elements; insomuch as the Hollanders then with Noort, to make trial of it, cast five peeces of Iron into the Sea, all fetched out by one of them: The women as good at it as the men. Both Sexes given to filthy and promiscuous lusts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their incontinencie, the Pox having eaten off both their Lips and Noses.

Their Religion is worshipping the Devil, whose Images they have in wood on the head of their Boats; the Chappel and the Saint fit for such devotions. But for the nature of these Ilands, and what subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to seek. But like enough they yield as little as some others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Ilands of John Fernandes, are two in number: so called from John Fernandes the first Discoverer, An. 1574. each of them five or six miles in compass, and about 300 miles distant from the shores of Chile. Situate in the 33. Degree of Southern Latitude; rockie and barren, but well wooded, and those woods repleniſhed with Goats, but their flesh not so savourie as in other places. Some store of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms no scarcitie. Plenty of Fish upon the shores, for which cause visited sometimes by the Spaniards living in Peru: and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for ſhipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they paſs this way. None elſe of note in all this Sea, but ſuch as lie upon the Shores of their ſeveral Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore paſſing thorow the Straits, and coming up unto the Ilands of Paria, where before we left; we will now look on thoſe of Mare del Noort, or that part of the Atlantick which waſheth the ſhores of this New world (the reaſon of which names we have ſeen before) ſubordinate to the Counſell or Government of S. Domingo, viz. 1 the Caribes, 2 Porto Rico, 3 Hiſpaniola, 4 Cuba, and 5 Jamaica. The reſt already ſpoken of in their proper places.

1. THE CARIBES.

THE CARIBES or Cannibal Ilands, are in number many; 27 of them known by their proper names; the reſt, of leſs note (though ſome of theſe of little enough) not yet ſo diſtinguiſhed. Called thus in general, becauſe inhabited by Cannibals and Man-eating People (at their firſt Diſcovery) as the word Caribes doth import. They lie extended like a Bow from the Coaſt of Paria unto the Iſle of Porto Rico: of different temper, as muſt needs be in ſuch variety; and therefore not within the compaſs of a general Character. Some of the principal we ſhall conſider more diſtinctly; and for the reſt it will be trouble enough to name them, or elſe paſs them by.

1. GRANADA the neereſt of this crew to the Main-land of Cumana, is ſituate in the Latitude of 12 Degrees and 15 Minutes; in form like a Creſcent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile aſunder, the whole length but ſix. Shaded all over with thick Woods, but notwithſtanding of a rich and fruitfull ſoil. A Haven in it of good uſe; but no Town of note. The People of the ſame ill condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it; moſt miſchievouſly intended when they ſeem moſt kinde; and then the more to be avoided.

2. S. VINCENT 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of ſo bleſſed a ſoil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-Canes without charge to the Husbandman, Watered with many pleaſant Rivers, and full of ſafe and convenient Bayes for the uſe of Marriners. In figue Circular, the Diameter being ſix miles over; the Circle by conſequence eighteen. The People but of mean ſtature, ſlothfull, and ſtudious only for their Belly: their love to which makes them to adventure in their ſmall Boats, hewn out of the body of a Tree, to paſs into the Continent, and return again, without help of the Compaſs; though diſtant from it at the neereſt, above 30 miles.

3. BARBADOS on the North-eaſt of S. Vincent, in the Latitude of 13 Degrees, and 20 Minutes. Of an Oval form, 17 or 18 miles in compaſs. The ſoil in ſhew like that of England, but far more fruitfull: on the Eaſt ſide thruſting out it ſelf with Points and Angles, which yield ſome Bayes, but full of Quick-Sands, and unſafe for ſhipping, on the South furniſhed with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided of for Fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the Engliſh; who have brought thither from their own Country, Swine and Kine; Oranges, and the like from others. The chief Commodity made hitherto of this Plantation, comes by the planting of Tobacco; and by a kinde of courſe Sugar called Barbados Sugar, which muſt be quickly ſpent or will melt to nothing. Were they in ſtock, and not forced to make a quick return of their Commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation ſaid to be worth all the reſt which are made by the Engliſh; who (as I take it) are the ſole Colony in it: The Iland but at the courteſie of the Spaniard; without whoſe leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MATININO on the North-weſt of the Barbados, by the Salvages called Madaninam, with little difference. Everywhere ſwelled with Hills, of which three moſt eminent for height: one of them, which way ſoever a man looks upon it, carrying the reſemblance of an Hat. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr the Hiſtorian, with none but Women: afterwards, with a more fierce and barbarous People then the reſt of theſe Ilands: but neither Men or VVomen to be ſeen of late: whether deſtroyed, or removed further from the ſhores for fear of their deſtruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, ſeated on the North of Matinino, twelve Leagues in length; exceeding fruitfull of Tobacco, which they ſell unto the Europeans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Inſtruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of Hot-water, and a commodious Haven at the Weſt ſide of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The People as barbarous as ever Cannibals or Man-eaters to this very day: At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, and to no man truſty, but where they cannot hurt or dare not. Both Sexes wear their hair long, and colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloody and barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, diſtinguiſhed from the reſt in his dreſs or habit, whom they moſt readily obey.

6. DESSEADA, or the Land of Deſire, on the North-eaſt of Dominica, Diſcovered by Columbus in his ſecond Voyage; naked of Trees, and at the firſt ſight afar off, not unlike a Galley. Of great uſe to the Spaniards, who always take it in their way from the Canaries to the parts of America, and back again at their return.

The

The like uſe do they make of 7. The Iſle of GUADALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Weſtward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain uſe to take freſh water, and there diſperſe themſelves to their ſeveral Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in moſt parts of the Sea adjoyning. North-eaſt from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigna, commonly called ANTIGNA onely, and by ſome miſtakingly ANTEGO. Seven leagues in length, and as much in breadth; difficult of acceſs, and deſtitute of freſh water, but well repleniſhed of woods, and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colonie of the Engliſh, who do ſtill poſſeſs it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHER, on the North-weſt of Guadalupe, in the Latitude of 17 Degrees & 20 Minutes. The length ſix miles, the breadth in many places four, and in ſome but two: much ſwelled with hils, and towards the Eaſt provided of ſeveral Salt-wiches. The French and Engliſh had ſometimes in it their ſeveral Colonies: by whom the Natives were deſtroyed, or otherwiſe compelled to forſake their dwellings; convict, as was pretended, of ſome manifeſt treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the ſole poſſeſſion; ejected by Frederick de Toledo, as he paſſed this way with his Navie; though ſuffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable then dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief employment and commoditie lies in their Tobacco, by ſome much commended. Joyning hereto, or but a League from it at the moſt, is

10. The Iſle of NIEVES, affirmed to be five leagues in compaſs; well wooded and as pleaſantly watered; inſomuch as the Inhabitants of the Iſle of Dominica uſed to come hither for their pleaſures, but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for ſome Bathes or Hot Waters, found out by the Engliſh, who in the year 1528. placed a Colonie in it. But whether ſubſiſting of it ſelf, or a part of their Plantation in S. Chriſtophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCTA CRUX, by the Inhabitants called Ayay, on the North-weſt of S Chriſtophers, and the South-eaſt of Porto Rico, from which laſt diſtant 15 leagues. Woody and mountainous; not well provided of freſh waters; but on the Weſt-ſide furniſhed with a ſafe and commodious Road, under the covert of the mountains. Amongſt their fruits ſome that reſemble a green Apple; which taſted, ſo inflames the tongue, that for 24 houres it ſwelleth in ſo great extremity, as makes it altogether uſeleſs, but after that by little and little it abates again. The like hapneth alſo to the face, if waſhed before ſun-riſing with their Fen-waters, which are very frequent in this Iland; after the riſing of the ſun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colonie of the Engliſh alſo, but of later ſtanding then thoſe of S. Chriſtophers and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the reſt, 1 Anguilla, 2 Barbada, 3 S. Bartholmews, 4 S Lucies, 5 S. Martins, 6 Montferrat, 7 Rotunda, 8 Saba, 9 Virgo Gorda, & 10 Sumbrero; of which we have little but the names: the reſt, though known by ſeveral names, are not worth the naming. Onely we are to adde concerning the whole Nation of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did uſually hunt for Men, as Men for Beaſts, roving as far as Porto Rico to ſeek after their prey; and what they caught, was ſure to go to the pot, in the worſt ſenſe too. Columbus, when he was at the Iſle of Guadalupe, found 30 Captive Children which were reſerved to be eaten, and in their houſes divers veſſels filled with Mans fleſh, and ſome upon the ſpit ready to be roaſted. Nor had they laid aſide this diet, till after the year 1564. but how long I know not: For at that time, a Spaniſh ſhip coming to water at the Iſle of Dominica, they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Ilands have been of late times well cleered of theſe Monſters; ſome of them brought unto better order, but the moſt deſtroyed as the common Enemies of mankind; the Ilands where they dwelt being either totally deſerted, or taken up by the Europæans and their ſeveral Colonies.

2. PORTO RICO. And 3. MONICO.

PORTO RICO lyeth on the North-weſt of Santta Crux, from which diſtant about 15 Leagues, and near upon as many from Hiſpaniola, 136 Leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much leſs from the Cape of Coquibocco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Caſtella Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it; but was called by Columbus at the firſt diſcovery S. Johannis Inſula, or the Iſle of S. Johns; by the Natives Boriguen.

It is ſituate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude; in form quadrangular, but of a greater length then breadth, ſuch as the Geometricians call oblongum: The length thereof being 30 Leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Ayr hereof very pleaſant and temperate, not ſcorched with furious heats in Summer, nor made offenſive by the fall of continual rains; expoſed ſometimes (chiefly in Auguſt and September) to the troubleſomneſs of ſudden tempeſts, called Hericanos. The ſoyl indifferently fruitful, though ſomewhat Mountainous: here being (beſides other Hils of inferiour note) a ridge of high Hils which run croſs the Country from the one end unto the other. Their chief commodities Sugar canes, Ginger, Caſſia, and great ſtore of Hides: the Europæan Cattle having ſo abundantly increaſed, that they kill thouſands for their skins; leaving the fleſh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but conſumed long ſince. And ſo are all the Natives alſo; of whom, in that reſpect, impertinent to give any Character.

Chief

Chief Rivers of the Iland, 1 Cairobon, 2 Boyaman: of divers fountains, and of ſeverall and divided courſes. 3 Luyſa, & 4 Toa, two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one in the Mountains of Guayamo, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 Leagues together, doth afterwards divide it ſelf into thoſe two ſtreams. 5 Guiano. 6 Arezibo. 7 Guabiabo; of leſſer note; but all of them, as well as all the reſt before, concluding in ſome ſafe and capacious Haven.

Places of moſt importance in it, 1 Porto Rico the chief town, built in a little Iland, on the North ſide of the greater, but joyned unto it with huge piles, and vaſt expences, by the command of Philip the firſt, An. 1514. Well built, with large ſtreets, and convenient houſes, according to the model of the Cities of Spain; and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Biſhop one of the Suffragans of the Archbiſhop of S. Domingo in Hiſpaniola. The town unwalled, but fortified with two ſtrong Caſtles: the one of which ſecures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loſs of 40 or 50 men, by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpoſe to have peopled it with an Engliſh Colonie. Diſcouraged from it by the death of 400 of his men, by change of Ayr, and ſome intemperance of Diet; he ſet ſayl for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Iland, but the diſfurniſhing it of 70 piece of Ordnance, and ſome part of their treaſure, which he brought home with him. 2 S. Germans, in the Weſtern part of the Iland, but four Leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Iland, now both unfortified, and ſmall. 3 Arezibo, on the River ſo called. 4 Luyſa, the moſt noted Port of the Eaſtern parts, ſituate on the mouth of the River ſo named.

Eaſtward hereof betwixt it and Hiſpaniola, lies the Iland of Mona, (might not this think we be ſo called by Madoc ap Owen Gwinedth, of whom before?) three Leagues in compaſs; rockie and of a brackiſh earth; but fit for the production of Limons, Orenges, and ſuch kind of fruits, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the Weſt, Monico, or Monetta, as our Engliſh call it, where they found ſuch infinite ſtore of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as Hail, and made them almoſt deaf with the very noiſe; their Eggs ſo thick upon the ground, that they loaded two Boats with them in three hours, and could hardly paſs forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Iſle of S. Johns, it was firſt touched upon by Columbus in his ſecond voyage, An. 1493. but firſt inhabited by John Ponce of Leon, An. 1510. who being courteouſly entertained by Aignabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colonie of Spaniards in the North part of the Iland, which he called Caparra. The Colonie ten years after that removed to Guanica, and from thence to S. Germans: carrying with it the repute of the chief town of all the Iland, upon every remove, till the building of Porto Rico, where it ſince hath fixed. The Iland very populous for the bigneſs of it, when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives long ago conſumed by ſeveral Butcheries; and as ſome write, not above 1500 Spaniards in all the Country. What elſe concerns the ſtorie of it, we have ſeen before.

4 HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lyeth on the Weſt of Porto Rico; the diſtance we have ſeen already. By the Inhabitants called Haitia, and by ſome Quiſqueia; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hiſpaniola, or little Spain; and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof Triangular, extended in a ſharp Angle, called Cabo del Enganno, towards Porto Rico: the Weſtern end faſhioned like a large Bay, or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas; the Southern, Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in ſome places 60. in ſome but 30. thence growing leſs and leſs till it come unto the Eaſtern Angle; the whole compaſs eſtimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 & 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infeſted with Morning-heats, but cooler in the Afternoon by the conſtant blowing of a Sea-gale, which they there call Viraſon.

The Country for the moſt part beautiful and flouriſhing; the Trees alwayes in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual Spring. In many places ſwelled with high craggie Mountains, whence the name of Hayty, that word ſo ſignifying in the natural language of the Natives. Of ſuch an excellent herbage, that the Cattel brought hither out of Spain have increaſed almoſt beyond Arithmetick; grown wilde for want of proper Owners; and hunted unto death like the Stags of the forreſt, though onely to rob them of their skins. The ſoil ſo fertile, that in the ſpace of ſixteen dayes Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, & be fit to be eaten. So plentifully ſtored with Ginger, and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587. there were ſhipped hence 27500. pound weight of Ginger, and 900. Cheſts of refined Sugar; an evident argument of the riches and fertility of it. A further proof hereof may be, the rich Mines of Gold, in which they uſed to find Gold without mixture of droſs or other metals. 2 The great increaſe of Sugar, one Cane here filling twenty, ſometimes thirty meaſures. 3 The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in ſome places to an hundred fold. But the Mines were long ago exhauſted, inſomuch as the Inhabitants are fain to uſe braſs-money: but in ſtead of thoſe of Gold, they have found out others of Braſs and Iron, and ſome few of Silver; but not much ſearched into of late for want of Workmen.

The reaſon of that want to be aſcribed unto the Covetouſneſs and Crueltie of the Spaniſh Nation: who out of an unſatiable thirſt for Gold, conſumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirſt for Blood, killed ſo many of them, that in few years they deſtroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably ſuppoſed, that had not Charles the 5. reſtrained them by a Penal Edict from compelling the Natives againſt their wils to thoſe works of ſervitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Iland, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left, are said to be of low stature, of black hair, and a complexion somewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in manners, habit, or Religion from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of most note, 1 Ozama, on whose Banks stands Domingo, the chief Town of the Iland, capable of the greatest ships to the very Wharf. 2 Nigua, which passing thorow rich Pastures, or making the Pastures rich, by its secret vertue; runneth towards the West: as do also, 3 Yaquimo, 4 Nizao, and 5 Neyba. 6 Hayna, of a contrary course to the other three. 7 Yaqui, or Jacho, which falleth into the Northern Seas. 8 Nicayagua, 9 Cocitemuco, 10 Xanique. These three last famous heretofore for their Sands of Gold. Some speak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers, which are found in this Countrey; two parts of which vast number had their Golden Sands. A thing so far beyond the charity of the strongest Faith, (though reported by a grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what Interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-course, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided, when the Spaniards first came amongst them, into several Provinces or Kingdoms, as 1 Higuey, 2 Jacuaguia, 3 Samana, in the Eastern parts. 4 Yaquimo, 5 Boaruco, and 6 Xaragua, towards the South. 7 Guahabu, and 8 Cabaya, in the West: and in the North, 9 Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold; 10 Marien, the Landing place of Columbus; and 11 Maguana in the center of the Iland, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Conabo, of greatest power of any of those petit Roytelets. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Iland into four Divisions: the River Jache running towards the North; 2 Nubiba hastning to the South; 3 Yuna, or Junna towards the East; and 3 Hatibonico to the West. But these divisions being long since grown out of use, we will survey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are 1 S. Domingo, first built by Bartholomew Columbus, Anno 1494. on the East bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502) removed by Nicolas de Obando, then Governour of the Iland to the opposite shore. Situate in a pleasant Country, amongst wealthy Pastures, and neighboured with a safe and capacious Haven: the houses elegantly built, most of them of stone, and the whole well walled, beside a Castle at the VVest end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the residence of the Governour, the Courts of Justice, the See of an Archbishop (and besides many Convents and Religious houses) an Hospital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yeerly Rent. Esteemed of greatest Trade and concourse of Merchants till the taking of Mexico, and the Discovery of Peru; since that time sensibly decaying; and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards; the greatest part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negros, Mulatos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586 took it by force, and held it for the space of a moneth, burning the greatest part of the houses, and suffering the rest to be redeemed at a certain price. 2 Salvaleon, 28 Leagues to the East of Domingo. 4 Jaguana, called also Santa Maria del Porto, from a safe and beautifull Haven adjoyning to it; situate in the VVest part of the Iland, of no great bigness, consisting of no more then 150 houses, when it was at the greatest; but made much less by Captain Newport, who in the year 1591. burnt it to the ground. 4 Cotuy, in the North of the Iland, opposite to S. Domingo, from which distant almost 60 Leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great esteem for its Mines of Gold. 5 Conception de la Vega, the foundation of Christopher Columbus; for whose sake afterwards adorned with a See Episcopal. 6 Puerto de la Plata, 40 Leagues from Domingo on the Northern shore; where built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by whom also fortified: the second Town of wealth and Trade in all the Iland. 7 Azua, now called Compostella, a noted Haven, and much resorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Iland was first discovered by Columbus (for I believe not that it was any of the fortunate Ilands which we read of in the life of Sertorius) in the first voyage which he made: conducted hither by some of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cuba. Landing, and gaining the good will of the Savages, by gentle usage, he obtained leave of one of their King or Caciques to build a Fortress in his Country, which he called Navidad, or Natividad, leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep possession: whom he found both mastered and murdered at his coming back. Being now better furnished for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Isabella, (in honour of Isabella Queen of Castile) near the Mines of Cibao; which afterwards was deserted also, and the Colonie removed unto S. Domingo: the Spaniards sending one Colonie after another, till at last their number was increased unto 14000. besides women and children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhausted the riches of the Country with as infinite covetousness: they betook themselves to fresher Quarters, abandoning the Iland to devour the Continent. Once had the Ilanders rebelled, and fortified themselves in the Province of Baoruco; a place so naturally strong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that fastness but on such conditions as made the Spaniards less insolent, and themselves less slaves.

5. CUBA.

CUBA lyeth on the West of Hispaniola, from which parted by a Frith, or narrow Channel, interposed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Mayzi. Backed on the North with a frie of Ilands, called the Lucaios, and some part of the Peninsula of Florida; extended towards the East to the extream point or Foreland of Jucutan, called Cape de Cotache, from which distant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Isle of Jamaica.

It

It is in length from East to VVest, that is to say, from Cape Mazie towards Hiſpaniola, to the Cape of S. Anthony, 230 Leagues; in breadth where broadeſt hardly 40, but fifteen in others. For the fertility of the ſoil contending with Hiſpaniola for the preheminence; but in the temperature of the Aire a great deal before it. Liberally ſtored with Ginger, Caſſia, Maſtick, Aloes, Cinnamon and Sugar, (not reckoning ſuch commodities as are common unto this with others) beſides great plenty of Fleſh, and Fiſh; and of Fowl no ſcarcity. The Gold more droſſie in the Mine, then in Hiſpaniola, but the Braſs more perfect. Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but thoſe Mountains clad with divers trees, ſome of which drop the pureſt Roſin, and the Hills ſending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Peſtered with many ſorts of Serpents, not ſo much out of any ill condition of the Soyl and Air, as by an old Superſtition of the Savages: in former times not ſuffered to kill them when they might (this being a Diſh reſerved for the higher Powers) not able afterwards to deſtroy them when it would have been ſuffered.

What other Savage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they ſhould not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may adde in memory of the firſt Inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Iland, addreſſed himſelf unto Columbus at his firſt coming hither, adviſing him to uſe his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the ſouls of men have two journeys when they leave this world; the one foul and dark prepared for the injurious and cruel perſon; the other delectable and pleaſant for the men of peace. It is ſaid alſo of them that they knew not the uſe of money, nor underſtood the niceties of Meum and Tuum: Tenants in common to the bleſſings which the earth brought forth, and Coheirs of Nature.

Amongſt the Rarities of this Iland, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy ſubſtance, which is found frequently on the Seas into which it falleth, excellent for the Calking of ſhips: Secondly, a Navigable River (but the name not told us) the waters of which were ſo hot, that a man could not endure to hold his hand in them. They tell us alſo thirdly of a Valley 15 Leagues from S. Jago, which produceth ſtones exactly round, as if made for pleaſure; but yet meerly natural. But theſe no greater Rarities then in other places: nor altogether ſo great as in Hiſpaniola. Of which they tell us of a fair River, whoſe waters are Salt, and yet none but freſh ſtreams fall into it: Of another Lake (three Leagues in compaſs) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of theſe ſo ſtrange or rare as the Cucuyo, a kinde of Scarabe or Beetel: the eyes and wings whereof when opened give ſo great a light, in the darkeſt places, that a man may ſee to read and write by it, as well as by Candle.

Rivers of moſt note, 1 Cante, much annoyed with Crocodiles (a Beaſt not common in theſe Ilands, nor elſwhere in this) exceeding dangerous to ſuch as repoſe themſelves on the Banks of the River. 2 Arimao, which disburdeneth it ſelf neer the Port of Xagua. 3 Rio de Porcos, full of Rocks and quick-ſands, at the entrances of it. 4 Rio Eſcondida, paſſing betwixt Hubana, and the Port of Marancas, 5 Marien, and 6 Tanne, of leſs note: Beſides theſe, there is Xagua, a ſafe Station and Road for ſhipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and ſpacious when once entred, above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all ſides from the winds, that ſhips lie here in ſafety without any Anchor. Some other Baies there be as uſefull, though not ſo conſiderable.

Towns of moſt conſequence, 1 S. Jago in the South part of the Iland, ſituate about two Leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the moſt noted Port of all theſe Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velaſques, An. 1514. Afterwards made a Biſhops See, beautified with a Cathedral; ſome Religious houſes; once not inferiour unto any for numbers of People, though now few enough. 2 Baracao, 30 Leagues on the East of S. Jago, the ſame Foundation as the other; and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-Wood. 3 S. Salvador, by ſome called Bayamo, according to the old name of the Province in which it ſtandeth; built by Velaſco in the moſt pleaſant and richeſt part of all the Iland; but not ſo fitly, as the other, for Trade and Merchandiſe. 4 Porto del Principe, an Haven Town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchie or bituminous liquor, ſpoken of before; which I conceive to be much of the ſame nature with the Fountains of Naphta in the East. 5 Trinidad, another of Velaſcos foundations, nine or ten leagues Eaſtward of the Port of Xagua: once well freqnented, but now forſaken, and meer nothing. 6 Havana, in the North parts, oppoſite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; ſo ſtrongly ſituate and fortified both by nature and Art, that it ſeems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Caſtles; a greater then either oppoſite to the mouth of the Haven; all ſo commodiouſly built, and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and ſcatter the greateſt Navy. Neer one of them ſtandeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards, of every ſhip that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The beſt aſſurance, not only of this Iland but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the moſt part with the ſeat of the Governour, and the greateſt Trade of all theſe Seas: the ſhips which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf, tarrying here for one another, till all met together, and ſetting ſail from hence by the Streits of Bahama, amongſt the Iſles of the Lucaios.

This Iland one of the firſt which was diſcovered by Columbus: who having almoſt tired the Spaniards with the expectation, firſt fell upon the Iland of Guahanani, one of the Lucaios, to which he gave the name of S. Saviours. From thence he ſailed to Baracoa, on the North of this Iland, which he cauſed to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholick, King of Caſtile and Aragon; at whoſe charge and the incouragement of Iſabella his Heroick Queen, he purſued this enterpriſe. Landing, he asked the People if they knew Cipango (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Iſle of Japan) and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao (of great note for the richeſt Mines in Hiſpaniola) pointed towards Hayty; ſome of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba by this means laid aſide, and all the thoughts of Spain upon Hiſpaniola, where they found many golden provocations to invite their ſtay; till hungring after more Gold, and ſome new Plantations, they paſſed over hither: and in few years by the prudent conduct of Velaſco, got ſuch footing in it, and made that footing good by ſo many Colonies; that their title and poſſeſſion was beyond diſpute; and ſo continueth to this day.

6. JAMAICA.

IAMAICA lyeth on the South of Cuba, from which diſtant 20 Leagues, and as much, or very little more, from Hispaniola. Diſcovered in the ſecond voyage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from Eaſt to Weſt about 50 Leagues, and in breadth 20. the whole compaſs eſtimated at 150. the middle of it under the 18 Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich ſoyl, abundantly provided of all things neceſſary: well ſtocked with Cattle, and no leſs plentifully ſtored with moſt ſorts of Fruits, which either Induſtry or Nature have ſupplyed it with. Great ſtore of Cotton-Wooll; and ſuch abundance of Jaccu (a Root whereof the Savages once made their bread) that it was deemed the Granarie of the neighbouring Ilands. And were it not diſfurniſhed of convenient Ports (which is all the want of it) would be as much frequented by the ſea-faring men, as any other in thoſe parts. Once very populous, now deſtitute of all the natural Inhabitants: this Iland, and that of Porto Rico, looſing in few years 60000 by the Spaniards cruelties. Cruelties which not only raged upon the men, but deſtroyed poſterity: the Women, here and elſewhere ſo abominating their ſad condition, that they ſtrangled their Children in the birth, to the end they might not live to ſerve ſuch a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hereof (for though it be well watered, it hath no great Rivers) 1 Sevilla, in the North-part of the Iland, beautified with a goodly Monaſterie, the Abbot whereof hath all Epiſcopal juriſdiction, and is priviledged to wear a Miter; in nothing more enobled, then that Peter Martyr the Hiſtorian (to whoſe Decades all ſucceeding Ages are to be beholding, for the Chorographie, and Hiſtory of theſe parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2 Melilla, a ſmall Town, but memorable for the unfortunate ſhipwrack of Columbus, on the ſhores adjoyning. 3 Oriſtan, on the South of the Iland, fourteen Leagues from Sevil. 4 De la Vega, now a ruine only, once a Spaniſh Colonie; and of great fame for giving the title of Dukes to Chriſtopher Columbus, and his brother Bartholmew. Since whoſe time nothing hapned prejudicial to the State of this Iland by the hands of any but the Spaniards; till conquered, but not held by Sir Anthonie Sherley, An. 1596.

Thus having took a ſhort Survey of the ſeveral parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government committed chiefly to two great Vice-Royes, the one of Nova Hiſpania, who reſides at Mexico; the other of Peru, who abideth at Lima; the principal Cities of thoſe Kingdoms. The firſt hath juriſdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Gallicia, Nova Hiſpania, Guatimala, Caſtella Aurea, and the Provinces of the Mexican Ilands; the other over thoſe of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such ſcattered pieces as they hold in Guyana, Paria, and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to ſome of theſe. Of theſe the Vice Roy of Peru is of greateſt power, becauſe he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government: which in the other are reſerved to the King himſelf. But that of New Spain counted for the better preferment, becauſe of its nearneſs unto Spain (in reſpect of the other) the beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the adminiſtration of Juſtice, and ordering the Affairs of the ſeveral Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lyeth no Appeal: that is to ſay, 1 Guadalaiara, for Gallicia Nova. 2 Mexico, for New Spain. 3 S. Domingo, for the Province of the Ilands. 4 Guatimala, for the diviſion ſo named. 5 And Panama, for Caſtella Aurea. Then for the other Government, Quitos, Lima, and Charcas, in the Realm of Peru. 9 Imperiale, for Chile. 10 S. Foy, for the New Realm of Granada. From theſe, though no Appeal doth lie in matter of juſtice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Royes an Appeal may lie in affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a ſtanding Counſel in the Court of Spain, which is called the Counſel of the Indies, conſiſting of a Preſident, eight Counſellors, two Proctors Fiſcal (which we call the Sollicitors General) and two Secretaries, beſides other Officers: to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of theſe Countries; to appoint the Vice-Royes, to diſpoſe of all the great offices (except thoſe of the Government of Peru) and ſpiritual Dignities; to appoint Viſiters to go into thoſe Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers, hearing the grievances of the People, and to diſplace or puniſh as they find occaſion; but with the Kings privity and conſent.

As for the Eſtates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain, hold them but for life (except it be the Marqueſs of Valſa in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their deaths returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldeſt ſon, or the next of blood; but ſo that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not from any right of theirs. And though they have many times attempted to make theſe Commanderies and Eſtates hereditarie, and offered great ſummes of money for it, both to Charles the fifth, and Philip the ſecond; yet they could never get it done; the Kings moſt prudently conſidering, that theſe great Lords having the command of the Eſtates and Perſons of their ſeveral Vaſſals, would either grinde them into powder without any remedy; or upon any Inquiſition into their proceedings, take an occaſion to revolt. Both dangers of no ſmall importance, both by this uncertainty of their preſent Tenure, exceeding happily avoided.

The

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence, is ſaid to be three Millions of Ducats yeerly: moſt of it riſing out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and ſilver: the reſt by Cuſtomes upon Manufactures and all ſorts of Merchandiſe, and the Acknowledgments reſerved upon Lands and Royalty. But out of this there goeth great Exits, that is to ſay to the two Vice-Roys 12000 Ducats; to the Preſident and Officers of the Counſel of the Indies in Spain 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the ſeveral Courts of Judicature very liberall Penſions; to every Arch-biſhop and Biſhop, of which there are 29. in all 2000 Ducats at the leaſt, and to ſome much more to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite Charges, in maintaining Garriſons, and entertaining ſtanding Bands both of Horſe and Foot, in ſeveral parts of this Eſtate; and the continual keeping of a ſtrong Armada, to conduct his Plate-Fleets to Spain, there muſt be made a great abatement, and the ſum will bear it. For howſoever at the firſt his Revenues came from hence without any great charge, more then the keeping of a few Souldiers to awe the Savages; yet after he fell fowl with England, and ſtartled the Hollanders to Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and ſecure his Ports, and to maintain a ſtrong Armada at the Sea to Convoy his Treaſures. Before which time, the Engliſh (as is inſtanced in ſeveral places) did ſo ſhare in his Harveſt, that they left him ſcarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they ſhould attempt again upon any breach, they would finde it very difficult, if not impoſſible, to effect any thing on the Coaſts, as in former times; or indeed any other way but by making themſelves too ſtrong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to ſupply his needs.

And ſo much of the AMERICAN Ilands.

AN APPENDIX
To the Former VVork,

Endeavouring a Diſcovery
Of the VNKNOWN PARTS of the VVORLD.

AND here we are upon a new and ſtrange Adventure, which no Knight-Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no deſire, ſo leſs diſcourſe can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we muſt underſtand leſs known, or not well diſcovered; and in that ſenſe we may as well endeavour to ſay ſomwhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the diſcovery. And to ſay truth, even in the known parts of the World there is much unknown; as in the beſt and moſt flouriſhing Kingdoms of the Earth there is ſome waſte ground, either not cultivated at all or not ſo well inhabited as the reſt of the Country. For beſides many vaſt tracts of ground in the North and North-weſt parts of Tartary, and ſuch parts of India as lie Northwards towards Delanguer, Nangrocot, the Eaſt parts of Caucaſus, and the Realms of Cathay; it is conceived that the greateſt part of the midlands of Africk are undiſcovered to this day, or the knowledge of them ſo imperfect as comes neer a neſcience. And for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders (which are in part to be the ſubject of this enquirie) it is affirmed of the Midlands by John de Laet, (who hath made the moſt exact deſcription of it that was ever extant) Minima ſui parte perluſtratum eſſe, that the leaſt part of them hath been diſcovered hitherto to any purpoſe. Leaving theſe therefore as before without further ſearch, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into theſe two parts, 1 Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2 Terra Incognita Auſtralis; which with their Subdiviſions we will now purſue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS, is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be conſidered in theſe three notions. 1. As directly under the Pole, which for diſtinctions ſake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2. As lying to the North-eaſt on the back of Europe, and Aſia; or 3. on the North-weſt, on the back of America.

1. ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis Incognita, which lieth under or about the Arctick Pole: the ſituation and dimenſions of which being taken with the Aſtrolabe by an Oxford-Frier, are by Mercator thus deſcribed out of the Itineratie of James Cnoxe of Bois le duc, or the Boſcke a Town of Brabant.

"Under the Artick Pole (ſaith he) is ſaid to be a black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 leagues "in compaſs; the Land adjoyning being torn by the Sea into four great Ilands. For the Ocean vio- "lently breaking thorow it, and diſgorging it ſelf by 19 Channels, maketh four Euripi, or fierce Whirl- "pools, by which the waters are finally carried towards the North, and there ſwallowed into the Bowels "of the Earth. That Euripus or Whirpool which is made by the Scythick Ocean, hath five Inlets, and by "reaſon of his ſtrait paſſage, and violent courſe, is never frozen: the other on the back of Greenland, "being 37 leagues long, hath three inlets, and remaineth frozen three moneths yearly. Between theſe "two there lieth an Iland, on the North of Lappia and Biarmia, inhabited as they ſay by Pygmies, the "talleſt of them not above four foot high. A certain Scholer of Oxford reporteth, that theſe four Eu- "ripi are carried with ſuch furious violence towards ſome Gulf, in which they are finally ſwallowed up, "that no ſhip is able with never ſo ſtrong a Gale to ſtem the Current; and yet that there is never ſo "ſtrong a wind as to blow a Windmill. The like reported by Giraldus Cambrenſis in his Book De mi- rabilibus Hiberniæ. So far and to this purpose he. But Blundevile our Countryman is of another opinion (as indeed who not?) neither believing that Plinie or any other of the Roman Writers came hither to describe this Promontory: or that the Oxford Frier without the Assistance of some cold Devil of the middle Region of the Aire (and consequently able to endure all weathers) could approach so neer as to measure these cold Countries with his Astrolabe, or take the height of this Blacke Rock with his Jacobs Staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucians Dialogues, then any serious discourse; we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. THE NORTH WEST parts of Terra incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the back of Estotiland, the most Northern Province of America: by which it hath been much endeavoured to finde out a passage to Cathay and China, and not to go so far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Streits of Magellan. Attempted first by Sebastian Cabot, *An.*1497. at the charge of Henry the 7th. of England. But having discovered as far as to the 67 Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutinie of his Mariners he was forced to return; where finding great preparations for a War with Scotland, that busines for the present was laid aside. Resumed by Gaspar Corteriaglis, a Portugal, An. 1500, and after by Stephen Gomez a Spaniard, in the year 1525. but neither of them went so far to the North as Cabot. Pursued with greater industry, but as bad Succes by Sir Martin Frobisher, who made three Voyages for these parts (the first of them in the yeer 1576.) and brought home some of the Natives, a Sea Unicorn horn (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windsor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon tryal, when in England, not to quit the cost. A great Promontory which he passed by, he called Queen Elizabeths Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it; and the Sea running not far off, he called Frobishers Streits. The Seas full set with Icy Ilands, some of them half a mile about, and 80 Fathoms above water; the People like the Samoeds, the worst kinde of Tartars, in their lives and habit. John Davies followed the Design *An.*1585. at the incouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham then Principal Secretary of Estate: and having in three Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73 by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the Enterprise, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Estotiland the name of Fretum Davis, in the Latitude of 65 and 20 Minutes, by which name still called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudson, Balton, Baffin, Smith, all English. The result of whose endeavours was the finding of some cold Ilands, and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Anns Cape, Prince Henries Foreland, Saddle Iland, Barren Iland, Red goose Iland, Digges his Iland; all of them betwixt 80 and 81. and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea the names of Hackluyts, Hendland, Smiths Bay, Hudsons Streits, Maudlins Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their undertakings. Nothing atchieved of publick moment but the Discovery of an Iand called Cherry Iland in the Latitude of 74 and the Shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New Land, but most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, grey and Dun Foxes, Partriges, Geese, and some other Provisions, Sea-Unicorns Horns, great store of Morses (or Sea horses) the Oyl and Teeth whereof yield no small Commoditie. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale-fishing, which our men use yeerly upon those Coasts; of whose Oil, Bones, and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Cœti, now used as Medicinal) they raise very great profit.

3. THE NORTH EAST PARTS of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartaria; by which the like passage towards Cathay and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with like success. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the son of John Cabot so often mentioned before, by whom trained up in the Discovery of the North east parts of America. His employment failing here in England, he betook himself unto the service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, An. 1549. was by King Edward the sixt made Grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 166 l. 13 s. 4 d. In the year 1553. he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia and the North-east Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellour, Burrough, Jenkinson, and after prosecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death; their ship being found the next year hemmed about with ice, and a particular Accompt of all things which had hapned to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia (since that time made a common Voyage without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Caspian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophie. The Hollanders in the year 1594 and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the conduct and direction of one William Barendson, their chief Pilot; but went no further then the English had gone before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers; with pride and arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of this North-east passage, or giving us any better Accompt of the North of Tartarie, or any Countries beyond that; but what we had many Ages since out of Paulus Venetus; so that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant undertakings: Yet when I look upon the natures of those Shores and Seas, those tedious Winters of ten moneths with no Summer following; the winds continually in the North, and the Main Ocean paved with Ice so long together: I cannot choose but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those Adventures which are only commendable for the difficulties presented in them.

TERRA

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

WIth better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on TERRA AUSTRALIS, or the Southern Continent; though hitherto INCOGNITA also, almost as much unknown as the Arctick Ilands, which none but my good Frier of Oxon had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our learned Brerewood, to be as large as Europe, Asia, and Africk: and that upon such strength of Reasons, as cannot be easily over-born by any opposite. His Arguments in brief are these, 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very neer to the Aequator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longnitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continual course of the other Continents. 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents, the Land which lieth on the North side of that Line, is four times at the least as large as that which lies South thereof: and therefore since the earth is equally poized on both sides of her Center; it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea, on the South side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South parts of the other two Continents, to countervail the North parts of them, must of necessity be supplied in the Southern Continent.

The Country being so large, so free from the incumbrances of Frosts and Ice, and endless Winters; I have oft marvelled with my self that no further progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the site and position of the Country, especially in those parts which lie nearest Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for elsewhere, either of profit or of pleasures, but may there be found. Whether it be, that there is some Nil ultra put to humane endeavours; or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel; or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in New Discoveries, till the Old be thorowly planted, and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerfull influence, thinks his hands full enough already; and being setled in so many and so wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more. Which of all these, or whether all of these together be the cause of this stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is that here is a large field enough for Covetousness, Ambition, or Desire of glory to spend themselves in; enough to satisfie the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth, and Worldly pleasures; besides the Gallantry and merit of so brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it, hath been by the incouragements of the Vice Royes of New Spain, and Peru: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coasts of Nova Guinea; by the Later, with those Countries called the Ilands of Solomon but whether Continent or Ilands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellanus of his part of the honour, who passing thorow the Streits, which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it which from the fire thence seen he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Iland. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their part herein, though what they did, was rather Accidental, then upon Design. For in the year 1593. Sir Richard Hawkins being bound for the Streits of Magellan, was by a crois winde driven on some part of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hawkings his Mayden Land; A Promontory of it shooting into the Sea with three points he called Point Tremontein, and a pleasant Isle not far off, by the name of Fair Iland. Sayling along these Coasts in the 50 Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of 60 miles and upwards, he found the Country as he pass'd to be very pleasant; and by the fires which he saw in the night to be well inhabited. By the like accident, An. 1599. Sibald de Wert, a Hollander, in his return from the Streits of Magellan fell upon some Ilands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of 50 Degrees and 40 Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibalds Ilands. And besides these we owe to the Portugals the discovery of such parts hereof, as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies; of which we have little but the names, as Psittacorum Terra, so called from the abundance of Parrats which they saw on the Coasts, over against the Cape of good Hope. 2 Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and possessed by Idolaters; with the two Kingdoms of 3 Lucach, and 4 Maletur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business, is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice-Royes of Peru, and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543. the Governour of New-Spain then being, sent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccos, who in that Voyage made a Discovery of a rich and flourishing Country which he named Nova Guinea, by others since his time called Terra de Piccinacoli; and in the year 1563, Castro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the conduct of Lopes Garcia de Castro, discovered the Ilands of Solomon. To which if we subjoyn the success of the Hollanders in the Discovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Lands adjoyning: the best Description we can make of this Southern Continent, must be in the Chorography and History of their Adventures; viz. 1 Terra del Fogo, 2 Insulæ Solomonis, 3 Nova Guinea: beginning first with Terra del Fogo, because neerest to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO, lies on the other side of the Streit of Magellane, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Iland, by one Jacob Mayre of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Horn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15. of June. An. 1615. and on the 19. of January following they fell even with the Streit of Magellan. On the 24. of the same Moneth they had the sight of another Streit, which seemed to separate this Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25. they entred into it. That part of the Land which (being entred into the Streit) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauritii de Nassaw; that on the East Statenland; the Streit it self, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Streit they found to be in 55 degrees of Southern Latitude, and 50 Minutes, the Waters running into the North-Sea with so violent an Eddie, Ut adversum maris æstum difficulter superare possemus, saith he, who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides, hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course whereof nothing so much observable (besides this Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a day (as must needs happen unto such, as in so tedious a Voyage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders, and to the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath, as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countrymen: or otherwise to complie with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath all the rest of their lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Streit, it is said to be seven Dutch miles, or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentifull of good fish; especially of Sea-Calves, and Whales. About the inserting of which Streit into the third Edition of my Microcosm, I received a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon, An. 1625. subscribed G.B. and a little under that, Sub grandi floridus: which whether it were the Gentlemans Motto, or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desires were satisfied in that next Edition of that Work. "For my encouragement wherein he gave me this "direction following. The News (saith he) of this New Streit coming into Spain, it pleased that King "in the year 1618, to send and search whether the truth were answerable unto the Report. And finding "it to be much broader then the other, and not above seven Dutch miles long: decreed, that being the "more easie and compendious way for Navigators, and less subject to dangers; his Auxiliary Forces "should be sent that way into the East Indies, to defend the Philippinæ and Molucco Ilands, and the "way by the Cape of good Hope to be left. In regard that every such voyage, requireth twice as much "time: besides the variety of winds, and often change of the Air, not only troublesom, but full of dis-"eases, consumeth the one half of the men before they return. Whereas this way gaineth time (and if "need be, they may dispatch business in the West as they travell into the East) without any extraordi-"nary danger or loss of men. So far the very words of my letter. The intelligence given me in this Letter, I finde confirm'd in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain. Don Juan de More, Anno 1618, at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who presently arm'd and furnished eight tall Ships, to send this new way unto his Philippines and Molluccos, under the conduct of Petrus Michaeles de Cordoelen. Since it hath been found by experience, that even from our parts to the Molluccos, through this Fretum de Mayre, is but a passage of eight moneths: Sine ulla insigni navigantium clade, saith the Narrator. But of this streit enough, to satisfie my unknown well-willers request, and enform my Reader: extreamly sorry that the Gentleman was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be destinate to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills apparelled with woods, intermixt with Vallies; the Vallies for the most part full of little Brooks which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good Pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided of Bays and Roads, not unsafe for shipping: though the Air every where, but chiefly neer the Sea, be much subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white complexion; but their Face, Arms, and Thighs, coloured with a kinde of Oker: of full stature and well proportioned, their hair black which they wear long to seem more terrible. The men most generally naked, the women only shaded on their secret parts, with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of Houses; so that the most which we can do is to Coast the Iland. In which we finde towards Mare del Noort 1. A large Arm of the Sea, called Entrado de S. Sebastian. 2. The Cape of S. Ives 3 Mauritius land. 4. Promontorio de Buen Suseio, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite whereunto in another Iland is the Cape of S. Bartholomews; and betwixt them the Streit called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South Sea, as they call it, there are 5. Barnwelts Iland, 6. the Ilands of S. Ildefonso; 7. Cape Horn on a fair Promontory, in the South west Ande: which doubled, the Countrie goes along with a strait shore, on which I finde some Bayes and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the VVestern entrances of the Streits of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, so often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Ilands of Solomon, are situate on the VVest of Terra del Fogo, 11 degrees on the South of the Equinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567. by Lopes Garcia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to finde out new Countries. By whom thus named, in hope that men would be the rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18. the principal: Some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less till we come to fifty, and beneath that, none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinnamon, and some veins of Gold. The chief of these eighteen, are, 1 Gundalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the coast whereof the Spaniards sailed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and sacked, because the People of it in a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2 S. Isabella, 150 leagues in length, and eighteen in breadth; breadth; the Inhabitants, ſome black, ſome white, ſome of brown complexion. 3 S. Nicolas. 100 Leagues in compaſs, inhabited by a People which are black of hue, but ſaid to be more witty then the other Salvages. All of them ſituate betwixt the Streits of Magellan, and the Ilands of Theeves; and yet not well agreed upon amongſt our Authors, whether to be accompted Ilands, or a part of the Continent: The Spaniards having ſayled 700 Leagues on the Coaſts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they paſs generally in Accompt for Ilands, and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them paſs ſo ſtill.

3. NOVA GUINEA lyeth beyond the Ilands of Solomon, in reſpect of us, proceeding as we have begun from the Land of Fire. Diſcovered, as before was ſaid An. 1543. by Villa Lobos (Herrera attributes the diſcovery of it to Alvarez de Saavedra, and ſets it higher in the year 1527.) more perfectly made known, if I gueſs aright, by Fernando de Quir. Who being ſent with two Ships to make a more full diſcovery of the Ilands of Solomon, and taking his courſe about the height of the Magellan ſtreits, diſcovered a main Land coming up cloſe to the Æquinoctial, on the Coaſts whereof he ſayled 800 Leagues, till he found himſelf at laſt in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, diſcovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purpoſed to ſettle a Plantation, and to that end preſented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive by the ſite and poſition of it to be Nova Guinea, coming up cloſe as that doth to the Æquinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Malatur. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I ſhall afford the Reader this Deſcription of it, out of his Memorials; in which it is ſoberly affirmed to be a Terreſtrial Paradiſe for wealth and pleaſures. The Country plentifull of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of four ſorts, Pom-citrons, Dates, Sugar canes, and Apples: plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partriges, and other Fowl, with ſome Kine and Buffals. Nothing inferiour (as it ſeemeth) to Guinea in the Land of Negroes; and from thence ſo named. For, as he ſaith, he ſaw amongſt them Silver, and Pearls, and ſome told him of Gold; the Countries on the Coaſt ſeeming to promiſe much felicity within the Land. The Ayr he found to be whole and temperate, the Sea ſhores to be full of Baies, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making ſhew as of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, ſome white, ſome like the Mulatos, others like the Negros; diverſified in Habit, as well as Colour. Their bread made of three ſorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their ſeveral Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in daily wars with one another; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other weapons, but all made of wood. Of this Country whatſoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took poſſeſſion in the name of the Catholike King, and ſet up both a Croſs, and a Chappel in it; the Chappel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The preciſe time of this Diſcovery I have nowhere found, but the time ſpent about it is by him affirmed to be 14 years. to the no ſmall endamagement of his health and fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing elſe done by others in purſuance of his Propoſitions. Whether it were on any of the reaſons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Baies or Promontories, as he paſſed along; but either took ſuch names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for ſuch names as were given before (ſtill taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontorie called Cape Hermoſo, in the Eaſt parts hereof near the Ilands of Solomon, and not far from the Æquator. 2 Another in the Weſtern part, but as near the Æquinox, called Point Primiro. 3 A third in the firſt bendings of the Coaſt towards the South called Cape de Buena Deſeada, or the Cape of good deſires. 4 Rio de Valcanes. 5 Rio de Lorenzo. 6 Rio de S. Auguſtino, on the Eaſt of Cape Formoſo towards the Streits. 7 The Rivers of S. Peter. 8 S. Paul. 9 S. Andrew. And 10 S. James, betwixt Cape Formoſo and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of theſe laſt diſcoveries, and the greateſt certainty we have of that little, is nothing but a Liſt of names without any thing obſervable in the ſtate and ſtory of the ſame, they may ſtill retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I will try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Royes of Peru, and Mexico, or taking out Commiſſion for a new Diſcovery, will make a ſearch into this Terra Auſtralis for ſome other Regions, which muſt be found either here or nowhere. The names of which, 1 Mundus alter & idem. 2 Utopia. 3 New Atlantis. 4 Fairie Land 5 The Painters Wives Iland. 6 The Lands of Chivalrie. And 7 The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, another world and yet the ſame, is a witty and ingenious invention of a learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger dayes (but well enough becoming the auſterity of the graveſt head) in which he diſtinguiſheth the Vices, Paſſions, Humours, and ill Affections moſt commonly incident to mankind, into ſeveral Provinces; gives us the Character of each, as in the deſcriptions of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it: and ſets them forth unto the eye in ſuch lively colours, that the vitious man may ſee therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own imperfections. The Scene of this deſign laid by the Reverend Author, in this Terra Auſtralis; the Decorum happily preſerved in the whole Diſcovery; the ſtyle acutely clear, the invention ſingular. Of whom and his New World I ſhall give you that Eulogie which the Hiſtorian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neq; poſt illum qui eum imitari poſſet, inventus eſt.

2. UTOPIA is a Country firſt diſcovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellour of England; and by him made the Scene of a Commonwealth, which neither Solon nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legiſlators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been fancied by Plato, Ariſtotle, Tullie, or any who have written the Ideas of a form of Government, though not reducible to practiſe. Some of his Plots we have took notice of already, as viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making making of those metals, Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Close-stools, Chamber-pots, and Vessels of such unclean use; by imposing it as a penalty on infamous persons, to wear Gold Rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices: as also his device to prevent mistakes and dislikes in mariages, by giving the parties a full view of each other, naked. Many more projects of this nature, some of them possible enough, but so unpracticable, so beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Common-Wealth, that we may reckon his device amongst those strange fancies, quæ nunquam antea spe concepta, ne dum opere tentata erant. The man indeed (considering the times he lived in) of rare abilities; but his Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Australis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place else.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Iland of this Southern Continent, discovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the learned Viscount of S. Albans; one of Sir Thomas Mores successors in the place of Lord Chancellour, but far before him in the Excellency and feasibility of his invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Iland of the Western or Atlantick Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato; both alike invisible. But for his falling on this Iland, his description of it, the City of Ben-Salem and the manner of his recception there, such handsome probabilities, and so fairly carryed, that to one not acquainted with the State of the World, it would seem a Reality. But above all things, the inventions and designs of Solomons House, for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving nature to the best advantages of life, and the benefit of mankind are beyond comparison. The man, I must confess had his personal errours (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded, Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtissimi, as Paterculus once said of Piso: not one amongst many thousands (to pursue that Character) qui aut otium validius diligat, aut facilius sufficiat negotio. A man of a most strong Brain, and a Chymical Head. Who if he had been entertained with some liberal Salarie, abstracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furnished with sufficiency both of means and helps, for the going on in his design, would, I am confident, have given us such a body of natural Philosophie, and made it so subservient to the publike good, that neither Aristotle or Theophrastus amongst the Antients, nor Paracelsus or the rest of our later Chymists, would have been considerable.

4. FAERIE LAND, is another part of this Terra Incognita; the habitation of the Fairies, a pretty kind of little fiends, or Pigmey devils, but more inclined to sport then mischief; of which old Women, who remember the times of Popery, tell us many fine stories. A cleanlyer and more innocent cheat was never put upon poor ignorant people, by the Monks and Friers. Their habitation here or no where; though sent occasionally by Oberon and their other Kings, to our parts of the World. For not being reckoned amongst the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils (but such a kind of midling Sprites, as the Latines call Lemures Larvæ) we must find out some place for them, neither Heaven or Hell, and most likely this. Their Country never more enobled, then by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem, called the Faerie Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greatest persons in her Court: but shadowed in such lively colours, framed so exactly by the Rules of Poesie, and representing such Ideas of all moral goodness; that as there never was a Poem more Artificial; so can no Ethical discourse, more fashion and inflame the mind to the love of vertue. Invisurum facilius aliquem quàm imitaturum shall be Spencers Motto; and so I leave him to his rest.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ILAND, is an Iland of this Tract mentioned by sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmiento, a Spanish Gentleman, imployed by his King in planting some Colonies on the Streits of Magellan (which we have touched upon before) Who being taken Prisoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about some Iland which the Maps presented in those Streits, and might have been of great use to him in his undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Iland, saying, that whilest the Painter drew that Map, his wife sitting by, desired him to put in one Countrey for her, that she in her imaginations might have an Iland of her own. His meaning was, that there was no such Iland as the Maps presented. And I fear the Painters wife hath many Ilands and some Countries too upon the Continent, in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the strictest search.

6. THE LANDS OF CHIVALRIE are such Ilands, Provinces, and Kingdoms in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World and therefore must be sought in this. A grosse absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despight of Geographie (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjoyned Countries which are neer together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Ilands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixot, merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamants in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Fayery-Iland in the History of Amadis de Gaul; the hidden Iland and that of the Sage Aliart in S. Palmerin of England; the Ilands of Lindaraza, and the Divelish Fauno, with the Kingdom of Lyra (of which the Amazonian Lady Archisipoza was the rightfull Queen) and many others of that kinde in the Mirrour of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primaleon, and Belianis of Greece, Parismus, the Romance of Romances, and indeed who not of all that Rabble? Handsomly humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Iland of Barutaria, of which the famous Sancho Panca was sometimes Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these Books of Chivalrie) that they may be of very good use to Children or young Boys in their Adolescency. For besides that they divert the minde from worse cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleasure in them in the way of reading, beget in him an habit of ſpeaking, and animate him many times to ſuch high conceptions as really may make him fit for great undertakings.

7. THE NEW WORLD IN THE MOON, was firſt of Lucians diſcovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a Conſcience', Apoſtatizing from the faith in which he was bred. Ariſtophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoes in the Clouds. But Lucian was the firſt who found out this New World in the Moon: of which and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that World which he there fancied, and propoſed but as a fancie onely, is become a matter of a more ſerious debate: and ſome have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by perſons of divers Languages, Cuſtoms, Polities, and Religions: and more then ſo, ſome means and wayes propoſed to conſideration for maintaining an intercourſe and commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other World is ſuppoſed to be? Certainly there are ſtronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Auſtralis, then in the Body of that Planet; and ſuch perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleaſure the later diſcoveries of America.

But I am no diſcourager of induſtrie and ingenuitie, which I love and honour whereſoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been ſtartled upon leſs preſumptions. Nor would I be miſtook, as if in my purſuit of this Terra Incognita, I put ſcorn on any of ſublimer thoughts; or that I would have any man ſo much in love with the preſent World, as not to look for another World in the Heaven above. It is reported that in ſome controverſie betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Moſcovie, the King of Poland ſent the Moſcovite a curious Globe, repreſenting the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each ſeveral Sphere: To which the Muſcovite returned this unworthy Anſwer, Tu mihi Cœlum mittis, Redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You ſend me Heaven, ſaith he, but that will not ſatisfie, unleſs you give me back thoſe Lands which are now in queſtion. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not loſe their part on Earth for all Heaven it ſelf. Whom I deſire if any ſuch peruſe theſe Papers, to conſider, That as much as the moſt flouriſhing Country which is here deſcribed, doth fall ſhort of that Paradiſe wherein God placed our father Adam; ſo much and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradiſe fall ſhort of the unſpeakable glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful ſearch of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of GOD which are here preſented, and that viciſſitude of Humane affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to ſome ſerious thoughts of that mighty GOD who made all theſe Works, in whom is no ſhew nor ſhadow of change. To whom be given all Glory, both in this World, and that to come.

Quicqnid enim Luræ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variátque vices, trepidóque tumultu
Æſtuat, & nunquam ſentit pars una quietem.
Nam ruit in ſeſe, & civili vulnere ſemper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; alióque renaſcitur ore,
Rurſus ut intereat; ſic non eſt omnibus unum
Partibus ingenium, non vis nativa. Sed Orbes
Aſtriferi, & nitidi ſublimis Regia Cœli
Immunis ſenii, & vultu immutabilis uno
Perpetuum ſervat ſolida & ſincera tenorem.

The Verſes are G. Buchanans, in his Book De Sphæra. Which I thus tranſlate, and therewithall conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon, its ſhapes doth varie,
And change from this to that; nor can it tarie
Long in one ſtate: but with it ſelf doth jar,
Kils, and is kili'd, in endleſs Civil war.
New-form'd again, 'tis but to die. The frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Mindes the ſame.
But That above the Spheres, the Heavens on high
In which GOD reigns in glorious Majeſty;
Free from old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Always preſents it ſelf in equal Grace.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, ſed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.

AN

An advertiſement to the Reader, concerning the enſuing TABLES.

SHort Tables may not ſeeme proportionable to ſo long a Work, eſpecially in an Age wherein there are ſo many that pretend to learning, who ſtudy more the Index then they do the Book. But to this Work ſhort Tables will be long enough, conſidering that the Running titles on the top of each leaf, direct the Reader to a view of thoſe Countries which he is to travell; and conſequently to as much knowledge of thoſe things which concern thoſe Countries as this Work can give him. Howſoever that I may not be wanting in any poimt to the Readers eaſe, I have drawn thoſe titles into Method by the courſe of the Alphabet; and added all the reſt of the Provinces both great and ſmall, which are hercin mentioned and deſcribed: with the names of thoſe Eſtates and Nations, whether old or new, the ſum of whoſe affairs is here drawn together. This being done in the firſt of theſe Tables, I have reduced into a ſecond the names of thoſe particular Nations, with their ſeverall Tribes (the principall of them at the leaſt) which anciently inhabited thoſe Kingdoms, Provinces, and Iſlands, the Chorographie and Hiſtory whereof is my chief endeavour: that being marſhalled by themſelves, they be no hinderance to the Reader in the ſearch of thoſe places, which he hath more deſire to viſit. And finally whereas there are many things in this Work looking towards Philologie, and ſome particulars not eaſily reducible to the other Tables, I have digeſted the chief of them into a third; leaving the reſt unto the conſideration of the ſtudious Reader, who poſſibly might take it ill if nothing ſhould be left to his care and memorie.

A Table of the principall Countries, Provinces, Mountains, Seas, and Iſlands, contained and deſcribed in this Book.
